McLaren Harris, music critic of the Boston Herald, called it a "fragmentary, elusive - expressioned and unexciting work in which the music takes second place to the phrases it encloses."

Rolfe Boswell in The Record American said the elegy "is a lean, angular and pungently gripping score."

Michael Steinberg, Boston Globe, commented: "It was not a moving occasion, but something more like a ceremony attended with attention and respect for its honesty, but lacking that which would command heartfelt involvement.

Harris said composer Sydeman's purpose in writing the elegy was to express the sudden void created by the assassination.

The work is in two sections. The first section, with slow music, contains spoken passages from Allan Nevins introduction to volume two of Kennedy's Speeches, from the book of Ecclesiastes, from the Kennedy portraits by Arthur Schlesinger and Theodore Sorensen and the Stephen Spendor poem "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great." The second section has a theme and variations in quicker tempo with excerpts from Kennedy's famous speeches.

Harris commented that "Speeches are not written for musical setting; thus, they usually lack a poetic flow of sound, imagery and balance of phrase.

"The music was also up against the voice of E.G. Marshall whose excellent speaking commanded our attention all the more. Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra played the unfamiliar score creditably."

In a left-hand aisle seat a dozen rows from the stage, Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, mother of the late president, heard the concert alone.

She said, "My family will hear it in Washington and in New York on the Symphony tour this month."

Mrs. Kennedy later went backstage to tell composer Sydeman and conductor Leinsdorf that that the tribute to her son was "truly inspired."

Performances are scheduled for Constitution Hall in Washington Nov. 15 and Philharmonic Hall in New York Nov. 16 and 18.

Allen's
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Established 1888
LOS ANGELES
San Francisco
Portland - Seattle
Farmington, N. Mex.
Times
(Cir. 7,966 - S. 8,146)
NOV 6 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 5 1966

SYMPHONY

JFK Elegy Not a Success

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

The composer who writes music and employs excerpts from famous speeches as a narration is not to be envied. And so we sat in Symphony Hall Friday and listened to the premiere of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," an elegy piece by William Sydeman, and we did not envy him.

Mr. Sydeman's work is in two sections, the first slow and the second a theme and variations in quicker tempo. The speech excerpts make up the second section narration, the first containing passages from Allan Nevins' introduction to volume two of Kennedy's Speeches, from Ecclesiastes ("To everything, there is a season, and a time to every purpose....," etc.), from the Kennedy portraits by Arthur Schlesinger and Theodore Sorensen, plus a poem by Stephen Spender.

Mr. Sydeman's avowed purpose in selecting these passages and writing his music was not simply to build a monument to the late President and glorify his words; he wished to express the sudden void, as it were, created by the assassination — the vanished radiance, disappearance of strength and vitality — and also the feeling of loss, the shock which numbs, the anger and frustration which characterized the nation's reaction.

Perhaps things would have been easier if he had chosen the former course, as did Aaron Copland in the "Lincoln Portrait," by having the words pronounced over an essentially hushed ensemble, then ringing them with orchestral fire, attempting to burn their majesty into the listener's mind. Instead Mr. Sydeman conceived his ideas in musical logic, first developing a motive from the Nationa Anthem ("And the rockets red glare") with parts of the Funeral March themes from Beethoven's "Eroica" to express the heroic-tragic aspect; the second section, original in content, views Kennedy's statements as variations about a central theme of the protection of freedom.

But for all this planning and labor, what we are given is a fragmentary, elusive-expressioned and unexciting work in which the music takes second place to the phrases it encloses. Both the first-section motives and the angular variation subject wend their way haltingly through irregular rhythms and a sparse orchestration, poking occasionally through a dramatic limbo. We listen to the narration and wait for something to happen; it doesn't. Once Mr. Sydeman gathers his forces, seemingly for a climax, but backs off without accomplishing his aim. This may be his void, but there is small remnant of radiance.

Speeches are not written for musical setting, thus they usually lack a poetic flow of sound, imagery and balance of phrase; predictably, Spender's lines lent themselves to closer integration than the others. The music was also up against the voice of E. G. Marshall, whose excellent speaking commanded our attention all the more. Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra played the unfamiliar score creditably

Mr. Leinsdorf also conducted Bach's Suite No. 3 and the Symphony No. 1 of Robert Schumann. His ideas about tempo in Schumann, on the conservative side, seemed to serve him alternately well and adversely. In the outer movements relaxation was a welcome thing, for it kept the intricate thematic material, so often called pianistic, from becoming tangled and unwieldy. In the main body of the Scherzo, however, such an elephantine pace as we heard would certainly reinforce anyone's convictions about Schumann's heavy, cumbersome scores. The Larghetto was a resplendent tone-painting of melodic and harmonic elegance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 6 1966

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, with Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, duo-pianists, in Haydn's Symphony No. 93, Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra, and Borodin's Symphony No. 2. Symphony Hall, 2 p.m.

KANE, PA.
REPUBLICAN
D. 3,000
NOV 7 1966

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, with actor E G. Marshall, played the world premiere of William Sydeman's elegy "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" Friday in Boston ... The work is in two sections. The first with slow music, contains spoken passages from writings about the late president, from the Book of Ecclesiastes, and Stephen Spender's poem "I Think Continually" ... The second section has a theme and variations in quicker tempo with excerpts from Kennedy's famous speeches. His mother, Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, attended alone She later went backstage to tell Sydeman and conductor Erich Leinsdorf that the tribute to her son was "truly inspired" ...

Orchestra Plays JFK Elegy

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with actor E. G. Marshall, played the world premiere of William Sydeman's elegy "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" Friday.

The work is in two sections. The first with slow music, contains spoken passages from writings about the late president, from the Book of Ecclesiastes, and Stephen Spendar's poem "I Think Continually on ⅞The second section hau a theme and variations in quicker tempo with excerpts from Kennedy's famous speeches.

Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, attended alone. She later want backstage to tell Sydeman and conductor Erich Leinsdorf that the tribute to her son was "truly inspired."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 5 1966

'In Memoriam JFK' Given World Premiere by BSO

By ROLFE BOSWELL

William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" received its world premiere when it was presented here yesterday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. It is a lean, angular and pungently gripping score, making its obeisance to contemporary atonal idioms, yet not nearly so academic in format as his two "Studies for Orchestra," also premiered by the BSO.

It was patently obvious that the composer was inspired by his subject matter, narrated by E. G. Marshall effectively, though sometimes with undue emphasis, on what appeared to these ears as the wrong places. Sydeman's musical tribute to he assassinated President ears at least superficial resemblance to Aaron Copland's Lincoln Portrait" made all the ore striking when the composer appeared, complete with ncolnesque chin whiskers, to take his applause.

E. G. Marshall

Since ths was less than this listener felt Sydeman merited, one presumed that Republicans predominated in the audience, which is a pity, since this gripping threnody should not be judged as "political music."

The text of the narraton was from Allan Nevins, Ecclesiastes, Stephen Spender, Arthur Schlesinger, Theodore Sorensen and excerpts from the late President's speeches. All these were chosen with care, with a sure ear to their dramatic impact.

In choosing thematic material from Beethoven's "Eroica Symphony," Sydeman has been exceeded in musical development only by Rchard Strauss, whose "Metamorphosen," dated April 12, 1945, has been attributed as a musical tribute to Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who died that day. Yet the Strauss masterwork has not yet been accorded its due meed, so Sydeman's tribute, too, must stand the test of timc.

Curtain-raiser was Bach's third orchestral suite (S. 1068, in D) in a performance of imperative strength and memorable sense of line. Dr. Leinsdorf took the fast movements and dance segments with sturdy jollity, accenting the great Sebastian's hand-sewn counterpoint, for he did not attenuate his strings to the vanishing point, as so many unknowledgeable conductors are wont to do.

In conclusion, a rousing performance of Robert Schumann's "Spring Symphony" (Op. 38, in b flat) was presented with a warmly romantic approach. It becomes increasingly apparent that Dr. Leinsdorf has a particularly empathic flair for Schumann's noble music.

There was a notable surge of spirit in the virtuosic playing of the adept Bostonians, doubtless abetted by their conductor's feeling for the youth and vigor of the composer's writing. The finale, taken at a faster clip than is customary, was tossed off with rambunctious elan.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
WOBURN, Mass.
Circ. 7,950
NOV 7 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 98,605
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 9,291
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 7 1966

Boston Symphony Provides Fine Tribute to JFK

BOSTON (UPI) — "In Memorian John F. Kennedy," an elegy piece by William Sydeman, was given its worl dpremiere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday.

In a left side aisle seat a dozen rows back from the Symphony Hall stage, Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, the late President's mother listened. She described the tribute to he rson as "truly inspired."

Sydeman's musical tribute to the assassinated President is in two sections, music and narration and bears at least superficial resemblance to Aaron Copeland's "Lincoln Portrait."

Speech excerpts make up the second section narration, the first containing passages from Allan Nevins' introduction to volume two of Kennedy's Speeches, from Ecclesiastes, from the Kennedy Portraits by Arthur Schlesinger and Theodore Sorensen, plus a poem by Stephen Spender.

Sydeman's avowed purpose in selecting these passages was his desire to expres s the sudden void, as it were, created by the assassination and also the feeling of loss, which characterized the nation's reaction.

The composer first developed a motive from th e National Anthem ("and the rockets red glare") with parts of the Funeral March themes from Beethoven's "Eroica" to express the heroic-tragic aspect. The second section views Kennedy's statements as variations about a central theme of the protection of freedom.

McLaren Harris, music critic for the Boston Herald, said: "...What we are give n is a fragmentary, elusive - expressioned and unexciting work in which the music takes second place to phrases it encloses." "The music was also up against the voice of E.G. Marshall, whose excellent speaking commanded our attention all the more." "Erich Leimsdorf and the orchestra played the unfamiliar score creditably."

Rolfe Boswell, music critic of the Boston Record-American, said: "It was patently obvious that the composer was inspired by his subject mater ... though sometimes with undue emphasis on what appeared to these ear as the wrong places."

Symphony Review — Paragraph Omitted

The following paragraph was omitted from McLaren Harris' review on Saturday of the weekend's Boston Symphony program:

The Bach Suite No. 3 came through successfully, considering the rather large orchestra; the overture moved without sagging, while the famous Air was graced with an ethereal, silken sheen. The presence of a harpsichord was pure lip service to tradition, as it could not be heard over the other instruments and was not played during the Air, which could have been its only useful moment.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 21,672
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 27,020
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
NOV 5 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
NOV 5 1966

Boston Symphony Plays Premiere of Elegy to JFK

Boston, Nov. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with actor E. G. Marshall, played the world premier of William Sydeman's elegy "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" yesterday.

The work is in two sections. The first with slow music, contains spoken passages from writings about the late President, from the book of ecclesiastes, and Stephen Spender poem "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great." The second section has a theme and variations in quicker tempo with excerpts from Kennedy's famous speeches.

Marshall narrator with BSO

Première of Sydeman's 'JFK'

By Clifford Barnes

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

During a Friday afternoon Boston Symphony concert three years ago this month, the assassination of President Kennedy was announced to a stunned audience. The orchestra had just given the première performance of William Sydeman's "Study No. 2 for Orchestra." Everyone stood while the funeral march from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony was played.

These events influenced the composition of Mr. Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," whose world première was given Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall with E. G. Marshall as narrator. Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony are familiar with Mr. Sydeman's music, having given first performances of two of his "Studies."

The composer's program notes stress the importance of the texts he selected. They are not only "integral to the general form and 'sonority' of the work," but the function of the music is to clarify and make them more dramatically effective. The texts with the most impact were excerpts from President Kennedy's speeches, rather than those from books and poems about him.

Expressionistic style

The descriptive elements in the music were more expressionistic than impressionistic. The texture was disjointed. Intended references to the national anthem and the "Eroica" were so well disguised as to not be noticeable upon first hearing. The full-sized symphony orchestra with enlarged percussion section had moments of combined instrumental power. Generally the playing was restricted to solos and sections in a variety of combinations.

Mr. Marshall read in a straightforward, almost emotionless style. He followed an orchestral score, and the text was somewhat measured to fit the meter and rhythmic patterns in the music.

Schumann seen afresh

In spite of the fine craftsmanship involved, the work did not have the emotional impact that was expected from reading about it.

The popularity of Robert Schumann's symphonies seems to have waned in recent years. The last performance at these concerts of the Symphony No. 1 was seven years ago. Mr. Leinsdorf showed he could see it as a fresh, new work. He knew what he wanted it to say, and he went about communicating that to the orchestra and to the audience.

The work is not equally inspired throughout, but there are many strong sections. The composer's intention to have the orchestra depict a "longing for spring" appears irrelevant. The lyrical charm and unifying thematic devices sustain interest.

The concert opened with Bach's Orchestral Suite No. 3 in D major. Mr. Leinsdorf kept a firm hand during each of the five movements, yet there was fluidity throughout. For the well-known "Air," he emphasized the simple beauty of the music. Combining this with subtle dynamic nuances, he made the music worth hearing again.

Music Review

'In Memoriam JFK'

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

BOSTON.

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra program in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon centered on the first performance of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, the result of a commission by Erich Leinsdorf for a major work for narration and orchestra. The funds for the commission were given by Mrs. Ruth Kaufman of New York.

The narrator was the long-experienced actor E. G. Marshall. His assignment consisted of excerpts chosen by the composer from President Kennedy's favorite Scripture passages, from poetry, specifically one of Stephen Spender, and encomiums by his biographers, and his own speeches. Unfortunately, Mr. Marshall was only adequate and in no way revived memories of the late President's manner or nobility.

* * *

SYDEMAN'S score is divided into two movements. The first starts with an eerie lugubrious shimmer which leads into deeply eloquent majesty, fitting for the subject and the memory of the man. This movement—adagio lamentoso—could stand alone without narrative, I would think; the second—a theme and variations— not so well for it employs deliberate intricacy and evidence of academic lamps.

In the first Sydeman, in fairly conventional language, has succeeded in translating the Kennedy radiance into musical glow. In the second he resorts to such devices as indicating that the snare drums, for example, tap and repeat a figure while the narrator, otherwise alone, declaims a lofty sentiment. The significance is not immediately apparent. The audience gave the composer a modest succes d'estime when Leinsdorf lead him to the stage after the performance of his work.

* * *

IT SEEMS on one hearing that there was a conveyance of the spirit of the words in some sections — the spirit which buoyed so many of us during the too short regime; the kind of spirit which Robert Frost expressed when he wrote " . . . I have promises to keep and miles to go before I sleep."

The composition takes 26 minutes. Music with narration, or in the reverse order, is generically self-defeating. We are inspired by the literary concepts and the music can be background, or equally absorbing, or sufficient in itself. This was not consistently convincing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 5 1966

'In Memoriam JFK' Given World Premiere by BSO

By ROLFE BOSWELL

William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" received its world premiere when it was presented here yesterday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. It is a lean, angular and pungently gripping score, making its obeisance to contemporary atonal idioms, yet not nearly so academic in format as his two "Studies for Orchestra," also premiered by the BSO.

It was patently obvious that the composer was inspired by his subject matter, narrated by E. G. Marshall effectively, though sometimes with undue emphasis, on what appeared to these ears as the wrong places. Sydeman's musical tribute to the assassinated President ears at least superficial resemblance to Aaron Copland's Lincoln Portrait" made all the more striking when the composer appeared, complete with Lincolnesque chin whiskers, to take his applause.

E. G. Marshall

Since ths was less than this listener felt Sydeman merited, one presumed that Republicans predominated in the audience, which is a pity, since this gripping threnody should not be judged as "political music."

The text of the narraton was from Allan Nevins, Ecclesiastes, Stephen Spender, Arthur Schlesinger, Theodore Sorensen and excerpts from the late President's speeches. All these were chosen with care, with a sure ear to their dramatic impact.

In choosing thematic material from Beethoven's "Eroica Symphony," Sydeman has been exceeded in musical development only by Rchard Strauss, whose "Metamorphosen," dated April 12, 1945, has been attributed as a musical tribute to Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who died that day. Yet the Strauss masterwork has not yet been accorded its due meed, so Sydeman's tribute, too, must stand the test of time.

Curtain-raiser was Bach's third orchestral suite (S. 1068, in D) in a performance of imperative strength and memorable sense of line. Dr. Leinsdorf took the fast movements and dance segments with sturdy jollity, accenting the great Sebastian's hand-sewn counterpoint, for he did not attenuate his strings to the vanishing point, as so many unknowledgeable conductors are wont to do.

In conclusion, a rousing performance of Robert Schumann's "Spring Symphony" (Op. 38, in b flat) was presented with a warmly romantic approach. It becomes increasingly apparent that Dr. Leinsdorf has a particularly empathic flair for Schumann's noble music.

There was a notable surge of spirit in the virtuosic playing of the adept Bostonians, doubtless abetted by their conductor's feeling for the youth and vigor of the composer's writing. The finale, taken at a faster clip than is customary, was tossed off with rambunctious elan.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
WOBURN, Mass.
Circ. 7,950
NOV 7 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 98,605
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 9,291
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 7 1966

Symphony Review Paragraph Omitted

The following paragraph was omitted from McLaren Harris' review on Saturday of the weekend's Boston Symphony program:

The Bach Suite No. 3 came through successfully, considering the rather large orchestra; the overture moved without sagging, while the famous Air was graced with an ethereal, silken sheen. The presence of a harpsichord was pure lip service to tradition, as it could not be heard over the other instruments and was not played during the Air, which could have been its only useful moment.

Boston Symphony Provides Fine Tribute to JFK

BOSTON (UPI) — "In Memorian John F. Kennedy," an elegy piece by William Sydeman, was given its worl dpremiere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday.

In a left side aisle seat a dozen rows back from the Symphony Hall stage, Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy, the late President's mother listened. She described the tribute to he rson as "truly inspired."

Sydeman's musical tribute to the assassinated President is in two sections, music and narration and bears at least superficial resemblance to Aaron Copeland's "Lincoln Portrait."

Speech excerpts make up the second section narration, the first containing passages from Allan Nevins' introduction to volume two of Kennedy's Speeches, from Ecclesiastes, from the Kennedy Portraits by Arthur Schlesinger and Theodore Sorensen, plus a poem by Stephen Spender.

Sydeman's avowed purpose in selecting these passages was his desire to expres s the sudden void, as it were, created by the assassination and also the feeling of loss, which characterized the nation's reaction.

The composer first developed a motive from th e National Anthem ("and the rockets red glare") with parts of the Funeral March themes from Betthoven's "Eroica" to express the heroic-tragic aspect. The second section views Kennedy's statements as variations about a central theme of the protection of freedom.

McLaren Harris, music critic for the Boston Herald, said: "...What we are give n is a fragmentary, elusive - expressioned and unexciting work in which the music takes second place to. phrases it encloses." "The music was also up against the voice of E.G. Marshall, whose excellent speaking commanded our attention all the more." "Erich Leimsdorf and the orchestra played the unfamiliar score creditably."

Rolfe Boswell, music critic of the Boston Record-American, said: "It was patently obvious that the composer was inspired by his subject mater ... though sometimes with undue emphasis on what appeared to these ear as the wrong places."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
NOV 5 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 21,672
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,503
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,404
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 27,020
NOV 5 1966

Marshall narrator with BSO

Première of Sydeman's 'JFK'

By Clifford Barnes

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

During a Friday afternoon Boston Symphony concert three years ago this month, the assassination of President Kennedy was announced to a stunned audience. The orchestra had just given the première performance of William Sydeman's "Study No. 2 for Orchestra." Everyone stood while the funeral march from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony was played.

These events influenced the composition of Mr. Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," whose world première was given Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall with E. G. Marshall as narrator. Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony are familiar with Mr. Sydeman's music, having given first performances of two of his "Studies."

The composer's program notes stress the importance of the texts he selected. They are not only "integral to the general form and 'sonority' of the work," but the function of the music is to clarify and make them more dramatically effective. The texts with the most impact were excerpts from President Kennedy's speeches, rather than those from books and poems about him.

Expressionistic style

The descriptive elements in the music were more expressionistic than impressionistic. The texture was disjointed. Intended references to the national anthem and the "Eroica" were so well disguised as to not be noticeable upon first hearing. The full-sized symphony orchestra with enlarged percussion section had moments of combined instrumental power. Generally the playing was restricted to solos and sections in a variety of combinations.

Mr. Marshall read in a straightforward, almost emotionless style. He followed an orchestral score, and the text was somewhat measured to fit the meter and rhythmic patterns in the music.

Schumann seen afresh

In spite of the fine craftsmanship involved, the work did not have the emotional impact that was expected from reading about it.

The popularity of Robert Schumann's symphonies seems to have waned in recent years. The last performance at these concerts of the Symphony No. 1 was seven years ago. Mr. Leinsdorf showed he could see it as a fresh, new work. He knew what he wanted it to say, and he went about communicating that to the orchestra and to the audience.

The work is not equally inspired throughout, but there are many strong sections. The composer's intention to have the orchestra depict a "longing for spring" appears irrelevant. The lyrical charm and unifying thematic devices sustain interest.

The concert opened with Bach's Orchestral Suite No. 3 in D major. Mr. Leinsdorf kept a firm hand during each of the five movements, yet there was fluidity throughout. For the well-known "Air," he emphasized the simple beauty of the music. Combining this with subtle dynamic nuances, he made the music worth hearing again.

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
NOV 5 1966

Boston Symphony Plays Premiere of Elegy to JFK

Boston, Nov. 5 (AP)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with actor E. G. Marshall, played the world premier of William Sydeman's elegy "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" yesterday.

The work is in two sections. The first with slow music, contains spoken passages from writings about the late President, from the book of ecclesiastes, and Stephen Spender poem "I Think Continually on Those Who Are Great." The second section has a theme and variations in quicker tempo with excerpts from Kennedy's famous speeches.

Music Review

'In Memoriam JFK'

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

BOSTON.

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra program in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon centered on the first performance of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, the result of a commission by Erich Leinsdorf for a major work for narration and orchestra. The funds for the commission were given by Mrs. Ruth Kaufman of New York.

The narrator was the long-experienced actor E. G. Marshall. His assignment consisted of excerpts chosen by the composer from President Kennedy's favorite Scripture passages, from poetry, specifically one of Stephen Spender, and encomiums by his biographers, and his own speeches. Unfortunately, Mr. Marshall was only adequate and in no way revived memories of the late President's manner or nobility.

* * *

SYDEMAN'S score is divided into two movements. The first starts with an eerie lugubrious shimmer which leads into deeply eloquent majesty, fitting for the subject and the memory of the man. This movement—adagio lamentoso—could stand alone without narrative, I would think; the second—a theme and variations— not so well for it employs deliberate intricacy and evidence of academic lamps.

In the first Sydeman, in fairly conventional language, has succeeded in translating the Kennedy radiance into musical glow. In the second he resorts to such devices as indicating that the snare drums, for example, tap and repeat a figure while the narrator, otherwise alone, declaims a lofty sentiment. The significance is not immediately apparent. The audience gave the composer a modest succes d'estime when Leinsdorf lead him to the stage after the performance of his work.

* * *

IT SEEMS on one hearing that there was a conveyance of the spirit of the words in some sections — the spirit which buoyed so many of us during the too short regime; the kind of spirit which Robert Frost expressed when he wrote " . . . I have promises to keep and miles to go before I sleep."

The composition takes 26 minutes. Music with narration, or in the reverse order, is generically self-defeating. We are inspired by the literary concepts and the music can be background, or equally absorbing, or sufficient in itself. This was not consistently convincing.

29

TUES. A #3 NOV. 8

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 8, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Overture to "Coriolan" (after Collin), Op. 62

SYDEMAN ..... In Memoriam John F. Kennedy†

I. Adagio lamentoso
II. Allegro; Theme and variations

E. G. MARSHALL, Narrator

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92

I. Poco sostenuto; Vivace
II. Allegretto
III. Presto; Assai meno presto; Tempo primo
IV. Allegro con brio

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

† The text of the narration will be found on page 32.

FRI. + SAT. #7 NOV. 11 + 12

30

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 12 1966

Duopianists' BSO Debut

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, duo-pianists from Israel, made their debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Bela Bartok's Concerton for Two Pianos, Percussion and Orchestra. It was the first BSO performance in this craggy work's expanded form (1941) from the composer's Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion (1938).

Even in its original version, the gifted Hungarian refugee composer's tendency to formalize mosaics of themes was marked in the performance he gave with his second wife, Ditta, in New York's Town Hall just 26 years ago. The two-piano sonata contained scarcely a hint of the conflict between tonality and nontonality, it is frankly keyed in C major, using chromaticism as an element of tension.

Thus it might be described as a cubistic score, as is the drawing which appears with this paragraph; its musical merits are obvious, being very cleverly written, flowing in simple, but flawless, lines, displaying Bartok's brilliant flair for melodic invention and, in the expanded format his amazing mastery of instrumentation coupled with uncommon rhythmic vivacity.

Bela Bartok

The Israeli duo, though not displaying the rapport of the two Bartoks, played with distinction and understanding, dealing admirably with the subtleties of timbre in which this score abounds, while Erich Leinsdorf manifested brilliant and vital understanding of this complicated score, for the nonpercussive majority of the orchestral players had to be kept in hand.

Curtain-raiser was Haydn's 93rd symphony in D, a neglected classic opening with an adagio with fortissimo orcheschords, interspersed between two melodic phrases for strings. The ensuing allegro assai probably is the most familiar-sounding segment of this symphony, since its main theme has been slowed down and used as an Episcopalian hymn-tune to the words, "Come my soul, thou must be waking."

However, the main bulk of the movement is concerned with the second theme, returning only briefly in the recapitulation. Of the remaining three movements, the minuet is the most remarkable, the antique dance itself being a straightforward statement by the full orchestra, but in the trio each little phrase is preceded by a flourish in the winds.

Dr. Leinsdorf's unhurried exposition of the first movement was not only beautifully turned out, but also a subtle way of underlining the rhythmic quirks of this segment. The rest of the score was similarly well-appraised, transmuted into flowing sound.

Alexander Borodin's second symphony (Op. 5, in B minor) received a lively, buoyant rendition to conclude this concert. Though it hasn't received a BSO performance in a generation, the nationalistic character of this thoroughly Russian symphony is unmistakable, though it may be "caviare" to the general run of conductors.

Vladimir Stassov, great Russian musicologist, says Boradin was "haunted by the picture of feudal Russia and tried to paint it in his music." Though Borodin has been charged with dilettancy, for he was a fine physician and great chemist professionally, he was even greater in his music, as yesterday's "Russian Eroica" showed.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Seventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 11, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 12, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN ..... Symphony in D major, No. 93
- I. Adagio; Allegro assai
- II. Largo cantabile
- III. Menuetto: Allegretto
- IV. Finale: Presto ma non troppo

BARTÓK ..... Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion
- I. Assai lento; Allegro molto
- II. Lento, ma non troppo
- III. Allegro non troppo

INTERMISSION

BORODIN ..... Symphony in B minor, No. 2, Op. 5
- I. Allegro moderato
- II. Molto vivo
- III. Andante
- IV. Allegro

SOLOISTS
BRACHA EDEN and ALEXANDER TAMIR
Miss EDEN and Mr. TAMIR play Steinway Pianos

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[393]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
NOV 17 1966

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

B.S.O.: HOLIDAY PROVENDER

The Armistice Day weekend featured a neatly balanced and felicitously rendered program at Symphony. It began with Haydn and ended with Borodin; between came a relatively familiar modern classic in refurbished form.

The focal point of these offerings was the Bartok Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion and Orchestra, with Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, the distinguished Israeli duo-piano team, as soloists. In its original evocation as a "Sonata for two pianos and percussion," the work has always been a natural for a chamber series because of the vast amount of bazazz that can be adduced with only four instrumentalists, and this is how one usually hears the piece. Bartok himself amplified it into a concerto—in fact his performance at his New York premiere was his last concert appearance—noting, so the program notes say, that "it seemed avisable, for certain technical reasons, to add orchestral accompaniment to the work, though, as a matter of fact, it gives only color to certain portions of the work. The two-piano and percussion parts remain practically unchanged, except for some of the climactic parts which are now taken over from the two pianos as tuttis by the orchestra. The same program notes are unaccountably silent on the point of whether the work had ever been done here as a concerto, and if so when, but quite likely this was the first performance in this form at these concerts.

In any event, the piece is greatly helped by the addition of the orchestral accompaniment. The rhythmic variety, bold counterpoint and jagged melodies are illuminated and set out by the instrumental tracing, while retaining most (though concededly not all) of the distinctive percussiveness and arresting timbre of the original work. The performance was spirited enough, although, as with almost any two-piano piece, just a little clattery and thick.

It was a pleasure after thirty-three years to welcome back Borodin's very minor little masterpiece in the nationalist genre, the Symphony in B minor, No. 2. This is the kind of music which Dr. Koussevitzky so fervently believed in and consequently could project with such conviction that his performance conferred a grandeur and exultation upon the score that seemed to transend its intrinsic merits. Mr. Leinsdorf, as with previous performances of works long acknowledged as Koussevitzian private preserves, on the other hand seems to approach such music as if he had no illusions about its place in the hierarchy of things, but felt that its opulence, color and lyrical flow have yet a good deal to be said for them. For sheer creaminess of sound and smoothness of exposition, his reading could not be topped, and the slow movement had just the appropriate elegiac but unsentimentalized touch.

The opening Haydn was the Symphony in D major, No. 93, from the first London Salamon set. These London symphonies in their aggregate surely must represent one of the most sustained and stupefying bursts of creativity in the annals of art and each one is a masterpiece in its own right. Those that have names, like "Military," "Clock," "Surprise," "Drum Roll," "Oxford," etc., get to be frequently played. Those like this one, known only by key and number, are virtual rarities. This performance was only the third ever done by the orchestra and the first since the late Guido Cantelli conducted it in 1953. Popular or not, the mind boggles at the outpouring of grace, wit, charm, invention and sheer loveliness that Haydn manages to pack into Symphony. Mr. Leinsdorf's reading caught a good deal of these qualities, although the largish orchestra at places, such as the string quartet section that commences the largo cantabile, was more ragged than it need have been, and the overall effect of the performance was considerably more languid than that of the Borodin.

This week the orchestra is away on its second tour. Next week the guest conductor will be Gunther Schuller, who will present a program of Dvorak, Schubert and Ives. The feature will be the latter's Symphony No. 4 with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 6 1966

Duo Pianists at Symphony

The Israeli duo pianists Eden and Tamir will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. They will be heard in Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos, Percussion and Orchestra, which the composer arranged for orchestra in 1943 from his earlier Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion (1938).

Eden and Tamir accepted Leinsdorf's invitation to make their first appearance in Boston when the world premiere of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto, Jacob Lateiner soloist, was postponed until Jan. 6-7.

The Friday-Saturday program will begin with Haydn's in D major. The Bartok Concerto will follow, and the program will conclude with Symphony No. 93, in D major. The Bartok Concerto will follow, and the program will conclude with Borodin's Symphony No. 2 in B minor, Op. 5.

The week-end program will receive its final preparation at the third Open Rehearsal of the season Thursday night at 7:30, proceeds from which benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

Bracha Eden, a native of Jerusalem, began her piano studies at the age of 7. Later she studied at the Jerusalem Academy of Music under Prof. Alfred Schroeder, formerly Arthur Schnabel's assistant. There she became acquainted with another of Schroeder's pupils, Alexander Tamir, and in 1951, both as honor graduates, they formed their two-piano team. Miss Eden is married and has a 10-year-old son.

Tamir, a bachelor, was born in Vilno, Poland, and with his mother became an Israeli citizen in 1945 at the age of 14. He studied privately in Tel-Aviv before attending the Jerusalem Academy.

As a team Eden and Tamir won a scholarship to the Aspen Music School in 1955. That same year they made their first American appearance at the Aspen Festival and their New York debut. Since then they have toured annually throughout Europe, America and Israel as soloists with major orchestras, in recitals for two pianos and piano four hands, for chamber music societies, and in broadcasts via radio and television.

E. G. Marshall, the veteran actor who stars in the television series "The Defenders," will be narrator this Tuesday evening at 8:30 at the third concert of the Tuesday "A" series. He will join Leinsdorf and the Orchestra in the third performance of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, which received its first performance Friday afternoon. Sydeman received the Ruth Kaufman Commission of New York city for the composition. The Tuesday evening program will open with Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and will conclude with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

FRI. + SAT. #7 NOV. 11 + 12

30

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 12 1966

Duopianists' BSO Debut

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, duo-pianists from Israel, made their debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Bela Bartok's Concerton for Two Pianos, Percussion and Orchestra. It was the first BSO performance in this craggy work's expanded form (1941) from the composer's Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion (1938).

Even in its original version, the gifted Hungarian refugee composer's tendency to formalize mosaics of themes was marked in the performance he gave with his second wife, Ditta, in New York's Town Hall just 26 years ago. The two-piano sonata contained scarcely a hint of the conflict between tonality and nontonality, it is frankly keyed in C major, using chromaticism as an element of tension.

Thus it might be described as a cubistic score, as is the drawing which appears with this paragraph; its musical merits are obvious, being very cleverly written, flowing in simple, but flawless, lines, displaying Bartok's brilliant flair for melodic invention and, in the expanded format his amazing mastery of instrumentation coupled with uncommon rhythmic vivacity.

Bela Bartok

The Israeli duo, though not displaying the rapport of the two Bartoks, played with distinction and understanding, dealing admirably with the subtleties of timbre in which this score abounds, while Erich Leinsdorf manifested brilliant and vital understanding of this complicated score, for the nonpercussive majority of the orchestral players had to be kept in hand.

Curtain-raiser was Haydn's 93rd symphony in D, a neglected classic opening with an adagio with fortissimo orcheschords, interspersed between two melodic phrases for strings. The ensuing allegro assai probably is the most familiar-sounding segment of this symphony, since its main theme has been slowed down and used as an Episcopalian hymn-tune to the words, "Come my soul, thou must be waking."

However, the main bulk of the movement is concerned with the second theme, returning only briefly in the recapitulation. Of the remaining three movements, the minuet is the most remarkable, the antique dance itself being a straightforward statement by the full orchestra, but in the trio each little phrase is preceded by a flourish in the winds.

Dr. Leinsdorf's unhurried exposition of the first movement was not only beautifully turned out, but also a subtle way of underlining the rhythmic quirks of this segment. The rest of the score was similarly well-appraised, transmuted into flowing sound.

Alexander Borodin's second symphony (Op. 5, in B minor) received a lively, buoyant rendition to conclude this concert. Though it hasn't received a BSO performance in a generation, the nationalistic character of this thoroughly Russian symphony is unmistakable, though it may be "caviare" to the general run of conductors.

Vladimir Stassov, great Russian musicologist, says Boradin was "haunted by the picture of feudal Russia and tried to paint it in his music." Though Borodin has been charged with dilettancy, for he was a fine physician and great chemist professionally, he was even greater in his music, as yesterday's "Russian Eroica" showed.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Seventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 11, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 12, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN ..... Symphony in D major, No. 93
- I. Adagio; Allegro assai
- II. Largo cantabile
- III. Menuetto: Allegretto
- IV. Finale: Presto ma non troppo

BARTÓK ..... Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion
- I. Assai lento; Allegro molto
- II. Lento, ma non troppo
- III. Allegro non troppo

INTERMISSION

BORODIN ..... Symphony in B minor, No. 2, Op. 5
- I. Allegro moderato
- II. Molto vivo
- III. Andante
- IV. Allegro

SOLOISTS

BRACHA EDEN and ALEXANDER TAMIR

Miss EDEN and Mr. TAMIR play Steinway Pianos

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[393]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
NOV 17 1966

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

B.S.O.: HOLIDAY PROVENDER

The Armistice Day weekend featured a neatly balanced and felicitously rendered program at Symphony. It began with Haydn and ended with Borodin; between came a relatively familiar modern classic in refurbished form.

The focal point of these offerings was the Bartok Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion and Orchestra, with Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, the distinguished Israeli duo-piano team, as soloists. In its original evocation as a "Sonata for two pianos and percussion," the work has always been a natural for a chamber series because of the vast amount of bazazz that can be adduced with only four instrumentalists, and this is how one usually hears the piece. Bartok himself amplified it into a concerto—in fact his performance at his New York premiere was his last concert appearance—noting, so the program notes say, that "it seemed avisable, for certain technical reasons, to add orchestral accompaniment to the work, though, as a matter of fact, it gives only color to certain portions of the work. The two-piano and percussion parts remain practically unchanged, except for some of the climactic parts which are now taken over from the two pianos as tuttis by the orchestra. The same program notes are unaccountably silent on the point of whether the work had ever been done here as a concerto, and if so when, but quite likely this was the first performance in this form at these concerts.

In any event, the piece is greatly helped by the addition of the orchestral accompaniment. The rhythmic variety, bold counterpoint and jagged melodies are illuminated and set out by the instrumental tracing, while retaining most (though concededly not all) of the distinctive percussiveness and arresting timbre of the original work. The performance was spirited enough, although, as with almost any two-piano piece, just a little clattery and thick.

It was a pleasure after thirty-three years to welcome back Borodin's very minor little masterpiece in the nationalist genre, the Symphony in B minor, No. 2. This is the kind of music which Dr. Koussevitzky so fervently believed in and consequently could project with such conviction that his performance conferred a grandeur and exultation upon the score that seemed to transend its intrinsic merits. Mr. Leinsdorf, as with previous performances of works long acknowledged as Koussevitzian private preserves, on the other hand seems to approach such music as if he had no illusions about its place in the hierarchy of things, but felt that its opulence, color and lyrical flow have yet a good deal to be said for them. For sheer creaminess of sound and smoothness of exposition, his reading could not be topped, and the slow movement had just the appropriate elegiac but unsentimentalized touch.

The opening Haydn was the Symphony in D major, No. 93, from the first London Salamon set. These London symphonies in their aggregate surely must represent one of the most sustained and stupefying bursts of creativity in the annals of art and each one is a masterpiece in its own right. Those that have names, like "Military," "Clock," "Surprise," "Drum Roll," "Oxford," etc., get to be frequently played. Those like this one, known only by key and number, are virtual rarities. This performance was only the third ever done by the orchestra and the first since the late Guido Cantelli conducted it in 1953. Popular or not, the mind boggles at the outpouring of grace, wit, charm, invention and sheer loveliness that Haydn manages to pack into Symphony. Mr. Leinsdorf's reading caught a good deal of these qualities, although the largish orchestra at places, such as the string quartet section that commences the largo cantabile, was more ragged than it need have been, and the overall effect of the performance was considerably more languid than that of the Borodin.

This week the orchestra is away on its second tour. Next week the guest conductor will be Gunther Schuller, who will present a program of Dvorak, Schubert and Ives. The feature will be the latter's Symphony No. 4 with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 6 1966

Duo Pianists at Symphony

The Israeli duo pianists Eden and Tamir will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. They will be heard in Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos, Percussion and Orchestra, which the composer arranged for orchestra in 1943 from his earlier Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion (1938).

Eden and Tamir accepted Leinsdorf's invitation to make their first appearance in Boston when the world premiere of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto, Jacob Lateiner soloist, was postponed until Jan. 6-7.

The Friday-Saturday program will begin with Haydn's in D major. The Bartok Concerto will follow, and the program will conclude with Symphony No. 93, in D major. The Bartok Concerto will follow, and the program will conclude with Borodin's Symphony No. 2 in B minor, Op. 5.

The week-end program will receive its final preparation at the third Open Rehearsal of the season Thursday night at 7:30, proceeds from which benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

Bracha Eden, a native of Jerusalem, began her piano studies at the age of 7. Later she studied at the Jerusalem Academy of Music under Prof. Alfred Schroeder, formerly Arthur Schnabel's assistant. There she became acquainted with another of Schroeder's pupils, Alexander Tamir, and in 1951, both as honor graduates, they formed their two-piano team. Miss Eden is married and has a 10-year-old son.

Tamir, a bachelor, was born in Vilno, Poland, and with his mother became an Israeli citizen in 1945 at the age of 14. He studied privately in Tel-Aviv before attending the Jerusalem Academy.

As a team Eden and Tamir won a scholarship to the Aspen Music School in 1955. That same year they made their first American appearance at the Aspen Festival and their New York debut. Since then they have toured annually throughout Europe, America and Israel as soloists with major orchestras, in recitals for two pianos and piano four hands, for chamber music societies, and in broadcasts via radio and television.

E. G. Marshall, the veteran actor who stars in the television series "The Defenders," will be narrator this Tuesday evening at 8:30 at the third concert of the Tuesday "A" series. He will join Leinsdorf and the Orchestra in the third performance of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, which received its first performance Friday afternoon. Sydeman received the Ruth Kaufman Commission of New York city for the composition. The Tuesday evening program will open with Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan" and will conclude with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

31

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 12 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
NOV 12 1966

Boston Symphony

A Disappointing Wait

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Erich Leinsdorf conducting in Haydn's Symphony No. 93 in D, Bartok's Concerto for two pianos, percussion, and orchestra, with Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, pianists, and Borodin's Symphony No. 2 in B minor; Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Bartok's addition, in a two years' afterthought, of an orchestra to his wonderful Sonata for two pianos and percussion is disappointing. The original is so brilliant and so sustained an achievement of the imagination, it is so complete, that to add meaningfully to its timbral scheme is a nearly impossible task, even for a Bartok.

There are, of course, inspired strokes in the orchestral setting, the most exciting of them the violins' col legno tappings in the quintuplet-plus-one figure that runs through the Lento. Dialogues that take place between the two pianos in the original are effectively extended to dialogues between piano and orchestra, and there is good use of held wind chords or unisons that function as a kind of sustaining pedal. More often, though, the orchestra stands awkwardly and rather uselessly in the way, almost like in a concerto by Schumann, and it tends to thicken the texture so that it is hard for the pianos to come through.

In any case, the piece needs a better performance than it had. What is wanted is piano playing with the rhythmic and timbral finesse one would lavish on Debussy's "Estampes" or Etudes, something, in fact, like the Bartoks' own colorful and yielding playing. The playing of Eden and Tamir, while agile and accurate, is brittle and gray. The percussion playing was superb; otherwise what came out the orchestra was fuzzy, and Leinsdorf was anything other than a source of animation.

The beautiful Haydn 93d went well. Leinsdorf's Haydn is in general better than Szell's because it is not so stiff and because it is more naturally phrased, but I do miss the sense of bigness and of physical vigor that Szell imparts so well. Leinsdorf's Haydn is a little stand-offish, played down—nothing like as anemic as his unspeakable Mozart, though—and in a performance so much geared to elegance and lyricism one misses some of what makes Haydn special, particularly the quickness and originality of his mind. This was, however, a very good performance of its kind, and beautifully played, too. No. 93 is very much of an oboe symphony, and Ralph Gomberg's playing was a special pleasure.

The Borodin B minor is a fresh and delightful symphony, and Leinsdorf must be nearly the world's least suitable conductor for something so colorful and energetic. This performance never got off the ground at all, and the orchestral playing was pretty scrappy.

I do want to add that this was an unusually nicely planned program. And the Boston performance history of the three works is interesting: the Bartok had never been done before here in the version with orchestra; the Haydn was last played by the Symphony in 1953 under Cantelli and before that in 1100 under Gericke ("devastating" is the word here rather than "interesting"); the Borodin had not been played since Koussevitzky did it in 1934. What else lies silent while we go through our annual drenchings of "Daphnis et Chloe" and the Shostakovich Fifth?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Visitors Guidepost
BOSTON, Mass.
Bi-Weekly
NOV 11 1966

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY
NOV. 11, 12

The Israeli duo pianists Eden and Tamir will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday, Nov. 11 at 2 p.m. and Saturday, Nov. 12 at 8:30. They will be heard in Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos, Percussion and Orchestra, which the composer arranged for orchestra in 1943 from his earlier Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion (1938). Eden and Tamir accepted Mr. Leinsdorf's invitation to make their first appearance in Boston when the world premiere of Elliot Carter's Piano Concerto, Jacob Lateiner solist, was postponed until January 6-7.

Mr. Leinsdorf will begin the Friday-Saturday program by conducting Haydn's Symphony No. 93, in D major. The Bartok Concerto will follow, and the program will conclude with Borodin's Symphony No. 2 in B minor, Op. 5.

The weekend program will receive its final preparation at the third Open Rehearsal of the season Thursday night (Nov. 10) at 7:30, proceeds from which benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 12 1966

SYMPHONY

Revised Bartok a Concert Highlight

By McLAREN HARRIS

The old adage which advises that first thoughts are usually the best has never gained great favor in the composing world, and for good reason, revision of a work, undertaken after prolonged reflection and with the advantage of hindsight, may raise its worth considerably above the level that it could achieve without alteration. This, however, is by no means a cardinal rule.

The adage came to mind during Friday's performance, the first by the Symphony, of Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion, framed on the program by symphonies of Haydn and Borodin. Bartok originally planned the work as a sonata without orchestral support, and it was first performed thus in January, 1938; he expanded it into the present version shortly after its American premiere late in 1940.

The three movements, all boldly rhythmic, exhibit Bartok's flair for short-motive development in techniques ranging from fugal elaboration to terse, mocking echoes. Percussion instruments, particularly timpani, snare drum and xylophone, take prominent roles, sharing splashes of color with the pianos and contributing to an overall jagged substance which is never dull or empty of surprise. Even the slow movement seems to sputter with latent energy and impatience, while the most extended themes are found in the finale, propelled with a tireless folk-dance spirit.

Bartok wrote that he found it advisable to add orchestral accompaniment "for certain technical reasons," though admitting that it added color only to portions of the work, while piano and percussion parts remained relatively unchanged. On the basis of Friday's performance, we must side with his admission. Practically all musical material is contained in the parts for pianos and percussion; the orchestra appears to exist solely for emphasis.

This works to some advantage at infrequent climactic points, but elsewhere it detracts from the pianistic functions. Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, the soloists, often found themselves not outplayed but outgunned. In a more transparent chamber setting Bartok's piece should sparkle; with an orchestra its effects are blunted.

Miss Eden's and Mr. Tamir's playing seemed right for the task—shimmering chords, glissandi and all—though to judge their total keyboard talents on the basis of such percussive material would be, of course, impossible. The orchestra's work was competent but not spontaneous, evidenced by Erich Leinsdorf's occasionally painstaking direction.

Borodin's Second Symphony had not been heard at these concerts since the Koussevitsky days of 1934. It is not such a popular work with the serious symphonic minds of our day, though it possesses formal logic and instrumental brilliance—everything, perhaps, except thematic sublimity. The opening movement's initial Hungarian-mode theme, spoken loudly in the bass, is reiterated at every turn; the dashing finale has all the restraint of a barn-dance. Yet there are moments of great beauty here, in the Scherzo's gay, sprinting motion and the following Andante's noble-yet-plaintive melodic arches. Not literally programmatic, Borodin's style is still an eloquent builder of mood, at times irresistible.

The orchestra's reading generally made it all the more so, as Mr. Leinsdorf gave the brass their due and they responded nearly always on target. Woodwind and string work was equally fine, marred only by some flat notes on the solo clarinet. Both confident direction and the dynamic result bespoke fine rehearsal.

Haydn's Symphony No. 93 in D has itself been performed by the Symphony only twice before, a fact which speaks for the quality of all the Salomon symphonies and some others—namely, that one cannot get around to all of them often enough. No. 93 is as stocked with glittering genius as the rest, affording the strings and oboist Ralph Gomberg opportunities to distinguish themselves, which they did; as Haydn is an eternal well-spring for brightness and beauty, so the Symphony members were his spokesmen.

Next week the orchestra is on tour; on Nov. 25-56 Gunther Schuller will be guest conductor in Dvorak's "Othello" overture, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4, with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 171,536
NOV 12 1966

Eden and Tamir soloists

Bartók tour de force

By Harold Rogers

One couldn't help feeling a certain sense of disappointment—howbeit mild—when the Boston Symphony gve its first performance of Bartók's Concerto for Two Pianos, Percussion, and Orchestra yesterday afternoon. Though it was a fine traversal in nearly every respect, it lacked the brilliant intensity it can have when played in its original form—the noted Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion.

The most exciting hearing in my experience took place more than a decade ago at Jordan Hall. Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Waldbauer were the pianists, and one of the percussionists was Vic Firth, now the Boston Symphony's timpanist. On this occasion the intensity of Bartók's emotion was fired to a white heat that left listeners giddy with delight.

Another memorable performance was turned in by Malcolm Frager and Vladimir Ashkenazy last season at Carnegie Hall in New York. Perhaps the success of the work in its smaller form is owing to its concentration of ideas. Bartók achieved the clearest distillation as he originally conceived it.

Lost dynamism

But in its orchestral version these ideas become diffused. They are all there, of course; the piano parts remain virtually unchanged. Yet they do not stand forth in the same dynamic way.

Taken on its own merits, however, yesterday's performance was indeed pleasant, at times even aurally impressive. Certainly the soloists—Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir of Israel—struck off the piano passages with deftness and élan.

Erich Leinsdorf opened the concert with another of his precise if somewhat antiseptic readings of Haydn—in this case one of the London symphonies, that in D major, No. 93. It abounded in classical elegance, tonal balance, phrasal poise.

Borodin revival

After the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf revived Borodin's Second Symphony (last heard in Symphony Hall 32 years ago when Serge Koussevitzky did it). Though it has its old-fashioned moments that wouldn't wear well if heard too often, it is an engaging work, filled with the moods and color that we associate with Tchaikovsky and the Russian Five (of whom Borodin was one).

The first opening Allegro moderato is heavily Slavic, the orchestra often moving morosely in unison. It was a plaint like those racial moans that rise from the score of Mussorgsky's "Boris Godunov."

The Molto vivo section is like the vast portion of Russian ballet music, with echoes of Borodin's own dances from "Prince Igor," his unfinished opera. The Andante is perhaps the least successful of the movements. A sad and rather sentimental folkish melody is rather tediously developed.

But the final Allegro is a real leg-flinger in a fast three-time. It was a genial conclusion to an entertaining musical afternoon.

31

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 12 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
NOV 12 1966

Boston Symphony

A Disappointing Wait

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, in Haydn's Symphony No. 93 in D, Bartok's Concerto for two pianos, percussion, and orchestra, with Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, pianists, and Borodin's Symphony No. 2 in B minor; Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Bartok's addition, in a two years' afterthought, of an orchestra to his wonderful Sonata for two pianos and percussion is disappointing. The original is so brilliant and so sustained an achievement of the imagination, it is so complete, that to add meaningfully to its timbral scheme is a nearly impossible task, even for a Bartok.

There are, of course, inspired strokes in the orchestral setting, the most exciting of them the violins' col legno tappings in the quintuplet-plus-one figure that runs through the Lento. Dialogues that take place between the two pianos in the original are effectively extended to dialogues between piano and orchestra, and there is good use of held wind chords or unisons that function as a kind of sustaining pedal. More often, though, the orchestra stands awkwardly and rather uselessly in the way, almost like in a concerto by Schumann, and it tends to thicken the texture so that it is hard for the pianos to come through.

In any case, the piece needs a better performance than it had. What is wanted is piano playing with the rhythmic and timbral finesse one would lavish on Debussy's "Estampes" or Etudes, something, in fact, like the Bartoks' own colorful and yielding playing. The playing of Eden and Tamir, while agile and accurate, is brittle and gray. The percussion playing was superb; otherwise what came out the orchestra was fuzzy, and Leinsdorf was anything other than a source of animation.

The beautiful Haydn 93d went well. Leinsdorf's Haydn is in general better than Szell's because it is not so stiff and because it is more naturally phrased, but I do miss the sense of bigness and of physical vigor that Szell imparts so well. Leinsdorf's Haydn is a little stand-offish, played down—nothing like as anemic as his unspeakable Mozart, though—and in a performance so much geared to elegance and lyricism one misses some of what makes Haydn special, particularly the quickness and originality of his mind. This was, however, a very good performance of its kind, and beautifully played, too. No. 93 is very much of an oboe symphony, and Ralph Gomberg's playing was a special pleasure.

The Borodin B minor is a fresh and delightful symphony, and Leinsdorf must be nearly the world's least suitable conductor for something so colorful and energetic. This performance never got off the ground at all, and the orchestral playing was pretty scrappy.

I do want to add that this was an unusually nicely planned program. And the Boston performance history of the three works is interesting: the Bartok had never been done before here in the version with orchestra; the Haydn was last played by the Symphony in 1953 under Cantelli and before that in 1100 under Gericke ("devastating" is the word here rather than "interesting"); the Borodin had not been played since Koussevitzky did it in 1934. What else lies silent while we go through our annual drenchings of "Daphnis et Chloe" and the Shostakovich Fifth?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Visitors Guidepost
BOSTON, Mass.
Bi-Weekly
NOV 11 1966

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY
NOV. 11, 12

The Israeli duo pianists Eden and Tamir will be soloists with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts on Friday, Nov. 11 at 2 p.m. and Saturday, Nov. 12 at 8:30. They will be heard in Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos, Percussion and Orchestra, which the composer arranged for orchestra in 1943 from his earlier Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion (1938). Eden and Tamir accepted Mr. Leinsdorf's invitation to make their first appearance in Boston when the world premiere of Elliot Carter's Piano Concerto, Jacob Lateiner solist, was postponed until January 6-7.

Mr. Leinsdorf will begin the Friday-Saturday program by conducting Haydn's Symphony No. 93, in D major. The Bartok Concerto will follow, and the program will conclude with Borodin's Symphony No. 2 in B minor, Op. 5.

The weekend program will receive its final preparation at the third Open Rehearsal of the season Thursday night (Nov. 10) at 7:30, proceeds from which benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 12 1966

SYMPHONY

Revised Bartok a Concert Highlight

By McLAREN HARRIS

The old adage which advises that first thoughts are usually the best has never gained great favor in the composing world, and for good reason, revision of a work, undertaken after prolonged reflection and with the advantage of hindsight, may raise its worth considerably above the level that it could achieve without alteration. This, however, is by no means a cardinal rule.

The adage came to mind during Friday's performance, the first by the Symphony, of Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion, framed on the program by symphonies of Haydn and Borodin. Bartok originally planned the work as a sonata without orchestral support, and it was first performed thus in January, 1938; he expanded it into the present version shortly after its American premiere late in 1940.

The three movements, all boldly rhythmic, exhibit Bartok's flair for short-motive development in techniques ranging from fugal elaboration to terse, mocking echoes. Percussion instruments, particularly timpani, snare drum and xylophone, take prominent roles, sharing splashes of color with the pianos and contributing to an overall jagged substance which is never dull or empty of surprise. Even the slow movement seems to sputter with latent energy and impatience, while the most extended themes are found in the finale, propelled with a tireless folk-dance spirit.

Bartok wrote that he found it advisable to add orchestral accompaniment "for certain technical reasons," though admitting that it added color only to portions of the work, while piano and percussion parts remained relatively unchanged. On the basis of Friday's performance, we must side with his admission. Practically all musical material is contained in the parts for pianos and percussion; the orchestra appears to exist solely for emphasis.

This works to some advantage at infrequent climactic points, but elsewhere it detracts from the pianistic functions. Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, the soloists, often found themselves not outplayed but outgunned. In a more transparent chamber setting Bartok's piece should sparkle; with an orchestra its effects are blunted.

Miss Eden's and Mr. Tamir's playing seemed right for the task—shimmering chords, glissandi and all—though to judge their total keyboard talents on the basis of such percussive material would be, of course, impossible. The orchestra's work was competent but not spontaneous, evidenced by Erich Leinsdorf's occasionally painstaking direction.

Borodin's Second Symphony had not been heard at these concerts since the Koussevitsky days of 1934. It is not such a popular work with the serious symphonic minds of our day, though it possesses formal logic and instrumental brilliance—everything, perhaps, except thematic sublimity. The opening movement's initial Hungarian-mode theme, spoken loudly in the bass, is reiterated at every turn; the dashing finale has all the restraint of a barn-dance. Yet there are moments of great beauty here, in the Scherzo's gay, sprinting motion and the following Andante's noble-yet-plaintive melodic arches. Not literally programmatic, Borodin's style is still an eloquent builder of mood, at times irresistible.

The orchestra's reading generally made it all the more so, as Mr. Leinsdorf gave the brass their due and they responded nearly always on target. Woodwind and string work was equally fine, marred only by some flat notes on the solo clarinet. Both confident direction and the dynamic result bespoke fine rehearsal.

Haydn's Symphony No. 93 in D has itself been performed by the Symphony only twice before, a fact which speaks for the quality of all the Salomon symphonies and some others—namely, that one cannot get around to all of them often enough. No. 93 is as stocked with glittering genius as the rest, affording the strings and oboist Ralph Gomberg opportunities to distinguish themselves, which they did; as Haydn is an eternal well-spring for brightness and beauty, so the Symphony members were his spokesmen.

Next week the orchestra is on tour; on Nov. 25-56 Gunther Schuller will be guest conductor in Dvorak's "Othello" overture, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony and Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4, with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 171,536
NOV 12 1966

Eden and Tamir soloists

Bartók tour de force

By Harold Rogers

One couldn't help feeling a certain sense of disappointment—howbeit mild—when the Boston Symphony gve its first performance of Bartók's Concerto for Two Pianos, Percussion, and Orchestra yesterday afternoon. Though it was a fine traversal in nearly every respect, it lacked the brilliant intensity it can have when played in its original form—the noted Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion.

The most exciting hearing in my experience took place more than a decade ago at Jordan Hall. Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Waldbauer were the pianists, and one of the percussionists was Vic Firth, now the Boston Symphony's timpanist. On this occasion the intensity of Bartók's emotion was fired to a white heat that left listeners giddy with delight.

Another memorable performance was turned in by Malcolm Frager and Vladimir Ashkenazy last season at Carnegie Hall in New York. Perhaps the success of the work in its smaller form is owing to its concentration of ideas. Bartók achieved the clearest distillation as he originally conceived it.

Lost dynamism

But in its orchestral version these ideas become diffused. They are all there, of course; the piano parts remain virtually unchanged. Yet they do not stand forth in the same dynamic way.

Taken on its own merits, however, yesterday's performance was indeed pleasant, at times even aurally impressive. Certainly the soloists—Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir of Israel—struck off the piano passages with deftness and élan.

Erich Leinsdorf opened the concert with another of his precise if somewhat antiseptic readings of Haydn—in this case one of the London symphonies, that in D major, No. 93. It abounded in classical elegance, tonal balance, phrasal poise.

Borodin revival

After the intermission Mr. Leinsdorf revived Borodin's Second Symphony (last heard in Symphony Hall 32 years ago when Serge Koussevitzky did it). Though it has its old-fashioned moments that wouldn't wear well if heard too often, it is an engaging work, filled with the moods and color that we associate with Tchaikovsky and the Russian Five (of whom Borodin was one).

The first opening Allegro moderato is heavily Slavic, the orchestra often moving morosely in unison. It was a plaint like those racial moans that rise from the score of Mussorgsky's "Boris Godunov."

The Molto vivo section is like the vast portion of Russian ballet music, with echoes of Borodin's own dances from "Prince Igor," his unfinished opera. The Andante is perhaps the least successful of the movements. A sad and rather sentimental folkish melody is rather tediously developed.

But the final Allegro is a real leg-flinger in a fast three-time. It was a genial conclusion to an entertaining musical afternoon.

TUES. - CAMBRIDGE #2 NOV. 22

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
NOV 13 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
NOV 12 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 13 1966

BSO on Tour

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on their second tour of the season. Concerts will be given at Constitution Hall, Washington, Tuesday night, in Philharmonic Hall, New York, Wednesday and Friday, and in Carnegie Hall, New York, Thursday and Saturday evenings.

Several guest artists will appear with the orchestra: Richard Burgin as soloist and guest conductor; E. G. Marshall, narrator; Eden and Tamir, duo pianist; Phyllis Bryn-Julson, soprano and Claude Frank, pianist.

The next Symphony Hall concert will be the second program of the "Cambridge" series, Tuesday, Nov. 22, at 8:30. The concert will include William Sydeman's new work "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" with E. G. Marshall as narrator, and will be telecast and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Ch 2 and WGBH-FM.

The next Friday-Saturday concerts will take place Nov. 25 and 26. Gunther Schuller, who this Summer was appointed president of the New England Conservatory, will be guest conductor. His program will include the Ives Symphony No. 4.

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Suite No. 3 in D major, for Orchestra

I. Overture
II. Air
III. Gavotte I; Gavotte II
IV. Bourrée
V. Gigue

SYDEMAN ..... In Memoriam John F. Kennedy†

I. Adagio lamentoso
II. Allegro; Theme and variations

E. G. MARSHALL, Narrator

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

SCHUMANN ..... Symphony No. 1, in B-flat major, Op. 38

I. Andante un poco maestoso; Allegro molto vivace
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace; Trio: Molto più vivace; Trio II
IV. Allegro animato e grazioso

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

† The text of the narration will be found on page 14.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
NOV 20 1966

Leinsdorf to Conduct In Cambridge Series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Symphony Hall this week after a week's tour to Washington and New York. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has invited Gunther Schuller to be guest conductor at the programs next weekend, Friday afternoon, 2 p. m. and Saturday evening, 8.30 p. m., and also the following Tuesday evening.

Cambridge Series

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra this Tuesday evening, the second of the "Cambridge" series.

The "Cambridge" program will consist of Bach's Suite No. 3 for Orchestra; the new work "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, with E. G. Marshall as narrator; and Schumann's Symphony No. 1.

Final Performance

It will be the seventh and final performance of Sydeman's work in the current series of performances planned by Mr. Leinsdorf around the world premiere, which took place in Symphony Hall Nov. 4.

First Appearance

Mr. Schuller will be making his first Symphony Hall appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will open his program with Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," Op. 93, and continue with the Schubert Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished."

After intermission the New England Conservatory Chorus, John Oliver Acting, conductor, will join Mr. Schuller and the orchestra in a performance of the Symphony No. 4 by Charles Ives.

Appointed President

Mr. Schuller has recently been appointed the ninth president of the New England Conservatory and will begin his duties with the 1967-68 season.

He is currently associate professor of music at Yale University, and is also chairman of the Composition Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a position he has held since 1963.

He is noted for his exceptional virtuosity as a composer, conductor, performer, writer and teacher. His most recent work, an opera entitled "The Visitation," received great acclaim last month after its world premiere by the Hamburg Opera, Mr. Schuller conducting.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
NOV 19 1966

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall.

Tues. at 8:30:
Erich Leinsdorf leads the BSO, recently returned from a week of touring, in Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major for Orchestra; William Sydeman's "In Memoriam for John F. Kennedy for Narrator and Orchestra" with E. G. Marshall as narrator, and Schumann's Symphony No. 1, in B-flat major, Op. 38.

Fri. at 2:
Guest conductor Gunther Schuller conducts Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," Op. 93; Schubert's Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished;" and Ives' Symphony No. 4, with the New England Conservatory Chorus. Repeat performance Saturday at 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Boston After Dark
Boston, Mass.
NOV 2 1966

JFK memoriam at symphony hall

The Boston Symphony will perform the world premiere of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman this Friday afternoon and Saturday night. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct and E. G. Marshall will narrate.

The work will be performed in the "Cambridge" concert in Symphony Hall, Nov. 22, when it will be televised by Channel 2, WGBH. It will be performed this month also in Washington, D.C., and New York Philharmonic Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 20 1966

free.

TUESDAY — Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Bach's Suite No. 3, Sydeman's In Memoriam John F. Kennedy, with E. G. Marshall, narrator, and Schumann's Spring Symphony. At Symphony Hall, 8:30 p.m.

TUES. - CAMBRIDGE #2 NOV. 22

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
NOV 13 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
NOV 12 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 13 1966

BSO on Tour

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on their second tour of the season. Concerts will be given at Constitution Hall, Washington, Tuesday night, in Philharmonic Hall, New York, Wednesday and Friday, and in Carnegie Hall, New York, Thursday and Saturday evenings.

Several guest artists will appear with the orchestra: Richard Burgin as soloist and guest conductor; E. G. Marshall, narrator; Eden and Tamir, duo pianist; Phyllis Bryn-Julson, soprano and Claude Frank, pianist.

The next Symphony Hall concert will be the second program of the "Cambridge" series, Tuesday, Nov. 22, at 8:30. The concert will include William Sydeman's new work "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" with E. G. Marshall as narrator, and will be telecast and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Ch 2 and WGBH-FM.

The next Friday-Saturday concerts will take place Nov. 25 and 26. Gunther Schuller, who this Summer was appointed president of the New England Conservatory, will be guest conductor. His program will include the Ives Symphony No. 4.

Second Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 22, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Suite No. 3 in D major, for Orchestra

I. Overture
II. Air
III. Gavotte I; Gavotte II
IV. Bourrée
V. Gigue

SYDEMAN ..... In Memoriam John F. Kennedy†

I. Adagio lamentoso
II. Allegro; Theme and variations

E. G. MARSHALL, Narrator

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

SCHUMANN ..... Symphony No. 1, in B-flat major, Op. 38

I. Andante un poco maestoso; Allegro molto vivace
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace; Trio: Molto più vivace; Trio II
IV. Allegro animato e grazioso

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

† The text of the narration will be found on page 14.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
NOV 20 1966

Leinsdorf to Conduct In Cambridge Series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Symphony Hall this week after a we ek's tour to Washington and New York. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has invited Gunther Schuller to be guest conductor at the programs next weekend, Friday afternoon, 2 p. m. and Saturday evening, 8.30 p. m., and also the following Tuesday evening.

Cambridge Series

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra this Tuesday evening, the second of the "Cambridge" series.

The "Cambridge" program will consist of Bach's Suite No. 3 for Orchestra; the new work "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, with E. G. Marshall as narrator; and Schumann's Symphony No. 1.

Final Performance

It will be the seventh and final performance of Sydeman's work in the current series of performances planned by Mr. Leinsdorf around the world premiere, which took place in Symphony Hall Nov. 4.

First Appearance

Mr. Schuller will be making his first Symphony Hall appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will open his program with Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," Op. 93, and continue with the Schubert Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished."

After intermission the New England Conservatory Chorus, John Oliver Acting, conductor, will join Mr. Schuller and the orchestra in a performance of the Symphony No. 4 by Charles Ives.

Appointed President

Mr. Schuller has recently been appointed the ninth president of the New England Conservatory and will begin his duties with t he 1967-68 season.

He is currently associate professor of music at Yale University, and is also chairman of the Composition Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a position he has held since 1963.

He is noted for his exceptional virtuosity as a composer, conductor, performer, writer and teacher. His most recent work, an opera entitled "The Visitation," received great acclaim last month after its world premiere by the Hamburg Opera, Mr. Schuller conducting.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
NOV 19 1966

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Boston.

Tues. at 8:30:
Erich Leinsdorf leads the BSO, recently returned from a week of touring, in Bach's Suite No. 3 in D major for Orchestra; William Sydeman's "In Memoriam for John F. Kennedy for Narrator and Orchestra" with E. G. Marshall as narrator, and Schumann's Symphony No. 1, in B-flat major, Op. 38.

Fri. at 2:
Guest conductor Gunther Schuller conducts Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," Op. 93; Schubert's Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished;" and Ives' Symphony No: 4, with the New England Conservatory Chorus. Repeat performance Saturday at 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Boston After Dark
Boston, Mass.
NOV 2 1966

JFK memoriam at symphony hall

The Boston Symphony will perform the world premiere of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman this Friday afternoon and Saturday night. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct and E. G. Marshall will narrate.

The work will be performed in the "Cambridge" concert in Symphony Hall, Nov. 22, when it will be televised by Channel 2, WGBH. It will be performed this month also in Washington, D.C., and New York Philharmonic Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 20 1966

free.

TUESDAY — Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Bach's Suite No. 3, Sydeman's In Memoriam John F. Kennedy, with E. G. Marshall, narrator, and Schumann's Spring Symphony. At Symphony Hall, 8:30 p.m.

33

FRI. + SAT. #8 NOV. 25 + 26

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 21,500
DEC 16 1966

Bono's I-Vue

BY LILLIAN BONO

To rectify a serious mistake made by one of Boston's so-called music critics, I wish to salute Monsieur Munch for his beautiful and graceful interpretation of the art of conducting . . . an art which we Bostonians have missed for some time . . . In this world of mechanized lives and living, in this world of computers, to which I might add, has even invaded the world of music and performance of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra, which at times sounds like a machine, it is gratifying to hear music, per se, romantic music flooding cold Boston Symphony hall and bringing warmth to our hearts. What a wonderful experience to hear the charm and beauty of Charles Munch's description throughout this great instrument, the Boston Symphony Orchestra . . . sheer elegance and poetry permeates his interpretation of the Pelléas et Mélisande suite of Fauré which was like a zephyr which leaves you floating on clouds . . . a complete departure . . . ear expression of the younger conductors . . . Honnegar is not my cup of tea so therefore I refuse to comment on something I do not understand . . . The Schubert Symphony was a real charming experience in the simplicity of romanticism and humility which was true of Schubert's life . . . I am sure that if he had heard it, he would have wished it to be performed in this manner and then came Munch, the great dreamer, with Ravel's "La Valse" in which he displays his true personality a dream of a dance completely in mystic form where he inundates you with charm, cynicism and beauty and carries you away to distant places and unheard of ecstasy . . . you leave the hall completely enchanted by the mere artistic facets of Charles Munch.

Au revoir J. S.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
NOV 20 1966

Symphony This Week

Gunther Schuller Orchestra's Guest

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Symphony Hall this week after a week's tour to Washington and New York. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has invited Gunther Schuller to be guest conductor at the programs next weekend, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, and also the following Tuesday evening.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra this Tuesday evening, the second of the "Cambridge" series.

The "Cambridge" program will consist of Bach's Suite No. 3 for Orchestra; the new work "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, with E. G. Marshall as narrator; and Schumann's Symphony No. 1. It will be the seventh and final performance of Sydeman's work in the current series of performances planned by Mr. Leinsdorf around the world premiere, which took place in Symphony Hall Nov. 4. The entire concert will be telecast and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and

MR. SCHULLER will be making his first Symphony Hall appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will open his program with Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," Op. 93, and continue with the Schubert Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished." After intermission the New England Conservatory Chorus will join Mr. Schuller and the orchestra in a performance of the Symphony No. 4 by Charles Ives.

Mr. Schuller has recently been appointed the ninth president of the New England Conservatory and will begin his duties with the 1967-68 season. He is currently associate professor of music at Yale University, and is also chairman of the Composition Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a position he has held since 1963.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Eighth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 25, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 26, at 8:30 o'clock

GUNTHER SCHULLER, Guest Conductor

DVOŘÁK ..... Overture to "Othello," Op. 93

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

INTERMISSION

IVES ..... Symphony No. 4
I. Prelude: Maestoso
II. Allegretto
III. Fugue: Andante moderato
IV. Very slowly — Largo maestoso
(First performance in Boston)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
JOHN OLIVER, Acting Conductor

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[457]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 26 1966

Gunther Schuller Leads BSO in Ives' 4th Symphony Premiere

(By ROLF BOSWELL)

Charles E. Ives' impressive and muscular fourth smyphony achieved its first local performance in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon when Gunther Schuller, president-elect of the New England Conservatory of Music, was guest conductor. For a score of years, ending in 1916, the Connecticut Yankee composer crafted his corn-prone, crazy-quilt medley of homespun tunes, plus some small beer from the Brahms & Handel brewery, that somehow made terrific symphonic sense, with all the ingenuity of a whittler of wooden nutmegs.

G. Schuller

His is a massive score and a terrifically complex one, with page after page of polyrythms, awkward configurations and sheer masses of instrumental dissonances, requiring slow and concentrated translations. In last year's world premiere in New York, Leopold Stokowski used two conductorial assistants, but Schuller's slight revisions made it possible for him to go it alone in his Berlin, London and Boston presentations, though yesterday Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein rendered helpful nods and becks with his upraised bow for a dozen bars or so at one point.

The very brief prelude would appear to be the only one of the four movements not originally written as something else, contrasting huge blasting gestilatucson ticulations in the massive full orchestra with another Ivesian concoction — the sound of a distantly ethereal string choir contrasting in tempo with the fuller ensemble. The movement ended naively with the offstage New England Conservatory Chorus singing "Watchman, What of the Night?"

In the second movement Ives depicted in sound the Fourth of July at Concord, with competing brass bands and drum-and-bugle corps which would make case-hardened Bill Duncliffe sit up and take notice, but this effect often seems a senseless explosion of noise from which blast off flying fragments of familiar tunes.

Part of the fun in listening to this all-American symphony is in picking out the various allusions to patriotic songs and hymn tunes being quoted as, for instance, in the third movement of potent simplicity, wherein the composer orchestrated the double fugue from his first string quartet (1896), based on "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" and "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name."

The finale originally was a slow march for organ in simultaneous and only vaguely related streams of sound—one from the percussion, one from the wordless chorus. The finale is based on "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Its effect is foreboding, weird, distressing and ominous. As Thomas Streans Eliot put it in his "Hollow Men" (1925):

This is the way the world ends
Not with a bang but a whimper

Before the interval, Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" showed off the orchestra to perfection, with the guest conductor keeping his educated fingers on the pulse of this musical afflatus at all times.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 171,536
NOV 26 1966

Schuller conducts Ives in Boston Symphony première

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

By Harold Rogers

There weren't any tape recorders back in the days between 1910 and 1916. If there were, Charles Ives would surely have put them in his Fourth Symphony.

Back in those days there were few if any composers fooling around with the dernier cri of the 1960's—aleatory music. That's the stuff that uses the element of chance. But between 1910 and 1916 it was old hat to Ives.

You name it, in fact, and the chances are ten to one that Ives did it. In his Symphony No. 4—given its Boston première yesterday afternoon by the Boston Symphony—Ives out-computered any musicmaking computer available today. Though he wrote it between 1910 and 1916, it waited until 1965 (11 years after his passing) for its world première. Leopold Stokowski produced it with the help of two other conductors.

Tour de force

Gunther Schuller, however, has made a few minor revisions that permit him to conduct it single handed—or with only the silght aid of the concertmaster who once traced a large 4/4 pattern with his bow while Mr. Schuller was engaged in various other rhythms. Mr. Schuller has presented the Fourth in Berlin, London, and now in Boston.

As nearly everybody knows, Mr. Schuller will assume his duties as the next president of the New England Conservatory of Music with the academic year of 1967-68. Though he is to be found in today's avant garde among composers, his work has been tempered with intelligence, order, and a fine flair for wit. He is an apt conductor for Ives, considering that the Allegretto is about as nice a piece of organized chaos as you'll ever find.

It is in the Allegretto, in fact, that the work shoots its wad. We come to it after a short and rather unimpressive Prelude, and what follows the Allegretto is plainly anticlimactic—the Fugue merely proves that Ives could be academic if he wanted to, and the final Largo maestoso sets up a few mild tensions that are finally resolved by the organ and a heavenly choir.

Comedy of surprises

But let's get back to the Allegretto where all the fun took place. Ives himself did not call it a scherzo "but rather a comedy." It came as no surprise, therefore, to see many dignified members of the audience involved in open laughter. They were plainly having a good time—laughing with it, rather than at it. Had they been laughing at it, more of them would have made their getaway at the close of the movement, yet all but a few remained. If they were looking for more of the same, they must have been, as was I, disappointed.

Ives loved to quote, and in the Allegretto (as elsewhere) he quoted from nine or ten old American hymn tunes and folk songs, though the listener would be hard put to track them down in the agonized fabric of the music. At times the whole sheebang would go off with trumpeters blowing out their lungs from the top left balcony, with five or six percussionists whanging and banging at this or that, with a pianist pursuing his own bent, and all the rest riding off in seven ways.

Suddenly it would all come to a stop for a serene respite of a Pilgrim prayer meeting. Then it would explode again. Then quiet again for the Pilgrims. And so on—aleatory, polyrhythmic, polytonal, cluster-tonal, atonal. . . .

You name it, Ives did it—back in the days between 1910 and 1916.

33

FRI. + SAT. #8 NOV. 25 + 26

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 21,500
DEC 16 1966

Bono's I-Vue

BY LILLIAN BONO

To rectify a serious mistake made by one of Boston's so-called music critics, I wish to salute Monsieur Munch for his beautiful and graceful interpretation of the art of conducting . . . an art which we Bostonians have missed for some time . . . In this world of mechanized lives and living, in this world of computers, to which I might add, has even invaded the world of music and performance of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra, which at times sounds like a machine, it is gratifying to hear music, per se, romantic music flooding cold Boston Symphony hall and bringing warmth to our hearts. What a wonderful experience to hear the charm and beauty of Charles Munch's description throughout this great instrument, the Boston Symphony Orchestra . . . sheer elegance and poetry permeates his interpretation of the Pelléas et Mélisande suite of Fauré which was like a zephyr which leaves you floating on clouds . . . a complete departure . . . ear expression of the younger conductors . . . Honnegar is not my cup of tea so therefore I refuse to comment on something I do not understand . . . The Schubert Symphony was a real charming experience in the simplicity of romanticism and humility which was true of Schubert's life . . . I am sure that if he had heard it, he would have wished it to be performed in this manner and then came Munch, the great dreamer, with Ravel's "La Valse" in which he displays his true personality a dream of a dance completely in mystic form where he inundates you with charm, cynicism and beauty and carries you away to distant places and unheard of ecstasy . . . you leave the hall completely enchanted by the mere artistic facets of Charles Munch.

Au revoir J. S.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
NOV 20 1966

Symphony This Week

Gunther Schuller Orchestra's Guest

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return to Symphony Hall this week after a week's tour to Washington and New York. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has invited Gunther Schuller to be guest conductor at the programs next weekend, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, and also the following Tuesday evening.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra this Tuesday evening, the second of the "Cambridge" series.

The "Cambridge" program will consist of Bach's Suite No. 3 for Orchestra; the new work "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, with E. G. Marshall as narrator; and Schumann's Symphony No. 1. It will be the seventh and final performance of Sydeman's work in the current series of performances planned by Mr. Leinsdorf around the world premiere, which took place in Symphony Hall Nov. 4. The entire concert will be telecast and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and

MR. SCHULLER will be making his first Symphony Hall appearance as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will open his program with Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," Op. 93, and continue with the Schubert Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished." After intermission the New England Conservatory Chorus will join Mr. Schuller and the orchestra in a performance of the Symphony No. 4 by Charles Ives.

Mr. Schuller has recently been appointed the ninth president of the New England Conservatory and will begin his duties with the 1967-68 season. He is currently associate professor of music at Yale University, and is also chairman of the Composition Department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a position he has held since 1963.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Eighth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 25, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 26, at 8:30 o'clock

GUNTHER SCHULLER, Guest Conductor

DVOŘÁK ..... Overture to "Othello," Op. 93

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

INTERMISSION

IVES ..... Symphony No. 4
I. Prelude: Maestoso
II. Allegretto
III. Fugue: Andante moderato
IV. Very slowly — Largo maestoso
(First performance in Boston)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
JOHN OLIVER, Acting Conductor

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[457]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 171,536
NOV 26 1966

Schuller conducts Ives in Boston Symphony première

By Harold Rogers

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

There weren't any tape recorders back in the days between 1910 and 1916. If there were, Charles Ives would surely have put them in his Fourth Symphony.

Back in those days there were few if any composers fooling around with the dernier cri of the 1960's—aleatory music. That's the stuff that uses the element of chance. But between 1910 and 1916 it was old hat to Ives.

You name it, in fact, and the chances are ten to one that Ives did it. In his Symphony No. 4—given its Boston première yesterday afternoon by the Boston Symphony—Ives out-computered any musicmaking computer available today. Though he wrote it between 1910 and 1916, it waited until 1965 (11 years after his passing) for its world première. Leopold Stokowski produced it with the help of two other conductors.

Tour de force

Gunther Schuller, however, has made a few minor revisions that permit him to conduct it single handed—or with only the silght aid of the concertmaster who once traced a large 4/4 pattern with his bow while Mr. Schuller was engaged in various other rhythms. Mr. Schuller has presented the Fourth in Berlin, London, and now in Boston.

As nearly everybody knows, Mr. Schuller will assume his duties as the next president of the New England Conservatory of Music with the academic year of 1967-68. Though he is to be found in today's avant garde among composers, his work has been tempered with intelligence, order, and a fine flair for wit. He is an apt conductor for Ives, considering that the Allegretto is about as nice a piece of organized chaos as you'll ever find.

It is in the Allegretto, in fact, that the work shoots its wad. We come to it after a short and rather unimpressive Prelude, and what follows the Allegretto is plainly anticlimactic—the Fugue merely proves that Ives could be academic if he wanted to, and the final Largo maestoso sets up a few mild tensions that are finally resolved by the organ and a heavenly choir.

Comedy of surprises

But let's get back to the Allegretto where all the fun took place. Ives himself did not call it a scherzo "but rather a comedy." It came as no surprise, therefore, to see many dignified members of the audience involved in open laughter. They were plainly having a good time—laughing with it, rather than at it. Had they been laughing at it, more of them would have made their getaway at the close of the movement, yet all but a few remained. If they were looking for more of the same, they must have been, as was I, disappointed.

Ives loved to quote, and in the Allegretto (as elsewhere) he quoted from nine or ten old American hymn tunes and folk songs, though the listener would be hard put to track them down in the agonized fabric of the music. At times the whole sheebang would go off with trumpeters blowing out their lungs from the top left balcony, with five or six percussionists whanging and banging at this or that, with a pianist pursuing his own bent, and all the rest riding off in seven ways.

Suddenly it would all come to a stop for a serene respite of a Pilgrim prayer meeting. Then it would explode again. Then quiet again for the Pilgrims. And so on—aleatory, polyrhythmic, polytonal, cluster-tonal, atonal. . . .

You name it, Ives did it—back in the days between 1910 and 1916.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 26 1966

Gunther Schuller Leads BSO in Ives' 4th Symphony Premiere

(By ROLF BOSWELL)

Charles E. Ives' impressive and muscular fourth smyphony acbieved its first local performance in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon when Gunther Schuller, president-elect of the New England Conservatory of Music, was guest conductor. For a score of years, ending in 1916, the Connecticut Yankee composer crafted his corn-prone, crazy-quilt medley of homespun tunes, plus some small beer from the Brahms & Handel brewery, that somehow made terrific symphonic sense, with all the ingenuity of a whittler of wooden nutmegs.

G. Schuller

His is a massive score and a terrifically complex one, with page after page of polyrythms, awkward configurations and sheer masses of instrumental dissonances, requiring slow and concentrated translations. In last year's world premiere in New York, Leopold Stokowski used two conductorial assistants, but Schuller's slight revisions made it possible for him to go it alone in his Berlin, London and Boston presentations, though yesterday Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein rendered helpful nods and becks with his upraised bow for a dozen bars or so at one point.

The very brief prelude would appear to be the only one of the four movements not originally written as something else, contrasting huge, blasting gestilatiucson ticulations in the massive full orchestra with another Ivesian concoction — the sound of a distantly ethereal string choir contrasting in tempo with the fuller ensemble. The movement ended naively with the offstage New England Conservatory Chorus singing "Watchman, What of the Night?"

In the second movement Ives depicted in sound the Fourth of July at Concord, with competing brass bands and drum-and-bugle corps which would make case-hardened Bill Duncliffe sit up and take notice, but this effect often seems a senseless explosion of noise from which blast off flying fragments of familiar tunes.

Part of the fun in listening to this all-American symphony is in picking out the various allusions to patriotic songs and hymn tunes being quoted as, for instance, in the third movement of potent simplicity, wherein the composer orchestrated the double fugue from his first string quartet (1896), based on "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" and "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name."

The finale originally was a slow march for organ in simultaneous and only vaguely related streams of sound—one from the percussion, one from the wordless chorus. The finale is based on "Nearer, My God, to Thee." Its effect is foreboding, weird, distressing and ominous. As Thomas Streans Eliot put it in his "Hollow Men" (1925):

This is the way the world ends
Not with a bang but a whimper

Before the interval, Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony" showed off the orchestra to perfection, with the guest conductor keeping his educated fingers on the pulse of this musical afflatus at all times.

TUES. A #4 NOV. 29

34

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 26 1966

SYMPHONY

Charles Ives Thanksgiving

By McLAREN HARRIS

Certainly not simple coincidence brought forth the initial Boston performance of Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4 on the day after Thanksgiving. It may be presumptious to say that Ives planned things that way, but were he alive, in all probability he would have.

For Ives, composing was an avocation. He wrote with an eye toward neither performance nor publication; hence, his manuscripts have always lain in some disarray. This was the problem, solved only through long hours of collection, verification and proper assembly, which caused the delay in the Fourth Symphony's premier performance—finally occurring in April, 1965, under Leopold Stokowski's direction. Considering the obstacles and the nature of the work, Friday's performance by the Symphony under guest conductor Gunther Schuller was no small achievement.

American—and More

To refer to Ives being as American as roast turkey and pumpkin pie, to note that his favorite holiday was the Fourth of July and his favorite song "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean," may be to indulge in well-trodden sentimentality. But awareness of his American heritage pervaded Ives' consciousness life-long; as he used folksongs, patriotic tunes, marches and hymns to augment many of his other works, so they form the principal thematic basis of the Fourth Symphony. This was his conservative side; his experimental side is revealed in his treatment of them—couched in a symphonic score, occasionally utilized for philosophic intent, laced with the composer's tastes of microtones, polyrhythm, orchestral apparatus rivalling Mahler's, and his own ideas about counterpoint.

In fact, virtually everything about the Fourth Symphony bears a relation to counterpoint. The first, second and fourth movements split the ensemble into separate units; the first (Prelude) pits the orchestra, piano and chorus against a "distant choir" of strings and harps; in the second, slower string episodes are continually crowded out by bursts from winds and percussion; the finale has three distinct groups—percussion, main orchestra and another "distant choir." The third movement is a double fugue, arranged from Ives' First String Quartet.

There is a counterpoint of themes, taken from literally dozens of tunes—"Nearer My God to Thee," "Marching Through Georgia," "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," "Washington Post," "Turkey in the Straw," etc. There is a counterpoint of rhythm and meter; the instrumental sections usually play in differing tempos and time signatures. And there is a counterpoint of timbre, texture and volume between the sections—or even further, of space, if one takes the term "distant" quite seriously.

Ives' familiar phrase quotations are generally short and are not so much prominent features as occurrences—elements which turn up in the course of a larger expression. The exception appears in the first movement (which, in Ives' philosophic scheme, asks the questions "What?" and "Why?" about life) the chorus sings a verse, almost straight, of "Watchman, Tell Us of the Night," against a shifting background, making up a sort of surrealist chorale prelude.

A Loud and Brassy 'Comedy'

Sometimes the sound becomes almost unbearably harsh, as in the swirling, chaotic abandon of brass and percussion during the second movement, which the composer described as a "comedy," contrasting an exciting, easy progress through life with the Pilgrims' trials. It forms a total contrast to the ordered motion and stable harmonies of the following Andante, the lone diatonic movement, which symbolizes formalism, ritual, order; but here is a humorous touch, too—a trombone quoting from "Joy to the World." The last movement Ives called "an apotheosis of the preceding content, in terms that have something to do with the reality of existence and its religious experience." It returns to a multiplicity of meter, tempo and material, ominous but restrained, and adds a wordless chorus.

At times the symphony appears to exhibit a crude experimentalism, at others a mystic appeal and at still others an earthiness and simple humor. Whatever its totality, it is not likely to be performed often. Stokowski employed three conductors for the first performance. Schuller went it alone, except for a few bars when Joseph Silverstein waved his violin bow, and that in itself was a triumph, a tentative-sounding response from the orchestra (though not the New England Conservatory Chorus) could have been actual or illusionary, I couldn't tell. Ives' symphony is pure Americana, but many will probably prefer their turkey, cranberry sauce and pie one at a time.

Schuller also conducted Dvorak's "Othello" overture and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony. Sometimes he appeared almost uncomfortable on the podium, bending slightly from the waist, the left arm following the right's lead. But though Schubert's first movement plodded a bit in detached fashion, the second was elegantly poetic; Dvorak's overture, which lacks both absolute and programmatic values, was generally well-played and mounted much surface warmth.

Next week Charles Munch will return as guest conductor in Faure's suite from "Pelleas et Melisande," Honegger's Sypmphony No. 2, Schubert's Symphony No. 2 and "La Valse," by Ravel.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Gunther Schuller conducting, presented the eighth program of the joint season Friday at Symphony Hall. The New England Conservatory Chorus assisted in the Ives symphony.

"Othello" overture, Op. 93 ..... Dvorak
Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished" ..... Schubert
Symphony No. 4 ..... Ives

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

GUNTHER SCHULLER, Guest Conductor

DVOŘÁK ..... Overture, "Othello," Op. 93

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

INTERMISSION

IVES ..... Symphony No. 4
I. Prelude: Maestoso
II. Allegretto
III. Fugue: Andante moderato
IV. Very slowly — Largo maestoso

Piano solo: YUJI TAKAHASHI
(First performance in this series)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
JOHN OLIVER, Acting Conductor

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 26 1966

Schuller Conducts B.S.O.

Ives as 'Instant Pop'

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

The ARTS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Gunther Schuller conductor: Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Ives' Symphony No. 4 (Boston premiere), with the New England Conservatory Chorus prepared by John Oliver, Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Someone in Symphony Hall remarked that the second movement of the Ives Fourth sounded like a whole Pops season played all at once in 15 minutes. Ives would have liked that criticism, and he would have enjoyed such a telescoped Pops season, too. One of the most special things about Ives was his conception of musical composition as, sometimes at least, an art of collage. Boldly he assembled disparate elements, hymns, patriotic songs, sentimental ballads, quotations from the classics, taking these found objects to create a glowing chaos that can radiate illumination of an almost visionary quality and that is quite unlike anything else in music before or since.

In the Fourth Symphony, Ives, as so often, was concerned with an extra-musical problem, in this case "the searching questions of 'What?' and 'Why?' which the spirit of man asks of life." The Prelude, a magically beclouded fantasy on "Watchman, tell us of the night," poses the question. Diverse answers come in the following movements, a wild comedy that his kinship with Hawthorne's "Celestial Railroad" a double fugue on "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" and "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," academic with jolts; a slow and mostly quiet finale of the utmost mystery.

But more than program music, or as Leonard Bernstein has put it so well, rather than program music, this is "music about music." Behind the Fourth, there is a powerful and original idea, but what makes the piece go is the music in which it is couched. Ives was often an undisciplined writer who seemed to take defiant pleasure in leaving compositional loose ends. The mess in his music is inextricably tied to the excitement of the best of it, but it also produced pieces that don't work. The Fourth Symphony is one that does work. Its sweeping energy, its evocative sounds, its sure sense of contrast and shape, make it the most impressive and exciting embodiment of the curious and magnificent Ives vision of music.

The performance by Gunther Schuller and the Boston Symphony was superb, and in its tautness, and in its willingness to face rather than to modify the oddities, it was much more true to the nature of the work than the Stokowski interpretation on the recording. The playing was splendid, and the quiet percussion ostinato that runs through the finale was particularly sensitively done.

Ives suggests the use of a second conductor for certain passages. Stokowski at the premiere used a second and a third as well, but Schuller has prepared an edition that enables him to conduct it by himself. The performance earned Schuller a healthy ovation. There were also those who took flight when the "Celestial Railroad" came to the end of its wild journey; in fact, for driving the lily-livered from Symphony Hall, the Ives Fourth beats even the Beethoven Ninth.

Schuller's performance of the "Schubert Unfinished" was in the first movement expansive and flexible in tempo, sensitively phrased, even with a generally low dynamic scale emphatic about making rhetorical points. It was beautifully built, serious enough to sound more like the Brahms "Second" than ever before, and altogether impressive. Having done such a fine job of integrating the varied moods of the first movement—and their variety was emphasized in the performance — Schuller seemed unable to make the Andante go, and in spite of many sensitive details it did not attain a convincing shape as a whole. The orchestra's delicate, low-pressure playing was a pleasure.

Dvorak's "Othello" is the neglected member of the triptych that includes "Nature's Realm" and "Carnival." Inadequate to Shakespeare, it is nonetheless an attractive work on about the level of seriousness of the first movement of the D minor Symphony. Unlike the Symphony movement, though, "Othello" is loose and episodic writing. I am not quite sure, therefore, how cohesive it can be made to sound, but Schuller's rhythmic conducting made a good case for the piece.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 20 1966

Schuller B.S.O. Guest

The New England Conservatory's president-elect, composer Gunther Schuller, will conduct the Boston Symphony's concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. His program will include the first Boston, and second United States performance, of Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4.

Also to be heard are Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," op. 93, and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony. The New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by John Oliver, will sing in the Ives.

Schuller, who becomes the ninth president of the Conservatory, and will begin his duties with the 1967-68 season. He is currently associate professor of music at Yale University, and is also chairman of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a position he has held since 1963. His most recent work, an opera entitled "The Visitation," received great acclaim last month after its world premiere by the Hamburg Opera, Schuller conducting.

The orchestra will be heard under Erich Leinsdorf this Tuesday evening at 8:30. The program will consist of Bach's Suite No. 3 for Orchestra; the new work "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, with E. G. Marshall as narrator; and Schumann's Symphony No. 1. It will be the seventh and final performance of Sydeman's work in the current series of performances planned by Erich Leinsdorf around the world premiere, which took place in Symphony Hall Nov. 4. The entire concert will be telecast and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and WGBH-FM.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
NOV 26 1966

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Boston.

Tues. at 8:30:
Guest conductor Gunther Schuller leads the BSO in Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," Op. 93; Schubert's Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished," and Ives' Symphony No. 4, with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

Thurs. at 7:30:
Charles Munch returns to Boston to conduct the BSO in an open rehearsal.

Fri. at 2:
The orchestra, led by Munch, plays Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80; Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra; Schubert's Symphony No. 2 in B-flat major, and Ravel's Choreographic Poem "La Valse." Encore performance Saturday at 8:30.

TUES. A #4 NOV. 29

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 26 1966

SYMPHONY

Charles Ives Thanksgiving

By McLAREN HARRIS

Certainly not simple coincidence brought forth the initial Boston performance of Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4 on the day after Thanksgiving. It may be presumptious to say that Ives planned things that way, but were he alive, in all probability he would have.

For Ives, composing was an avocation. He wrote with an eye toward neither performance nor publication; hence, his manuscripts have always lain in some disarray. This was the problem, solved only through long hours of collection, verification and proper assembly, which caused the delay in the Fourth Symphony's premier performance—finally occurring in April, 1965, under Leopold Stokowski's direction. Considering the obstacles and the nature of the work, Friday's performance by the Symphony under guest conductor Gunther Schuller was no small achievement.

American—and More

To refer to Ives being as American as roast turkey and pumpkin pie, to note that his favorite holiday was the Fourth of July and his favorite song "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean," may be to indulge in well-trodden sentimentality. But awareness of his American heritage pervaded Ives' consciousness life-long; as he used folksongs, patriotic tunes, marches and hymns to augment many of his other works, so they form the principal thematic basis of the Fourth Symphony. This was his conservative side; his experimental side is revealed in his treatment of them—couched in a symphonic score, occasionally utilized for philosophic intent, laced with the composer's tastes of microtones, polyrhythm, orchestral apparatus rivalling Mahler's, and his own ideas about counterpoint.

In fact, virtually everything about the Fourth Symphony bears a relation to counterpoint. The first, second and fourth movements split the ensemble into separate units; the first (Prelude) pits the orchestra, piano and chorus against a "distant choir" of strings and harps; in the second, slower string episodes are continually crowded out by bursts from winds and percussion; the finale has three distinct groups—percussion, main orchestra and another "distant choir." The third movement is a double fugue, arranged from Ives' First String Quartet.

There is a counterpoint of themes, taken from literally dozens of tunes—"Nearer My God to Thee," "Marching Through Georgia," "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," "Washington Post," "Turkey in the Straw," etc. There is a counterpoint of rhythm and meter; the instrumental sections usually play in differing tempos and time signatures. And there is a counterpoint of timbre, texture and volume between the sections—or even further, of space, if one takes the term "distant" quite seriously.

Ives' familiar phrase quotations are generally short and are not so much prominent features as occurrences—elements which turn up in the course of a larger expression. The exception appears in the first movement (which, in Ives' philosophic scheme, asks the questions "What?" and "Why?" about life), the chorus sings a verse, almost straight, of "Watchman, Tell Us of the Night," against a shifting background, making up a sort of surrealist chorale prelude.

A Loud and Brassy 'Comedy'

Sometimes the sound becomes almost unbearably harsh, as in the swirling, chaotic abandon of brass and percussion during the second movement, which the composer described as a "comedy," contrasting an exciting, easy progress through life with the Pilgrims' trials. It forms a total contrast to the ordered motion and stable harmonies of the following Andante, the lone diatonic movement, which symbolizes formalism, ritual, order; but here is a humorous touch, too—a trombone quoting from "Joy to the World." The last movement Ives called "an apotheosis of the preceding content, in terms that have something to do with the reality of existence and its religious experience." It returns to a multiplicity of meter, tempo and material, ominous but restrained, and adds a wordless chorus.

At times the symphony appears to exhibit a crude experimentalism, at others a mystic appeal and at still others an earthiness and simple humor. Whatever its totality, it is not likely to be performed often. Stokowski employed three conductors for the first performance. Schuller went it alone, except for a few bars when Joseph Silverstein waved his violin bow, and that in itself was a triumph, a tentative-sounding response from the orchestra (though not the New England Conservatory Chorus) could have been actual or illusionary, I couldn't tell. Ives' symphony is pure Americana, but many will probably prefer their turkey, cranberry sauce and pie one at a time.

Schuller also conducted Dvorak's "Othello" overture and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony. Sometimes he appeared almost uncomfortable on the podium, bending slightly from the waist, the left arm following the right's lead. But though Schubert's first movement plodded a bit in detached fashion, the second was elegantly poetic; Dvorak's overture, which lacks both absolute and programmatic values, was generally well-played and mounted much surface warmth.

Next week Charles Munch will return as guest conductor in Faure's suite from "Pelleas et Melisande," Honegger's Sypmphony No. 2, Schubert's Symphony No. 2 and "La Valse," by Ravel.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Gunther Schuller conducting, presented the eighth program of the 60th season Friday at Symphony Hall. The New England Conservatory Chorus assisted in the Ives symphony.

"Othello" overture, Op. 93 ..... Dvorak
Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished" ..... Schubert
Symphony No. 4 ..... Ives

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

GUNTHER SCHULLER, Guest Conductor

DVOŘÁK ..... Overture, "Othello," Op. 93

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"
I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

INTERMISSION

IVES ..... Symphony No. 4
I. Prelude: Maestoso
II. Allegretto
III. Fugue: Andante moderato
IV. Very slowly — Largo maestoso

Piano solo: YUJI TAKAHASHI
(First performance in this series)

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
JOHN OLIVER, Acting Conductor

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 26 1966

Schuller Conducts B.S.O.

Ives as 'Instant Pop'

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

The ARTS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Gunther Schuller, conductor: Dvorak's Othello Overture, Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Ives' Symphony No. 4 (Boston premiere), with the New England Conservatory Chorus prepared by John Oliver. Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Someone in Symphony Hall remarked that the second movement of the Ives Fourth sounded like a whole Pops season played all at once in 15 minutes. Ives would have liked that criticism, and he would have enjoyed such a telescoped Pops season, too. One of the most special things about Ives was his conception of musical composition as, sometimes at least, an art of collage. Boldly he assembled disparate elements, hymns, patriotic songs, sentimental ballads, quotations from the classics, taking these found objects to create a glowing chaos that can radiate illumination of an almost visionary quality and that is quite unlike anything else in music before or since.

In the Fourth Symphony, Ives, as so often, was concerned with an extra-musical problem, in this case "the searching questions of 'What?' and 'Why?' which the spirit of man asks of life." The Prelude, a magically beclouded fantasy on "Watchman, tell us of the night," poses the question. Diverse answers come in the following movements, a wild comedy that his kinship with Hawthorne's "Celetial Railroad" a double fugue on "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" and "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," academic with jolts; a slow and mostly quiet finale of the utmost mystery.

But more than program music, or as Leonard Bernstein has put it so well, rather than program music, this is "music about music." Behind the Fourth, there is a powerful and original idea, but what makes the piece go is the music in which it is couched. Ives was often an undisciplined writer who seemed to take defiant pleasure in leaving compositional loose ends. The mess in his music is inextricably tied to the excitement of the best of it, but it also produced pieces that don't work. The Fourth Symphony is one that does work. Its sweeping energy, its evocative sounds, its sure sense of contrast and shape, make it the most impressive and exciting embodiment of the curious and magnificent Ives vision of music.

The performance by Gunther Schuller and the Boston Symphony was superb, and in its tautness, and in its willingness to face rather than to modify the oddities, it was much more true to the nature of the work than the Stokowski interpretation on the recording. The playing was splendid, and the quiet percussion ostinato that runs through the finale was particularly sensitively done.

Ives suggests the use of a second conductor for certain passages. Stokowski at the premiere used a second and a third as well, but Schuller has prepared an edition that enables him to conduct it by himself. The performance earned Schuller a healthy ovation. There were also those who took flight when the "Celestial Railroad" came to the end of its wild journey: in fact, for driving the lily-livered from Symphony Hall, the Ives Fourth beats even the Beethoven Ninth.

Schuller's performance of the "Schubert Unfinished" was in the first movement expansive and flexible in tempo, sensitively phrased, even with a generally low dynamic scale emphatic about making rhetorical points. It was beautifully built, serious enough to sound more like the Brahms "Second" than ever before, and altogether impressive. Having done such a fine job of integrating the varied moods of the first movement—and their variety was emphasized in the performance — Schuller seemed unable to make the Andante go, and in spite of many sensitive details it did not attain a convincing shape as a whole. The orchestra's delicate, low-pressure playing was a pleasure.

Dvorak's "Othello" is the neglected member of the triptych that includes "Nature's Realm" and "Carnival." Inadequate to Shakespeare, it is nonetheless an attractive work on about the level of seriousness of the first movement of the D minor Symphony. Unlike the Symphony movement, though, "Othello" is loose and episodic writing. I am not quite sure, therefore, how cohesive it can be made to sound, but Schuller's rhythmic conducting made a good case for the piece.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 20 1966

Schuller B.S.O. Guest

The New England Conservatory's president-elect, composer Gunther Schuller, will conduct the Boston Symphony's concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. His program will include the first Boston, and second United States performance, of Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4.

Also to be heard are Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," op. 93, and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony. The New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by John Oliver, will sing in the Ives.

Schuller, who becomes the ninth president of the Conservatory, and will begin his duties with the 1967-68 season. He is currently associate professor of music at Yale University, and is also chairman of the composition department of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, a position he has held since 1963. His most recent work, an opera entitled "The Visitation," received great acclaim last month after its world premiere by the Hamburg Opera, Schuller conducting.

The orchestra will be heard under Erich Leinsdorf this Tuesday evening at 8:30. The program will consist of Bach's Suite No. 3 for Orchestra; the new work "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, with E. G. Marshall as narrator; and Schumann's Symphony No. 1. It will be the seventh and final performance of Sydeman's work in the current series of performances planned by Erich Leinsdorf around the world premiere, which took place in Symphony Hall Nov. 4. The entire concert will be telecast and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and WGBH-FM.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
NOV 26 1966

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Boston.

Tues. at 8:30:
Guest conductor Gunther Schuller leads the BSO in Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," Op. 93; Schubert's Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished," and Ives' Symphony No. 4, with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

Thurs. at 7:30:
Charles Munch returns to Boston to conduct the BSO in an open rehearsal.

Fri. at 2:
The orchestra, led by Munch, plays Faure's "Pelleas et Melisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80; Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra; Schubert's Symphony No. 2 in B-flat major, and Ravel's Choreographic Poem "La Valse." Encore performance Saturday at 8:30.

35

FRI + SAT. #9 DEC. 2+3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 27 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 286,021
NOV 27 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
NOV 27 1966

Symphony This Week

Munch Returning For 8 Concerts

Charles Munch, who was music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 13 years from 1949-1962, will return this week as guest conductor of the orchestra. He will conduct a total of eight concerts plus an open rehearsal, Thursday at 7:30.

Gunther Schuller will conclude his appearances as guest conductor at the fourth concert of the Tuesday "A" series this Tuesday at 8:30. His program will consist of Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," the Schubert Symphony No. 8 ("Unfinished"), and Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4, with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

Mr. Munch will open the Friday-Saturday concerts with Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite, continuing with Honegger's Symphony No. 2, for string orchestra, and concluding with the Schubert Symphony No. 2 and "La Valse," by Ravel.

FOR THEIR Pension Fund concert Sunday evening, Dec. 11, Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra have invited Misha Dichter, pianist, Stephen Kates, cellist, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, narrator.

Mr. Kates will open the Symphony Hall concert with Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, Op. 104. Mr. Dichter will close the program with the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1.

Sen. Kennedy will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln's Portrait." The senator first appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood last summer when he narrated "A Lincoln Portrait" at a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 27 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 28 1966

Munch Returns to B.S.O.

Charles Munch, who was music director of the Boston Symphony for 13 years from 1949-1962, will return to Boston this week as guest conductor of the orchestra. He will conduct a total of eight concerts and an open rehearsal. The open rehearsal will be held Thursday at 7:30 and the first concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30.

Munch will open the Friday-Saturday concerts with Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite. He will continue with Honegger's Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra. Following intermission, he will conduct the Schubert Symphony No. 2 and conclude with "La Valse" by Ravel.

Gunther Schuller will conclude his appearances as guest conductor at the fourth concert of the Tuesday "A" series Tuesday at 8:30. His program will consist of Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," the Schubert Symphony No. 8 ("Unfinished"), and Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4 in which the New England Conservatory Chorus will participate, prepared by John Oliver, acting conductor.

The week-end program will receive its final preparation Thursday night at 7:30, at the fourth open rehearsal of the season, proceeds from which benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

A limited number of tickets to all the Symphony Hall concerts are available at the box office, due to the cooperation of the regular subscribers who release their seats for resale when they cannot attend.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Ninth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 2, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 3, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

FAURÉ . . . . . "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

HONEGGER . . . . . Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra

I. Molto moderato
II. Adagio mesto
III. Vivace, non troppo

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT . . . . . Symphony No. 2, in B-flat major

I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
IV. Presto vivace

RAVEL . . . . . *"La Valse," Choreographic Poem

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[521]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 171,536
DEC 3 1966

Munch on podium

Symphony reunion

By Harold Rogers

ARTS ENTERTAINMENT

Music is an emotional language; it should therefore speak to the emotions. And when Charles Munch makes music, it does precisely that.

Now on his fifth annual visit to Boston since his retirement from the conductorship of the Boston Symphony, Munch enthralled his listeners yesterday with a program of his favorites—beautiful music, beautifully played. Naturally it was almost all French; but no matter—Erich Leinsdorf has slighted the French during his past four-and-a-half seasons here. We are again ready for a deep draught of Fauré, Honegger, Berlioz, Debussy, and Ravel.

For his Symphony Hall concerts this weekend Munch has settled on Fauré's suite from the incidental music to "Pelléas et Mélisande," Honneger's Symphony No. 2, Ravel's "La Valse," and—bowing to an Austrian—Schubert's winsome little Symphony No. 2.

The Friday afternoon audience gave Munch a standing ovation when he stepped on stage. His 13 Boston years are well remembered. Yet in the five years since his retirement the turnover in the orchestra has been so great that there are now more members who didn't play under him than those who did.

Thinking and feeling

Such is the power of his musical personality, however, that the orchestra at once sounded as it used to when he headed it. When he gave the downbeat for the Fauré, we at once found ourselves in Maeterlinck's never land of timeless poetry. When Munch conducts, we do not think about the music. We feel it. If you find yourself thinking about the music instead of feeling it, something is wrong on stage. The fault is not in you.

Though the Fauré was flawless in mood and expression, the Honegger Second was slightly untidy in a technical sense. Absolute accuracy has never been Munch's forte; he has preferred to let the emotion of the moment override certain technical details. For this reason his concerts are seldom less than exciting. It is far better to sacrifice accuracy for emotion, rather than the other way around. The ultimate, of course, is to have them proceed hand in hand.

Tingling chorale

Thus the Honegger rose above its fuzziness to evoke once again the Paris of World War II. Though the composer has given us no program, its three movements might well be subtitled "Trepidation," "Occupation," and "Liberation." Whose spine refuses to tingle when the trumpet chorale of the finale sings its triumphant song? At least not mine.

The Schubert Second was all joy — radiant with lyrical simplicity and grace. And Ravel's "La Valse," with which Munch concluded, was played as only he can play it.

Other conductors can make it exciting; Sixten Ehrling recently gave us a most stimulating performance when he brought his Detroit Symphony to Symphony Hall.

But Munch does subtle things that cannot be put into words. (If words could do it, there would be no need for music.) But one might try by saying that he takes a rubato that is nothing more than a sigh. With Munch "La Valse" is truly what the composer meant it to be — an echo of a great society now disintegrated. If this nostalgic quality is not brought out, all the exciting climaxes in the world will never make it right.

The Boston Globe — Saturday, December 3, 1966

B.S.O. Concert Misses Mark

Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony concert Friday afternoon, performing the "Pelleas et Melisande" Suite by Faure, the second symphonies of Honegger and Schubert, and Raval's "La Valse."

It sounded more like a reading rehearsel than a concert. The playing was sloveny, the conducting lazily inattentive, the performances shapeless and confused. One cannot, of course, be sure that those two hours were the nadir of the orchestra's history, but one can hope that things have not been and could not get worse.

M.S.

35

FRI + SAT. #9 DEC. 2+3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 27 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 286,021
NOV 27 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
NOV 27 1966

Symphony This Week

Munch Returning For 8 Concerts

Charles Munch, who was music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 13 years from 1949-1962, will return this week as guest conductor of the orchestra. He will conduct a total of eight concerts plus an open rehearsal, Thursday at 7:30.

Gunther Schuller will conclude his appearances as guest conductor at the fourth concert of the Tuesday "A" series this Tuesday at 8:30. His program will consist of Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," the Schubert Symphony No. 8 ("Unfinished"), and Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4, with the New England Conservatory Chorus.

Mr. Munch will open the Friday-Saturday concerts with Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite, continuing with Honegger's Symphony No. 2, for string orchestra, and concluding with the Schubert Symphony No. 2 and "La Valse," by Ravel.

FOR THEIR Pension Fund concert Sunday evening, Dec. 11, Erich Leinsdorf and the orchestra have invited Misha Dichter, pianist, Stephen Kates, cellist, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, narrator.

Mr. Kates will open the Symphony Hall concert with Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, Op. 104. Mr. Dichter will close the program with the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1.

Sen. Kennedy will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln's Portrait." The senator first appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood last summer when he narrated "A Lincoln Portrait" at a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 27 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 28 1966

Munch Returns to B.S.O.

Charles Munch, who was music director of the Boston Symphony for 13 years from 1949-1962, will return to Boston this week as guest conductor of the orchestra. He will conduct a total of eight concerts and an open rehearsal. The open rehearsal will be held Thursday at 7:30 and the first concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30.

Munch will open the Friday-Saturday concerts with Faure's "Pelleas and Melisande" Suite. He will continue with Honegger's Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra. Following intermission, he will conduct the Schubert Symphony No. 2 and conclude with "La Valse" by Ravel.

Gunther Schuller will conclude his appearances as guest conductor at the fourth concert of the Tuesday "A" series Tuesday at 8:30. His program will consist of Dvorak's Overture to "Othello," the Schubert Symphony No. 8 ("Unfinished"), and Charles Ives' Symphony No. 4 in which the New England Conservatory Chorus will participate, prepared by John Oliver, acting conductor.

The week-end program will receive its final preparation Thursday night at 7:30, at the fourth open rehearsal of the season, proceeds from which benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

A limited number of tickets to all the Symphony Hall concerts are available at the box office, due to the cooperation of the regular subscribers who release their seats for resale when they cannot attend.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Ninth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 2, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 3, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

FAURÉ ..... "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

HONEGGER ..... Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra

I. Molto moderato
II. Adagio mesto
III. Vivace, non troppo

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony No. 2, in B-flat major

I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
IV. Presto vivace

RAVEL ..... *"La Valse," Choreographic Poem

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[521]

The Boston Globe—Saturday, December 3, 1966

B.S.O. Concert Misses Mark

Charles Munch conducted the Boston Symphony concert Friday afternoon, performing the "Pelleas et Melisande" Suite by Faure, the second symphonies of Honegger and Schubert, and Raval's "La Valse."

It sounded more like a reading rehearsel than a concert. The playing was slovenly, the conducting lazily inattentive, the performances shapeless and confused. One cannot, of course, be sure that those two hours were the nadir of the orchestra's history, but one can hope that things have not been and could not get worse.

M.S.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 171,536
DEC 3 1966

Munch on podium

Symphony reunion

By Harold Rogers

ARTS ENTERTAINMENT

Music is an emotional language; it should therefore speak to the emotions. And when Charles Munch makes music, it does precisely that.

Now on his fifth annual visit to Boston since his retirement from the conductorship of the Boston Symphony, Munch enthralled his listeners yesterday with a program of his favorites—beautiful music, beautifully played. Naturally it was almost all French; but no matter—Erich Leinsdorf has slighted the French during his past four-and-a-half seasons here. We are again ready for a deep draught of Fauré, Honegger, Berlioz, Debussy, and Ravel.

For his Symphony Hall concerts this weekend Munch has settled on Fauré's suite from the incidental music to "Pelléas et Mélisande," Honneger's Symphony No. 2, Ravel's "La Valse," and—bowing to an Austrian—Schubert's winsome little Symphony No. 2.

The Friday afternoon audience gave Munch a standing ovation when he stepped on stage. His 13 Boston years are well remembered. Yet in the five years since his retirement the turnover in the orchestra has been so great that there are now more members who didn't play under him than those who did.

Thinking and feeling

Such is the power of his musical personality, however, that the orchestra at once sounded as it used to when he headed it. When he gave the downbeat for the Fauré, we at once found ourselves in Maeterlinck's never land of timeless poetry. When Munch conducts, we do not think about the music. We feel it. If you find yourself thinking about the music instead of feeling it, something is wrong on stage. The fault is not in you.

Though the Fauré was flawless in mood and expression, the Honegger Second was slightly untidy in a technical sense. Absolute accuracy has never been Munch's forte; he has preferred to let the emotion of the moment override certain technical details. For this reason his concerts are seldom less than exciting. It is far better to sacrifice accuracy for emotion, rather than the other way around. The ultimate, of course, is to have them proceed hand in hand.

Tingling chorale

Thus the Honegger rose above its fuzziness to evoke once again the Paris of World War II. Though the composer has given us no program, its three movements might well be subtitled "Trepidation," "Occupation," and "Liberation." Whose spine refuses to tingle when the trumpet chorale of the finale sings its triumphant song? At least not mine.

The Schubert Second was all joy — radiant with lyrical simplicity and grace. And Ravel's "La Valse," with which Munch concluded, was played as only he can play it.

Other conductors can make it exciting; Sixten Ehrling recently gave us a most stimulating performance when he brought his Detroit Symphony to Symphony Hall.

But Munch does subtle things that cannot be put into words. (If words could do it, there would be no need for music.) But one might try by saying that he takes a rubato that is nothing more than a sigh. With Munch "La Valse" is truly what the composer meant it to be — an echo of a great society now disintegrated. If this nostalgic quality is not brought out, all the exciting climaxes in the world will never make it right.

TUES. A #5 DEC. 6

36

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 6, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

FAURÉ ..... "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

HONEGGER ..... Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra

I. Molto moderato
II. Adagio mesto
III. Vivace, non troppo

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony No. 2, in B-flat major

I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
IV. Presto vivace

RAVEL ..... *"La Valse," Choreographic Poem

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
DEC 3 1966

SYMPHONY

Familiar Setting for Charles Munch

By McLAREN HARRIS

During his 13 years as music director of the Symphony, Charles Munch never made any secret about which composers were his favorites; appearing each season since 1962 as guest conductor, he has continued to rely upon them. Friday, too, he sprang no surprises.

It was a familiar setting for familiar names — Faure, Honegger, Ravel (and Schubert)—and we could observe Dr. Munch's regard for them, the care in preparation, the attention to nuance. From standpoints of novelty or majesty the program could not be called wholly exciting. For example, Faure's incidental music from "Pelleas et Melisande" usually strikes one as a charming little suite of mood-paintings, nothing more; Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for string orchestra has been called downright dull. But Dr. Munch has a way of transporting these works beyond the purely physical sensation of sound to a poetic plane. Where the tempo is moderate or slower he refuses to be hurried, extending the phrases subtly, weaving them into an easy flow. He emphasizes the dynamic breadth, as often as not on the hushed side; and though the processes of thought involved must indeed be intricate, the images come across as if by instinct with the simplicity of nature itself.

The Faure work, four quiet and reflective pieces written to accompany the Maeterlinck tragedy, lends itself well to such treatment. Honegger's Second Symphony, work of contrapuntal design, without program and lacking much tonal warmth, was more of a problem. Written in Paris in October, 1941 it was perhaps best described by Willi Reich, who remarked that it "embodies much of the mood of occupied Paris." The movements are grey-toned, neither bright nor strongly spirited, even in the final Vivace's rhythmic complexity (which threw the violins momentarily). The only notes of optimism occur in the finale's chorale, intoned by trumpets, coming as a shaft of sunlight through an overcast of depression. This was the symphony's mood upon conception and it will endure thus; its future esteem remains in question.

But Dr. Munch had more than restrained structures to work with. Ravel's "La Valse" is the antithesis to tragedy and gloom, moving in perpetual waltz rhythm from one end of the dynamic scale to the other, through a full spectrum of orchestral color both bright and pastel. The conductor obviously enjoys building sweep and climax in Ravel's score like a series of oncoming tidal waves, enhancing them with little rubatos and accelerandos. Friday's rendition sparkled.

Schubert's Second Symphony in B flat, which preceded the Ravel, began and ended full of lightness and cheer, but it was marked by some raggedness in virtually all sections of the orchestra. The situation here, as at certain other times, may relate to the podium. Dr. Munch's conducting, often from the elbow down and occasionally pausing as the orchestra carries the ball, has always been a little enigmatic for many. His motions, arising directly from feeling, are apt to be non-literal and expressive more of mood than meter; the style takes some getting used to, or, in the Symphony's case, reacquaintance.

Next week Mr. Munch returns to conduct Berlioz' sacred trilogy, "L'Enfance du Christ," Op. 25, assisted by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and the following soloists: John McCollum, tenor; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Theodor Uppman, baritone; and Donald Gramm, bass.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, conducting the ninth program of the 86th season Friday in Symphony Hall.

"Pelleas et Melisande" Suite, Op. 80 — Faure
Symphony No. 2 for strings — Honegger
Symphony No. 2 in B flat major — Schubert
La Valse — Ravel

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
DEC 3 1966

Charles Munch Returns to BSO Podium

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Two French musical masterpieces, engendered by the bitterness of Gaul over two world wars, featured yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert under the guest conductorship of returned Charles Munch. Though Arthur Honegger's mordant second symphony for string orchestra and Maurice Ravel's sardonic choreographic poem "La Valse" are thrice familiar to BSO concert-goers, they remain worthy of occasional performances.

Maurice Ravel

Honegger's string symphony, dating from 1941, was composed while hobnailed Nazi submen stomped the boulevards and byways of Paris. Why such a grim musical souvenir was not embodied in the sound track of "Is Paris Burning?" is mystifying, for it embodies a prescient forecast in sound of the liberation of the "City of Light."

There is a persistent feeling that the darkling mood, the hurtling cubes, the dynamo unleashed in the churning opening movement and the optimistic forewarning of Allied victory (a singing chorale in which the lone trumpet adds its clarion appeal) present Honegger's graphic reaction to the German occupation. Though a Swiss citizen, the composer's heart could abide no divided Gaul.

Toward the conclusion of the second movement (Adagio mesto), there was a bit of confusion as the 2nd armored division's light, medium and heavy tanks, represented by the violin-viola squadron, celli and bull fiddles, respectively, were getting under way for the final dash when the tailpiece of First Cellist Jules Eskin's whippet tank snapped and he was forced to retire before the finale (Vivace, non troppo). However, Gen. Munch led his liberating columns with conviction, vigor and technical finish to which his command responded with virtuosic potency.

Along with the "Daphnis & Chloe" ballet music, "La Valse" ranks among Ravel's greatest orchestral masterpieces, though this choreographic poem is regarded by captious critics as little more than a colossal showpiece. However, taking into consideration the time of its writing (1919-'20), the fact that the frail little composer drove an ambulance during the war until his health broke and the slightly sinister atmosphere pervading the entire piece, who can deny that this "Apotheosis of the Waltz" is not the "Danse Macabre" of Barbara Tuchman's "Proud Tower" architects, a musical reflection of their their world in ruins?

As Dr. Munch reveled in the luscious tones of his orchestral colleagues his excessive Gallic verve marred their sterling musicianship. Serge Koussevitzky was wont to elicit massive orchestral powers with superlative discipline not only over his players, but also over himself.

Sandwiched between the Honegger and Ravel came Schubert's precocious and ebullient second symphony in B flat in which the guest conductor spread his pumpernickel with Alsatian goose-liver paste rather than the customary liverwurst, perhaps wishing that he was serving forth Bizet's comparable early symphony in C.

TUES. A #5 DEC. 6

36

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 6, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

FAURÉ . . . . . "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande"; Molto adagio

HONEGGER . . . . . Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra

I. Molto moderato
II. Adagio mesto
III. Vivace, non troppo

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT . . . . . Symphony No. 2, in B-flat major

I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
IV. Presto vivace

RAVEL . . . . . *"La Valse," Choreographic Poem

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
DEC 3 1966

SYMPHONY

Familiar Setting for Charles Munch

By McLAREN HARRIS

During his 13 years as music director of the Symphony, Charles Munch never made any secret about which composers were his favorites; appearing each season since 1962 as guest conductor, he has continued to rely upon them. Friday, too, he sprang no surprises.

It was a familiar setting for familiar names — Faure, Honegger, Ravel (and Schubert)—and we could observe Dr. Munch's regard for them, the care in preparation, the attention to nuance. From standpoints of novelty or majesty the program could not be called wholly exciting. For example, Faure's incidental music from "Pelleas et Melisande" usually strikes one as a charming little suite of mood-paintings, nothing more; Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for string orchestra has been called downright dull. But Dr. Munch has a way of transporting these works beyond the purely physical sensation of sound to a poetic plane. Where the tempo is moderate or slower he refuses to be hurried, extending the phrases subtly, weaving them into an easy flow. He emphasizes the dynamic breadth, as often as not on the hushed side; and though the processes of thought involved must indeed be intricate, the images come across as if by instinct with the simplicity of nature itself.

The Faure work, four quiet and reflective pieces written to accompany the Maeterlinck tragedy, lends itself well to such treatment. Honegger's Second Symphony, work of contrapuntal design, without program and lacking much tonal warmth, was more of a problem. Written in Paris in October, 1941 it was perhaps best described by Willi Reich, who remarked that it "embodies much of the mood of occupied Paris." The movements are grey-toned, neither bright nor strongly spirited, even in the final Vivace's rhythmic complexity (which threw the violins momentarily). The only notes of optimism occur in the finale's chorale, intoned by trumpets, coming as a shaft of sunlight through an overcast of depression. This was the symphony's mood upon conception and it will endure thus; its future esteem remains in question.

But Dr. Munch had more than restrained structures to work with. Ravel's "La Valse" is the antithesis to tragedy and gloom, moving in perpetual waltz rhythm from one end of the dynamic scale to the other, through a full spectrum of orchestral color both bright and pastel. The conductor obviously enjoys building sweep and climax in Ravel's score like a series of oncoming tidal waves, enhancing them with little rubatos and accelerandos. Friday's rendition sparkled.

Schubert's Second Symphony in B flat, which preceded the Ravel, began and ended full of lightness and cheer, but it was marked by some raggedness in virtually all sections of the orchestra. The situation here, as at certain other times, may relate to the podium. Dr. Munch's conducting, often from the elbow down and occasionally pausing as the orchestra carries the ball, has always been a little enigmatic for many. His motions, arising directly from feeling, are apt to be non-literal and expressive more of mood than meter; the style takes some getting used to, or, in the Symphony's case, reacquaintance.

Next week Mr. Munch returns to conduct Berlioz' sacred trilogy, "L'Enfance du Christ," Op. 25, assisted by the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and the following soloists: John McCollum, tenor; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Theodor Uppman, baritone; and Donald Gramm, bass.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, presented the ninth program of the 86th season Friday in Symphony Hall.

"Pelleas et Melisande" Suite, Op. 80 — Faure
Symphony No. 2 for strings — Honegger
Symphony No. 2 in B flat major — Schubert
La Valse — Ravel

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
DEC 3 1966

Charles Munch Returns to BSO Podium

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Two French musical masterpieces, engendered by the bitterness of Gaul over two world wars, featured yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert under the guest conductorship of returned Charles Munch. Though Arthur Honegger's mordant second symphony for string orchestra and Maurice Ravel's sardonic choreographic poem "La Valse" are thrice familiar to BSO concert-goers, they remain worthy of occasional performances.

Maurice Ravel

Honegger's string symphony, dating from 1941, was composed while hob-nailed Nazi submen stomped the boulevards and byways of Paris. Why such a grim musical souvenir was not embodied in the sound track of "Is Paris Burning?" is mystifying, for it embodies a prescient forecast in sound of the liberation of the "City of Light."

There is a persistent feeling that the darkling mood, the hurtling cubes, the dynamo unleashed in the churning opening movement and the optimistic forewarning of Allied victory (a singing chorale in which the lone trumpet adds its clarion appeal) present Honegger's graphic reaction to the German occupation. Though a Swiss citizen, the composer's heart could abide no divided Gaul.

Toward the conclusion of the second movement (Adagio mesto), there was a bit of confusion as the 2nd armored division's light, medium and heavy tanks, represented by the violin-viola squadron, celli and bull fiddles, respectively, were getting under way for the final dash when the tailpiece of First Cellist Jules Eskin's whippet tank snapped and he was forced to retire before the finale (Vivace, non troppo). However, Gen. Munch led his liberating columns with conviction, vigor and technical finish to which his command responded with virtuosic potency.

Along with the "Daphnis & Chloe" ballet music, "La Valse" ranks among Ravel's greatest orchestral masterpieces, though this choreographic poem is regarded by captious critics as little more than a colossal showpiece. However, taking into consideration the time of its writing (1919-'20), the fact that the frail little composer drove an ambulance during the war until his health broke and the slightly sinister atmosphere pervading the entire piece, who can deny that this "Apotheosis of the Waltz" is not the "Danse Macabre" of Barbara Tuchman's "Proud Tower" architects, a musical reflection of their their world in ruins?

As Dr. Munch reveled in the luscious tones of his orchestral colleagues his excessive Gallic verve marred their sterling musicianship. Serge Koussevitzky was wont to elicit massive orchestral powers with superlative discipline not only over his players, but also over himself.

Sandwiched between the Honegger and Ravel came Schubert's precocious and ebullient second symphony in B flat in which the guest conductor spread his pumpernickel with Alsatian goose-liver paste rather than the customary liverwurst, perhaps wishing that he was serving forth Bizet's comparable early symphony in C.

37

THURS. B #2 DEC. 8

Second Program

THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 8, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

FAURÉ ..... "Pelléas et Mélisande," Suite from the Incidental Music to Maeterlinck's Tragedy, Op. 80

I. Prelude: Quasi adagio
II. "Fileuse": Andantino quasi allegretto
III. Sicilienne: Allegretto molto moderato
IV. "The Death of Mélisande": Molto adagio

HONEGGER ..... Symphony No. 2, for String Orchestra

I. Molto moderato
II. Adagio mesto
III. Vivace, non troppo

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT ..... Symphony No. 2, in B-flat major

I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegro vivace
IV. Presto vivace

RAVEL ..... *"La Valse," Choreographic Poem

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

The remaining concert in this series will be given in Symphony Hall on Thursday Evening, March 9, 1967, Thomas Schippers, conductor.

CHARLES MUNCH

CHARLES MUNCH, who was Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1949 through 1962, returns to Boston this week as guest conductor for the fifth consecutive season since his retirement. His present visit, which began with the concerts of last weekend, will include, in addition to tonight's program, the concerts of December 8, 9, 10, 13 and 15.

Dr. Munch's retirement as Music Director of this Orchestra has in no way resulted in his retirement as a conductor. In November, 1965, he led the French National Orchestra in a tour of Europe which included appearances in Rome, Florence, Milan, Berlin and Paris. During that season he also conducted the London Philharmonic in London, fulfilled a two-week engagement with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, and conducted the orchestras of Dallas and Montreal.

Since his last visit to Boston in March, 1966, Dr. Munch has conducted again in Montreal, made a concert tour of Japan, and fulfilled several engagements in Europe and Israel. Last summer he conducted two concerts at the Ravinia Festival and three concerts at Robin Hood Dell.

FRI. + SAT. #10 DEC. 9 + 10

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
DEC 4 1966

Symphony This Week

Munch Continues Guest Conducting

Charles Munch will begin his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week. His current visit to Boston marks the fifth consecutive season in which he has returned as guest conductor since his retirement as music director in 1962 after 13 years at the post.

This week he will conduct the fifth concert of the Tuesday "A" series, the second of the Thursday "B" series and the 10th pair of Friday-Saturday programs.

At the Tuesday and Thursday concerts Mr. Munch will open the program with the Suite from the Incidental Music to "Pelleas et Melisande" by Faure, and continue with Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra. After intermission he will conduct the Schubert Symphony No. 2 and conclude with Ravel's "La Valse."

The Friday-Saturday programs will be devoted to a complete performance of "L'Enfance du Christ" by Berlioz. Four soloists will participate: Florence Kopleff, contralto; Donald Gramm, bass-baritone; Theodore Uppman, baritone, and John McCollum, tenor. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Elliot Forbes, conductor, will also take part. "L'Enfance du Christ" was last presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in December 1956 under Mr. Munch's direction.

Since his last visit to Boston in March 1966, Mr. Munch has conducted in Montreal, has made a concert tour of Japan with the French National Orchestra, and has fulfilled several engagements in Europe and Israel. This past summer he conducted two concerts at the Ravinia Festival and three concerts at Robin Hood Dell.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Tenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 9, at 2:00 o'clock
SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 10, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ . . . . . *"L'Enfance du Christ," Sacred Trilogy, Op. 25

I.
HEROD'S DREAM

Recitative
Night March
Herod's Dream
Chorus of Soothsayers
The Stable in Bethlehem
Angel Chorus

INTERMISSION

II.
THE FLIGHT INTO EGYPT

Overture
Farewell of the Shepherds
The Holy Family at Rest

III.
THE ARRIVAL AT SAYS

Recitative
The Arrival at Saïs
Trio of the Young Ishmaelites

Flutes: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, JAMES PAPPOUTSAKIS
Harp: BERNARD ZIGHERA

Chorus

Narrator (and Centurion) — JOHN MCCOLLUM, Tenor
Mary — FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Contralto
Joseph — THEODOR UPPMAN, Baritone
Herod, Polydorus, The Father of a Family — DONALD GRAMM, Bass

HARVARD GLEE CLUB – RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

The text will be found on page 604.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 10 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
DEC 10 1966

Afternoon at Symphony

Understated Joy Marks Berlioz Work

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

"L'Enfance du Christ" in its concentration on the defenseless infant whose glory is suggested only in distant, scarcely audible hallelujahs, is unique as a musical celebration of Christmas. Its nearest spiritual relative perhaps is the Christmas History of Heinrich Schuetz. It is unlikely that Berlioz knew the Schuetz, but it is interesting that the first and finest music written for "L'Enfance" was the Farewell of the Shepherds, deliberately conceived as a 17th century pastiche.

Berlioz, though a very great artist, was not the master Schuetz was, and in any case in the 19th century it was harder to write predominantly gentle and tender music. It was hard at any rate for a human creature of Berlioz's personal and artistic nobility, one for whom gentleness and tenderness excluded sentimentality.

Whatever the problem, "L'Enfance du Christ," treasurable though it is and welcome as it would be every Christmas season, does not completely come off. It is not the sustained masterpiece "Romeo et Juliette" is, for example. Some of it is magical and casts a marvelous spell: the opening narration, the sinister and atmospheric night march, the Herod scene, all of the flight into Egypt, the epilogue. Elsewhere Berlioz seems to be holding back, and he falls into a blandly conventional writing that surprises from so original a tone poet. The recitative is apt to be especially tedious, a surprise again, because the writing for the Narrator at the opening; or something like the wonderfully plastic choral recitatives in "Romeo" show Berlioz's mastery of that kind of declamation.

For all that, "L'Enfance du Christ" is something quite exceptionally lovely, and much of its loveliness resides, I am sure, in its freshness, its being so unlike everything else we hear. I wish we could have it every year as a lyric devotional exercise so cleansingly free from the taint of the sanctimonious.

L'ENFANCE DU CHRIST, Sacred Trilogy by Hector Berlioz, performed Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall under the direction of Charles Munch, with John McCollum, tenor (narrator, centurion), Florence Kopleff, contralto (Mary), Theodor Uppman, baritone (Joseph), Donald Gramm, bass (Herod, Polydorus, Father), the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Elliot Forbes, conductor, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The performance Friday afternoon was uneven, though in more ways good than otherwise. When Charles Munch let it alone, notably at the beginning and the end, or when there was the drama of Herod's nightmares for him to respond to, it went very well, casting the longed-for spell.

But it is hard for an essentially restless conductor to interpret a tranquil piece, and as so often happens in his Berlioz performances, Munch could not come to terms with the restraint and delicacy of the music. He seemed to need to supply the exaggerations of which the composer himself was incapable. And there was the problem sometimes, also common enough with Munch, of an inability to find appropriate tempo or to hold one. The Mary-Joseph duet at the manger, the Shepherds' farewell, the scene of the Holy Family at rest, were especially affected by the lack of rhythmic continuity, and the farewell was further disfigured by a brutal cut.

John McCollum and Donald Gramm both sang extremely well, the former with notable distinction of style. Uppman was good, and so was Kopleff, though the lighter sound of a soprano, which is what Berlioz asks for, works better for the part of Mary. Donald Meaders, a member of the Harvard Glee Club, satisfactorily took a few lines of recitative.

The choruses sang well, and the Radcliffe girls made an especially good effect with the radiant off-stage hallelujahs. Harvard French is, however, indifferent.

The Boston Symphony did some playing of notable finesse, especially in the night march. If, on the whole, the playing was better earlier in the concert than later, it was generally on a level which, were the orchestra not the Boston Symphony, would be accounted as very good.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
DEC 4 1966

Munch and Berlioz

Last performed by the Boston Symphony 10 years ago, Hector Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ" (The Childhood of Christ) will be heard Friday afternoon and Saturday evening with two of the same artists. Charles Munch will conduct and contralto Florence Kopleff will be in the vocal quartet.

Bass-baritone Donald Gramm, bass Theodor Uppman, tenor John McCollum, and the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society also will participate.

Munch, who retired in 1962 after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct this week's Tuesday and Thursday concerts as well. The program will open with the Suite from the Incidental Music to "Pelleas et Melisande" by Faure, and continue with Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra. After intermission Munch will conduct the Schubert Symphony No. 2 and conclude with Ravel's "La Valse."

Since his last visit to Boston in March 1966, Munch has conducted in Montreal, has made a concert tour of Japan with the French National Orchestra, and has fulfilled several engagements in Europe and Israel. This past Summer he conducted two concerts at the Ravinia Festival and three concerts at Robin Hood Dell.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,415
DEC 8 1966

"L'Enfance du Christ"

The Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow and next week is presenting the seldom heard and previously enthusiastically received Berlioz "L'Enfance du Christ" with soloists and the Harvard-Radcliffe chorus. Performed in French and based on the Gospel According to Matthew, this work will come over Channel 2 and WGBH-FM radio live on Tuesday night, December 13 at 8:30. Sunday's Pension Fund Concert looks to be exceptional musical fare as usual, offering two young Tchaikovsky competition winners, Misha Dichter, pianist and Stephen Kates cellist with Senator Edward Kennedy narrating the Copland "Lincoln Portrait."

FRI. + SAT. #10 DEC. 9 + 10

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
DEC 4 1966

Symphony This Week

Munch Continues Guest Conducting

Charles Munch will begin his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week. His current visit to Boston marks the fifth consecutive season in which he has returned as guest conductor since his retirement as music director in 1962 after 13 years at the post.

This week he will conduct the fifth concert of the Tuesday "A" series, the second of the Thursday "B" series and the 10th pair of Friday-Saturday programs.

At the Tuesday and Thursday concerts Mr. Munch will open the program with the Suite from the Incidental Music to "Pelleas et Melisande" by Faure, and continue with Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra. After intemission he will conduct the Schubert Symphony No. 2 and conclude with Ravel's "La Valse."

The Friday-Saturday programs will be devoted to a complete performance of "L'Enfance du Christ" by Berlioz. Four soloists will participate: Florence Kopleff, contralto; Donald Gramm, bass-baritone; Theodore Uppman, baritone, and John McCollum, tenor. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Elliot Forbes, conductor, will also take part. "L'Enfance du Christ" was last presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in December 1956 under Mr. Munch's direction.

Since his last visit to Boston in March 1966, Mr. Munch has conducted in Montreal, has made a concert tour of Japan with the French National Orchestra, and has fulfilled several engagements in Europe and Israel. This past summer he conducted two concerts at the Ravinia Festival and three concerts at Robin Hood Dell.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Tenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 9, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 10, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ ..... *"L'Enfance du Christ," Sacred Trilogy, Op. 25

I.
HEROD'S DREAM

Recitative
Night March
Herod's Dream
Chorus of Soothsayers
The Stable in Bethlehem
Angel Chorus

INTERMISSION

II.
THE FLIGHT INTO EGYPT

Overture
Farewell of the Shepherds
The Holy Family at Rest

III.
THE ARRIVAL AT SAÏS

Recitative
The Arrival at Saïs
Trio of the Young Ishmaelites

Flutes: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, JAMES PAPPOUTSAKIS
Harp: BERNARD ZIGHERA

Chorus

Narrator (and Centurion)	JOHN MCCOLLUM, Tenor
Mary	FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Contralto
Joseph	THEODOR UPPMAN, Baritone
Herod Polydorus The Father of a Family	DONALD GRAMM, Bass

HARVARD GLEE CLUB – RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

The text will be found on page 604.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[585]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
DEC 4 1966

Munch and Berlioz

Last performed by the Boston Symphony 10 years ago, Hector Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ" (The Childhood of Christ) will be heard Friday afternoon and Saturday evening with two of the same artists. Charles Munch will conduct and contralto Florence Kopleff will be in the vocal quartet.

Bass-baritone Donald Gramm, bass Theodor Uppman, tenor John McCollum, and the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society also will participate.

Munch, who retired in 1962 after 13 years as music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct this week's Tuesday and Thursday concerts as well. The program will open with the Suite from the Incidental Music to "Pelleas et Melisande" by Faure, and continue with Honegger's Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra. After intermission Munch will conduct the Schubert Symphony No. 2 and conclude with Ravel's "La Valse."

Since his last visit to Boston in March 1966, Munch has conducted in Montreal, has made a concert tour of Japan with the French National Orchestra, and has fulfilled several engagements in Europe and Israel. This past Summer he conducted two concerts at the Ravinia Festival and three concerts at Robin Hood Dell.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,415
DEC 8 1966

"L'Enfance du Christ"

The Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow and next week is presenting the seldom heard and previously enthusiastically received Berlioz "L'Enfance du Christ" with soloists and the Harvard-Radcliffe chorus. Performed in French and based on the Gospel According to Matthew, this work will come over Channel 2 and WGBH-FM radio live on Tuesday night, December 13 at 8:30. Sunday's Pension Fund Concert looks to be exceptional musical fare as usual, offering two young Tchaikovsky competition winners, Misha Dichter, pianist and Stephen Kates cellist with Senator Edward Kennedy narrating the Copland "Lincoln Portrait."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 10 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
DEC 10 1966

Afternoon at Symphony

Understated Joy Marks Berlioz Work

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

"L'Enfance du Christ," in its concentration on the defenseless infant whose glory is suggested only in distant, scarcely audible hallelujahs, is unique as a musical celebration of Christmas. Its nearest spiritual relative perhaps is the Christmas History of Heinrich Schuetz. It is unlikely that Berlioz knew the Schuetz, but it is interesting that the first and finest music written for "L'Enfance" was the Farewell of the Shepherds, deliberately conceived as a 17th century pastiche.

Berlioz, though a very great artist, was not the master Schuetz was, and in any case in the 19th century it was harder to write predominantly gentle and tender music. It was hard at any rate for a human creature of Berlioz's personal and artistic nobility, one for whom gentleness and tenderness excluded sentimentality.

Whatever the problem, "L'Enfance du Christ," treasurable though it is and welcome as it would be every Christmas season, does not completely come off. It is not the sustained masterpiece "Romeo et Juliette" is, for example. Some of it is magical and casts a marvelous spell: the opening narration, the sinister and atmospheric night march, the Herod scene, all of the flight into Egypt, the epilogue. Elsewhere Berlioz seems to be holding back, and he falls into a blandly conventional writing that surprises from so original a tone poet. The recitative is apt to be especially tedious, a surprise again, because the writing for the Narrator at the opening; or something like the wonderfully plastic choral recitatives in "Romeo" show Berlioz's mastery of that kind of declamation.

For all that, "L'Enfance du Christ" is something quite exceptionally lovely, and much of its loveliness resides, I am sure, in its freshness, its being so unlike everything else we hear. I wish we could have it every year as a lyric devotional exercise so cleansingly free from the taint of the sanctimonious.

L'ENFANCE DU CHRIST, Sacred Trilogy by Hector Berlioz, performed Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall under the direction of Charles Munch, with John McCollum, tenor (narrator, centurion), Florence Kopleff, contralto (Mary), Theodor Uppman, baritone (Joseph), Donald Gramm, bass (Herod, Polydorus, Father), the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Elliot Forbes, conductor, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The performance Friday afternoon was uneven, though in more ways good than otherwise. When Charles Munch let it alone, notably at the beginning and the end, or when there was the drama of Herod's nightmares for him to respond to, it went very well, casting the longed-for-spell.

But it is hard for an essentially restless conductor to interpret a tranquil piece, and as so often happens in his Berlioz performances, Munch could not come to terms with the restraint and delicacy of the music. He seemed to need to supply the exaggerations of which the composer himself was incapable. And there was the problem sometimes, also common enough with Munch, of an inability to find appropriate tempo or to hold one. The Mary-Joseph duet at the manger, the Shepherds' farewell, the scene of the Holy Family at rest, were especially affected by the lack of rhythmic continuity, and the farewell was further disfigured by a brutal cut.

John McCollum and Donald Gramm both sang extremely well, the former with notable distinction of style. Uppman was good, and so was Kopleff, though the lighter sound of a soprano, which is what Berlioz asks for, works better for the part of Mary. Donald Meaders, a member of the Harvard Glee Club, satisfactorily took a few lines of recitative.

The choruses sang well, and the Radcliffe girls made an especially good effect with the radiant off-stage hallelujahs. Harvard French is, however, indifferent.

The Boston Symphony did some playing of notable finesse, especially in the night march. If, on the whole, the playing was better earlier in the concert than later, it was generally on a level which, were the orchestra not the Boston Symphony, would be accounted as very good.

39

TUES. CAMBRIDGE #3 DEC. 13 THURS. A #3 DEC. 15

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 13, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ.....*"L'Enfance du Christ," Sacred Trilogy, Op. 25

I.
HEROD'S DREAM

Recitative
Night March
Herod's Dream
Chorus of Soothsayers
The Stable in Bethlehem
Angel Chorus

INTERMISSION

II.
THE FLIGHT INTO EGYPT

Overture
Farewell of the Shepherds
The Holy Family at Rest

III.
THE ARRIVAL AT SAÏS

Recitative
The Arrival at Saïs
Trio of the Young Ishmaelites

Flutes: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, JAMES PAPPOUTSAKIS
Harp: BERNARD ZIGHERA

Chorus

Narrator (and Centurion)	JOHN MCCOLLUM, Tenor
Mary	FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Contralto
Joseph	THEODOR UPPMAN, Baritone
Herod, Polydorus, The Father of a Family	DONALD GRAMM, Bass

The role of Polydorus in Scene III will be sung by DONALD MEADERS

HARVARD GLEE CLUB – RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

The text will be found on page 28.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
DEC 10 1966

Munch Guides Symphony In Berlioz Sacred Trilogy

By ROLFE BOSWELL

A sharp-edged, stylish production of "L'Enfance du Christ" (Infant Christ), 25th opus of Hector Berlioz, graced yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert with Charles Munch as guest conductor. A quintet of worthy vocalists was backstopped by the Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Society, trained by Elliot Forbes.

This sacred trilogy by France's first genius composer, casually regarded by so many listeners as only a peddlerof the flamboyantly grandiose should open their ears, for the music of this quasi-Biblical oratorio is delicate, sensitive, profound and highly original. Undertaken as a hoax in 1850, it became transmogrified four years later as Berlioz's miraculous masterwork.

Hector Berlioz On the Podium

Berlioz frequently had been denounced for radical tendencies, but the authors of these denunciads often were too virtriolic and too laggard in recognizing this composer's greatness. However, he turned the tables on his captious critics with Gallic dexterity by producing "L'Enfance du Christ," which he pretended he had excavated amongst some old manuscripts.

SIMPLE STYLE

In this dramatic cantata he wrote in simple, melodious style. The Parisian critics immediately began praising the work, some babbling it was a pity Berlioz could not pattern his own music upon such a s impler style. Then he disclosed his handiwork, discomfiting his traducers.

"Berlioz was never, properly speaking, a stage musician," Claude Debussy, France's other musical genius, wrote 61 years ago. "We must seek him in his pure symphonic music or in his 'Enfance du Christ,' which is pe rhaps his masterpiece."

Dr. Munch's rendition was an easy-going, sweet-toned one, matching Berlioz's wayward inspiration, so different from his hurly-burly readings of the several overtures dubbed "brains and brimstone" by George Bernard Shaw.

'CLIFFIES' STAR

John McCollum, tenor Florence Kopleff, contralto; Theodore Uppman, baritone, and Donald Gramm, basso, plus Donald Meaders, a Harvard sophomore flung into the scrimmage as a line-backer at short notice, reveled in the transparent originalities of the melodic lines, while the "Cliffies" belied their nonage with childlike simplicity. Their cherubic hosannas ending part two were ravishingly beautiful and wonderfully revealing.

Not all the French enunciation by both principals and choristers was greatly distinguishable from Chaucer's "scole of Stratsford atte Bow," but only President de Gaulle and Jacques Barzun would be likely to make phonetic capital from that fault.

The trio of the Ishmaelite childr n was played lovingly by flautists Doriot Anthony Dwyer and James Pappoutsakis with Bernard Zighera, harpist, and the final chord "Amen" concluded in a divine susurrus. In sum, it was an inspired and revealing presentation of an uniquely moving sacred drama.

Third Program

THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 15, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ.....*"L'Enfance du Christ," Sacred Trilogy, Op. 25

I.
HEROD'S DREAM

Recitative
Night March
Herod's Dream
Chorus of Soothsayers
The Stable in Bethlehem
Angel Chorus

INTERMISSION

II.
THE FLIGHT INTO EGYPT

Overture
Farewell of the Shepherds
The Holy Family at Rest

III.
THE ARRIVAL AT SAÏS

Recitative
The Arrival at Saïs
Trio of the Young Ishmaelites

Flutes: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, JAMES PAPPOUTSAKIS
Harp: BERNARD ZIGHERA

Chorus

Narrator (and Centurion)	JOHN MCCOLLUM, Tenor
Mary	FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Contralto
Joseph	THEODOR UPPMAN, Baritone
Herod, Polydorus, The Father of a Family	DONALD GRAMM, Bass

The role of Polydorus in Scene III will be sung by DONALD MEADERS

HARVARD GLEE CLUB – RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

The text will be found on page 28.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
DEC 10 1966

Choruses join BSO in Berlioz work

By Clifford Barnes

Some writers have questioned the suitability of Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ" for the Christmas season, but Charles Munch has done much toward establishing it in the minds of Americans since his first performance of the work here 13 years ago. The events it recalls took place on Twelfth-night and afterward, as Mary, Joseph, and the infant Jesus fled into Egypt.

Berlioz has clothed his own texts with a musical setting that is dramatic and capable of creating an emotional experience. In spite of what he has written about himself, this music reveals the composer to have been a religious man.

Friday's performance at Symphony Hall with Charles Munch as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony featured John McCollum, Florence Kopleff, Theodor Uppman, Donald Gramm, and Donald Meaders as soloists. The choral sections were sung by the combined Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. Elliot Forbes had trained this chorus of over 100 voices.

French diction

The French texts were clearly enunciated and understandable to those conversant with that language. The majority of the audience, however, turned the pages of the program booklet in almost perfect unison as they followed the translation. House lights were even left on after intermission to facilitate this regular intrusion into the music.

It is not too difficult to find soloists who sing perfect French, but to train a chorus of American students to do it is a real achievement. The words flowed in a completely natural way through the unified choral sound they produced. Only in the "Farewell of the Shepherds" did the precise consonants take on a sharp edge, and the "s" was occasionally overemphasized.

Mr. Munch was the master of every detail, including the unobtrusive signals to the chorus to stand. There is dynamism in his beat, and he almost makes music with his baton. The orchestra responded to every nuance. The instrumental interlude played by Doriot Anthony Dwyer and James Pappoutsakis (flutes), and Bernard Zighera (harp) was a polished gem.

Impressive soloists

The soloists were uniformly excellent in their various roles. Mr. Gramm was particularly impressive as he set the mood of "Herod's Dream" and the tortured mental anguish that followed. The tenderness of Miss Kopleff's "O mon cher fils" was continued as Mr. Uppman joined her in the duet on the rest of that text. Mr. McCollum's most extended passage of singing was in the finale where he maintained a sensitive balance over soft a cappella choral work.

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

The angel choruses were all sung off stage, in perfect synchronization, accompanied by a soft organ stop. The ethereal effect was one of the most telling moments of the performance. Berlioz wanted the final Amen to seem to lose itself in the mysterious distance. Charles Munch accomplished this so successfully that a reverent silence would have been a more fitting tribute than the applause which he received.

39

TUES. CAMBRIDGE #3 DEC. 13 THURS. A #3 DEC. 15

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 13, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ ..... *"L'Enfance du Christ," Sacred Trilogy, Op. 25

I.
HEROD'S DREAM

Recitative
Night March
Herod's Dream
Chorus of Soothsayers
The Stable in Bethlehem
Angel Chorus

INTERMISSION

II.
THE FLIGHT INTO EGYPT

Overture
Farewell of the Shepherds
The Holy Family at Rest

III.
THE ARRIVAL AT SAÏS

Recitative
The Arrival at Saïs
Trio of the Young Ishmaelites

Flutes: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, JAMES PAPPOUTSAKIS
Harp: BERNARD ZIGHERA

Chorus

Narrator (and Centurion) — JOHN MCCOLLUM, Tenor
Mary — FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Contralto
Joseph — THEODOR UPPMAN, Baritone
Herod, Polydorus, The Father of a Family — DONALD GRAMM, Bass

The role of Polydorus in Scene III will be sung by DONALD MEADERS

HARVARD GLEE CLUB – RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

The text will be found on page 28.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
DEC 10 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
DEC 10 1966

Munch Guides Symphony In Berlioz Sacred Trilogy

By ROLFE BOSWELL

A sharp-edged, stylish production of "L'Enfance du Christ" (Infant Christ), 25th opus of Hector Berlioz, graced yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert with Charles Munch as guest conductor. A quintet of worthy vocalists was backstopped by the Harvard Glee Club-Radcliffe Choral Society, trained by Elliot Forbes.

This sacred trilogy by France's first genius composer, casually regarded by so many listeners as only a peddler of the flamboyantly grandiose should open their ears, for the music of this quasi-Biblical oratorio is delicate, sensitive, profound and highly original. Undertaken as a hoax in 1850, it became transmogrified four years later as Berlioz's miraculous masterwork.

Hector Berlioz On the Podium

Berlioz frequently had been denounced for radical tendencies, but the authors of these denunciads often were too virtriolic and too laggard in recognizing this composer's greatness. However, he turned the tables on his captious critics with Gallic dexterity by producing "L'Enfance du Christ," which he pretended he had excavated amongst some old manuscripts.

SIMPLE STYLE

In this dramatic cantata he wrote in simple, melodious style. The Parisian critics immediately began praising the work, some babbling it was a pity Berlioz could not pattern his own music upon such a simpler style. Then he disclosed his handiwork, discomfiting his traducers.

"Berlioz was never, properly speaking, a stage musician," Claude Debussy, France's other musical genius, wrote 61 years ago. "We must seek him in his pure symphonic music or in his 'Enfance du Christ,' which is perhaps his masterpiece."

Dr. Munch's rendition was an easy-going, sweet-toned one, matching Berlioz's wayward inspiration, so different from his hurly-burly readings of the several overtures dubbed "brains and brimstone" by George Bernard Shaw.

'CLIFFIES' STAR

John McCollum, tenor Florence Kopleff, contralto; Theodore Uppman, baritone, and Donald Gramm, basso, plus Donald Meaders, a Harvard sophomore flung into the scrimmage as a line-backer at short notice, reveled in the transparent originalities of the melodic lines, while the "Cliffies" belied their nonage with childlike simplicity. Their cherubic hosannas ending part two were ravishingly beautiful and wonderfully revealing.

Not all the French enunciation by both principals and choristers was greatly distinguishable from Chaucer's "scole of Stratsford atte Bow," but only President de Gaulle and Jacques Barzun would be likely to make phonetic capital from that fault.

The trio of the Ishmaelite children was played lovingly by flautists Doriot Anthony Dwyer and James Pappoutsakis with Bernard Zighera, harpist, and the final chord "Amen" concluded in a divine susurrus. In sum, it was an inspired and revealing presentation of an uniquely moving sacred drama.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Third Program

THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 15, at 8:30 o'clock

CHARLES MUNCH, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ ..... *"L'Enfance du Christ," Sacred Trilogy, Op. 25

I.
HEROD'S DREAM

Recitative
Night March
Herod's Dream
Chorus of Soothsayers
The Stable in Bethlehem
Angel Chorus

INTERMISSION

II.
THE FLIGHT INTO EGYPT

Overture
Farewell of the Shepherds
The Holy Family at Rest

III.
THE ARRIVAL AT SAÏS

Recitative
The Arrival at Saïs
Trio of the Young Ishmaelites

Flutes: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, JAMES PAPPOUTSAKIS
Harp: BERNARD ZIGHERA

Chorus

Narrator (and Centurion) — JOHN MCCOLLUM, Tenor
Mary — FLORENCE KOPLEFF, Contralto
Joseph — THEODOR UPPMAN, Baritone
Herod, Polydorus, The Father of a Family — DONALD GRAMM, Bass

The role of Polydorus in Scene III will be sung by DONALD MEADERS

HARVARD GLEE CLUB – RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY
ELLIOT FORBES, Conductor

The text will be found on page 28.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Choruses join BSO in Berlioz work

By Clifford Barnes

Some writers have questioned the suitability of Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ" for the Christmas season, but Charles Munch has done much toward establishing it in the minds of Americans since his first performance of the work here 13 years ago. The events it recalls took place on Twelfth-night and afterward, as Mary, Joseph, and the infant Jesus fled into Egypt.

Berlioz has clothed his own texts with a musical setting that is dramatic and capable of creating an emotional experience. In spite of what he has written about himself, this music reveals the composer to have been a religious man.

Friday's performance at Symphony Hall with Charles Munch as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony featured John McCollum, Florence Kopleff, Theodor Uppman, Donald Gramm, and Donald Meaders as soloists. The choral sections were sung by the combined Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. Elliot Forbes had trained this chorus of over 100 voices.

French diction

The French texts were clearly enunciated and understandable to those conversant with that language. The majority of the audience, however, turned the pages of the program booklet in almost perfect unison as they followed the translation. House lights were even left on after intermission to facilitate this regular intrusion into the music.

It is not too difficult to find soloists who sing perfect French, but to train a chorus of American students to do it is a real achievement. The words flowed in a completely natural way through the unified choral sound they produced. Only in the "Farewell of the Shepherds" did the precise consonants take on a sharp edge, and the "s" was occasionally overemphasized.

Mr. Munch was the master of every detail, including the unobtrusive signals to the chorus to stand. There is dynamism in his beat, and he almost makes music with his baton. The orchestra responded to every nuance. The instrumental interlude played by Doriot Anthony Dwyer and James Pappoutsakis (flutes), and Bernard Zighera (harp) was a polished gem.

Impressive soloists

The soloists were uniformly excellent in their various roles. Mr. Gramm was particularly impressive as he set the mood of "Herod's Dream" and the tortured mental anguish that followed. The tenderness of Miss Kopleff's "O mon cher fils" was continued as Mr. Uppman joined her in the duet on the rest of that text. Mr. McCollum's most extended passage of singing was in the finale where he maintained a sensitive balance over soft a cappella choral work.

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

The angel choruses were all sung off stage, in perfect synchronization, accompanied by a soft organ stop. The ethereal effect was one of the most telling moments of the performance. Berlioz wanted the final Amen to seem to lose itself in the mysterious distance. Charles Munch accomplished this so successfully that a reverent silence would have been a more fitting tribute than the applause which he received.

FRI. + SAT. # 11 DEC. 16 + 17

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
DEC 17 1966

Israel Sends Us a Great Violinist

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Itzhak Perlman, superb violinist from Israel, played Prokovieff's second concerto (Op. 63, in G minor) in a melting combination of lyricism and supple virtuosity at yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, conducted with acumen by Erich Leinsdorf. One who has been listening to violinists from Ashkenasi (1966) in backward reeling time to Zimbalist (1911) feels confident that this brilliant young musician who has just reached his majority, is destined to rank with the top-flight masters of his generation.

Itzhak Perlman

Prokovieff's second is among the more beautiful violin concerti of this century-indeed, of any century-disclosing a warmth of melodic line, even a romantic spirit, in sharp contrast with the sardonic hardness and pawky humors of the first concerto, composed a score of years earlier, before its creator had profited from post-graduate instruction from the great Leopold Auer, then in self-imposed exile in New York.

Perlman has the outward technical prowess and inward musicianly feeling needed to bring out the warmer, deeper preoccupations of this concerto's first two movements. In his early childhood he was stricken by polio; as a result he plays seated, but that is immaterial and irrevelent.

Only in the finale are there touches of the Prokofieverish waggery in the brilliant rondo of incisive rhythms and flashing melodic mosaics. Bold staccato effects, tricky rhythmic shifts and brisk interchanges between soloist and orchestra brought many-throated bravos.

Before the interval, Beethoven was commemorated on the 196th anniversary of his birth by his second "Leonora" overture and fourth symphony (Op. 60, in B flat). The prelude to the Teutonic Titan's quasi-flopera is generally regarded as a preliminary study for and neglected stepsister of the more celebrated "Leonora" No. 3. Dr. Leinsdorf's taut direction elicited a superior performance technically, but there is much more drama in Beethoven's powerful prelude than was manifested.

The fourth symphony has particularly winning graces and charms in its skilfully blent Mozartistry and Haydensity. Its musical vocabularly is not complex; its Beethovenish characteristics are vouchsafed chiefly in its nervous vitality, pulsating through every bar, making it perhaps the most readily approachable of all this composer's more mature works.

Generally speaking, conductors' attitudes toward this sixtieth opus have become delineated so well that few deviate from the well-indited score's textual indications. Dr. Leinsdorf observed the customary dynamic gradations and tempi in his deft, smooth, polished performance, resulting in an exuberant expression of youthful joy.

In conclusion, the Berlioz orchestration of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" for solo piano (Op. 65) was anticlimatic, though not as brusque and unrhythmic as Toscanini's recorded version of Stokowski's distorted and overstressed rendition. Without the two dancers choreographed in "Spirit of the Rose" to exude aromatic attar, the Weber-Berlioz bit is more bmausic than balletic.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Eleventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 16, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 17, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Overture, Leonore No. 2

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV ..... *Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante assai
III. Allegro, ben marcato

WEBER–BERLIOZ ..... Invitation to the Dance, Op. 65

SOLOIST
ITZHAK PERLMAN

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[649]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
DEC 11 1966

Violinist With B.S.O.

The young Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman will make his Boston Symphony debut at the orchestra's concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30.

The orchestra will give five concerts this week under two conductors. Tuesday and Thursday evenings Charles Munch, music director emeritus, concludes his Symphony Hall engagement for this season with Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ."

This evening at 8:30, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the annual pension fund concert. Silver medalists in the recent Tchaikovsky Competition will be soloists — Stephen Kates in the Dvorak Cello Concerto and Misha Dichter in the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will be the narrator in "A Lincoln Portrait" by Aaron Copland.

At the week-end's program Perlman will play the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2. The concerts will open with Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 2 and the Symphony No. 4. After the concerto comes the Weber - Berlioz "Invitation to the Dance."

Itzhak Perlman is the musical product of two countries, Tel Aviv's Academy of Music and New York's Julliard School of Music. Born in Tel Aviv in 1945, the son of Polish Jews who emigrated to Israel in the mid-1930's, Perlman made his Carnegie Hall debut in 1963 and the following year won the Leventritt Award. In early childhood he was stricken with polio and as a result plays from a seated position.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 21 1966

At Boston Symphony

Perlman Masterful In Sibelius Concerto

By JOHN TEMPLE
Contributing Critic

Itzhak Perlman, who first appeared as violin soloist with the Boston Symphony last week in Prokofiev, returned Tuesday night as undisputed master of the Sibelius Concerto and his Symphony Hall audience.

The orchestra, whose playing in the Beethoven Fourth Symphony earlier in the evening had been less than sparkling, rose to the occasion and gave the 21-year-old violinist an impeccable, subtly shaded but tense and powerful accompaniment.

The music of Sibelius, with its long lyric themes and jigsaw-puzzle combinations of rhythmic and thematic fragments, has called forth from Leinsdorf some of his most eloquent work, and in the violin concerto he was at one with the orchestra. The pianissimi were like velvet, the brass playing in the climaxes was warm and assured, and the entire piece was brought off with genuine commitment.

Perlman deserved it. He also deserved, as few do, his standing ovation. His was not a lush tone, but the electric tension in his attacks, his unswerving sense of where the music was going, his lyric intensity in the slow movement —and those silvery harmonics in the finale—made this performance one of the best things in Symphony Hall this year.

In addition to the Sibelius and the Beethoveen Fourth, the program also included the Coriolan Overture and the Weber-Berlioz "Invitation to the Dance." In the last work the orchestra, still apparently under the spell of its marvelous collaboration with Perlman, once again sparkled.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 28 1966

Close-Up

Credits On A String

ITZHAK PERLMAN . . . a whole world besides Tchaikovsky

By Dan Webster
Patriot Ledger Correspondent

NEW YORK — Once an artist gains a secure foothold on the concert stage, his life is travel, glamor, triumph, riches. That is the popular view, but one disputed by Itzhak Perlman, the 21-year-old violinist who will play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra later this winter.

Born in Israel of Polish parents, Perlman became a protege of Isaac Stern and began studies in New York before he had reached his teens. After nosing out Braintree's Charles Castleman for the Leventritt Prize in 1964, his career has been swiftly rising and he is now among that fellowship of violinists who move from one solo appearance to another with the major orchestras and who are accepted in the popular mind as concert artists. One day recently, only hours before he was to fly to Providence, he was at school in New York.

At an apartment he shares with his mother, he said: "I've been in this country eight years and I am just finishing at Juilliard.

Need For Diversification

"I am going especially for academic subjects — history and psychology," he continued. "These things broaden the mind: a violinist shouldn't just play the instrument. I have been playing since I was six and I realize I have to grow and catch up. I enjoy psychology. Who knows? I might grow up to be a psychiatrist. I could at least lecture on what happens to a violinist when he stands up in front of an audience."

For Perlman, the last sentence is ironic. He is a polio victim and must sit in front of an audience to play. He walks with difficulty and never without two canes.

His willingness to study is what critics credit with being his armor in the fight to survive the acclaim that goes with winning a major prize.

"It is very dangerous to win a prize because you have to hold on to it," he said. Recalling his own experience in 1964, he said "You get overconfident. The most dangrous time is right after winning.

"I live in New York and that way I can see my teacher (Ivan Galamian) every once in a while. It's good to have someone check you up. Performers get too involved in their music and develop habits that are hard to break."

From A Groove

One of the habits Perlman is getting away from is that of playing the Tchaikovsky Concerto. After winning his prize, he played the work everywhere, but a fear of being typecast has led him to suggest a variety of other works.

"I'm doing the Stravinsky Concerto in Honolulu and I'm playing Mozart where I can. I'm going to record the Sibelius Concerto and the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2 with the Boston Symphony in December. I'm still looking for new works. There are so few who play the new music — and you don't get asked to play it.

"I'm giving the Tchaikovsky a rest. When you return to a big work like that you always search for new ideas and new ways to play it. You can't really get bored with it," he said.

Perlman will play about 40 concerts during his present tour and leave in January for a swing through European capitals. He figures that he'll have to cut a lot of classes to fit them in.

FRI. + SAT. # 11 DEC. 16 + 17

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

DEC 17 1966

Israel Sends Us a Great Violinist

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Itzhak Perlman, superb violinist from Israel, played Prokofieff's second concerto (Op. 63, in G minor) in a melting combination of lyricism and supple virtuosity at yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, conducted with acumen by Erich Leinsdorf. One who has been listening to violinists from Ashkenasi (1966) in backward reeling time to Zimbalist (1911) feels confident that this brilliant young musician who has just reached his majority, is destined to rank with the top-flight masters of his generation.

Itzhak Perlman

Prokovieff's second is among the more beautiful violin concerti of this century-indeed, of any century-disclosing a warmth of melodic line, even a romantic spirit, in sharp contrast with the sardonic hardness and pawky humors of the first concerto, composed a score of years earlier, before its creator had profited from post-graduate instruction from the great Leopold Auer, then in self-imposed exile in New York.

Perlman has the outward technical prowess and inward musicianly feeling needed to bring out the warmer, deeper preoccupations of this concerto's first two movements. In his early childhood he was stricken by polio; as a result he plays seated, but that is immaterial and irrevelent .

Only in the finale are there touches of the Prokofieverish waggery in the brilliant rondo of incisive rhythms and flashing melodic mosaics. Bold staccato effects, tricky rhythmic shifts and brisk interchanges between soloist and orchestra brought many-throated bravos.

Before the interval, Beethoven was commemorated on the 196th anniversary of his birth by his second "Leonora" overture and fourth symphony (Op. 60, in B flat). The prelude to the Teutonic Titan's quasi-flopera is generally regarded as a preliminary study for and neglected stepsister of the more celebrated "Leonora" No. 3. Dr. Leinsdorf's taut direction elicited a superior performance technically, but there is much more drama in Beethoven's powerful prelude than was manifested.

The fourth symphony has particularly winning graces and charms in its skilfully blent Mozartistry and Haydensity. Its musical vocabularly is not compelx; its Beethovenish characteristics are vouchsafed chiefly in its nervous vitality, pulsating through every bar, making it perhaps the most readily approachable of all this composer's more mature works.

Generally speaking, conductors' attitudes toward this sixtieth opus have become delineated so well that few deviate from the well-indited score's textual indications. Dr. Leinsdorf observed the customary dynamic gradations and tempi in his deft, smooth, polished performance, resulting in an exuberant expression of youthful joy.

In conclusion, the Berlioz orchestration of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" for solo piano (Op. 65) was anticlimatic, though not as brusque and unrhythmic as Toscanini's recorded version of Stokowski's distorted and overstressed rendition. Without the two dancers choreographed in "Spirit of the Rose" to exude aromatic attar, the Weber-Berlioz bit is more banausic than balletic.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

DEC 11 1966

Violinist With B.S.O.

The young Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman will make his Boston Symphony debut at the orchestra's concerts Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30.

The orchestra will give five concerts this week under two conductors. Tuesday and Thursday evenings Charles Munch, music director emeritus, concludes his Symphony Hall engagement for this season with Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ."

This evening at 8:30, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the annual pension fund concert. Silver medalists in the recent Tchaikovsky Competition will be soloists — Stephen Kates in the Dvorak Cello Concerto and Misha Dichter in the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will be the narrator in "A Lincoln Portrait" by Aaron Copland.

At the week-end's program Perlman will play the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2. The concerts will open with Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 2 and the Symphony No. 4. After the concerto comes the Weber - Berlioz "Invitation to the Dance."

Itzhak Perlman is the musical product of two countries, Tel Aviv's Academy of Music and New York's Julliard School of Music. Born in Tel Aviv in 1945, the son of Polish Jews who emigrated to Israel in the mid-1930's, Perlman made his Carnegie Hall debut in 1963 and the following year won the Leventritt Award. In early childhood he was stricken with polio and as a result plays from a seated position.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Eleventh Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 16, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 17, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Overture, Leonore No. 2

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV ..... *Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante assai
III. Allegro, ben marcato

WEBER–BERLIOZ ..... Invitation to the Dance, Op. 65

SOLOIST
ITZHAK PERLMAN

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[649]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

DEC 21 1966

At Boston Symphony

Perlman Masterful In Sibelius Concerto

By JOHN TEMPLE
Contributing Critic

Itzhak Perlman, who first appeared as violin soloist with the Boston Symphony last week in Prokofiev, returned Tuesday night as undisputed master of the Sibelius Concerto and his Symphony Hall audience.

The orchestra, whose playing in the Beethoven Fourth Symphony earlier in the evening had been less than sparkling, rose to the occasion and gave the 21-year-old violinist an impeccable, subtly shaded but tense and powerful accompaniment.

The music of Sibelius, with its long lyric themes and jigsaw-puzzle combinations of rhythmic and thematic fragments, has called forth from Leinsdorf some of his most eloquent work, and in the violin concerto he was at one with the orchestra. The pianissimi were like velvet, the brass playing in the climaxes was warm and assured, and the entire piece was brought off with genuine commitment.

Perlman deserved it. He also deserved, as few do, his standing ovation. His was not a lush tone, but the electric tension in his attacks, his unswerving sense of where the music was going, his lyric intensity in the slow movement —and those silvery harmonics in the finale—made this performance one of the best things in Symphony Hall this year.

In addition to the Sibelius and the Beethoveen Fourth, the program also included the Coriolan Overture and the Weber-Berlioz "Invitation to the Dance." In the last work the orchestra, still apparently under the spell of its marvelous collaboration with Perlman, once again sparkled.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098

OCT 28 1966

Close-Up

Credits On A String

ITZHAK PERLMAN . . . a whole world besides Tchaikovsky

By Dan Webster
Patriot Ledger Correspondent

NEW YORK — Once an artist gains a secure foothold on the concert stage, his life is travel, glamor, triumph, riches. That is the popular view, but one disputed by Itzhak Perlman, the 21-year-old violinist who will play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra later this winter.

Born in Israel of Polish parents, Perlman became a protege of Isaac Stern and began studies in New York before he had reached his teens. After nosing out Braintree's Charles Castleman for the Leventritt Prize in 1964, his career has been swiftly rising and he is now among that fellowship of violinists who move from one solo appearance to another with the major orchestras and who are accepted in the popular mind as concert artists. One day recently, only hours before he was to fly to Providence, he was at school in New York.

At an apartment he shares with his mother, he said: "I've been in this country eight years and I am just finishing at Juilliard.

Need For Diversification

"I am going especially for academic subjects — history and psychology," he continued. "These things broaden the mind: a violinist shouldn't just play the instrument. I have been playing since I was six and I realize I have to grow and catch up. I enjoy psychology. Who knows? I might grow up to be a psychiatrist. I could at least lecture on what happens to a violinist when he stands up in front of an audience."

For Perlman, the last sentence is ironic. He is a polio victim and must sit in front of an audience to play. He walks with difficulty and never without two canes.

His willingness to study is what critics credit with being his armor in the fight to survive the acclaim that goes with winning a major prize.

"It is very dangerous to win a prize because you have to hold on to it," he said. Recalling his own experience in 1964, he said "You get overconfident. The most dangrous time is right after winning.

"I live in New York and that way I can see my teacher (Ivan Galamian) every once in a while. It's good to have someone check you up. Performers get too involved in their music and develop habits that are hard to break."

From A Groove

One of the habits Perlman is getting away from is that of playing the Tchaikovsky Concerto. After winning his prize, he played the work everywhere, but a fear of being typecast has led him to suggest a variety of other works.

"I'm doing the Stravinsky Concerto in Honolulu and I'm playing Mozart where I can. I'm going to record the Sibelius Concerto and the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2 with the Boston Symphony in December. I'm still looking for new works. There are so few who play the new music — and you don't get asked to play it.

"I'm giving the Tchaikovsky a rest. When you return to a big work like that you always search for new ideas and new ways to play it. You can't really get bored with it," he said.

Perlman will play about 40 concerts during his present tour and leave in January for a swing through European capitals. He figures that he'll have to cut a lot of classes to fit them in.

41

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
DEC 21 1966

Perlman and BSO Offer Sibelius Violin Concerto

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Itzhak Perlman, 21-year-old, already great, violinist from Israel, presented Jan Sibelius' violin concerto (Op. 47, in D minor) with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, in Symphony Hall last night. The purity and luminosity of the young virtuoso's tone at the outset imprinted this as a performance of rare delight, superlative technique and supreme artistry.

In contradistinction to Prokovieff's second violin concerto, with which Perlman made his BSO debut at last weekend's concerts, Sibelius, himself a violinist, wrote violin music, whereas the Russian, primarily a pianist, composed music for the violin. As George Bernard Shaw once noted, "there is a world of difference."

Jan Sibelius

Perlman's clean, clear-cut and effortless technique is a prime necessity for this taxing concerto by the Finnish master and he made light of its hazards with rock-steady bowmanship, hair-trigger intonation and velvet-smooth vibrato. The glistering, radiant timbre he elicted in the more lyrical passages was matched by the poised artistry he brought to the melodic Sibelian lines.

LOVELY SOUNDS

It was at the beginning of the slow movement, reminiscent of the Offenbacharolle from "Tales of Hoffman," where the lovely sounds the soloist produced were rich without artificial lushness. Elsewhere, his poised self-assurance, even in the most fiendishly difficult measures, plus perfect intonation, added to listening pleasures.

Perhaps it was in the almost-unplayable concluding movement that this fine young Israeli violinist came superbly into his own in realizing the composer's final climax with the fullest sense of triumph, overcoming every obstacle in a burst of exultation. Throughout, the orchestra gave splendid support.

OVERTURE PLAYED

Curtain-raiser was Beethoven's "Coriolanus" overture (Op. 62), not written for Shakespeare's drama, but for a tragedy by Heinrich Joseph von Collin, Viennese barrister and playwright, but, as Richard Wagner was first to point out, the composing genius followed neither play. Dr. Leinsdorf's was a sturdy, straightforward performance, undemonstrative beyond the broad implications of the score.

At least, he did not make the mistake Arturo Toscanini was wont to do in applying whiplash passions appropriate to Verdi without the sublime gravity requisite for Beethoven. The BSO maestro's was a valid conception of this grand music, vouchsafed without fustian flourishes.

Also programmed were Beethoven's fourth symphony and the Weber-Berlioz "Invitation to the Dance," which went much the same as they did last weekend, which is to say, very well indeed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 17 1966

At the Symphony

Perlman in Superb Prokofiev Concerto

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

The ARTS

Itzhak Perlman is a 21-year-old Israeli violinist trained at Juilliard by Galamain. A polio victim, he plays sitting down. What is more to the point is that he plays superbly.

The Prokofiev G minor Concerto is an empty and obvious piece, though its transparent scoring is unusually attractive. Perlman brought to it an assured and easy virtuoso technique, a warm and full tone, clean intonation, crackling rhythmic vitality, a sense for lyric phrasing, and taste. Those are just what the piece needs and the result of it all was a brilliant performance, nicely supported by Leinsdorf and the orchestra.

Aside from repeating the Prokofiev at the Saturday concert, Perlman will play the Sibelius Concerto with the Boston Symphony Tuesday evening. He is worth hearing.

December 16th is probably Beethoven's birthday—if the date is right, his 196th—and the two pieces in the first part of the concert were played in honor of that occasion. The excellent performance of the second "Leonore" was expansive and emphatically accented in a way that brought out sharply its proto-Romantic character in contrast to the more classical, but still more powerful, No. 3.

The Fourth Symphony had an admirable performance, one full of energy and grace. I note two reservations, though. One: the power of the transition from the introduction into the allegro is dissipated when the quick tempo enters as early as Leinsdorf has it do. I assume he does it to bring out the relation of the passage to the corresponding one at the end of the exposition, but though the effect is convincing, or at least interesting, in retrospect, at the time it is confusing and weakening.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 2 and Symphony No. 4, Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor with Itzhak Perlman as soloist, and the Weber-Berlioz "Invitation to the Dance," Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

The other: Beethoven's use of the direction "espressivo" is sufficiently rare that one might assume it to be special in its implications, and to require a certain emphasis in performance. The slow movement of the Fourth has some "espressivo" and "cantabile," and I was not persuaded Leinsdorf's cool reading caught the character of this Adagio, beautifully done though it was in its own way.

"Invitation to the Dance" had not had a Boston Symphony performance in nearly 62 years. It was pleasant to hear this high-spirited piece again, especially when done with such good humor. Jules Eskin did notably well with the tender cellistic pleadings and thanks before and after the waltz. Leinsdorf's musical surgery is generally unnerving, but I must say I was quite taken by the adroit trick with which he kept the audience from interrupting with applause when the dance, but not the piece, was over.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
DEC 17 1966

Perlman at Symphony

Soloist in Prokofiev

By Harold Rogers

According to Baker's Biographical Dictionary of Musicians, Beethoven was probably born on Dec. 16, 1770. He was definitely baptized on Dec. 17. Erich Leinsdorf may or may not have planned to honor the master on his anniversary by placing two of his works on the Boston Symphony program this weekend.

Whatever his intentions, his mannered performances of the "Leonore" Overture No. 2 and the Fourth Symphony came more in the form of a disservice than of homage. He conducted the "Leonore" as of he were doing Debussy — all thin, delicate, without body, quite unlike the Beethoven most conductors and listeners agree upon as being typical. The several fermate were held uncomfortably long, even embarrassingly so—more for theatrical reasons, it would appear, than for musical ones. The Fourth was also drained of emotion while Mr. Leinsdorf gave careful attention to superficial details.

After the intermission, however, the concert was saved by the Bostan debut of Itzhak Perlman, the 21-year-old violinist first heard in New England this past season at Castle Hill. Playing the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2, he added the sine qua non of music—emotion. His tone was opulent; his phrasing elegant; the cantilena of the Andante was a marvel of lyricism. His performance stirred up a resounding ovation.

Mr. Leinsdorf closed with the Berlioz arrangement of Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," infusing it with some degree of Viennese spirit. The cello solos of the invitation and the salutation were given polite utterance by Jules Eskin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
DEC 18 1966

Organ Series Set

Symphony to Play Just One Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform only one concert this week, the third of the Tuesday "B" series Tuesday evening at 7:30 in Symphony Hall. Itzhak Perman, the young Israeli violinist who has made his first appearances with the orchestra this weekend will be soloist. He will play the Sibelius Violin Concerto, rather than the Prokofiev Concerto No. 2 which he performed this weekend.

Erich Leinsdorf will open the program by conducting the orchestra in Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan," and continue with Beethoven's Symphony No. 4. Mr. Perlman will join the orchestra after intermission for the Sibelius Concerto, and the concert will close with the Weber-Berlioz "Invitation to the Dance."

The remainder of the week will be devoted to recording sessions for RCA Victor.

The next concerts by the orchestra will be Tuesday, Dec. 27, Thursday, Dec. 29, Friday, Dec. 30 and Saturday, Dec. 31.

THE SYMPHONY has made an early announcement of plans for the 1967 Symphony Hall Organ Concerts, and tickets are already available at the Symphony Hall box office for holiday gift purchases. The 1967 series will consist of three concerts, each with E. Power Biggs as organist and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra assisting. Each program will be a full-length evening concert beginning at 8:30, in contrast to the one-hour programs at 6 p.m. of former seasons.

The first Symphony Hall Organ Concert will be Sunday evening, Feb. 19, featuring music for organ and strings. The second concert, Monday, March 27, will consist of music for organ, brass and double chorus. The third and final program will be Sunday evening, April 16, featuring organ, trumpets, oboes and timpani. All three programs will be conducted by Charles Wilson, newly appointed Assistant Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Series tickets for the three concerts will be available Monday morning at the Symphony Hall box office at $8, $6.50 and $5.

TUES. B #3 DEC. 20

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
DEC 21 1966

Perlman Concert A Delight

By RENA FRUCHTER

Violinist Itzhak Perlman, in his appearance with the Boston Symphony Tuesday evening, gave a truly remarkable performance of the Sibelius Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D minor, Opus 47. Mr. Perlman is a most unusual artist from many standpoints. His technical control of the instrument allows him much musical freedom. At no moment does he seem only to "play a difficult passage, but rather to extract from it as lyrical a line as possible. In the Sibelius concerto this is a difficult task for any artist. This work presents many technical problems, and a violinist who overcomes them might well be tempted to overstep the bounds of tasteful lyricism. Mr. Perlman keeps his interpretation well within bounds. He strives for an intense, rich sound, not simply a forceful tone. His phrasing is clear and intelligent, and his dynamic range quite broad. Each movement of the Sibelius Concerto was a coherent whole—logical in structural ideas and at the same time warmly inspired.

Tuesday's program repeated the Beethoven Symphony No. 4 and the Weber-Berlioz Invitation to the Dance which were performed at last weekend's concerts. Mr. Leinsdorf led a somewhat heavy-handed performance of the Beethoven Overture to "Coriolan," but his direction in the Sibelius Concerto was excellent. There were moments in the third movement when the orchestra lagged behind the soloist, but for the most part Mr. Leinsdorf's tempi were spirited and consistent. He carefully observed phrasing and instrumental entrances, and created fine balance.

In an impromtu interview, soloist Itzhak Perlman spoke of his recording sessions this week. "We have been recording the Prokofiev Concerto and will do the Sibelius tomorrow." Mr. Perlman gives 30 to 40 concerts a year, and finds "not too much pressure except the anxiety just before a concert—but that is as it should be. Anxiety is really necessary for a good performance. That is one of the difficulties with recording—there is no audience present to create that special atmosphere. . . . I once read that Soviet pianist Emil Gilels records wearing tails."

Still speaking of records: "I don't think they will put the concert out of the picture. . . . There is so much talk about the miraculous tape splice. I really prefer recording whole movements, or chunks, and try to make as complete . . . and spontaneous a performance as possible. . . . It usually takes a whole day, though!"

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented a program in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening. Violinist Itzhak Perlman was the soloist.

Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60 — Beethoven
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in D minor, Op. 47 — Sibelius
Invitation to the Dance, Op. 65 — Weber-Berlioz

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 20, at 7:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

SIBELIUS . . . . . Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in D minor, Op. 47

I. Allegro moderato
II. Adagio di molto
III. Allegro ma non tanto

WEBER–BERLIOZ . . . . . Invitation to the Dance, Op. 65

SOLOIST
ITZHAK PERLMAN

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
DEC 17 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
DEC 17 1966

SYMPHONY

Prokofiev Concerto Restraint Well Developed

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

For the second week in a row, after Symphony, we are given an opportunity to discuss the inroads of musical conservatism which appear with a composer's advancing age.

Last week, under Charles Munch, it came with Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ," which came as a surprise to 19th century audiences because of its comparative restraint (for Berlioz). Of course it wasn't age, Berlioz declared, but the subject which dictated the mood.

On Friday it was Prokofiev's turn, via the Violin Concerto No. 2, played by Itzhak Perlman and conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, and this time the composer had no such excuse.

Prokofiev, long considered the "enfant terrible" of Russian music, composed his First Violin Concerto in 1914, infusing it with formal symmetry, idiomatic hardness, square-cut themes, superimposed harmonies and dissonance. But the Second Concerto did not appear until 1935, five years after the date usually named as the turning point in Prokofiev's work.

The Second Concerto lies in virtual opposition to its predecessor. Its opening-movement themes arise and descend in a flowing, relatively free rhythm, at times even gracefully lyric. The following variation movement is yet more restrained, introducing a tranquil violin melody over an ostinato figure of triplets from the orchestra; the variations fall true to form, thematic ornamentation and contrapuntal involvement being of a near-classic order. Finally — could Prokofiev stand it no longer? — the finale signals release and a return to strong rhythmic pulse, muscular violin writing and harmonic spice.

The concerto is not really a meditative piece, except perhaps by Prokofiev's earlier standard, but it has a keen romantic bearing, a smooth integration of line and even less bravura than the Brahms concerto. This was its visage in the extremely capable hands of 21-year-old Itzhak Perlman. His manner was firm but expressive, intense but yielding; his tone carried warmth into all registers, without harshness, and his intonation was secure even in passages of stress. Mr. Perlman wound melodic lines with a mature musician's ease, and phrased beautifully, with never a flat or exaggerated contour: such passion-with-restrait is rare in young talent.

Only during the finale, when the composer calls for some fierce sawing, did notes of coarseness creep into his playing; but it may not be unfair to state that Prokofiev knew the traits of the violin well and expected that this would happen.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra celebrated Beethoven's 196th birthday with the Leonore Overture No. 2 and the Symphony No. 4. One usually remarks about how the second Lenore is a musically lesser, dramatically greater work than No. 3, and how the Fourth Symphony would have wider recognition were it not situated between the "Eroica" and the C minor—"a Greek maiden between two Norse giants," as Schumann put it. But Friday's notable aspect concerned the orchestra's playing — exasperating when poor, exhilarating at is best.

The Leonore performance was not outstanding, but still was all right; the principal drawback was in staccatos, where the sound would ripple through the strings from high to low. By the opening movement of the Fourth Symphony things had deteriorated further; the first theme cackled through the violins like pebbles hitting a roof, giving us the urge to tap our feet or wave an imaginary baton to bring them together. "Why can't they stay with each other?" we thought angrily.

Then as the symphony progressed, the playing jelled to pinpoint accuracy, and both Scherzo and finale danced, with one brief respite, with polish and positive delight. And we loved Beethoven all the more. Discipline is not a simple task, but its rewards bring sheer happiness.

The concluding "Invitation to the Dance" of Weber, arranged by Berlioz, was the orchestra's nod to the holiday season, and was performed with elan.

Next week the orchestra is busy with recording; on Dec. 30-31 Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher," concerto for viola and small orchestra, with Burton Fine, soloist; and Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade in D major, K. 250.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the eleventh program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Itzhak Perlman was violin soloist for the Prokofiev.

Leonore overture No. 2 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 4 in B flat, Op. 60 — Beethoven
Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor — Prokofiev
Invitation to the Dance, Op. 65 — Weber-Berlioz

TUES. B #3 DEC. 20

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
DEC 21 1966

Perlman Concert A Delight

By RENA FRUCHTER

Violinist Itzhak Perlman, in his appearance with the Boston Symphony Tuesday evening, gave a truly remarkable performance of the Sibelius Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D minor, Opus 47. Mr. Perlman is a most unusual artist from many standpoints. His technical control of the instrument allows him much musical freedom. At no moment does he seem only to "play a difficult passage, but rather to extract from it as lyrical a line as possible. In the Sibelius concerto this is a difficult task for any artist. This work presents many technical problems, and a violinist who overcomes them might well be tempted to overstep the bounds of tasteful lyricism. Mr. Perlman keeps his interpretation well within bounds. He strives for an intense, rich sound, not simply a forceful tone. His phrasing is clear and intelligent, and his dynamic range quite broad. Each movement of the Sibelius Concerto was a coherent whole—logical in structural ideas and at the same time warmly inspired.

Tuesday's program repeated the Beethoven Symphony No. 4 and the Weber-Berlioz Invitation to the Dance which were performed at last weekend's concerts. Mr. Leinsdorf led a somewhat heavy-handed performance of the Beethoven Overture to "Coriolan," but his direction in the Sibelius Concerto was excellent. There were moments in the third movement when the orchestra lagged behind the soloist, but for the most part Mr. Leinsdorf's tempi were spirited and consistent. He carefully observed phrasing and instrumental entrances, and created fine balance.

In an impromtu interview, soloist Itzhak Perlman spoke of his recording sessions this week. "We have been recording the Prokofiev Concerto and will do the Sibelius tomorrow." Mr. Perlman gives 30 to 40 concerts a year, and finds "not too much pressure except the anxiety just before a concert—but that is as it should be. Anxiety is really necessary for a good performance. That is one of the difficulties with recording—there is no audience present to create that special atmosphere. . . . I once read that Soviet pianist Emil Gilels records wearing tails."

Still speaking of records: "I don't think they will put the concert out of the picture. . . . . There is so much talk about the miraculous tape splice. I really prefer recording whole movements, or chunks, and try to make as complete . . . and spontaneous a performance as possible. . . . It usually takes a whole day, though!"

The Program

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented a program in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening. Violinist Itzhak Perlman was the soloist.

Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60 — Beethoven
Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in D minor, Op. 47 — Sibelius
Invitation to the Dance, Op. 65 — Weber-Berlioz

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Third Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 20, at 7:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

SIBELIUS ..... Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, in D minor, Op. 47

I. Allegro moderato
II. Adagio di molto
III. Allegro ma non tanto

WEBER–BERLIOZ ..... Invitation to the Dance, Op. 65

SOLOIST
ITZHAK PERLMAN

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
DEC 17 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
DEC 17 1966

SYMPHONY

Prokofiev Concerto Restraint Well Developed

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

For the second week in a row, after Symphony, we are given an opportunity to discuss the inroads of musical conservatism which appear with a composer's advancing age.

Last week, under Charles Munch, it came with Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ," which came as a surprise to 19th century audiences because of its comparative restraint (for Berlioz). Of course it wasn't age, Berlioz declared, but the subject which dictated the mood.

On Friday it was Prokofiev's turn, via the Violin Concerto No. 2, played by Itzhak Perlman and conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, and this time the composer had no such excuse.

Prokofiev, long considered the "enfant terrible" of Russian music, composed his First Violin Concerto in 1914, infusing it with formal symmetry, idiomatic hardness, square-cut themes, superimposed harmonies and dissonance. But the Second Concerto did not appear until 1935, five years after the date usually named as the turning point in Prokofiev's work.

The Second Concerto lies in virtual opposition to its predecessor. Its opening-movement themes arise and descend in a flowing, relatively free rhythm, at times even gracefully lyric. The following variation movement is yet more restrained, introducing a tranquil violin melody over an ostinato figure of triplets from the orchestra; the variations fall true to form, thematic ornamentation and contrapuntal involvement being of a near-classic order. Finally — could Prokofiev stand it no longer? — the finale signals release and a return to strong rhythmic pulse, muscular violin writing and harmonic spice.

The concerto is not really a meditative piece, except perhaps by Prokofiev's earlier standard, but it has a keen romantic bearing, a smooth integration of line and even less bravura than the Brahms concerto. This was its visage in the extremely capable hands of 21-year-old Itzhak Perlman. His manner was firm but expressive, intense but yielding; his tone carried warmth into all registers, without harshness, and his intonation was secure even in passages of stress. Mr. Perlman wound melodic lines with a mature musician's ease, and phrased beautifully, with never a flat or exaggerated contour: such passion-with-restrait is rare in young talent.

Only during the finale, when the composer calls for some fierce sawing, did notes of coarseness creep into his playing; but it may not be unfair to state that Prokofiev knew the traits of the violin well and expected that this would happen.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra celebrated Beethoven's 196th birthday with the Leonore Overture No. 2 and the Symphony No. 4. One usually remarks about how the second Lenore is a musically lesser, dramatically greater work than No. 3, and how the Fourth Symphony would have wider recognition were it not situated between the "Eroica" and the C minor—"a Greek maiden between two Norse giants," as Schumann put it. But Friday's notable aspect concerned the orchestra's playing — exasperating when poor, exhilarating at is best.

The Leonore performance was not outstanding, but still was all right; the principal drawback was in staccatos, where the sound would ripple through the strings from high to low. By the opening movement of the Fourth Symphony things had deteriorated further; the first theme cackled through the violins like pebbles hitting a roof, giving us the urge to tap our feet or wave an imaginary baton to bring them together. "Why can't they stay with each other?" we thought angrily.

Then as the symphony progressed, the playing jelled to pinpoint accuracy, and both Scherzo and finale danced, with one brief respite, with polish and positive delight. And we loved Beethoven all the more. Discipline is not a simple task, but its rewards bring sheer happiness.

The concluding "Invitation to the Dance" of Weber, arranged by Berlioz, was the orchestra's nod to the holiday season, and was performed with elan.

Next week the orchestra is busy with recording; on Dec. 30-31 Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher," concerto for viola and small orchestra, with Burton Fine, soloist; and Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade in D major, K. 250.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the eleventh program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Itzhak Perlman was violin soloist for the Prokofiev.

Leonore overture No. 2 — Beethoven
Symphony No. 4 in B flat, Op. 60 — Beethoven
Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor — Prokofiev
Invitation to the Dance, Op. 65 — Weber-Berlioz

43

TUES. A#6 DEC. 27 THURS. A#4 DEC. 29

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
DEC 28 1966

Symphony serenade

Fine and Silverstein

By Harold Rogers

Erich Leinsdorf has been following a policy that few of his predecessors have observed. He has been choosing many of his soloists from his own orchestra. Thus Boston Symphony musicians are now enjoying a greater opportunity to shine—as Burton Fine and Joseph Silverstein shone at Symphony Hall last night.

The program heard at Symphony Hall Tuesday will be repeated at all the concerts this week. Mr. Leinsdorf opened with Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher," a concerto for viola and small orchestra. After the intermission he concluded with the first complete performance of Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade in D major to be played at these concerts. It was last heard in 1922 when Pierre Monteux conducted the first four movements only.

Mr. Fine is a refined player; his viola speaks with a warm, secure voice; his technique is accurate. Since the viola was Hindemith's instrument, it is beautifully brought into the foreground and kept free from entangling orchestration. In order to do this more effectively the composer eliminated the violins and violas from the score.

Mr. Silverstein, as nearly everybody knows, is the orchestra's concertmaster and has often appeared in solo roles under Mr. Leinsdorf's direction. He is a suave player; his eloquent tone is always uttered with phrasal poise.

Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade was composed when he was 20 and contains some of the most felicitous music ever to issue from his pen. As the program notes explain, "from the beginning to the end this grand Serenade is proof of a prodigious effort in the invention and the distribution of ideas, and for their symphonic realization. Never perhaps has any other work of Mozart been conceived by him in vaster dimensions and with a more marked character of poetic grandeur."

At the close of the Rondo, after which the soloist is no longer required, Mr. Silverstein received a salvo of bravos from his colleagues (a special form of tribute), and the audience also responded with prolonged applause. Then the four remaining movements were heard.

The entire concert was made up of pleasant music, pleasantly played. It did not offer a profound musical experience, nor perhaps should it have. It was an adroit entertainment from first to last.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
DEC 25 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
DEC 25 1966

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 27, at 8:30 o'clock

HINDEMITH ..... "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra

I. Zwischen Berg und tiefem Tal
Langsam — Mässig bewegt, mit Kraft

II. Nun laube, Lindlein, laube
Sehr ruhig — Fugato

III. Variationen "Seid ihr nicht der Schwanendreher"
Mässig schnell

(First performance in this series)

SOLOIST
BURTON FINE

INTERMISSION

MOZART ..... Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K. 250

Allegro maestoso — Allegro molto
Andante
Menuetto
Rondo
Menuetto galante
Andante
Menuetto
Adagio — Allegro assai

(First complete performance in this series)

Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fourth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

HINDEMITH ..... "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra

I. Zwischen Berg und tiefem Tal
Langsam — Mässig bewegt, mit Kraft

II. Nun laube, Lindlein, laube
Sehr ruhig — Fugato

III. Variationen "Seid ihr nicht der Schwanendreher"
Mässig schnell

(First performance in this series)

SOLOIST
BURTON FINE

INTERMISSION

MOZART ..... Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K. 250

Allegro maestoso — Allegro molto
Andante
Menuetto
Rondo
Menuetto galante
Andante
Menuetto
Adagio — Allegro assai

(First complete performance in this series)

Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Boston Orchestra to Feature Two Principal Players

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in four retular subscription concerts this week at Symphony Hall: the sixth of the Tuesday "A" series Tuesday evening at 8.30 p. m.; the fourth of the Thursday "A series Thursday at 8.30 p. m.; and the twelfth pair of weekend concerts, Friday afternoon at 2 p. m. and Saturday evening at 8.30 p. m.

To Conduct Programs

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct all the programs and he has invited two of his principal players to be soloists. The program for all four concerts will be the same.

Burton Fine, principal viola, will appear first as soloist in Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra, which was composed in 1935. Intermission will follow, after which Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will perform the violin solo in a complete performance of the Mozart Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K.250.

Performed at Tanglewood

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra are presenting both the above works for the first tim eat their Symphony Hall concerts. Each has been performed once at Tanglewood, the Hindemith concerto in 1955 and the complete Mozart Serenade in 1963. Pierre Monteux conducted a portion of the Serenade in 1922 at Symphony Hall.

Both Mr. Silverstein and Mr. Fine are well known to Symphony subscribers. Mr. Silverstein became concertmaster in 1962 after seven years as a member of the violin section, during which time he won honors in the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium Competition and the Naumburg Award. Mr. Fine became principal viola in 1964, after only one year with the orchestra in the second violin section.

Each gentleman had his principal study at the Curtis Institute; each is a member of the faculty of th e New England Conservatory; and each is married and has three children.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 28 1966

Brave Performance in Concerto Debut

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Burton Fine, an extremely good musician and player, deserves better than having to make his Boston Symphony concerto debut in something as dismal as Hindesmith's "Schwanendreher."

This work for solo viola with chamber orchestra is certainly the ugly duck of the musical swan literature (Lake, Silver, Saint-Saens-Pavlova, Seven Deadly Cygnes, etc.).

Hindemith wishes to conjure up the picture of a medieval Spielmann or minstrel who comes to entertain a jolly party by preluding and improvising according to his fancy and ability upon songs he has picked up in foreign lands.

There is no questioning Hindemith's technical ability, not to mention his lavish expenditure of midnight oil, but his dreary fancies would cast a pall on his giddiest of parties.

HARMONIC TORTURE

He puts a series of attractive German medieval songs to harmonic torture, surrounds it with academic barbed wire, and paints the whole business grey. "Schwanendreher" is the title of the last of these songs, and that is a word that may or may not mean "swan turner," a man who turns roasting swans on the spit, a highly specialized profession no longer much practised.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA: Erich Leinsdorf conducting Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher" with Burton Fine, viola, and Mozart's Haffner Serenade with Joseph Silverstein, violin, Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall.

Erich Leinsdorf threatened a performance of "Der Schwanendreher" three years ago, but when the time came, Joseph De Pasquale, then the orchestra's principal violist, came up with some disability and finally, I guess, went to join the Philadelphia Orchestra rather than play it.

There being no vacancy in Philadelphia now, Burton Fine has bravely gone ahead and given us "Schwanendreher" and will do so again Friday and Saturday.

He played it really excellently, and the accompaniment by the 20 or so players under Leinsdorf was first-rate as well. James Stagliano's horn solos came off particularly well, and the piccolo playing of James Pappoutsakis is a special pleasure as well, and a rare one.

A LAVISH HELPING

The Haffner Serenade is a lavish helping of Mozart, just a few minutes short of an hour. Lots of it is just high spirits and elegance by the yard, delightfully turned out.

But there also the surprise when Mozart takes us to special regions: the strong G minor Minuet, the grave and richly scored D minor Trio of the second Minuet, the Adagio introduction to the finals.

Most wonderful of all is the long A major Andants, proto-Schubertian at times, incredible in the prodiagality with which Mozart pours out ideas after idea, bringing out one charming variant and one ravishing sonority after another.

The second, third, and fourth movements form a quasi-concerto for violin and that was played with a nice delicacy and grace by Joseph Silverstein. I assume that Silevrstein composed the apt and inventive cadenzas in the Andante and the Rondo.

The whole performance of the Serenade was thoroughly enjoyable. The playing was less polished than it sometimes is, but it was uncommonly which is much more important. It was beautifully pacer, too, and altogether the finest Mozart I have heard from Mr. Leinsdorf.

43

TUES. A#6 DEC. 27 THURS. A#4 DEC. 29

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
DEC 28 1966

Symphony serenade

Fine and Silverstein

By Harold Rogers

Erich Leinsdorf has been following a policy that few of his predecessors have observed. He has been choosing many of his soloists from his own orchestra. Thus Boston Symphony musicians are now enjoying a greater opportunity to shine—as Burton Fine and Joseph Silverstein shone at Symphony Hall last night.

The program heard at Symphony Hall Tuesday will be repeated at all the concerts this week. Mr. Leinsdorf opened with Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher," a concerto for viola and small orchestra. After the intermission he concluded with the first complete performance of Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade in D major to be played at these concerts. It was last heard in 1922 when Pierre Monteux conducted the first four movements only.

Mr. Fine is a refined player; his viola speaks with a warm, secure voice; his technique is accurate. Since the viola was Hindemith's instrument, it is beautifully brought into the foreground and kept free from entangling orchestration. In order to do this more effectively the composer eliminated the violins and violas from the score.

Mr. Silverstein, as nearly everybody knows, is the orchestra's concertmaster and has often appeared in solo roles under Mr. Leinsdorf's direction. He is a suave player; his eloquent tone is always uttered with phrasal poise.

Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade was composed when he was 20 and contains some of the most felicitous music ever to issue from his pen. As the program notes explain, "from the beginning to the end this grand Serenade is proof of a prodigious effort in the invention and the distribution of ideas, and for their symphonic realization. Never perhaps has any other work of Mozart been conceived by him in vaster dimensions and with a more marked character of poetic grandeur."

At the close of the Rondo, after which the soloist is no longer required, Mr. Silverstein received a salvo of bravos from his colleagues (a special form of tribute), and the audience also responded with prolonged applause. Then the four remaining movements were heard.

The entire concert was made up of pleasant music, pleasantly played. It did not offer a profound musical experience, nor perhaps should it have. It was an adroit entertainment from first to last.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
DEC 25 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
DEC 25 1966

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 27, at 8:30 o'clock

HINDEMITH ..... "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra

I. Zwischen Berg und tiefem Tal
Langsam — Mässig bewegt, mit Kraft

II. Nun laube, Lindlein, laube
Sehr ruhig — Fugato

III. Variationen "Seid ihr nicht der Schwanendreher"
Mässig schnell

(First performance in this series)

SOLOIST
BURTON FINE

INTERMISSION

MOZART ..... Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K. 250

Allegro maestoso — Allegro molto
Andante
Menuetto
Rondo
Menuetto galante
Andante
Menuetto
Adagio — Allegro assai

(First complete performance in this series)

Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fourth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

HINDEMITH ..... "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra

I. Zwischen Berg und tiefem Tal
Langsam — Mässig bewegt, mit Kraft

II. Nun laube, Lindlein, laube
Sehr ruhig — Fugato

III. Variationen "Seid ihr nicht der Schwanendreher"
Mässig schnell

(First performance in this series)

SOLOIST
BURTON FINE

INTERMISSION

MOZART ..... Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K. 250

Allegro maestoso — Allegro molto
Andante
Menuetto
Rondo
Menuetto galante
Andante
Menuetto
Adagio — Allegro assai

(First complete performance in this series)

Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Boston Orchestra to Feature Two Principal Players

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in four retular subscription concerts this week at Symphony Hall: the sixth of the Tuesday "A" series Tuesday evening at 8.30 p. m.; the fourth of the Thursday "A series Thursday at 8.30 p. m.; and the twelfth pair of weekend concerts, Friday afternoon at 2 p. m. and Saturday evening at 8.30 p. m.

To Conduct Programs

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct all the programs and he has invited two of his principal players to be soloists. The program for all four concerts will be the same.

Burton Fine, principal viola, will appear first as soloist in Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra, which was composed in 1935. Intermission will follow, after which Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will perform the violin solo in a complete performance of the Mozart Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K.250.

Performed at Tanglewood

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra are presenting both the above works for the first tim eat their Symphony Hall concerts. Each has been performed once at Tanglewood, the Hindemith concerto in 1955 and the complete Mozart Serenade in 1963. Pierre Monteux conducted a portion of the Serenade in 1922 at Symphony Hall.

Both Mr. Silverstein and Mr. Fine are well known to Symphony subscribers. Mr. Silverstein became concertmaster in 1962 after seven years as a member of the violin section, during which time he won honors in the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium Competition and the Naumburg Award. Mr. Fine became principal viola in 1964, after only one year with the orchestra in the second violin section.

Each gentleman had his principal study at the Curtis Institute; each is a member of the faculty of th e New England Conservatory; and each is married and has three children.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 28 1966

Brave Performance in Concerto Debut

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Burton Fine, an extremely good musician and player, deserves better than having to make his Boston Symphony concerto debut in something as dismal as Hindesmith's "Schwanendreher."

This work for solo viola with chamber orchestra is certainly the ugly duck of the musical swan literature (Lake, Silver, Saint-Saens-Pavlova, Seven Deadly Cygnes, etc.).

Hindemith wishes to conjure up the picture of a medieval Spielmann or minstrel who comes to entertain a jolly party by preluding and improvising according to his fancy and ability upon songs he has picked up in foreign lands.

There is no questioning Hindemith's technical ability, not to mention his lavish expenditure of midnight oil, but his dreary fancies would cast a pall on his giddiest of parties.

HARMONIC TORTURE

He puts a series of attractive German medieval songs to harmonic torture, surrounds it with academic barbed wire, and paints the whole business grey. "Schwanendreher" is the title of the last of these songs, and that is a word that may or may not mean "swan turner," a man who turns roasting swans on the spit, a highly specialized profession no longer much practised.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Erich Leinsdorf conducting Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher" with Burton Fine, viola, and Mozart's Haffner Serenade with Joseph Silverstein, violin, Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall.

Erich Leinsdorf threatened a performance of "Der Schwanendreher" three years ago, but when the time came, Joseph De Pasquale, then the orchestra's principal violist, came up with some disability and finally, I guess, went to join the Philadelphia Orchestra rather than play it.

There being no vacancy in Philadelphia now, Burton Fine has bravely gone ahead and given us "Schwanendreher" and will do so again Friday and Saturday.

He played it really excellently, and the accompaniment by the 20 or so players under Leinsdorf was first-rate as well. James Stagliano's horn solos came off particularly well, and the piccolo playing of James Pappoutsakis is a special pleasure as well, and a rare one.

A LAVISH HELPING

The Haffner Serenade is a lavish helping of Mozart, just a few minutes short of an hour. Lots of it is just high spirits and elegance by the yard, delightfully turned out.

But there also the surprise when Mozart takes us to special regions: the strong G minor Minuet, the grave and richly scored D minor Trio of the second Minuet, the Adagio introduction to the finals.

Most wonderful of all is the long A major Andants, proto-Schubertian at times, incredible in the prodiagality with which Mozart pours out idea after idea, bringing out one charming variant and one ravishing sonority after another.

The second, third, and fourth movements form a quasi-concerto for violin and that was played with a nice delicacy and grace by Joseph Silverstein. I assume that Silevrstein composed the apt and inventive cadenzas in the Andante and the Rondo.

The whole performance of the Serenade was thoroughly enjoyable. The playing was less polished than it sometimes is, but it was uncommonly which is much more important. It was beautifully pacer, too, and altogether the finest Mozart I have heard from Mr. Leinsdorf.

43

TUES. A#6 DEC. 27 THURS. A#4 DEC. 29

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
DEC 28 1966

Symphony serenade

Fine and Silverstein

By Harold Rogers

Erich Leinsdorf has been following a policy that few of his predecessors have observed. He has been choosing many of his soloists from his own orchestra. Thus Boston Symphony musicians are now enjoying a greater opportunity to shine—as Burton Fine and Joseph Silverstein shone at Symphony Hall last night.

The program heard at Symphony Hall Tuesday will be repeated at all the concerts this week. Mr. Leinsdorf opened with Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher," a concerto for viola and small orchestra. After the intermission he concluded with the first complete performance of Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade in D major to be played at these concerts. It was last heard in 1922 when Pierre Monteux conducted the first four movements only.

Mr. Fine is a refined player; his viola speaks with a warm, secure voice; his technique is accurate. Since the viola was Hindemith's instrument, it is beautifully brought into the foreground and kept free from entangling orchestration. In order to do this more effectively the composer eliminated the violins and violas from the score.

Mr. Silverstein, as nearly everybody knows, is the orchestra's concertmaster and has often appeared in solo roles under Mr. Leinsdorf's direction. He is a suave player; his eloquent tone is always uttered with phrasal poise.

Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade was composed when he was 20 and contains some of the most felicitous music ever to issue from his pen. As the program notes explain, "from the beginning to the end this grand Serenade is proof of a prodigious effort in the invention and the distribution of ideas, and for their symphonic realization. Never perhaps has any other work of Mozart been conceived by him in vaster dimensions and with a more marked character of poetic grandeur."

At the close of the Rondo, after which the soloist is no longer required, Mr. Silverstein received a salvo of bravos from his colleagues (a special form of tribute), and the audience also responded with prolonged applause. Then the four remaining movements were heard.

The entire concert was made up of pleasant music, pleasantly played. It did not offer a profound musical experience, nor perhaps should it have. It was an adroit entertainment from first to last.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
DEC 25 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
DEC 25 1966

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 27, at 8:30 o'clock

HINDEMITH ..... "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra

I. Zwischen Berg und tiefem Tal
Langsam — Mässig bewegt, mit Kraft

II. Nun laube, Lindlein, laube
Sehr ruhig — Fugato

III. Variationen "Seid ihr nicht der Schwanendreher"
Mässig schnell

(First performance in this series)

SOLOIST
BURTON FINE

INTERMISSION

MOZART ..... Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K. 250

Allegro maestoso — Allegro molto
Andante
Menuetto
Rondo
Menuetto galante
Andante
Menuetto
Adagio — Allegro assai

(First complete performance in this series)

Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fourth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 29, at 8:30 o'clock

HINDEMITH ..... "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra

I. Zwischen Berg und tiefem Tal
Langsam — Mässig bewegt, mit Kraft

II. Nun laube, Lindlein, laube
Sehr ruhig — Fugato

III. Variationen "Seid ihr nicht der Schwanendreher"
Mässig schnell

(First performance in this series)

SOLOIST
BURTON FINE

INTERMISSION

MOZART ..... Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K. 250

Allegro maestoso — Allegro molto
Andante
Menuetto
Rondo
Menuetto galante
Andante
Menuetto
Adagio — Allegro assai

(First complete performance in this series)

Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Boston Orchestra to Feature Two Principal Players

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in four retular subscription concerts this week at Symphony Hall: the sixth of the Tuesday "A" series Tuesday evening at 8.30 p. m.; the fourth of the Thursday "A series Thursday at 8.30 p. m.; and the twelfth pair of weekend concerts, Friday afternoon at 2 p. m. and Saturday evening at 8.30 p. m.

To Conduct Programs

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct all the programs and he has invited two of his principal players to be soloists. The program for all four concerts will be the same.

Burton Fine, principal viola, will appear first as soloist in Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra, which was composed in 1935. Intermission will follow, after which Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will perform the violin solo in a complete performance of the Mozart Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K.250.

Performed at Tanglewood

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra are presenting both the above works for the first tim eat their Symphony Hall concerts. Each has been performed once at Tanglewood, the Hindemith concerto in 1955 and the complete Mozart Serenade in 1963. Pierre Monteux conducted a portion of the Serenade in 1922 at Symphony Hall.

Both Mr. Silverstein and Mr. Fine are well known to Symphony subscribers. Mr. Silverstein became concertmaster in 1962 after seven years as a member of the violin section, during which time he won honors in the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium Competition and the Naumburg Award. Mr. Fine became principal viola in 1964, after only one year with the orchestra in the second violin section.

Each gentleman had his principal study at the Curtis Institute; each is a member of the faculty of th e New England Conservatory; and each is married and has three children.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 28 1966

Brave Performance in Concerto Debut

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Burton Fine, an extremely good musician and player, deserves better than having to make his Boston Symphony concerto debut in something as dismal as Hindesmith's "Schwanendreher."

This work for solo viola with chamber orchestra is certainly the ugly duck of the musical swan literature (Lake, Silver, Saint-Saens-Pavlova, Seven Deadly Cygnes, etc.).

Hindemith wishes to conjure up the picture of a medieval Spielmann or minstrel who comes to entertain a jolly party by preluding and improvising according to his fancy and ability upon songs he has picked up in foreign lands.

There is no questioning Hindemith's technical ability, not to mention his lavish expenditure of midnight oil, but his dreary fancies would cast a pall on his giddiest of parties.

HARMONIC TORTURE

He puts a series of attractive German medieval songs to harmonic torture, surrounds it with academic barbed wire, and paints the whole business grey. "Schwanendreher" is the title of the last of these songs, and that is a word that may or may not mean "swan turner," a man who turns roasting swans on the spit, a highly specialized profession no longer much practised.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Erich Leinsdorf conducting Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher" with Burton Fine, viola, and Mozart's Haffner Serenade with Joseph Silverstein, violin, Tuesday evening in Symphony Hall.

Erich Leinsdorf threatened a performance of "Der Schwanendreher" three years ago, but when the time came, Joseph De Pasquale, then the orchestra's principal violist, came up with some disability and finally, I guess, went to join the Philadelphia Orchestra rather than play it.

There being no vacancy in Philadelphia now, Burton Fine has bravely gone ahead and given us "Schwanendreher" and will do so again Friday and Saturday.

He played it really excellently, and the accompaniment by the 20 or so players under Leinsdorf was first-rate as well. James Stagliano's horn solos came off particularly well, and the piccolo playing of James Pappoutsakis is a special pleasure as well, and a rare one.

A LAVISH HELPING

The Haffner Serenade is a lavish helping of Mozart, just a few minutes short of an hour. Lots of it is just high spirits and elegance by the yard, delightfully turned out.

But there also the surprise when Mozart takes us to special regions: the strong G minor Minuet, the grave and richly scored D minor Trio of the second Minuet, the Adagio introduction to the finals.

Most wonderful of all is the long A major Andants, proto-Schubertian at times, incredible in the prodiagality with which Mozart pours out idea after idea, bringing out one charming variant and one ravishing sonority after another.

The second, third, and fourth movements form a quasi-concerto for violin and that was played with a nice delicacy and grace by Joseph Silverstein. I assume that Silevrstein composed the apt and inventive cadenzas in the Andante and the Rondo.

The whole performance of the Serenade was thoroughly enjoyable. The playing was less polished than it sometimes is, but it was uncommonly which is much more important. It was beautifully pacer, too, and altogether the finest Mozart I have heard from Mr. Leinsdorf.

FRI + SAT #12 DEC. 30 + 31

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
DEC 28 1966

BSO Presents Mozart's and Hindemith's Music

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Only two masterworks graced last night's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, somewhat attenuated in in size because of the holiday nature of the program. It was after the interval, when Enrich Leinsdorf conducted a vigorous and tidy performance of Mozart's thoroughly delightful "Haffner" serenade (KV-250, in D), with Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as the able solo violinist.

In Mozart's day, this was dinner music, composed for a wedding banquet, and included music to which the guests were to dance. It was an era of gracious living which elicited these engaging airs; no frugs, mashed potatoes and hully-gullies for those 18the century bourgeoisie.

FIDDLER'S HOLIDAY

The scoring gives the concertmaster an opportunity to display his prowess and in the fourth movement there is a rondo for violinist and orchestra. Silverstein was thoroughly equal to the virtuosity demanded by the composer, himself a virtuoso. Could it be that Mozart himself was the top-flight fiddler who played at the world premiere in Salzburg for Elise Haffner's wedding, 18 days after promulgation of the Declaration of Independence?

It was enchanting music, making one listener recall Gerald W. Johnson's lines in "A Little Night Music" (1937): "A man who has tried to play Mozart and failed, through that vain effort comes into position better to understand the man who tried to paint the Sistine Madonna and did." Dr. Leinsdorf last night showed the same relationship to the Swan of Salzburg as Giulio Romano bore to Raphael. He was literal, precise and superb.

HINDEMITH'S "SCHWANENDREHER"

Curtain-raiser was the late, great Paul Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher", actually a concerto for viola and small orchestra, composed by the former Yale music faculty head in 1935. Soloist was Burton Fine, the BSO's principal violist, who evoked darkling tones from the contralto of the fiddle family reminiscent of those enunciated by Tallulah Bankhead in "Dark Victory." Comparing this Fine performance with that recorded by the composer himself with Arthur Fiedler's Sinfonietta, one must concede pride of place to last night's performer.

TITLE A MISNOMER

Actually, "Der Schwanendreher" is a mixed bag of violistic tricks, exploiting this unwieldy, cumbersome instrument to its utmost capacities. Even the title is a misnomer, for the composer regarded it to mean a kitchen mechanic who roasted a spitchcocked swan on a spit, though the inevitable German professor said the word really meant, in slang, one who twirled the crank of a hurdy-gurdy.

However, the rotisserie bit is the more appetizing; one wishes Hindemith's music were as Hindemithical. Unfortunately, "Der Schwanendreher" is too much technique, too little music. If winter comes, can the next swanboat be far behind?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
DEC 28 1966

Leinsdorf Conducts Hindemith, Mozart

By McLAREN HARRIS

Gebrauchsmusik by Hindemith and Mozart marks this week's Boston Symphony programs which, in an infrequent switcheroo, Erich Leinsdorf conducted for the first time Tuesday night at Symphony Hall.

Of course, Hindemith considered all of his music "practical" —music to be played, not simply analyzed and admired in a mute state—and thought of Mozart as one of his closest musical antecedents; both were essentially absolutists who believed in music for its own sake, both worked in a largely contrapuntal idiom and for Mozart, too, unplayed music would have been entirely without purpose.

But thereafter the parallels diminish, particularly in the area of original, creative genius, and this distinction was altogether apparent in the two works on the Symphony program, Hindemith's "Der Sch-wanendreher," a viola concerto with a thematic basis of German folksongs, and Mozart's famous "Haffner" Serenade in D major.

Mozart's task in the "Haffner" was to reconcile material of a rather frothy nature, suitablee for the wedding feast of a burgomaster's daughter, with virtually full-blown symphonic forms which characterize the first and final Allegros; if they did not emerge as among his most sublime creations, they still exhibit polish and charm. The smaller-scope inner movements display an imagination which belies the Serenade's casual purpose—the Andantes delivering a melodic lushness, the minuets pure invention and the Rondo a flashing virtuosity for the solo violin. Despite its total length of around 55 minutes, the Serenade never loses its gait, its newness, its interest.

FOLKSONG USAGE

Ordinarily one would not compare an eight-movement serenade with a three movement concerto, but Hindemith asked for it. Though Tuesday brought its first performance by the Symphony in Boston, "Der Schwanendreher" is reputed to be a popular work, mostly because of its folksong usage. As a concerto it has some good effects; violins and violas are omitted from the orchestra to heighten the separation between the ensemble and the solo viola, which supplies original material, paraphrases the folk tunes and occasionally takes them as they come.

In the seconud movement the viola sings a tender, plaintive lyricism; elsewhere it serves up much virtuosic appeal — unfortunately without relation to the remainder of the music. Whereas Mozart integrated the Serenade's violin lines into the mood and motion of the work, Hindemith sets forth a lot of useless sawing in the variation movement, technically applicable but esthetically meaningless; the alternations of theme between viola and ensemble in the opening movement are laid in a contrapuntally so-so, harmonically dull context.

Erich Leinsdorf, I have always said, is a craftsman with linear structures and classic phraseology. The Mozart was constantly pleasuresome and Hindemith's concerto was gratifying in its inspired moments, straightforwardly dealt during the others. The evening's soloists, too, contributed praiseworthy efforts. Fortunately, Burton Fine was able to make Hindemith's viola lines viable in the first movement and rhapsodic delight in the second, though there was little to be accomplished besides technical ends in the third, which he performed with elan.

Joseph Silverstein furnished tonal sweetness, intonational accuracy and excellent digital control for a full dose of Mozartian splendor in the Serenade's violin solos.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
DEC 25 1966

This Week at Symphony

The Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, will give four concerts this week. Hindemith's "Der Schwandendreher," a concerto for viola and orchestra, and Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade will be heard Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. and Friday afternoon at 2.

Soloists will be Burton Fine, the orchestra's principal violist, and concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, who will do the principal violin part in the Mozart.

Leinsdorf and the orchestra are presenting both works for the first time at their Symphony Hall concerts. Each has been performed once at Tanglewood, the Hindemith concerto in 1955 and the complete Mozart Serenade in 1963. Pierre Monteux conducted a portion of the Serenade in 1922 at Symphony Hall.

Silverstein became concertmaster in 1962 after seven years as a member of the violin section, during which time he won honors in the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium Competition and the Naumburg Award. Fine became principal viola in 1964, after only one year with the orchestra in the second violin section. Each player studied at Philadelphia's Curtis Institute; each is a member of the faculty of the New England Conservatory, and each is married and has three children.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Twelfth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 30, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 31, at 8:30 o'clock

HINDEMITH ..... "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra

I. Zwischen Berg und tiefem Tal
Langsam — Mässig bewegt, mit Kraft

II. Nun laube, Lindlein, laube
Sehr ruhig — Fugato

III. Variationen "Seid ihr nicht der Schwanendreher"
Mässig schnell

(First performance at these concerts)

SOLOIST
BURTON FINE

INTERMISSION

MOZART ..... Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K. 250

Allegro maestoso — Allegro molto
Andante
Menuetto
Rondo
Menuetto galante
Andante
Menuetto
Adagio — Allegro assai

(First complete performance at these concerts)

Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[713]

FRI + SAT #12 DEC. 30 + 31

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
DEC 28 1966

BSO Presents Mozart's and Hindemith's Music

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Only two masterworks graced last night's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, somewhat attenuated in in size because of the holiday nature of the program. It was after the interval, when Enrich Leinsdorf conducted a vigorous and tidy performance of Mozart's thoroughly delightful "Haffner" serenade (KV-250, in D), with Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as the able solo violinist.

In Mozart's day, this was dinner music, composed for a wedding banquet, and included music to which the guests were to dance. It was an era of gracious living which elicited these engaging airs; no frugs, mashed potatoes and hully-gullies for those 18the century bourgeoisie.

FIDDLER'S HOLIDAY

The scoring gives the concertmaster an opportunity to display his prowess and in the fourth movement there is a rondo for violinist and orchestra. Silverstein was thoroughly equal to the virtuosity demanded by the composer, himself a virtuoso. Could it be that Mozart himself was the top-flight fiddler who played at the world premiere in Salzburg for Elise Haffner's wedding, 18 days after promulgation of the Declaration of Independence?

It was enchanting music, making one listener recall Gerald W. Johnson's lines in "A Little Night Music" (1937): "A man who has tried to play Mozart and failed, through that vain effort comes into position better to understand the man who tried to paint the Sistine Madonna and did." Dr. Leinsdorf last night showed the same relationship to the Swan of Salzburg as Giulio Romano bore to Raphael. He was literal, precise and superb.

HINDEMITH'S "SCHWANENDREHER"

Curtain-raiser was the late, great Paul Hindemith's "Der Schwanendreher", actually a concerto for viola and small orchestra, composed by the former Yale music faculty head in 1935. Soloist was Burton Fine, the BSO's principal violist, who evoked darkling tones from the contralto of the fiddle family reminiscent of those enunciated by Tallulah Bankhead in "Dark Victory." Comparing this Fine performance with that recorded by the composer himself with Arthur Fiedler's Sinfonietta, one must concede pride of place to last night's performer.

TITLE A MISNOMER

Actually, "Der Schwanendreher" is a mixed bag of violistic tricks, exploiting this unwieldy, cumbersome instrument to its utmost capacities. Even the title is a misnomer, for the composer regarded it to mean a kitchen mechanic who roasted a spitchcocked swan on a spit, though the inevitable German professor said the word really meant, in slang, one who twirled the crank of a hurdy-gurdy.

However, the rotisserie bit is the more appetizing; one wishes Hindemith's music were as Hindemithical. Unfortunately, "Der Schwanendreher is too much technique, too little music. If winter comes, can the next swanboat be far behind?

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
DEC 28 1966

Leinsdorf Conducts Hindemith, Mozart

By McLAREN HARRIS

Gebrauchsmusik by Hindemith and Mozart marks this week's Boston Symphony programs which, in an infrequent switcheroo, Erich Leinsdorf conducted for the first time Tuesday night at Symphony Hall.

Of course, Hindemith considered all of his music "practical" —music to be played, not simply analyzed and admired in a mute state—and thought of Mozart as one of his closest musical antecedents; both were essentially absolutists who believed in music for its own sake, both worked in a largely contrapuntal idiom and for Mozart, too, unplayed music would have been entirely without purpose.

But thereafter the parallels diminish, particularly in the area of original, creative genius, and this distinction was altogether apparent in the two works on the Symphony program, Hindemith's "Der Sch-wanendreher," a viola concerto with a thematic basis of German folksongs, and Mozart's famous "Haffner" Serenade in D major.

Mozart's task in the "Haffner" was to reconcile material of a rather frothy nature, suitablee for the wedding feast of a burgomaster's daughter, with virtually full-blown symphonic forms which characterize the first and final Allegros; if they did not emerge as among his most sublime creations, they still exhibit polish and charm. The smaller-scope inner movements display an imagination which belies the Serenade's casual purpose—the Andantes delivering a melodic lushness, the minuets pure invention and the Rondo a flashing virtuosity for the solo violin. Despite its total length of around 55 minutes, the Serenade never loses its gait, its newness, its interest.

FOLKSONG USAGE

Ordinarily one would not compare an eight-movement serenade with a three movement concerto, but Hindemith asked for it. Though Tuesday brought its first performance by the Symphony in Boston, "Der Schwanendreher" is reputed to be a popular work, mostly because of its folksong usage. As a concerto it has some good effects; violins and violas are omitted from the orchestra to heighten the separation between the ensemble and the solo viola, which supplies original material, paraphrases the folk tunes and occasionally takes them as they come.

In the seconud movement the viola sings a tender, plaintive lyricism; elsewhere it serves up much virtuosic appeal — unfortunately without relation to the remainder of the music. Whereas Mozart integrated the Serenade's violin lines into the mood and motion of the work, Hindemith sets forth a lot of useless sawing in the variation movement, technically applicable but esthetically meaningless; the alternations of theme between viola and ensemble in the opening movement are laid in a contrapuntally so-so, harmonically dull context.

Erich Leinsdorf, I have always said, is a craftsman with linear structures and classic phraseology. The Mozart was constantly pleasuresome and Hindemith's concerto was gratifying in its inspired moments, straightforwardly dealt during the others. The evening's soloists, too, contributed praiseworthy efforts. Fortunately, Burton Fine was able to make Hindemith's viola lines viable in the first movement and rhapsodic delight in the second, though there was little to be accomplished besides technical ends in the third, which he performed with elan.

Joseph Silverstein furnished tonal sweetness, intonational accuracy and excellent digital control for a full dose of Mozartian splendor in the Serenade's violin solos.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
DEC 2 3 1966

This Week at Symphony

The Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, will give four concerts this week. Hindemith's "Der Schwandendreher," a concerto for viola and orchestra, and Mozart's "Haffner" Serenade will be heard Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. and Friday afternoon at 2.

Soloists will be Burton Fine, the orchestra's principal violist, and concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, who will do the principal violin part in the Mozart.

Leinsdorf and the orchestra are presenting both works for the first time at their Symphony Hall concerts. Each has been performed once at Tanglewood, the Hindemith concerto in 1955 and the complete Mozart Serenade in 1963. Pierre Monteux conducted a portion of the Serenade in 1922 at Symphony Hall.

Silverstein became concertmaster in 1962 after seven years as a member of the violin section, during which time he won honors in the Queen Elisabeth of Belgium Competition and the Naumburg Award. Fine became principal viola in 1964, after only one year with the orchestra in the second violin section. Each player studied at Philadelphia's Curtis Institute; each is a member of the faculty of the New England Conservatory, and each is married and has three children.

Twelfth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 30, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 31, at 8:30 o'clock

HINDEMITH ..... "Der Schwanendreher," Concerto for Viola and Small Orchestra

I. Zwischen Berg und tiefem Tal
Langsam — Mässig bewegt, mit Kraft

II. Nun laube, Lindlein, laube
Sehr ruhig — Fugato

III. Variationen "Seid ihr nicht der Schwanendreher"
Mässig schnell

(First performance at these concerts)

SOLOIST
BURTON FINE

INTERMISSION

MOZART ..... Serenade in D major ("Haffner"), K. 250

Allegro maestoso — Allegro molto
Andante
Menuetto
Rondo
Menuetto galante
Andante
Menuetto
Adagio — Allegro assai

(First complete performance at these concerts)

Violin Solo: JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

45

TUES- CAMBRIDGE #4 JAN 3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
JAN 1 1967

An All-Beethoven Concert Tuesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will be heard in three Symphony Hall concerts this week: the fourth of the "Cambridge" series Tuesday evening at 8:30, and the thirteenth pair of weekend concerts, Friday afternoon at 2:00 and Saturday evening at 8:30.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct an all-Beethoven program for the Tuesday evening concert, which will be televised by WGBH-TV, Channel 2 and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-FM. The program will open with Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62, and continue with the Symphony No. 4, Op. 60. The concert will conclude with the Symphony No. 7, Op. 92.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
JAN 1 1967

Concert

TUESDAY

SYMPHONY HALL. — Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leindorf conducting. All-Beethoven program: "Coriolan" overture, Op. 62; Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, Op. 60; Symphony No. 7 in A major, Op. 92. 8:30 p.m.

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 3, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92

I. Poco sostenuto; Vivace
II. Allegretto
III. Presto; Assai meno presto; Tempo primo
IV. Allegro con brio

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

45

TUES- CAMBRIDGE #4 JAN 3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
JAN 1 1967

An All-Beethoven Concert Tuesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will be heard in three Symphony Hall concerts this week: the fourth of the "Cambridge" series Tuesday evening at 8:30, and the thirteenth pair of weekend concerts, Friday afternoon at 2:00 and Saturday evening at 8:30.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct an all-Beethoven program for the Tuesday evening concert, which will be televised by WGBH-TV, Channel 2 and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-FM. The program will open with Beethoven's Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62, and continue with the Symphony No. 4, Op. 60. The concert will conclude with the Symphony No. 7, Op. 92.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
JAN 1 1967

Concert

TUESDAY

SYMPHONY HALL — Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leindorf conducting. All-Beethoven program: "Coriolan" overture, Op. 62; Symphony No. 4 in B flat major, Op. 60; Symphony No. 7 in A major, Op. 92. 8:30 p.m.

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 3, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Overture to "Coriolan," Op. 62

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 7, in A major, Op. 92

I. Poco sostenuto; Vivace
II. Allegretto
III. Presto; Assai meno presto; Tempo primo
IV. Allegro con brio

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JAN 3 1967

FRI. + SAT. # 13 JAN. 13 + 14

Pianist to Play Here In World Premiere

The ARTS

By MARGO MILLER
Globe Critic

The pianist Jacob Lateiner is in Boston to fulfill history, to make it, and to find out something about it. The first two items concern the world premiere of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto at the Boston Symphony's Friday afternoon concert.

"I commissioned the Carter through a Ford Foundation project. That project is of quite historical interest. It was the first time something was done for the performer.

"Foundations had done a lot for composers. Ford picked 10 of us to commission works and 10 orchestras to have the premieres of these concertos. Then 20 other orchestras were to have the second and third performances. This was to take place in the seasons, 1960-62."

★

Lateiner approached Carter in the Spring of 1959. The premiere had been assigned to the Denver Symphony and the "encores" to Indianapolis and Pittsburgh.

"I knew only Carter's First Quartet then and his Variations for Orchestra. I began receiving parts of the Piano Concerto last March. By that time the Ford project had gone out of the news." Lateiner thinks the wait well worth it, for him, and for Leon Fleisher to whom Harvard's Leon Kirchner finally delivered his Piano Concerto.

Lateiner described the Carter Concerto as "very thirsty work." He had come to the interview from a Saturday morning rehearsal and his exertions required two bottles of soda water.

"The Carter goes back to the beginning of the concerto idea. The idea of a solo instrument performing with orchestra grew out of small ensemble and orchestra. The small ensemble or concertino was a buffer between the solo instrument and bigger orchestra. The Carter is very difficult. I've been working at nothing else since October."

★

Jacob Lateiner was born in Havana to Polish parents, both accomplished amateur musicians. When he was 12, he and his younger brother, a violinist who now concertizes in Europe, got scholarships to Philadelphia's Curtis Institute. At the 1947 Berkshire Festival, Lateiner, 19, played Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto at Koussevitzky's invitation.

"The soloist," says Lateiner, "should be the recreator of music. You must take the printed page and make it a first performance. Does it make any difference that I don't play Beethoven's piano? (I have played on Schubert's piano.)

"No, you can't reproduce those concert rooms, you don't wear the same clothes. Sonorities will be different. The music, organically, doesn't change. The 'Appassionata,' how many times have I heard it? Five thousand million? Beethoven wrote all over the score, very, very pianissimo, very, very legato. First bar, so quiet, in the tonic, F minor. Second bar, in the dominant.

"What is going to happen? Fifth bar. My god, gooseflesh, to G-flat major. You should feel on the back of your neck, the audience should feel it."

PIANIST Jacob Lateiner goes over the Elliott Carter Piano Concerto with Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf in preparation for the world premiere Friday in Symphony Hall.

For the intentions of the composer, Lateiner goes back to the original manuscript, and barring that, to the first editions. He collects Beethoven, Mozart and Schubert, and Schoenberg, among the moderns. "I met my wife that way. I was pretty obnoxious. She took the hint about getting me something of Schoenberg. Christmas Day she gave me a package and inside all the tissue paper was an envelope. From Dr. Rosenthal, for whom she worked in Berkeley, was a photostat of Schoenberg's jotting down of his first idea for 'Moses and Aron.'"

Lateiner missed out on a collection of Webern manuscripts. His interest in them brought them to the attention of Hans Moldenhauer, then researching a book on Webern's death by a sniper. But a unique collection of Mozart arias came accidentally.

Visiting a rare music dealer in New Haven, Lateiner leaved through a bound volume and "something registered in my garbage can mind. Popular arias, you know, were published immediately, like our show tunes today. There in this one book were five arias from 'Don Giovanni,' about 21 from 'The Magic Flute' and 'La Clemenza di Tito.'"

★

The Lateiners' visit to Boston is being enlivened by another historical inquiry. "I have with me a piano-vocal edition of the 'St. Matthew Passion' published by Ditson, with this on the title page: 'I. S. Gardner, 1894.' Then in the same hand, 'The Rehearsal was conducted Monday evening, March 25th, 1918, by' and in another hand, 'Dr. Karl Muck (now in jail).'"

Muck, the Boston Symphony conductor, was arrested Mar. 26 as an enemy (German) alien. The "I. S. Gardner" preceeding Muck's autograph, Lateiner suggests, is Isabella Stewart Gardner, a great friend of the conductor. Lateiner is seeking samples of Mrs. Gardner's handwriting. The Muck signature is apparently genuine and its parathentical remark so striking that Lateiner says he must find out everything about the circumstances.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Thirteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 6, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 7, at 8:30 o'clock

WAGNER ..... Overture to "Tannhäuser"

CARTER ..... Piano Concerto

I. Fantastico
II. Molto giusto

(First performance)

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 9, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95

I. Adagio; Allegro molto
II. Largo
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace
IV. Allegro con fuoco

SOLOIST
JACOB LATEINER
Mr. LATEINER plays the Steinway Piano

Today's performance of the Piano Concerto by Elliott Carter, a commission by Jacob Lateiner through the Ford Foundation, is being recorded by RCA Victor, with the joint subsidy of the Martha Baird Rockefeller Fund for Music, the Steinway Foundation, and the National Foundation for the Arts and Humanities. It will be most helpful if the audience will be as quiet as possible during the performance.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[777]

At Symphony Hall: A Masterpiece

"A most original and powerful work," says Globe music critic Michael Steinberg of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto, which had its world premiere Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf.

"The Concerto," Steinberg says, "establishes the most dramatic confrontation of solo and orchestra since Beethoven."

The Boston Globe — Saturday, January 7, 1967

46

Carter's Concerto In Dramatic Debut

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Erich Leinsdorf conducting: Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" Overture, the world premiere of the Piano Concerto by Elliott Carter, with Jacob Lateiner, soloist, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 in E minor, "From the New World." Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Elliott Carter's new Piano Concerto is the most original and powerful work by an American composer. I know of nothing of comparable quality and strength to have come out of Europe since the war.

Its strength is in its conservatism. Carter is conservative in that he believes in a work of art as a responsible statement, a unique articulation of a personal vision. He is not a toy manufacturer, and he is not a cynical player of games with listeners and performers.

He believes, too, that the validity of a work of art is in what it says. His musical ideas are as complex as any being imagined today, but their intricacies exist in the service of an emotional and intellectual activity that reach to the very roots of our lives, what we care about, and live by.

VERY DRAMATIC

Carter's Concerto establishes the most dramatic confrontation of solo and orchestra since Beethoven. He has moved far from the Romantic concept of the soloist-hero cheered on by the crowd. Rather, the composer posits a conflict "between an individual of many changing moods and thoughts, and an orchestra treated more or less monolithically — massed effects pitted against Protean figures and expressions" (Carter's own words).

There are two movements. The first is fantastic in character. The dialogue moves rapidly, and ends at a climax when the orchestra block seems almost to have crushed the solo.

ELLIOTT CARTER
. . . complex ideas

A DIFFERENT WORLD

But as in Carter's first String Quartet, the space between movements is not really a break at all. The second movement begins just where the first left off, but it moves into quite a different world of rhetoric.

The orchestral part becomes a complex fabric of regular, but mutually contrasted beats against which the rhythmic flexibility of the solo is set off.

And there descends over the music a series of blankets of string tone, vastly thick chords — beyond 60 pitches each sometimes — quietly sustained in sinister contrast to the piano's increasingly urgent and impassioned utterance.

Opposition breeds independence. The solo becomes more autonomous and free, and the concerto concludes in the tranquility of a quiet and unopposed statement by the piano alone.

The originality of Carter's work is in its language, one fresh and individual in every dimension—not a hybrid of a traditional structure with a veneer or a graft of modernism. The harmonic vocabulary is uncommonly rich because Carter characterizes solo and orchestra by assigning to each its own repertory of triads.

Moreover, Carter's music is difficult to hear because his boldest inventions have been those concerned with treatment of speed and rhythm, the former an element ignored in most music as building material, the latter the very area where listeners and performers are most inexperienced and ill-trained.

The texture of Carter's Piano Concerto is fascinating. Carter has set a Concertino of seven players (flute, English horn, bass clarinet, and one each of strings) to function as mediator between solo and orchestra.

The Concertino is a channel through which ideas are communicated from solo to orchestra, it share the vocabulary of both, and in the series of cadenzas for the wind soloists in the second movement, which Carter has likened to the speeches of Job's comforters, it has a vital role in the human-musical drama. The actual piano writing, too, is extraordinary for the fantasy and ever-growing variety of the figurations.

This was the first Carter premier since the Double Concerto of 1961. To find for his original vision an equally original way of articulating it, and to get it all down to the actual finger details, as it were, is an immense labor.

Not the least impressive achievement of Carter's is that as well as having written a beautiful and expressive work, he has written a new one.

ADMIRABLE SOLOIST

Jacob Lateiner, who commissioned the Concerto through the Ford Foundation, was an admirable soloist. His feeling for polyphony is especially strong, and he had mastered the multi-textured layout of his part so that it sounded at times like the simultaneous performance of two players.

Erich Leinsdorf's work with the orchestra was alert and careful, and special praise goes to the members of the Concertino, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Laurence Thorstenberg, Felix Viscuglia, Joseph Silverstein, Burton Fine, Jules Eskin, and Henry Freeman.

Subsequent performances, some of them at least, will be more assured and will benefit from more transparency and more varied dynamics. But for a piece that is most assuredly an example of the sort of music not meant for first performances, this premiere went well, and the second movement was very clearly in focus and came across with immense impact.

A local note, finally: this incredibly taxing performance was a most important thing for the Boston Symphony to undertake. It would be good to have this begin a renascence of the tradition that the Symphony Hall is where the important new orchestral works begin their performance histories.

Our special gratitude goes to Mr. Leinsdorf and to the Boston Symphony for their share in revealing a moving and exciting masterpiece.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JAN 3 1967

FRI. + SAT. #13 JAN. 13 + 14

Pianist to Play Here In World Premiere

The ARTS

By MARGO MILLER
Globe Critic

The pianist Jacob Lateiner is in Boston to fulfill history, to make it, and to find out something about it. The first two items concern the world premiere of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto at the Boston Symphony's Friday afternoon concert.

"I commissioned the Carter through a Ford Foundation project. That project is of quite historical interest. It was the first time something was done for the performer.

"Foundations had done a lot for composers. Ford picked 10 of us to commission works and 10 orchestras to have the premieres of these concertos. Then 20 other orchestras were to have the second and third performances. This was to take place in the seasons, 1960-62."

★

Lateiner approached Carter in the Spring of 1959. The premiere had been assigned to the Denver Symphony and the "encores" to Indianapolis and Pittsburgh.

"I knew only Carter's First Quartet then and his Variations for Orchestra. I began receiving parts of the Piano Concerto last March. By that time the Ford project had gone out of the news." Lateiner thinks the wait well worth it, for him, and for Leon Fleisher to whom Harvard's Leon Kirchner finally delivered his Piano Concerto.

Lateiner described the Carter Concerto as "very thirsty work." He had come to the interview from a Saturday morning rehearsal and his exertions required two bottles of soda water.

"The Carter goes back to the beginning of the concerto idea. The idea of a solo instrument performing with orchestra grew out of small ensemble and orchestra. The small ensemble or concertino was a buffer between the solo instrument and bigger orchestra. The Carter is very difficult. I've been working at nothing else since October."

★

Jacob Lateiner was born in Havana to Polish parents, both accomplished amateur musicians. When he was 12, he and his younger brother, a violinist who now concertizes in Europe, got scholarships to Philadelphia's Curtis Institute. At the 1947 Berkshire Festival, Lateiner, 19, played Beethoven's "Emperor" Concerto at Koussevitzky's invitation.

"The soloist," says Lateiner, "should be the recreator of music. You must take the printed page and make it a first performance. Does it make any difference that I don't play Beethoven's piano? (I have played on Schubert's piano.)

"No, you can't reproduce those concert rooms, you don't wear the same clothes. Sonorities will be different. The music, organically, doesn't change. The 'Appassionata,' how many times have I heard it? Five thousand million? Beethoven wrote all over the score, very, very pianissimo, very, very legato. First bar, so quiet, in the tonic, F minor. Second bar, in the dominant.

"What is going to happen? Fifth bar. My god, gooseflesh, to G-flat major. You should feel on the back of your neck, the audience should feel it."

PIANIST Jacob Lateiner goes over the Elliott Carter Piano Concerto with Boston Symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf in preparation for the world premiere Friday in Symphony Hall.

For the intentions of the composer, Lateiner goes back to the original manuscript, and barring that, to the first editions. He collects Beethoven, Mozart and Schubert, and Schoenberg, among the moderns. "I met my wife that way. I was pretty obnoxious. She took the hint about getting me something of Schoenberg. Christmas Day she gave me a package and inside all the tissue paper was an envelope. From Dr. Rosenthal, for whom she worked in Berkeley, was a photostat of Schoenberg's jotting down of his first idea for 'Moses and Aron.'"

Lateiner missed out on a collection of Webern manuscripts. His interest in them brought them to the attention of Hans Moldenhauer, then researching a book on Webern's death by a sniper. But a unique collection of Mozart arias came accidentally.

Visiting a rare music dealer in New Haven, Lateiner leaved through a bound volume and "something registered in my garbage can mind. Popular arias, you know, were published immediately, like our show tunes today. There in this one book were five arias from 'Don Giovanni,' about 21 from 'The Magic Flute' and 'La Clemenza di Tito.'"

★

The Lateiners' visit to Boston is being enlivened by another historical inquiry. "I have with me a piano-vocal edition of the 'St. Matthew Passion' published by Ditson, with this on the title page: 'I. S. Gardner, 1894.' Then in the same hand, 'The Rehearsal was conducted Monday evening, March 25th, 1918, by' and in another hand, 'Dr. Karl Muck (now in jail).'"

Muck, the Boston Symphony conductor, was arrested Mar. 26 as an enemy (German) alien. The "I. S. Gardner" preceeding Muck's autograph, Lateiner suggests, is Isabella Stewart Gardner, a great friend of the conductor. Lateiner is seeking samples of Mrs. Gardner's handwriting. The Muck signature is apparently genuine and its parathentical remark so striking that Lateiner says he must find out everything about the circumstances.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Thirteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 6, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 7, at 8:30 o'clock

WAGNER ..... Overture to "Tannhäuser"

CARTER ..... Piano Concerto

I. Fantastico
II. Molto giusto

(First performance)

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 9, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95

I. Adagio; Allegro molto
II. Largo
III. Scherzo: Molto vivace
IV. Allegro con fuoco

SOLOIST
JACOB LATEINER
Mr. LATEINER plays the Steinway Piano

Today's performance of the Piano Concerto by Elliott Carter, a commission by Jacob Lateiner through the Ford Foundation, is being recorded by RCA Victor, with the joint subsidy of the Martha Baird Rockefeller Fund for Music, the Steinway Foundation, and the National Foundation for the Arts and Humanities. It will be most helpful if the audience will be as quiet as possible during the performance.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[777]

At Symphony Hall: A Masterpiece

"A most original and powerful work," says Globe music critic Michael Steinberg of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto, which had its world premiere Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf.

"The Concerto," Steinberg says, "establishes the most dramatic confrontation of solo and orchestra since Beethoven."

Carter's Concerto In Dramatic Debut

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting: Wagner's "Tannhaeuser" Overture, the world premiere of the Piano Concerto by Elliott Carter, with Jacob Lateiner, soloist, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 in E minor, "From the New World," Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Elliott Carter's new Piano Concerto is the most original and powerful work by an American composer. I know of nothing of comparable quality and strength to have come out of Europe since the war.

Its strength is in its conservatism. Carter is conservative in that he believes in a work of art as a responsible statement, a unique articulation of a personal vision. He is not a toy manufacturer, and he is not a cynical player of games with listeners and performers.

He believes, too, that the validity of a work of art is in what it says. His musical ideas are as complex as any being imagined today, but their intricacies exist in the service of an emotional and intellectual activity that reach to the very roots of our lives, what we care about, and live by.

VERY DRAMATIC

Carter's Concerto establishes the most dramatic confrontation of solo and orchestra since Beethoven. He has moved far from the Romantic concept of the soloist-hero cheered on by the crowd. Rather, the composer posits a conflict "between an individual of many changing moods and thoughts, and an orchestra treated more or less monolithically — massed effects pitted against Protean figures and expressions" (Carter's own words).

There are two movements. The first is fantastic in character. The dialogue moves rapidly, and ends at a climax when the orchestra block seems almost to have crushed the solo.

ELLIOTT CARTER
. . . complex ideas

A DIFFERENT WORLD

But as in Carter's first String Quartet, the space between movements is not really a break at all. The second movement begins just where the first left off, but it moves into quite a different world of rhetoric.

The orchestral part becomes a complex fabric of regular, but mutually contrasted beats against which the rhythmic flexibility of the solo is set off.

And there descends over the music a series of blankets of string tone, vastly thick chords — beyond 60 pitches each sometimes — quietly sustained in sinister contrast to the piano's increasingly urgent and impassioned utterance.

Opposition breeds independence. The solo becomes more autonomous and free, and the concerto concludes in the tranquility of a quiet and unopposed statement by the piano alone.

The originality of Carter's work is in its language, one fresh and individual in every dimension—not a hybrid of a traditional structure with a veneer or a graft of modernism. The harmonic vocabulary is uncommonly rich because Carter characterizes solo and orchestra by assigning to each its own repertory of triads.

Moreover, Carter's music is difficult to hear because his boldest inventions have been those concerned with treatment of speed and rhythm, the former an element ignored in most music as building material, the latter the very area where listeners and performers are most inexperienced and ill-trained.

The texture of Carter's Piano Concerto is fascinating. Carter has set a Concertino of seven players (flute, English horn, bass clarinet, and one each of strings) to function as mediator between solo and orchestra.

The Concertino is a channel through which ideas are communicated from solo to orchestra, it share the vocabulary of both, and in the series of cadenzas for the wind soloists in the second movement, which Carter has likened to the speeches of Job's comforters, it has a vital role in the human-musical drama. The actual piano writing, too, is extraordinary for the fantasy and ever-growing variety of the figurations.

This was the first Carter premier since the Double Concerto of 1961. To find for his original vision an equally original way of articulating it, and to get it all down to the actual finger details, as it were, is an immense labor.

Not the least impressive achievement of Carter's is that as well as having written a beautiful and expressive work, he has written a new one.

ADMIRABLE SOLOIST

Jacob Lateiner, who commissioned the Concerto through the Ford Foundation, was an admirable soloist. His feeling for polyphony is especially strong, and he had mastered the multi-textured layout of his part so that it sounded at times like the simultaneous performance of two players.

Erich Leinsdorf's work with the orchestra was alert and careful, and special praise goes to the members of the Concertino, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Laurence Thorstenberg, Felix Viscuglia, Joseph Silverstein, Burton Fine, Jules Eskin, and Henry Freeman.

Subsequent performances, some of them at least, will be more assured and will benefit from more transparency and more varied dynamics. But for a piece that is most assuredly an example of the sort of music not meant for first performances, this premiere went well, and the second movement was very clearly in focus and came across with immense impact.

A local note, finally: this incredibly taxing performance was a most important thing for the Boston Symphony to undertake. It would be good to have this begin a renascence of the tradition that the Symphony Hall is where the important new orchestral works begin their performance histories.

Our special gratitude goes to Mr. Leinsdorf and to the Boston Symphony for their share in revealing a moving and exciting masterpiece.

47

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JAN 5 1967

Thoughts of a Composer Before His Concerto Here

Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto will have its first performances at this Friday's and Saturday's Boston Symphony concerts. Jacob Lateiner, who commissioned the work with a grant from the Ford Foundation, will be soloist, and Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

There has not been a Carter premiere since September, 1961, when the Double Concerto for harpsichord and piano with two chamber orchestras was first played. Carter's compositions are few and complex. Beginning, certainly, with the String Quartet No. 1 (1951), they have been enormously influential and are recognized as major land marks.

The Piano Concerto was completed in September 1965. Its musical conversation is a three-way thing. There is the solo piano and there is the full orchestra (pairs of wood-winds plus contrabassoon, 4 horns, 3 each of trumpets and trombones, tuba, 2 players for 6 timpani, though no other percussion, and the usual strings).

But between soloist and full orchestra there is—compositionally, rhetorically, and in physical stage placement—a "concertino," a chamber ensemble of flute, English horn, bass clarinet, violin, viola, cello, and bass.

Carter says that his new work is the opposite of the Romantic concerto with its soloist-hero supported and cheered on by the crowd. Rather, the solo must establish and fight for his identity in the face of a crowd that would suffocate and crush him.

Carter's music, steeped in humanistic tradition and rich in human concerns, suggests metaphoric interpretation. One might go on, then, by saying that opposition breeds independence. It is as though the orchestra, by way of its aggressive and intense relation to the solo, were "teaching the piano how to be" (Carter's words), till it goes its own way.

Talking about his Concerto, Carter mentioned Job, straitened and redeemed. And in the three wood-winds of the Concertino we even find something like the three counselor friends, who, in a series of cadenzas, offer comfort, as it were, and suggestions—irrelevant ones—as to how the music ought to go on.

BUT WHAT ENDING?

Finding the proper ending for this musical drama was a tough problem. The first of the Concerto's two movements has a dramatic end thoroughly dominated by Concertino and orchestra. The second ends with a quiet statement from piano alone, one that offers the musical materials associated with the solo in their most concentrated form.

Carter came to this having rejected some more violent, certainly more theatrical, alternatives: "In my music it is always the still, small voice that wins out."

The participants in the musical conflict are marked by special musical characteristics, preference for certain intervals chords, rhythms, and so on. Piano and orchestra use different musical vocabularies. The aspect of this most immediately noticeable to the listener is the rhythmic, the orchestra's establishing of a fairly steady material frame as against the piano's flexible placement of its comment around rather than on the beats.

LIKE A MEDIATOR —

The Concertino lives and shares in both worlds. Its function is that of mediator between piano and orchestra, often as the orchestra's surrogate. As the composer puts it, "It brings the news to the piano."

In part, too, it owes its existence to a pratical consideration. Carter's boldly imaginative ideas produce difficult music, especially in rhythm. Levels of difficulty accepted in solo and chamber music are not pratical in orchestral writing. By having his Concertino, Carter can concentrate the fiercer complexities in the orchestra into the parts of seven virtuosi, themselves quasi-soloists.

dgcmfwyp

Musical precedents? Carter's own earlier pieces, of course, especially something like the Second Quartet with its vivid characterization of and conversation among instruments; Ives, with his extraordinarily broad and fanciful concept of polyphony; certain things in the dramatic style of Beethoven, for example, the Andante of the Piano Concerto No. 4, a movement that has greatly influenced Carter.

MICHAEL STEINBERG

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

JAN 20 1967

New England Newsclip

'Living, Evolving Art'

A correspondent from Cambridge, who disliked the Carter piano concerto, states that he has not studied music. He then hurls ridicule and invective upon The Globe's critic, Mr. Steinberg, who has studied music and understands it better than many so-called musicians. Believing that ignorance of a subject is the best qualification for forming an opinion, the letter writer would undoubtedly feel that, [illegible] udied the other Fine Arts, those who are [illegible] ture, etc., are better equipped [illegible] to [illegible] judgement on creative efforts in those spheres. . . .

Every symphony-goer is entitled to expect on the programs some of the music he likes best, but he should also be willing to accept some of what others deem of value. Challenging contemporary works form a very small percentage of Boston Symphony programs, but apparently there are those who would ban even the very few which are performed. It is worth noting that the Carter concerto was preceded and followed by two of the most popular and easy to listen to selections in the repertoire: Wagner's Overture to "Tannhauser" and Dvorak's "New World" Symphony.

The Boston Symphony is, or should be, an active force in a living, evolving art, which means it has an obligation to acquaint its audiences, at least those whose minds are not hopelessly closed with what living composers are writing.

FREDERICK C. DAVIS
Malden

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JAN 1 1967

Carter Piano Concerto To Have Premiere Here

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, JAN. 7, 1967

SYMPHONY

Concerto by Carter

By McLAREN HARRIS

It is a temptation to state that the world premiere of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto at Symphony on Friday was among the first blessings of the New Year; but as that is still a matter for conjecture, we shall be satisfied to say that the concerto is unequivocally the newest of the year.

The Carter concerto was commissioned by pianist Jacob Lateiner with the aid of a Ford Foundation grant. The work has presumably been in Lateiner's hands since its completion in 1965; the first performance was originally scheduled for October but due to the work's complexities it was postponed at the pianist's request.

Complex it is. Though the two-movement piece resembles a concerto grosso on the outside through its scoring for a concertino of seven strings and winds, orchestra and solo piano, its organization begins on the most elemental level of musical materials: pitch motives, rhythm, note duration, meter, tempo. The orchestra and piano parts are distinguished—or stratified, as Carter calls it—by separate series of three-note motives, developed in opposing rhythms through a succession of differing meters and gradual speeding-up or slowing-down of tempo (the latter is a basic tool of Carters, which he terms "metric modulation," though "temporal modulation" may be more appropriate).

EFFECTS VS. NOTATION

This is where most of the complexity arises, as the composer's intended effects are quite fluid, while musical notation is an exact science. The score contains such tempo indications as 'quarter note equals 72.5," or 110.25, or 182.75. This precision, of course, cannot be achieved in performance; the numbers are only to indicate stages in the acceleration or deceleration of tempo. But the parts, which display rhythmic wizardry even in straight tempos, became all the more enigmatic during these periods.

However, if these specific problems are left for someone else than the listener, the concerto emerges clear in sound and extremely interesting in its interplay of ideas. Though the surface is angular to the brink of pointillism, the piano part is idiomatic throughout and the orchestration economic and light. The first movement contains a good deal of wrestling between soloist and ensemble with the concertino taking the mediator's role; in the second, the piano progresses with increasingly bold strokes against softly sustained strings and brief interjections from the brass, interrupted here and there by cadenzas from the concertino.

TIMES (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 635,600

JAN 7 1967

New England Newsclip

Music: Carter's Tomorrow Concerto

Work by Avant-Garde Leader Has Premiere

Lateiner Piano Soloist as Leinsdorf Conducts

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG
Special to The New York Times

BOSTON, Jan. 6 — Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto received its world premiere this afternoon at Symphony Hall. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony, and Jacob Lateiner was the piano soloist. This was also the occasion for a recording of the score. R.C.A. Victor, assisted by grants from the Martha Baird Rockefeller Fund for Music, the Steinway Foundation and the National Foundation of the Arts and the Humanities, recorded the live performance. Still another foundation enters the picture, for the concerto was commissioned by the Ford Foundation through Mr. Lateiner.

Mr. Carter, 59 years old, has long been one of the leaders of this country's musical avant-garde. He is not a prolific composer, and he writes very slowly. But his music has made a powerful impact on postwar American thinking. His Second Quartet was all but a call to battle for the avant-gardists of the United States, and he was one of the first, along with Milton Babbitt, to exploit the serial thinking of the Schoenberg school.

●

This new concerto, completed in 1959, is not a work that can be assessed offhand, and the score will need considerable study and rehearing before it can be spoken about with confidence. The work is scored for full orchestra, with a small concertino—as in the old concerto grosso form—opposed to the full body of the orchestra. It is almost completely dissonant and athematic, and is extremely dense in texture. The density is not in tonal impasto, though, at one spot near the end of the first of the two movements, the scoring is on 72 staves of a single page. This may be unique in the history of music. Not even Schoenberg's "Gurre-Lieder" has anything like it. But this is an exceptional spot in the score. The density is rather in the concentration of technical idea.

Adrian Siegel

Elliott Carter

As in most serial-oriented music, the Piano Concerto manipulates various materials—3-note groupings against 12-note chords, and so on. These elements are subjected to varying treatments, and the relationships are highly complicated, probably too complicated for the ear ever to take in. The work is not short. It runs to a shade more than 25 minutes, and the listener is required to concentrate every second.

Music of this kind seldom has charm. That is the last thing Mr. Carter is trying to achieve. In his program notes, he talks about expressive relationships, but it is clear that the technique of composition is the paramount issue in a work like this. It makes its points through a stringent kind of musical logic, and is terribly serious about it. The music is a kind of culmination from Schoenberg and Berg through Babbitt and Boulez, with a touch of Ives here and there. Some of it sounds doctrinaire, especially the piano writing, which often has the kind of flapdoodle figuration beloved of such composers as Boulez and Stockhausen. It is terribly difficult, and Mr. Lateiner, who was in thorough command, played from the printed note.

Very much in the best international style, this concerto is going to be treated with respect wherever it turns up. But the odds are against its becoming a repertory work—in this generation, anyway. Very few orchestras could handle it, very few pianists would take the time to learn it. In a future generation, when and if the idiom becomes familiar and the texture is taken as a matter of course, the work will have a better chance. As a guess, this piano concerto will be regarded as a summing up of a style of composition that never fully took hold but, like cubism in art, dominated a decade or two.

●

Of the performance, it can be said only that Mr. Leinsdorf, the pianist, the concertino players and the orchestra were confident, assured and accomplished. It will not be long before anybody who wants to can check the performance with score on lap and the record on the turntable. The audience received the new concerto with a good deal of warmth and respect, and the composer took several bows from the stage.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR Saturday, January 7, 1967

Lateiner plays Carter

New piano concerto

By Harold Rogers

Sandwiched between the comfy tunes of Wagner's Overture to "Tannhäuser" and Dvořák's Symphony "From the New World," Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto — uncomfortably tuneless—had its première Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

The soloist was Jacob Lateiner, who manfully commissioned it through the Ford Foundation and then manfully played it (unlike Paul Wittgenstein, who commissioned a concerto for the left hand from Prokofiev and then refused to touch it).

Though avant garde in its impression, the idiom finds its home in the long since familiar atonalities of our day. At the outset one is struck by Carter's inventive use of fragmented ideas. The work is explosive and expostulatory, at times reminiscent of Henry Cowell's early cluster-tone essay called "Amiable Conversation" that depicted two Chinese in a laundry.

In the Carter concerto the talk runs three ways—from the piano to the orchestra to a concertino, often all three at once. There is a fascination to the tonal fabric with its dramatically bold colors, yet the piece is not without moments of almost impressionistic lyricism.

But the listener is hardly given an opportunity to think "Yes, that is nice, isn't it?" when his tympanum is kicked by blast from the tuba, or otherwise agitated by isolated beeps and blurps from various instruments. Meanwhile the piano inscribes its individualistic way, expounding short, intricate figures that seem to require ten fingers on each hand.

Logical path

Throughout its two movements, however, one is impressed by the logic and order of Carter's mind, even though the logic pursue a path trod and appreciated by only a few. The main trouble with the opening Fantastico movement is that the idiom settles into a routine that becomes tedious. One is strongly tempted to think of other things or to look forward to the second movement when the mood may change.

But the second movement, Molto giusto, took up where the first left off and gave us more of the same. True, there was a slight change of mood—at times the piano waxed a little more lyrical in an expansive way—but the plethora of dabs and jabs had long since lost their grasp of the imagination.

Mr. Lateiner, making his Boston debut with the Boston Symphony, displayed an extraordinary skill. He read from the score, as well he might, his part being well nigh unmemorizable. He has a sensitive touch and an accurate technique. Missed notes would never have been noticed, yet he gave us a secure sense of not having missed a one. The composer was on hand to accept the warm if not enthusiastic applause.

Erich Leinsdorf marshaled his forces with his usual organizational flair. His Wagner was inspiring, and his Dvořák—following the Carter—pure delight.

TUES. B #4 JAN. 10

48

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515

JAN 1 1967

Music Notes

The world premiere of Elliott Carter's First Piano Concerto will take place in Boston's Symphony hall on Friday, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist and Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra. The Carter concerto was originally scheduled for performance in November, but additional time was needed to prepare the complex new work, which requires a concertino ensemble of three winds and four strings in addition to piano and orchestra. The concerto was commissioned by Mr. Lateiner thru the Ford Foundation and is based on sketches worked out during 1964 and 1965 while Mr. Carter was living in West Berlin and New York. Technically, the composition is based on twelve different three-note groups. Six are used exclusively by the piano and concertino and six by the orchestra. Each triad is associated with one or more tempi and expressive characters. The concerto has two movements.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

JAN 8 1967

New England Newsclip

The concerto's drama is mainly intellectual, not one of the senses, and harmonic or melodic appeals are incidental items. Nevertheless, both the composer and the performance by Mr. Lateiner and the orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf were well received.

Two 19th-century products were also on the program, Wagner's overture to "Tannhaeuser" and the "New World" Symphony of Dvorak. There seems to be a tendency among conductors to take the Pilgrims' March from the "Tannhaeuser" overture at a snail's pace, emphasizing its dignity and splendor at the expense of the players' endurance and the listeners' patience. Fortunately there was only partial evidence of it on Friday; although beginning at a crawl, the march returned in full-blown solidity after the Venusberg's dazzle, concluding an essentially brilliant orchestral performance.

Perhaps the ordeal of the Carter work brought on a letdown following intermission. In any case the Dvorak work was attacked rather half-heartedly, with off-balance or weak responses from the winds. Mr. Leinsdorf sought to bring out salient characteristics of the orchestration often missed in other readings, and usually succeeded, but moments in between escaped attention; the excitement was largely flickering and non-consistent. The Largo, however, was finely

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the thirteenth program of the 86th season Friday night at Symphony Hall. Jacob Lateiner was piano soloist the Carter concerto.

Overture to "Tannhaeuser" . . . Wagner
Piano Concerto . . . . . Carter
(first performance)
Symphony No. 9 in E minor, Op. 95, "From the New World" . . . . Dvorak

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100

MAR 1967

Boston Symphony: Carter Premiere

Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto was given its first performances at the Boston Symphony concerts of January 6 and 7. Jacob Lateiner, who commissioned the work through the Ford Foundation, was soloist; Erich Leinsdorf conducted.

It is the most original and powerful work by an American composer, and I know of nothing of comparable quality and strength that has come out of Europe since the war. The work is characteristically a responsible and personal statement by a man who is neither a toy manufacturer nor a cynical player of games with listeners and performers. In the most dramatic confrontation of solo and orchestra since Beethoven, Carter establishes a conflict between an individual of varied moods and nervous sensibility and an orchestral mass of vast weight and of monolithic expression. The Concerto continues the rhetoric that has prevailed in Carter's work of the last fifteen years in its concern with contrasting musical characters, their mutual impact, and their continuing mutual independence.

Carter has articulated this contrast by assigning separate harmonic and rhythmic vocabularies to piano and orchestra, and the music is especially bold in its inventions with speeds and rhythms. The piano figurations are notably fresh.

The concertino of seven string and woodwind players that functions as mediator between solo and orchestra contributes to a generally fascinating texture. The dramatic vision behind the Concerto is powerful, and the composer has found a language which is right, expressive, beautiful, to translate that vision into music. MICHAEL STEINBERG

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JAN 15 1967

'Let Us Hear Music . . .'

Winston Churchill, who was no musician by any means, once said that he liked music which he could bang along with. Saturday evening (Jan.) I got an earful of the ame; which was a complete insult to the intelligence—nd I know the kind of music hat I like. I refer, specifically, the world premiere of the iano Concerto by Elliot arter played by Jacob ateiner with the Boston Symhony Orchestra led by Erich einsdorf.

The reviews of both Michael teinberg of the Boston Globe and of Harold C. Schonberg of the New York Times are so remarkably alike in their criticism that they could well have been written by the same person—who was never present at the concert.

They do agree on one thing: the music was extremely dense. It certainly was to the average concertgoer. As one who has studied the Fine Arts (music excepted) and who has written criticism of the same, I know padding when I see it and both reviews are padded to the extreme. This music (?) does not have one recognizable note that one can follow; it is in essence, computerized music; the texture is fascinating all right—about as fascinating as an emetic!

Let us hear music that the public can and will enjoy—and to hell with the critics, who, with their pseudo-syllogistic nonsense about the purity and technique of composition, joined together with the ideal of an incoherent jumble of notes, still have the audacity to try to make us believe that this produces a symphony, let alone a concerto!

GEORGE SAVER
Cambridge

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 10, at 7:30 o'clock

GUNTHER SCHULLER, Guest Conductor

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Overture, "Othello," Op. 93

SCHUBERT . . . . . Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

INTERMISSION

IVES . . . . . Symphony No. 4

I. Prelude: Maestoso
II. Allegretto
III. Fugue: Andante moderato
IV. Very slowly — Largo maestoso

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
JOHN OLIVER, Acting Conductor

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970

JAN 11 1967

Symphony Program Has High, Low Points

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

Gunther Schuller, well-known composer and recently appointed president of the New England Conservatory of Music, was guest conductor last night in Symphony Hall in the fourth program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tuesday "B" series.

Mr. Schuller scheduled three works for the concert — Dvorak's seldom-heard "Othello Overture," Schubert's "Symphony No. 8 in B Minor" (The "Unfinished"), and Charles Ives' "Symphony No. 4," with the New England Conservatory Chorus as assisting artists.

The Dvorak overture, which began the program, really has no connection with Shakespeare's "Othello"; in fact, not until the piece had been completed did Dvorak give the name to it — and this only because he intended the composition to present love as a passion that often mars human hearts.

Rendition Tops Score

Although the overture is pleasant enough music, it is eminently forgettable. Mr. Schuller and his musicians performed it well, but their playing was better than the music perhaps permits.

There is little at this late date that can be said about Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony." All music lovers know that the composer completed only two movements of the work (it was written six years before his death), although he did leave notes for a scherzo.

The composition has always been immensely popular, chiefly because of its melodious themes. These melodies came forth appealingly last night, but, all in all, there was something lacking in Mr. Schuller's reading. Perhaps in an effort not to over-romanticize the work, he did not romanticize it enough. As a result, I found the rendition somewhat tame and lacking in musical warmth.

With the Ives "Symphony No. 4," however, Mr. Schuller came into his own. Performed for the first time in 1965, even though it was composed in the years 1910-1916, the symphony has been unjustly neglected.

Work of Experimenter

Typically Ives in its utilization of polymetrical notation, counterpoint of two orchestral units, a small chorus, fragments from hymns, folk songs, patriotic selections, and the like, it is the work of a great individualist and a born experimenter.

The second movement, for example, surely one of the noisiest in the symphonic repertoire, ends with a slam-bang Fourth of July celebration, with bands, drum corps and remarkable instrumental combinations blaring forth with wonderful abandon.

And the great third movement — a double fugue — the most conventional of the four sections — is a lovely piece of writing (it is actually an orchestral transcription of the first movement of Ives' "First String Quartet") using two hymns, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" and "All Hail the Power," skillfully and allowing an organ to supplement the orchestral score.

That Mr. Schuller has an affinity for this type of music is obvious. The orchestra, which he kept under splendid control, displayed all its virtuoso qualities. The result was provocative and unusual music-making.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795

JAN 15 1967

Boston Symphony Performs Work of Charles Ives

It was a pleasure last week to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Gunther Schuller as guest conductor, perform Charles Ives' "Symphony No. 4." Within the last decade, this shrewd Connecticut Yankee has come into his own. Had his music been performed immediately or soon after it was composed, it would have created as much of a furore as that of Schoenberg and Stravinsky.

Unfortunately, though, the music of this Yale graduate did not become well-known until he was an old man. For example, his "Symphony No. 2," completed in 1902, did not receive its first performance until 1951. The "Symphony No. 4," composed betwen 1910-1916, has never received a complete performance until very recent years. The "Symphony No. 3," completed in 1911, was not performed until 1945.

While his contemporaries were absorbing Brahms and Wagner, Ives was absorbing the musical experiences provided by the New England village in which he was born—the concerts of the village band, the singing of the church choir, barn dances, camp meetings, circus parades. In fact, Ives was first and alone among American composers to discern and to utilize the truly idiosyncratic and germinal elements of our folk and popular music. These include such features as "incorrect" harmonic progressions, irregular rhythms, asymmetrical melodies, improvised embellishments, and deviations from standard pitch.

"Symphony No. 4" is perhaps the most "advanced" of Ives' works—it employs polymetrical notation, ad libitum instrumental passages, counterpoint of two orchestral units, and the free use of dissonance within essentially simple tonality.

It reaffirms Ives' reputation as one of the most original and enjoyable of American composers.

TUES. B #4 JAN. 10

48

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515

JAN 1 1967

Music Notes

The world premiere of Elliott Carter's First Piano Concerto will take place in Boston's Symphony hall on Friday, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist and Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony orchestra. The Carter concerto was originally scheduled for performance in November, but additional time was needed to prepare the complex new work, which requires a concertino ensemble of three winds and four strings in addition to piano and orchestra. The concerto was commissioned by Mr. Lateiner thru the Ford Foundation and is based on sketches worked out during 1964 and 1965 while Mr. Carter was living in West Berlin and New York. Technically, the composition is based on twelve different three-note groups. Six are used exclusively by the piano and concertino and six by the orchestra. Each triad is associated with one or more tempi and expressive characters. The concerto has two movements.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

JAN 8 1967

New England Newsclip

The concerto's drama is mainly intellectual, not one of the senses, and harmonic or melodic appeals are incidental items. Nevertheless, both the composer and the performance by Mr. Lateiner and the orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf were well received.

Two 19th-century products were also on the program, Wagner's overture to "Tannhaeuser" and the "New World" Symphony of Dvorak. There seems to be a tendency among conductors to take the Pilgrims' March from the "Tannhaeuser" overture at a snail's pace, emphasizing its dignity and splendor at the expense of the players' endurance and the listeners' patience. Fortunately there was only partial evidence of it on Friday; although beginning at a crawl, the march returned in full-blown solidity after the Venusberg's dazzle, concluding an essentially brilliant orchestral performance.

Perhaps the ordeal of the Carter work brought on a letdown following intermission. In any case the Dvorak work was attacked rather half-heartedly, with off-balance or weak responses from the winds. Mr. Leinsdorf sought to bring out salient characteristics of the orchestration often missed in other readings, and usually succeeded, but moments in between escaped attention; the excitement was largely flickering and non-consistent. The Largo, however, was finely

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the thirteenth program of the 86th season Friday night at Symphony Hall. Jacob Lateiner was piano soloist the Carter concerto.

Overture to "Tannhaeuser" . . . Wagner
Piano Concerto . . . . . Carter
(first performance)
Symphony No. 9 in E minor, Op. 95, "From the New World" . . . Dvorak

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100

MAR 1967

Boston Symphony: Carter Premiere

Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto was given its first performances at the Boston Symphony concerts of January 6 and 7. Jacob Lateiner, who commissioned the work through the Ford Foundation, was soloist; Erich Leinsdorf conducted.

It is the most original and powerful work by an American composer, and I know of nothing of comparable quality and strength that has come out of Europe since the war. The work is characteristically a responsible and personal statement by a man who is neither a toy manufacturer nor a cynical player of games with listeners and performers. In the most dramatic confrontation of solo and orchestra since Beethoven, Carter establishes a conflict between an individual of varied moods and nervous sensibility and an orchestral mass of vast weight and of monolithic expression. The Concerto continues the rhetoric that has prevailed in Carter's work of the last fifteen years in its concern with contrasting musical characters, their mutual impact, and their continuing mutual independence.

Carter has articulated this contrast by assigning separate harmonic and rhythmic vocabularies to piano and orchestra, and the music is especially bold in its inventions with speeds and rhythms. The piano figurations are notably fresh.

The concertino of seven string and woodwind players that functions as mediator between solo and orchestra contributes to a generally fascinating texture. The dramatic vision behind the Concerto is powerful, and the composer has found a language which is right, expressive, beautiful, to translate that vision into music. MICHAEL STEINBERG

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

JAN 15 1967

'Let Us Hear Music ...'

Winston Churchill, who was no musician by any means, once said that he liked music which he could bang along with. Saturday evening (Jan. 7) I got an earful of the same; which was a complete insult to the intelligence—and I know the kind of music that I like. I refer, specifically, to the world premiere of the Piano Concerto by Elliot Carter played by Jacob Lateiner with the Boston Symphony Orchestra led by Erich Leinsdorf.

The reviews of both Michael Steinberg of the Boston Globe and of Harold C. Schonberg of the New York Times are so remarkably alike in their criticism that they could well have been written by the same person—who was never present at the concert.

They do agree on one thing: the music was extremely dense. It certainly was to the average concertgoer. As one who has studied the Fine Arts (music excepted) and who has written criticism of the same, I know padding when I see it and both reviews are padded to the extreme. This music (?) does not have one recognizable note that one can follow; it is in essence, computerized music; the texture is fascinating all right—about as fascinating as an emetic!

Let us hear music that the public can and will enjoy—and to hell with the critics, who, with their pseudo-syllogistic nonsense about the purity and technique of composition, joined together with the ideal of an incoherent jumble of notes, still have the audacity to try to make us believe that this produces a symphony, let alone a concerto!

GEORGE SAVER
Cambridge

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fourth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 10, at 7:30 o'clock

GUNTHER SCHULLER, Guest Conductor

DVOŘÁK . . . . . Overture, "Othello," Op. 93

SCHUBERT . . . . . Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished"

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con moto

INTERMISSION

IVES . . . . . Symphony No. 4

I. Prelude: Maestoso
II. Allegretto
III. Fugue: Andante moderato
IV. Very slowly — Largo maestoso

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
JOHN OLIVER, Acting Conductor

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 66,970

JAN 11 1967

Symphony Program Has High, Low Points

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

Gunther Schuller, well-known composer and recently appointed president of the New England Conservatory of Music, was guest conductor last night in Symphony Hall in the fourth program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tuesday "B" series.

Mr. Schuller scheduled three works for the concert — Dvorak's s.e.l.d.o m-heard "Othello Overture," Schubert's "Symphony No. 8 in B Minor" (The "Unfinished"), and Charles Ives' "Symphony No. 4," with the New England Conservatory Chorus as assisting artists.

The Dvorak overture, which began the program, really has no connection with Shakespeare's "Othello"; in fact, not until the piece had been completed did Dvorak give the name to it — and this only because he intended the composition to present love as a passion that often mars human hearts.

Rendition Tops Score

Although the overture is pleasant enough music, it is eminently forgettable. Mr. Schuller and his musicians performed it well, but their playing was better than the music perhaps permits.

There is little at this late date that can be said about Schubert's "Unfinished Symphony." All music lovers know that the composer completed only two movements of the work (it was written six years before his death), although he did leave notes for a scherzo.

The composition has always been immensely popular, chiefly because of its melodious themes. These melodies came forth appealingly last night, but, all in all, there was something lacking in Mr. Schuller's reading. Perhaps in an effort not to over-romanticize the work, he did not romanticize it enough. As a result, I found the rendition somewhat tame and lacking in musical warmth.

With the Ives "Symphony No. 4," however, Mr. Schuller came into his own. Performed for the first time in 1965, even though it was composed in the years 1910-1916, the symphony has been unjustly neglected.

Work of Experimenter

Typically Ives in its utilization of polymetrical notation, counterpoint of two orchestral units, a small chorus, fragments from hymns, folk songs, patriotic selections, and the like, it is the work of a great individualist and a born experimenter.

The second movement, for example, surely one of the noisiest in the symphonic repertoire, ends with a slam-bang Fourth of July celebration, with bands, drum corps and remarkable instrumental combinations blaring forth with wonderful abandon.

And the great third movement — a double fugue — the most conventional of the four sections — is a lovely piece of writing (it is actually an orchestral transcription of the first movement of Ives' "First String Quartet") using two hymns, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" and "All Hail the Power," skillfully and allowing an organ to supplement the orchestral score.

That Mr. Schuller has an affinity for this type of music is obvious. The orchestra, which he kept under splendid control, displayed all its virtuoso qualities. The result was provocative and unusual music-making.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795

JAN 15 1967

Boston Symphony Performs Work of Charles Ives

It was a pleasure last week to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Gunther Schuller as guest conductor, perform Charles Ives' "Symphony No. 4." Within the last decade, this shrewd Connecticut Yankee has come into his own. Had his music been performed immediately or soon after it was composed, it would have created as much of a furore as that of Schoenberg and Stravinsky.

Unfortunately, though, the music of this Yale graduate did not become well-known until he was an old man. For example, his "Symphony No. 2," completed in 1902, did not receive its first performance until 1951. The "Symphony No. 4," composed betwen 1910-1916, has never received a complete performance until very recent years. The "Symphony No. 3," completed in 1911, was not performed until 1945.

While his contemporaries were absorbing Brahms and Wagner, Ives was absorbing the musical experiences provided by the New England village in which he was born—the concerts of the village band, the singing of the church choir, barn dances, camp meetings, circus parades. In fact, Ives was first and alone among American composers to discern and to utilize the truly idiosyncratic and germinal elements of our folk and popular music. These include such features as "incorrect" harmonic progressions, irregular rhythms, asymmetrical melodies, improvised embellishments, and deviations from standard pitch.

"Symphony No. 4" is perhaps the most "advanced" of Ives' works—it employs polymetrical notation, ad libitum instrumental passages, counterpoint of two orchestral units, and the free use of dissonance within essentially simple tonality.

It reaffirms Ives' reputation as one of the most original and enjoyable of American composers.

49

FRI + SAT #14 JAN. 13 + 14

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
JAN 3 1967

The Sound of Music

Heart in the Homeland

By Dan Webster
Patriot Ledger Correspondent

PHILADELPHIA — Rafael Kubelik brushed back wiry graying hair and pronounced himself a happy man.

On the face of it, his statement seems contradictory. The 52-year-old conductor, who will guide the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concerts beginning [redacted] month, has weathered enough travail to embitter most men. Son of violinist Jan Kubelik, he saw his father's fortunes crumble and his art become a race against creditors.

When Kubelik's own star began to rise as a conductor, his native Czechoslovakia capitulated, first to Nazi Germany and then, in the '40s, to Communism; and let no man mistake his devotion to his homeland.

His escape was to Chicago and three years with the Chicago Symphony, a relationship that ended loudly and abruptly. His wife, a companion through much of this, died in 1961. Yet, in 1966, Kubelik finds himself a happy man.

The reasons are personal and complex.

In The Lead Again

Getting back in the swing of his life as a conductor after taking a year off, Kubelik looked back for a moment. He planned the year for his own orchestra (The Bavarian State Radio Orchestra) but refused to lead a program. He didn't pick up the baton until last August, when he appeared in the Salzburg and Edinburgh festivals.

"I am composing. You know, for years I have been writing for the cupboard. I conduct here and there and I have on my desk a score that I look at for a little and then leave it. Since I have taken my vacation, I have written a piece for strings on commission from the Lucerne Festival; I have written a violin concerto and I have another opera sketched out. It's wonderful. In these few months, all this has flowed out."

Man Without A Country?

Home for Kubelik is Lucerne. "I never gave up my flat there and now I want to build a little house. And I think I will become a Swiss citizen. I could have become an American — you were very good to me when I came in 1949 — or I could have become an English subject. But I wanted to be a Czech conductor and so I have not taken any steps. I left my country, but I stayed with my nation, if you see what I mean. If I had stayed and lived under the rule of murderers, I would have had to do things with which I could not agree and that I would have been ashamed of.

"Now my son is 21 and needs papers and I think my friends and the people who understand me know that I am a Czech even if I take Swiss citizenship," the conductor said.

The year away from the podium has freed what he calls his other self. "A conductor is an extrovert, but the composer is an introvert. The composer hides from publicity but the conductor must seek it. As a musician I am always at odds with myself.

"But I am not tense — oh, in rehearsal I am nervous, — but deep down I am not tense. I have come to realize that I am alone. We are all alone. When you die, you are alone. Okay, then why try to be a big success, to make a lot of money? I have finally come to realize that if you do things without fear or without corruption, you are honest with yourself. Is there anything else in life?

RAFAEL KUBELIK
. . . Czech in balance

Unhappy Ending

"You must have convictions and do what you think is right. Chicago? I enjoyed myself there, but the ladies did not like me and the Cassidy (Claudia Cassidy, former music critic of the Chicago Tribune) hated me and at the end of three years I said goodbye.

"It was not too much Czech music, it was too much contemporary music. I looked back through my records the other day. In three years, I played 60 contemporary works, but only eight Czech things among them and from the romantic era, the four symphonies of Dvorak, and 'The Bartered Bride.'

"It wasn't too much Czech music; the audience wasn't ready for contemporary works. But I had to do what I felt — and I did," he shrugged.

"It was wonderful to sit in my room with nothing to do but write. No airplanes, no rehearsals, no commitments. I will begin to conduct some of my own things now. I have played so many other composers, I think I owe it to myself to try some of my own music — not here, but in Europe. To see how they go," he said.

Meanwhile, Kubelik has remarried and he credits his new wife with smoothing the way for him, helping him to this plateau of happiness he professes. And the Chicago Symphony came to him again, to ask him to lead three weeks of concerts — a stint he has just completed.

"I had to go back. I had to complete the arch," he said. "I was very happy to be back. It was a most warm welcome, a family-like approach to the orchestra, from the public and from the critics. To find people who are faithful — that is the biggest value a human being should strive for."

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fourteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 13, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, at 8:30 o'clock

RAFAEL KUBELIK, Guest Conductor

HAYDN . . . . . Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102

I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegro; Trio
IV. Finale: Presto

MARTINU . . . . . Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani

I. Poco allegro
II. Largo; Adagio
III. Allegro

Piano Solo: CHARLES WILSON
(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

FRANCK . . . . . *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[841]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
JAN 14 1967

Kubelik Makes His Debut With BSO

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Bohuslav Martinu's double concerto for two string orchestras, piano and kettledrums, encaustic music of protest, received its first performance here yesterday afternoon when Rafael Kubelik made his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor. Currently, this son of Jan Kubelik, great Czech violinist, is music director of the Bavarian Radio Orchestra at Munich.

Rafael Kubelik

Martinu's intense and moving masterwork was written amid the stresses strains of impending war after the betrayal of Czechoslovakia, the composer's homeland, at Munich in 1938. It echoes the distempers of that tragic interlude.

This singular concerto, though for double orchestra, is marked by creative ability and coloristic skill, being set out for two answering bodies of strings, as well as piano and percussive instruments. Charles Wilson, the BSO assistant conductor, was keyboard artist. What may become Martinu's most enduring opus, manifesting an unyielding idiom, was set forth splendidly.

Its germinal theme, which can be traced back to Beethoven, through Liszt, also is the cell-like motif for Cesar Franck's D-Minor symphony, which concluded yesterday's concert. Martinu plays it straight in the opening poco allegro, runs it backwards in the concluding allegro; Czech and double-Czech.

Curtain-raiser was Haydn's 102d symphony (B&H #12, Salomon Series #9, in B flat), appropriate for the guest conductor's debut, since it was featured at the first BSO concert after its foundation in 1881. The B-flat symphony is among Haydn's finer works, being dramatic in scope and magnificent as sheer music.

Kubelik's ecstatic reading was true classicism, yet full of expressivity and urgency of feeling. It was a skillful performance, sweeping and powerful, but the scope of the "Father of the Symphony's" score is sufficiently expansive to accommodate such a wide-ranging reading.

After the interval there came a fervent, controlled, superbly evocative performance of Franck's prefabricated, tuneful D-minor symphony. The "Belgian Bruckner's" only work in that format mingles an academic methodology with maudlin sentiment, producing a chimerical monster whose hybrid strain fortunately has vanished from the musical scene. In the world of mules, there are no rules, as Ogden Nash commented.

Franck's melodic style was based upon the chromatic harmonies of Wagner's "Tristan;" the Parisian organist-composer's original gimmick, also anticipated by Liszt, was a cyclical format in which the cell-like theme is repeated throughout the symphony's three movements, splitting, in the finale, into similar twins recognizable as the thematic origins of "Give Me Something to Remember You By" and "Lady Dressed in Jade."

His opening movement is notable for the alternating of slow and rapid segments, while the peculiar middle movement, a synthesis of scherzo and andante, is rather enjoyable for its melodic transmutations. However, many listeners nowadays find the overweening pretensions of this symphony too mystical, with too slim a margin between loftiness and pomposity.

Franck's symphony must be played with fervor, it is true (but not with the perfervid mannerisms it acquired when Symphony and Carnegie halls were Munchausen!) but it also must be played with restraint, otherwise the climaxes become blatant and vulgar, careening into bathos. Kubelik, with his precisely articulated beat and Furtwanglerish left hand, disdained to fume and fret over this symphony's top-lofty nobility and strangely gripping musical exaltation, playing down overly sentimental aspects.

Instead, he regarded it as a well-balanced musical work, imparting form and simplicity to its musical rhetoric, but, at the same time, permitting plenty of warmth and understanding to seep into his sympathetic interpretation. Such comparatively restrained treatment stressed melodic lines rather than dynamic qualities, thus making the churnings and heavings of this super-Romantic score less objectionable, so that it appeared to be an important musical creation.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
JAN 8 1967
New England Newsclip

Three Guest Conductors With Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony will have three guest conductors during the mid-season leave of absence of the orchestra's music director, Erich Leinsdorf.

Rafael Kubelik will conduct the concerts for the next two weeks in Boston and also take the orchestra on tour the last week in January.

Gunther Schuller, president-elect of the New England Conservatory, returns this Tuesday to conduct a program that he directed in November. And the London Symphony's Colin Davis appears in Boston Feb. 3-4.

Leinsdorf returns Feb. 10, after conducting the Concertgebouw in The Hague and Amsterdam.

Kubelik's first pair of concerts, Friday at 2 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m., will feature the first Symphony Hall performances of the Martinu Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Percussion. The orchestra's new assistant conductor, Charles Wilson, will be the pianist.

These concerts will open with Haydn's Symphony No. 102, and conclude with Franck's D minor Symphony. Final preparation for the program will come at the open rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30.

Schuller's program Tuesday evening at 7:30 will consist of the Dvorak "Othello" Overture, Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and the Charles Ives Symphony No. 4. The concert will be televised and broadcast on Ch. 2 and WGBH-FM.

For Kubelik's concerts Jan. 20-21, the Mahler Symphony No. 9 is scheduled.

Son of the Czech violinist, Jan Kubelik, Rafael Kubelik was trained at the Prague Conservatory, and later was music director of the Czech Philharmonic. Conductor of the Chicago Symphony in 1950-53, he is now active at London's Covent Garden, and as guest conductor of many American orchestras.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
JAN 7 1967
New England Newsclip

Thurs. at 7:30
Open rehearsal with guest conductor Rafael Kubelik.

Fri. at 2:
Kubelik leads the orchestra in Haydn's Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102; Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, with piano soloist Charles Wilson, and Franck's Symphony in D minor. Repeat performance Sat. at 8:30

49

FRI + SAT #14 JAN. 13 + 14

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098

JAN 3 1967

The Sound of Music

Heart in the Homeland

By Dan Webster
Patriot Ledger Correspondent

PHILADELPHIA — Rafael Kubelik brushed back wiry graying hair and pronounced himself a happy man.

On the face of it, his statement seems contradictory. The 52-year-old conductor, who will guide the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concerts beginning this month, has weathered enough travail to embitter most men. Son of violinist Jan Kubelik, he saw his father's fortunes crumble and his art become a race against creditors.

When Kubelik's own star began to rise as a conductor, his native Czechoslovakia capitulated first to Nazi Germany and then, in the '40s, to Communism; and let no man mistake his devotion to his homeland.

His escape was to Chicago and three years with the Chicago Symphony, a relationship that ended loudly and abruptly. His wife, a companion through much of this, died in 1961. Yet, in 1966, Kubelik finds himself a happy man.

The reasons are personal and complex.

In The Lead Again

Getting back in the swing of his life as a conductor after taking a year off, Kubelik looked back for a moment. He planned the year for his own orchestra (The Bavarian State Radio Orchestra) but refused to lead a program. He didn't pick up the baton until last August, when he appeared in the Salzburg and Edinburgh festivals.

"I am composing. You know, for years I have been writing for the cupboard. I conduct here and there and I have on my desk a score that I look at for a little and then leave it. Since I have taken my vacation, I have written a piece for strings on commission from the Lucerne Festival, I have written a violin concerto and I have another opera sketched out. It's wonderful. In these few months, all this has flowed out."

Man Wihout A Country?

Home for Kubelik is Lucerne. "I never gave up my flat there and now I want to build a little house. And I think I will become a Swiss citizen. I could have become an American — you were very good to me when I came in 1949 — or I could have become an English subject. But I wanted to be a Czech conductor and so I have not taken any steps. I left my country, but I stayed with my nation, if you see what I mean. If I had stayed and lived under the rule of murderers, I would have had to do things with which I could not agree and that I would have been ashamed of.

"Now my son is 21 and needs papers and I think my friends and the people who understand me know that I am a Czech even if I take Swiss citizenship," the conductor said.

The year away from the podium has freed what he calls his other self. "A conductor is an extrovert, but the composer is an introvert. The composer hides from publicity but the conductor must seek it. As a musician I am always at odds with myself.

"But I am not tense — oh, in rehearsal I am nervous, — but deep down I am not tense. I have come to realize that I am alone. We are all alone. When you die, you are alone. Okay, then why try to be a big success, to make a lot of money? I have finally come to realize that if you do things without fear or without corruption, you are honest with yourself. Is there anything else in life?

RAFAEL KUBELIK
. . . Czech in balance

Unhappy Ending

"You must have convictions and do what you think is right. Chicago? I enjoyed myself there, but the ladies did not like me and the Cassidy (Claudia Cassidy, former music critic of the Chicago Tribune) hated me and at the end of three years I said goodbye.

"It was not too much Czech music, it was too much contemporary music. I looked back through my records the other day. In three years, I played 60 contemporary works, but only eight Czech things among them and from the romantic era, the four symphonies of Dvorak, and "The Bartered Bride."

"It wasn't too much Czech music; the audience wasn't ready for contemporary works. But I had to do what I felt — and I did," he shrugged.

"It was wonderful to sit in my room with nothing to do but write. No airplanes, no rehearsals, no commitments. I will begin to conduct some of my own things now. I have played so many other composers, I think I owe it to myself to try some of my own music — not here, but in Europe. To see how they go," he said.

Meanwhile, Kubelik has remarried and he credits his new wife with smoothing the way for him, helping him to this plateau of happiness he professes. And the Chicago Symphony came to him again, to ask him to lead three weeks of concerts — a stint he has just completed.

"I had to go back. I had to complete the arch," he said. "I was very happy to be back. It was a most warm welcome, a family-like approach to the orchestra, from the public and from the critics. To find people who are faithful — that is the biggest value a human being should strive for."

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fourteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 13, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, at 8:30 o'clock

RAFAEL KUBELIK, Guest Conductor

HAYDN ..... Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102
- I. Largo; Allegro vivace
- II. Adagio
- III. Menuetto: Allegro; Trio
- IV. Finale: Presto

MARTINU ..... Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani
- I. Poco allegro
- II. Largo; Adagio
- III. Allegro

Piano Solo: CHARLES WILSON
(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... *Symphony in D minor
- I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
- II. Allegretto
- III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[841]

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100

JAN 7 1967 New England Newsclip

Thurs. at 7:30
Open rehearsal with guest conductor Rafael Kubelik.

Fri. at 2:
Kubelik leads the orchestra in Haydn's Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102; Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, with piano soloist Charles Wilson, and Franck's Symphony in D minor. Repeat performance Sat. at 8:30

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

JAN 14 1967

Kubelik Makes His Debut With BSO

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Bohuslav Martinu's double concerto for two string orchestras, piano and kettledrums, encaustic music of protest, received its first performance here yesterday afternoon when Rafael Kubelik made his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest conductor. Currently, this son of Jan Kubelik, great Czech violinist, is music director of the Bavarian Radio Orchestra at Munich.

Rafael Kubelik

Martinu's intense and moving masterwork was written amid the stresses strains of impending war after the betrayal of Czechoslovakia, the composer's homeland, at Munich in 1938. It echoes the distempers of that tragic interlude.

This singular concerto, though for double orchestra, is marked by creative ability and coloristic skill, being set out for two answering bodies of strings, as well as piano and percussive instruments. Charles Wilson, the BSO assistant conductor, was keyboard artist. What may become Martinu's most enduring opus, manifesting an unyielding idiom, was set forth splendidly.

Its germinal theme, which can be traced back to Beethoven, through Liszt, also is the cell-like motif for Cesar Franck's D-Minor symphony, which concluded yesterday's concert. Martinu plays it straight in the opening poco allegro, runs it backwards in the concluding allegro; Czech and double-Czech.

Curtain-raiser was Haydn's 102d symphony (B&H #12, Salomon Series #9, in B flat), appropriate for the guest conductor's debut, since it was featured at the first BSO concert after its foundation in 1881. The B-flat symphony is among Haydn's finer works, being dramatic in scope and magnificent as sheer music.

Kubelik's ecstatic reading was true classicism, yet full of expressivity and urgency of feeling. It was a skillful performance, sweeping and powerful, but the scope of the "Father of the Symphony's" score is sufficiently expansive to accommodate such a wide-ranging reading.

After the interval there came a fervent, controlled, superbly evocative performance of Franck's prefabricated, tuneful D-minor symphony. The "Belgian Bruckner's" only work in that format mingles an academic methodology with maudlin sentiment, producing a chimerical monster whose hybrid strain fortunately has vanished from the musical scene. In the world of mules, there are no rules, as Ogden Nash commented.

Franck's melodic style was based upon the chromatic harmonies of Wagner's "Tristan;" the Parisian organist-composer's original gimmick, also anticipated by Liszt, was a cyclical format in which the cell-like theme is repeated throughout the symphony's three movements, splitting, in the finale, into similar twins recognizable as the thematic origins of "Give Me Something to Remember You By" and "Lady Dressed in Jade."

His opening movement is notable for the alternating of slow and rapid segments, while the peculiar middle movement, a synthesis of scherzo and andante, is rather enjoyable for its melodic transmutations. However, many listeners nowadays find the overweening pretensions of this symphony too mystical, with too slim a margin between loftiness and pomposity.

Franck's symphony must be played with fervor, it is true (but not with the perfervid mannerisms it acquired when Symphony and Carnegie halls were Munchausen!) but it also must be played with restraint, otherwise the climaxes become blatant and vulgar, careening into bathos. Kubelik, with his precisely articulated beat and Furtwanglerish left hand, disdained to fume and fret over this symphony's top-lofty nobility and strangely gripping musical exaltation, playing down overly sentimental aspects.

Instead, he regarded it as a well-balanced musical work, imparting form and simplicity to its musical rhetoric, but, at the same time, permitting plenty of warmth and understanding to seep into his sympathetic interpretation. Such comparatively restrained treatment stressed melodic lines rather than dynamic qualities, thus making the churnings and heavings of this super-Romantic score less objectionable, so that it appeared to be an important musical creation.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

JAN 8 1967 New England Newsclip

Three Guest Conductors With Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony will have three guest conductors during the mid-season leave of absence of the orchestra's music director, Erich Leinsdorf.

Rafael Kubelik will conduct the concerts for the next two weeks in Boston and also take the orchestra on tour the last week in January.

Gunther Schuller, president-elect of the New England Conservatory, returns this Tuesday to conduct a program that he directed in November. And the London Symphony's Colin Davis appears in Boston Feb. 3-4.

Leinsdorf returns Feb. 10, after conducting the Concertgebouw in The Hague and Amsterdam.

Kubelik's first pair of concerts, Friday at 2 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m., will feature the first Symphony Hall performances of the Martinu Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Percussion. The orchestra's new assistant conductor, Charles Wilson, will be the pianist.

These concerts will open with Haydn's Symphony No. 104, and conclude with Franck's D minor Symphony. Final preparation for the program will come at the open rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30.

Schuller's program Tuesday evening at 7:30 will consist of the Dvorak "Othello" Overture, Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony and the Charles Ives Symphony No. 4. The concert will be televised and broadcast on Ch. 2 and WGBH-FM.

For Kubelik's concerts Jan. 20-21, the Mahler Symphony No. 9 is scheduled.

Son of the Czech violinist, Jan Kubelik, Rafael Kubelik was trained at the Prague Conservatory, and later was music director of the Czech Philharmonic. Conductor of the Chicago Symphony in 1950-53, he is now active at London's Covent Garden, and as guest conductor of many American orchestras.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

FEB 5 1967

New England Newsclip

Kubelik Chooses Exile to Privileges

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Rafael Kubelik was the Boston Symphony's interesting and impressive guest conductor from Jan. 13 to 31. He had last conducted in Boston in 1953: That was with the Chicago Symphony, which he then headed. Kubelik's present orchestra is the Bavarian Radio Symphony in Munich, though he and his wife, the English soprano Elsie Morison, live in Lucerne, Switzerland.

Kubelik holds a Swiss-issued stateless passport. He was born in Czecho-Slovakia in 1914, but left after the Communist takeover in 1948.

As he puts it, "I lost my country in order not to lose my nation." He will not take citizenship of another country, neither will he return home until there is another sort of government. "On that subject," he says, "I am adamant. I am anti, openly anti. I have been invited to conduct there often, but I could not go, being used by them as an item of propaganda, and accepting benefits and privileges that are denied the rest of my people."

Kubelik believes in principles and commitment. In Chicago, his insistence on his responsibility to contemporary music got him into trouble with his board. Later, at the Covent Garden Opera in London, it was his demand for copious rehearsal. No wonder that Mahler, whose 9th Symphony he led here, and who in the days of his dictatorship at the Vienna Opera was attacked by many [illegible] poser, Mahler one of the great geniuses," said Kubelik, and went on to tell how he had outraged one of the first desk men in the Vienna Philharmonic by saying so. He recalled also a Vienna Philharmonic rehearsal at a Salzburg Festival in the middle 50s when he was working on the Mahler 5th.

One of the string players remarked loudly that he thought Hitler had done a good thing in banning Mahler's music. Kubelik left the rehearsal to return only after the player's departure. The player apologized a year later.

Vienna was never, and is not now, a Mahler town, and Kubelik is convinced that Viennese political antisemitism is an important factor here. The Vienna Philharmonic's Mahler resistence is also personally based in another way: "So many of the players have a father or grandfathers who played in the orchestra and who remember something disagreeable Herr Direktor Mahler said to them in 1907."

Amsterdam, thanks to Mengelberg, was the Mahler capital in the earliset part of the century, but Prague, according to Kubelik, was not far behind. Kubelik recalls annual visits from Bruno Walter, whose active Mahler repertory was limited, however, to only a few works. Locally, there were Vaclav Talich and Alexander von Zemlinsky, Schoenberg's teacher and brother-in-law by his first marriage.

When he speaks about Mahler's music, Kubelik emphasizes its human content and its reflection of Mahler's personal greatness. In the 9th Symphony, for example, he talked of the distinction between the hatred expressed in the earlier movements and the redeeming, all-embracing love in the final Adagio. "But in that hatred Mahler included himself. He never felt superior, and he never stood to one side."

His love for Mahler does not go so far as to include the reworkings of the Beethoven Ninth and of the Schumann symphonies. The former, with its heavy brass, he finds "horrible;" the latter simply unnecessary. He is in general wary of much editing and retouching, and is convinced the Schumann symphonies can be made to sound as written. "One must be careful, of course."

Responsibility and self-scrutiny are frequent subjects of Kubelik's conversation. Conducting, he maintains, is difficult.

"When I was younger, I often lay awake nights after concerts, mentally going through the whole thing again, analyzing my beat, wondering why something went wrong here, what I should have done better there." Now he works as hard and prepares as conscientiously as ever, "but I take perhaps a more fatalistic view of perfectibility."

If a good horn player makes a bubble, it is likely, according to Kubelik, to be the conductor's fault, perhaps some tenseness or hesitation in the beat that is translated into the player's physical response. "It is too easy to blame others without considering your own share. You must rule yourself before you can rule others."

Kubelik's musical personality and character were formed partly by his father, the celebrated violinist, Jan Kubelik, and by a piano-playing uncle with whom he played duets, thus getting his basic education in classical symphonic repertory.

He reveres his father as a great musician, and one whose career took an essentially tragic turn. "He was a kind of unfinished symphony," the son said. "He made his reputation at the beginning as a technical wizard, and one, I must say, of unparalleled facility and brilliance. You know, when he began in the 1890s, he was probably the first violinist in half a century to play the Paganini Caprices."

"Soon, though, he became tired of that, but he had been typed in a certain way, and it was a terrible struggle for him to be accepted as something other than a player of showpieces."

"He did not have a large, sensuous sound like the Auer pupils," Kubelik continued. "I would say his tone was sweet, though with no sense of stickiness, except that he just hated the word 'dolce.' 'Espressivo' was something he understood very well, but 'dolce' he hated. He was at his best in Bach and Beethoven, and these he played with a most marvelous purity."

I asked about the compositions of both father and son. Kubelik would like some day to conduct his father's A minor Symphony again, a work he remembers with affection, but whose only score was left behind in Prague and is now inaccessible. He also spoke of three violin concertos, romantic in sentiment but classical in layout, with much that is remarkably lively and original in the solo parts, though terribly difficult.

As for his own composing, there is the usual performer's problem of too little time. Recently Kubelik took a year off from conducting and spent much time composing, "but now I must remain silent again. By the way," he added, "my music is much more conservative than a lot that I conduct."

Kubelik recalled that his conducting debut in 1934 was at a concert at which his father played Rafael's Fantasia for violin and orchestra. The program also included the Beethoven Violin Concerto and the Tchaikovsky 4th.

It was a deeply moving for the then 20-year-old musician, but he remembers that his father admonished him, "If you become more modern, I cannot go along with you."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JAN 14 1967

The ARTS

Kubelik Conducts In Brilliant Debut

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Rafael Kubelik's first concert with the Boston Symphony was a great pleasure. His work has spontaneous musicality, intelligence, rhythmic animation, and feeling for pace.

Kubelik gave an exceptionally strong performance of Martinu's Double Concerto. Martinu was a composer with an interesting musical imagination and with much to say.

A certain inner laziness often kept him from saying it: it was easier to fall into the merely decorative, into mechanical routine, and, in the decade before his death in 1959, into sentimentality.

The Double Concerto, like Honegger's string symphony, which it helped inspire, was a work of protest against the terrible times the late 1930s were.

It was also Martinu's response to the piece he considered the most moving orchestral work of our century, Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion, and Celesta.

It has not the economy and precision that informs even Bartok's most impassioned utterance, but it is shapely and energetic.

Its dense fabric is at least reasonably precisely imagined and worked, and ferocious dissonance, always within a tonal frame, is used to powerful dramatic effect.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Rafael Kubelik conducts Mozart's Symphony No. 102 in B flat; Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani; and Franck's Symphony in D minor. Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

The work makes a splendid sound, and that aspect, along with all others, was superbly realized in Kubelik's conducting and in the playing of the Boston Symphony strings, pianist Charles Wilson, and timpanist Everett Firth.

The program was wrong in stating that this was the first Boston performance of the Double Concerto: Kubelik conducted it here with the Chicago Symphony in 1953.

And the program was, to say the least, unmannerly in quoting verbatim from Herbert Glass's annotations from the Artia record, but without acknowledgment.

The Haydn performance, though kept on an almost perilously delicate scale, had lovely qualities, especially in the later movements. The Adagi was distinguished for its nicely found, flowing tempo, and for Kubelik's ability sensitively to distinguish principal notes in the melody from main ones.

I regret, though, that like most conductors, Kubelik cannot get himself to believe in the long, low trumpet note five bars from the end of the Adagio, and that he left it out.

The Franck, even though there was some indelicate playing, went excellently.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755

JAN 14 1967

Kubelik conducts

Martinů concerto

By Clifford Barnes

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

For his first appearance as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Rafael Kubelik chose works from the 18th, 19th, and 20th centuries. The Haydn Symphony No. 102 was interpreted in good classic style Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall, but the works by César Franck and Bohuslav Martinu revealed the conductor's forte: emotion.

His conducting motions are expansive, yet they are always expressive and precise. There was firmness for much of the Haydn. Then lighter passages had rhythmic pliancy. The Menuetto had the quality of a peasant ländler. Its trio section, featuring the woodwinds, neatly brought on a more tranquil mood. The subtlety of the rhythms in the Adagio was not as evident as some conductors make it.

Careful phrasing

The Franck D minor Symphony must be played with fervor. However, restraint is a key word if the climaxes are to fall in place. Mr. Kubelik made the listener too aware of a constant search for emotion. The dynamics of the first movement were as contrasting as possible.

The second movement succeeded better than the others because of the careful phrasing of Laurence Thorstenberg's English horn solo, and because the "scherzo" sections achieved a magical quality. The opening chords of the last movement brought a swift return to the heavy drama which filled the symphony. It ended in a blaze of glory—the romantic apotheosis.

Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano, and Timpani made the strongest impression of the program. Bostion has figured prominently in performing the works of this composer in the past, particularly through Koussevitzky and Munch. Therefore it is surprising that this composition, which the composer considers to be "his most important creation," should wait until now for its Boston Symphony première.

An enlarged string orchestra was divided and seated on opposite sides of the stage. The purpose was more to create two bodies of sound than for any antiphonal effect, which was only incidental. Charles Wilson, new assistant conductor of the orchestra, played the piano solo. Everett Firth made the importance of the timpani known from the startling opening notes of the concerto.

Piano cadenza

The composer announced musically at the beginning that he had something worthwhile to say. Then he continued to involve us in a stirring way, not forgetting to make his statements inventive and interesting. The work is emotion-packed, but not sentimental.

The piano's most effective moments came in the second movement when a plaintive treble melody was spelled out over an unlikely bass accompaniment. The finale whipped up a stormy fury. Even though the composer spoke of dissonances in this piece, there are none that can't be swallowed whole today.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

FEB 5 1967

New England Newsclip

Kubelik Chooses Exile to Privileges

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

Rafael Kubelik was the Boston Symphony's interesting and impressive guest conductor from Jan. 13 to 31. He had last conducted in Boston in 1953: That was with the Chicago Symphony, which he then headed. Kubelik's present orchestra is the Bavarian Radio Symphony in Munich, though he and his wife, the English soprano Elsie Morison, live in Lucerne, Switzerland.

Kubelik holds a Swiss-issued stateless passport. He was born in Czecho-Slovakia in 1914, but left after the Communist takeover in 1948.

As he puts it, "I lost my country in order not to lose my nation." He will not take citizenship of another country, neither will he return home until there is another sort of government. "On that subject," he says, "I am adamant. I am anti, openly anti. I have been invited to conduct there often, but I could not go, being used by them as an item of propaganda, and accepting benefits and privileges that are denied the rest of my people."

Kubelik believes in principles and commitment. In Chicago, his insistence on his responsibility to contemporary music got him into trouble with his board. Later, at the Covent Garden Opera in London, it was his demand for copious rehearsal. No wonder that Mahler, whose 9th Symphony he led here, and who in the days of his dictatorship at the Vienna Opera was attacked by many [illegible] that hatred Mahler included himself. He never felt superior, and he never stood to one side."

"Strauss is a good composer, Mahler one of the great geniuses," said Kubelik, and went on to tell how he had outraged one of the first desk men in the Vienna Philharmonic by saying so. He recalled also a Vienna Philharmonic rehearsal at a Salzburg Festival in the middle 50s when he was working on the Mahler 5th.

One of the string players remarked loudly that he thought Hitler had done a good thing in banning Mahler's music. Kubelik left the rehearsal to return only after the player's departure. The player apologized a year later.

Vienna was never, and is not now, a Mahler town, and Kubelik is convinced that Viennese political antisemitism is an important factor here. The Vienna Philharmonic's Mahler resistence is also personally based in another way: "So many of the players have a father or grandfathers who played in the orchestra and who remember something disagreeable Herr Direktor Mahler said to them in 1907."

Amsterdam, thanks to Mengelberg, was the Mahler capital in the earliset part of the century, but Prague, according to Kubelik, was not far behind. Kubelik recalls annual visits from Bruno Walter, whose active Mahler repertory was limited, however, to only a few works. Locally, there were Vaclav Talich and Alexander von Zemlinsky, Schoenberg's teacher and brother-in-law by his first marriage.

When he speaks about Mahler's music, Kubelik emphasizes its human content and its reflection of Mahler's personal greatness. In the 9th Symphony, for example, he talked of the distinction between the hatred expressed in the earlier movements and the redeeming, all-embracing love in the final Adagio. "But in his love for Mahler does not go so far as to include the resoorings of the Beethoven Ninth and of the Schumann symphonies. The former, with its heavy brass, he finds "horrible;" the latter simply unnecessary. He is in general wary of much editing and retouching, and is convinced the Schumann symphonies can be made to sound as written. "One must be careful, of course."

Responsibility and self-scrutiny are frequent subjects of Kubelik's conversation. Conducting, he maintains, is difficult.

"When I was younger, I often lay awake nights after concerts, mentally going through the whole thing again, analyzing my beat, wondering why something went wrong here, what I should have done better there." Now he works as hard and prepares as conscientiously as ever, "but I take perhaps a more fatalistic view of perfectibility."

If a good horn player makes a bubble, it is likely, according to Kubelik, to be the conductor's fault, perhaps some tenseness or hesitation in the beat that is translated into the player's physical response. "It is too easy to blame others without considering your own share. You must rule yourself before you can rule others."

Kubelik's musical personality and character were formed partly by his father, the celebrated violinist, Jan Kubelik, and by a piano-playing uncle with whom he played duets, thus getting his basic education in classical symphonic repertory.

He reveres his father as a great musician, and one whose career took an essentially tragic turn. "He was a kind of unfinished symphony," the son said. "He made his reputation at the beginning as a technical wizard, and one, I must say, of unparalleled facility and brilliance. You know, when he began in the 1890s, he was probably the first violinist in half a century to play the Paganini Caprices."

"Soon, though, he became tired of that, but he had been typed in a certain way, and it was a terrible struggle for him to be accepted as something other than a player of showpieces."

"He did not have a large, sensuous sound like the Auer pupils," Kubelik continued. "I would say his tone was sweet, though with no sense of stickiness, except that he just hated the word 'dolce.' 'Espressivo' was something he understood very well, but 'dolce' he hated. He was at his best in Bach and Beethoven, and these he played with a most marvelous purity."

I asked about the compositions of both father and son. Kubelik would like some day to conduct his father's A minor Symphony again, a work he remembers with affection, but whose only score was left behind in Prague and is now inaccessible. He also spoke of three violin concertos, romantic in sentiment but classical in layout, with much that is remarkably lively and original in the solo parts, though terribly difficult.

As for his own composing, there is the usual performer's problem of too little time. Recently Kubelik took a year off from conducting and spent much time composing, "but now I must remain silent again. By the way," he added, "my music is much more conservative than a lot that I conduct."

Kubelik recalled that his conducting debut in 1934 was at a concert at which his father played Rafael's Fantasia for violin and orchestra. The program also included the Beethoven Violin Concerto and the Tchaikovsky 4th.

It was a deeply moving for the then 20-year-old musician, but he remembers that his father admonished him, "If you become more modern, I cannot go along with you."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JAN 14 1967

The ARTS

Kubelik Conducts In Brilliant Debut

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Rafael Kubelik's first concert with the Boston Symphony was a great pleasure. His work has spontaneous musicality, intelligence, rhythmic animation, and feeling for pace.

Kubelik gave an exceptionally strong performance of Martinu's Double Concerto. Martinu was a composer with an interesting musical imagination and with much to say.

A certain inner laziness often kept him from saying it: it was easier to fall into the merely decorative, into mechanical routine, and, in the decade before his death in 1959, into sentimentality.

The Double Concerto, like Honegger's string symphony, which it helped inspire, was a work of protest against the terrible times the late 1930s were.

It was also Martinu's response to the piece he considered the most moving orchestral work of our century, Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion, and Celesta.

It has not the economy and precision that informs even Bartok's most impassioned utterance, but it is shapely and energetic.

Its dense fabric is at least reasonably precisely imagined and worked, and ferocious dissonance, always within a tonal frame, is used to powerful dramatic effect.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Rafael Kubelik conducting. Haydn's Symphony No. 102 in B flat; Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani; and Franck's Symphony in D minor. Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

The work makes a splendid sound, and that aspect, along with all others, was superbly realized in Kubelik's conducting and in the playing of the Boston Symphony strings, pianist Charles Wilson, and timpanist Everett Firth.

The program was wrong in stating that this was the first Boston performance of the Double Concerto: Kubelik conducted it here with the Chicago Symphony in 1953.

And the program was, to say the least, unmannerly in quoting verbatim from Herbert Glass's annotations from the Artia record, but without acknowledgment.

The Haydn performance, though kept on an almost perilously delicate scale, had lovely qualities, especially in the later movements. The Adagi was distinguished for its nicely found, flowing tempo, and for Kubelik's ability sensitively to distinguish principal notes in the melody from main ones.

I regret, though, that like most conductors, Kubelik cannot get himself to believe in the long, low trumpet note five bars from the end of the Adagio, and that he left it out.

The Franck, even though there was some indelicate playing, went excellently.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755

JAN 14 1967

Kubelik conducts

Martinů concerto

By Clifford Barnes

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

For his first appearance as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Rafael Kubelik chose works from the 18th, 19th, and 20th centuries. The Haydn Symphony No. 102 was interpreted in good classic style Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall, but the works by César Franck and Bohuslav Martinu revealed the conductor's forte: emotion.

His conducting motions are expansive, yet they are always expressive and precise. There was firmness for much of the Haydn. Then lighter passages had rhythmic pliancy. The Menuetto had the quality of a peasant ländler. Its trio section, featuring the woodwinds, neatly brought on a more tranquil mood. The subtlety of the rhythms in the Adagio was not as evident as some conductors make it.

Careful phrasing

The Franck D minor Symphony must be played with fervor. However, restraint is a key word if the climaxes are to fall in place. Mr. Kubelik made the listener too aware of a constant search for emotion. The dynamics of the first movement were as contrasting as possible.

The second movement succeeded better than the others because of the careful phrasing of Laurence Thorstenberg's English horn solo, and because the "scherzo" sections achieved a magical quality. The opening chords of the last movement brought a swift return to the heavy drama which filled the symphony. It ended in a blaze of glory —the romantic apotheosis.

Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano, and Timpani made the strongest impression of the program. Boston has figured prominently in performing the works of this composer in the past, particularly through Koussevitzky and Munch. Therefore it is surprising that this composition, which the composer considers to be "his most important creation," should wait until now for its Boston Symphony première.

An enlarged string orchestra was divided and seated on opposite sides of the stage. The purpose was more to create two bodies of sound than for any antiphonal effect, which was only incidental. Charles Wilson, new assistant conductor of the orchestra, played the piano solo. Everett Firth made the importance of the timpani known from the startling opening notes of the concerto.

Piano cadenza

The composer announced musically at the beginning that he had something worthwhile to say. Then he continued to involve us in a stirring way, not forgetting to make his statements inventive and interesting. The work is emotion-packed, but not sentimental.

The piano's most effective moments came in the second movement when a plaintive treble melody was spelled out over an unlikely bass accompaniment. The finale whipped up a stormy fury. Even though the composer spoke of dissonances in this piece, there are none that can't be swallowed whole today.

51

TUES. A #7 JAN. 17

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JAN 14 1967

SYMPHONY

Tempo, Substance Mark Reading of Haydn Work

By McLAREN HARRIS

I must confess to a certain lack of enthusiasm in advance of Friday's Symphony, not entirely dispelled by the performance itself. Not the occasion of Rafael Kubelik's first visit as guest conductor contributed to this lack, but instead matters of the program, which included symphonies by Haydn and Franck and a Double Concerto of Bohuslav Martinu.

Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102, as most all of Haydn, is above reproach as a musical creation, and Mr. Kubelik's manner bespoke an intent to preserve its innate cheer, sometimes jocular stance and instrumental ingenuity. Notwithstanding swinging elbows and snapping wrists, the conductor emphasized precision in his beat-patterns and coaxed like responses in attacks and releases from the orchestra; and though he sometimes compelled two arms to do what one should be able to accomplish alone, no lags in motion or heaviness in phrasing were detectable.

In one respect it was a one-sided reading, for Haydn is equally beloved for his melodic felicity, in both quick and relaxed textures, and under Kubelik such linear beauty took second place to the sudden contrasts of tempo and substance and the on-or-off-beat accents which make these works such delights to perform. Even at that, Haydn spelled happiness.

DOUBLE CONCERTO

But one Haydn symphony does not a program make, and the remainder hinted at possibilities not quite realized or pleasures gone by. Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani falls in the former category. Martinu was somewhat of a formalist, but an artful one; the two motives of the first movement, on a triadic pattern and the other in scale motion, make organized sense out of a muscular movement, developed in strong terms by the strings and interspersed with percussive strokes from piano and timpani.

The Largo, too, provides a delicate balance of forma and fantasy, wherein the counterpoint of the strings and piano cadenzas spin in quasi-improvisational curves, held to earth by chordal passages which frame the movement.

However, the finale is hell-bent for pure thrust, and its elements become lost in a swirl of frenzy, after which the final relaxation appears more as a loss of steam. The piano, which had to struggle uphill in the first movement and emerged more clearly in the Largo, is a non-entity here; on Friday its interjections couldn't be heard, through no doing of Charles Wilson, for the strings overwhelmed it. Anything can be imagined on paper, and that may be where this movement sounds best.

Perhaps time has run out for Franck's D minor Symphony in my hourglass. The composer's harmonic language fails to brighten anew each time it is heard, due to what I am tempted to call those infernal seventh chords, which alternate with the pure variey — even chains of them, sevenths resolving to sevenths; their omnipresence seems to slap a compromise upon whatever pointed statements Franck may have had in mind. Occasionally I feel that if Franck were purged of his sevenths there wouldn't be enough left for a single organ chorale.

D MINOR SYMPHONY

But hold on; the D minor Symphony was my friend once, and some of the reasons are still apparent. The theme which opens the second movement remains one of the most beautiful ever written, and fragments of that movement were even immortalized by their use on the "Lone Ranger" radio programs of yesteryear. As a whole the work has definite logic, purpose and sweep, if excessive harmonic color.

Mr. Kubelik was not about to deny Franck his virtues and vices, if you will, and the symphony gleamed in its full aural spectrum. The lines were liquid, the dynamic scope broad and each contrast bridged with gradual continuity. The brass work was bright, if infrequently overbearing.

Next week Mr. Kubelik returns to conduct two works: Mozart's Symphony No. 26 in E flat major, K. 184, and Gustav Mahler's epic Symphony No. 9.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Rafael Kubelik conducting, presented the fourteenth program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Charles Wilson was pianist for the Martinu concerto.

Symphony No. 102 in B flat major ..... Haydn
Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani .... Martinu
Symphony in D minor ..... Franck

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Seventh Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 17, at 8:30 o'clock

RAFAEL KUBELIK, Guest Conductor

HAYDN ..... Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102
I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegro; Trio
IV. Finale: Presto

MARTINU ..... Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani
I. Poco allegro
II. Largo; Adagio
III. Allegro

Piano Solo: CHARLES WILSON
(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... *Symphony in D minor
I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
JAN 14 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall.

Tues. at 8:30:

While BSO conductor Erich Leinsdorf continues his conducting stint in Amsterdam and The Hague, Rafael Kubelik continues to lead the orchestra. The program includes Haydn's Symphony No. 102; Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, with piano soloist Charles Wilson; and Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Fri. at 2:

Kubelik leads the orchestra in Mozart's Symphony No. 26 in E flat, K. 184, and Mahler's Symphony No. 9. Encore performance Sat. at 8:30.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000
JAN 19 1967
New England Newsclip

At the BSO

Rafael Kubelik Conducts

By PETER DAVISON

Though Rafael Kubelik has conducted in this country on numerous occasions in the last fifteen or twenty years, notably three seasons as music director of the Chicago Symphony, this listener had never heard him conduct a concert before. He is a vigorous conductor, attentive to the balance of the orchestra and to the color of the sounds it produces. He produced a very agreeable program at the weekend concerts — one which had enough of a Czech flavor to reflect Mr. Kubelik's own national background.

The first item was Haydn's B-flat Major Symphony, No. 102, one of the London symphonies, and a very pretty one indeed. It is one of the late Haydn symphonies that most unmistakably prefigures Beethoven, both in the use of codas in place of extended recapitulations, and in the robustness of the Minuet, which is relieved by a particularly ingratiating Trio. The Finale is racy, vigorous, not dazzling, but full of that gusto that Haydn so satisfactorily conveys. Each time I hear one of Haydn's late symphonies. I wonder why they aren't played more often.

Mr. Kubelik entered the twentieth century to conduct a piece by his countryman Bohuslav Martinu, the Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, composed in 1938, and only once before performed in Boston. Like much of Martinu's work, it is a skin-and-nerve piece — it makes a keen impression on the senses without necessarily moving the listener by its profundity or pathos, or impressing his intelligence by the intricacy of its structure (as no doubt Elliot Carter's Concerto last week impressed the experts who were present). Martinu is a master of orchestral sound, and the dazzling dissonances, the staccato string passages, the percussive use of the piano all gave pleasure in the first movement, which concluded with a particularly crushing dissonance. The string color extended even farther in the second movement (Largo; Adagio) with its opening canons, diminishing into faster and faster repetitions. Finally, the Allegro movement scraped the nerve-ends in the most agreeable manner, though the strings did not seem quite up to the very quick repetitions of the same note over and over again — not unlike the pianist's problem in the accompaniment to Schubert's Erlkonig. All in all, fine Martinu, expressively played, if a little inaccurately.

Mr. Kubelik concluded after intermission with the all-too-familiar Cesar Franck Symphony in D Minor, with its marvelous melodies, its air of triumph and sublimity that is not quite ever borne out by the structure of the music, or so it seems to this listener. The over-insistent first movement (which was objected to, on its first performance in 1899 by the Paris Conservatoire, because Franck had been daring enough to use an English Horn in a Symphony!) is followed by the splendid opening pizzicato accompaniment to the English horn in the second movement, and by the sweeping rhythms of the third. Such melodic material! but the composer keeps clumping the themes together, contrasting apples to oranges, mixing one chunk of music after another until the result is fruit salad. It turns out to be, alas, a disappointing symphony in the end. Mr. Kubelik conducted it energetically and well; he can produce marvelous big chords when he wants them and the last chord of the last movement was enough to lift you out of your seat. He gave the old warhorse a fine run for its money.

At the concerts of January 20 and 21, Mr. Kubelik will conduct Mozart's Symphony No. 26 in E-flat major. (I recommend that listeners be sure to arrive on time; Mr. Kubelik does not admit late-comers until after the end of the symphony, not after the first movement.) After intermission he will conduct Mahler's Ninth Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,699
JAN 15 1967

Show Guide | MUSIC

4 Concerts Under Baton of Kubelik

Rafael Kubelik, music director of the Bavarian Radio Orchestra in Munich, enters his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week.

He will conduct three concerts in Symphony Hall: the seventh program of the Tuesday "A" series at 8:30 and the fifteenth pair of weekend concerts Friday afternoon at 2:00 and Saturday evening at 8:30. Thursday night he will lead the orchestra in its third concert of the season at Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Providence.

Tuesday evening Mr. Kubelik will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 102, and Bohuslav Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestra's, Piano and Timpani with Charles Wilson, assistant conductor performing the piano solo. After intermission Mr. Kubelik will conclude with the Franck Symphony in D minor.

51

TUES. A #7 JAN. 17

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JAN 14 1967

SYMPHONY

Tempo, Substance Mark Reading of Haydn Work

By McLAREN HARRIS

I must confess to a certain lack of enthusiasm in advance of Friday's Symphony, not entirely dispelled by the performance itself. Not the occasion of Rafael Kubelik's first visit as guest conductor contributed to this lack, but instead matters of the program, which included symphonies by Haydn and Franck and a Double Concerto of Bohuslav Martinu.

Haydn's Symphony in B flat, No. 102, as most all of Haydn, is above reproach as a musical creation, and Mr. Kubelik's manner bespoke an intent to preserve its innate cheer, sometimes jocular stance and instrumental ingenuity. Notwithstanding swinging elbows and snapping wrists, the conductor emphasized precision in his beat-patterns and coaxed like responses in attacks and releases from the orchestra; and though he sometimes compelled two arms to do what one should be able to accomplish alone, no lags in motion or heaviness in phrasing were detectable.

In one respect it was a one-sided reading, for Haydn is equally beloved for his melodic felicity, in both quick and relaxed textures, and under Kubelik such linear beauty took second place to the sudden contrasts of tempo and substance and the on-or-off-beat accents which make these works such delights to perform. Even at that, Haydn spelled happiness.

DOUBLE CONCERTO

But one Haydn symphony does not a program make, and the remainder hinted at possibilities not quite realized or pleasures gone by. Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani falls in the former category. Martinu was somewhat of a formalist, but an artful one; the two motives of the first movement, on a triadic pattern and the other in scale motion, make organized sense out of a muscular movement, developed in strong terms by the strings and interspersed with percussive strokes from piano and timpani.

The Largo, too, provides a delicate balance of forma and fantasy, wherein the counterpoint of the strings and piano cadenzas spin in quasi-improvisational curves, held to earth by chordal passages which frame the movement.

However, the finale is hell-bent for pure thrust, and its elements become lost in a swirl of frenzy, after which the final relaxation appears more as a loss of steam. The piano, which had to struggle uphill in the first movement and emerged more clearly in the Largo, is a non-entity here; on Friday its interjections couldn't be heard, through no doing of Charles Wilson, for the strings overwhelmed it. Anything can be imagined on paper, and that may be where this movement sounds best.

Perhaps time has run out for Franck's D minor Symphony in my hourglass. The composer's harmonic language fails to brighten anew each time it is heard, due to what I am tempted to call those infernal seventh chords, which alternate with the pure variey — even chains of them, sevenths resolving to sevenths; their omnipresence seems to slap a compromise upon whatever pointed statements Franck may have had in mind. Occasionally I feel that if Franck were purged of his sevenths there wouldn't be enough left for a single organ chorale.

D MINOR SYMPHONY

But hold on; the D minor Symphony was my friend once, and some of the reasons are still apparent. The theme which opens the second movement remains one of the most beautiful ever written, and fragments of that movement were even immortalized by their use on the "Lone Ranger" radio programs of yesteryear. As a whole the work has definite logic, purpose and sweep, if excessive harmonic color.

Mr. Kubelik was not about to deny Franck his virtues and vices, if you will, and the symphony gleamed in its full aural spectrum. The lines were liquid, the dynamic scope broad and each contrast bridged with gradual continuity. The brass work was bright, if infrequently overbearing.

Next week Mr. Kubelik returns to conduct two works: Mozart's Symphony No. 26 in E flat major, K. 184, and Gustav Mahler's epic Symphony No. 9.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Rafael Kubelik conducting, presented the fourteenth program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Charles Wilson was pianist for the Martinu concerto.

Symphony No. 102 in B flat major .....Haydn
Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani ....Martinu
Symphony in D minor .....Franck

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Seventh Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 17, at 8:30 o'clock

RAFAEL KUBELIK, Guest Conductor

HAYDN ..... Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102
I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegro; Trio
IV. Finale: Presto

MARTINU ..... Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani
I. Poco allegro
II. Largo; Adagio
III. Allegro

Piano Solo: CHARLES WILSON
(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... *Symphony in D minor
I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
JAN 14 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Boston:
Tues. at 8:30:
While BSO conductor Erich Leinsdorf continues his conducting stint in Amsterdam and The Hague, Rafael Kubelik continues to lead the orchestra. The program includes Haydn's Symphony No. 102; Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, with piano soloist Charles Wilson, and Franck's Symphony in D minor.
Fri. at 2:
Kubelik leads the orchestra in Mozart's Symphony No. 26 in E flat, K. 184, and Mahler's Symphony No. 9. Encore performance Sat. at 8:30.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000
JAN 19 1967
New England Newsclip

At the BSO

Rafael Kubelik Conducts

By PETER DAVISON

Though Rafael Kubelik has conducted in this country on numerous occasions in the last fifteen or twenty years, notably three seasons as music director of the Chicago Symphony, this listener had never heard him conduct a concert before. He is a vigorous conductor, attentive to the balance of the orchestra and to the color of the sounds it produces. He produced a very agreeable program at the weekend concerts — one which had enough of a Czech flavor to reflect Mr. Kubelik's own national background.

The first item was Haydn's B-flat Major Symphony, No. 102, one of the London symphonies, and a very pretty one indeed. It is one of the late Haydn symphonies that most unmistakably prefigures Beethoven, both in the use of codas in place of extended recapitulations, and in the robustness of the Minuet, which is relieved by a particularly ingratiating Trio. The Finale is racy, vigorous, not dazzling, but full of that gusto that Haydn so satisfactorily conveys. Each time I hear one of Haydn's late symphonies. I wonder why they aren't played more often.

Mr. Kubelik entered the twentieth century to conduct a piece by his countryman Bohuslav Martinu, the Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, composed in 1938, and only once before performed in Boston. Like much of Martinu's work, it is a skin-and-nerve piece — it makes a keen impression on the senses without necessarily moving the listener by its profundity or pathos, or impressing his intelligence by the intricacy of its structure (as no doubt Elliot Carter's Concerto last week impressed the experts who were present). Martinu is a master of orchestral sound, and the dazzling dissonances, the staccato string passages, the percussive use of the piano all gave pleasure in the first movement, which concluded with a particularly crushing dissonance. The string color extended even farther in the second movement (Largo; Adagio) with its opening canons, diminishing into faster and faster repetitions. Finally, the Allegro movement scraped the nerve-ends in the most agreeable manner, though the strings did not seem quite up to the very quick repetitions of the same note over and over again — not unlike the pianist's problem in the accompaniment to Schubert's Erlkonig. All in all, fine Martinu, expressively played, if a little inaccurately.

Mr. Kubelik concluded after intermission with the all-too-familiar Cesar Franck Symphony in D Minor, with its marvelous melodies, its air of triumph and sublimity that is not quite ever borne out by the structure of the music, or so it seems to this listener. The over-insistent first movement (which was objected to, on its first performance in 1899 by the Paris Conservatoire, because Franck had been daring enough to use an English Horn in a Symphony!) is followed by the splendid opening pizzicato accompaniment to the English horn in the second movement, and by the sweeping rhythms of the third. Such melodic material! but the composer keeps clumping the themes together, contrasting apples to oranges, mixing one chunk of music after another until the result is fruit salad. It turns out to be, alas, a disappointing symphony in the end. Mr. Kubelik conducted it energetically and well; he can produce marvelous big chords when he wants them and the last chord of the last movement was enough to lift you out of your seat. He gave the old warhorse a fine run for its money.

At the concerts of January 20 and 21, Mr. Kubelik will conduct Mozart's Symphony No. 26 in E-flat major. (I recommend that listeners be sure to arrive on time; Mr. Kubelik does not admit late-comers until after the end of the symphony, not after the first movement.) After intermission he will conduct Mahler's Ninth Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
JAN 15 1967

Show Guide | MUSIC

4 Concerts Under Baton of Kubelik

Rafael Kubelik, music director of the Bavarian Radio Orchestra in Munich, enters his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week.

He will conduct three concerts in Symphony Hall: the seventh program of the Tuesday "A" series at 8:30 and the fifteenth pair of weekend concerts Friday afternoon at 2:00 and Saturday evening at 8:30. Thursday night he will lead the orchestra in its third concert of the season at Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Providence.

Tuesday evening Mr. Kubelik will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 102, and Bohuslav Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestra's, Piano and Timpani with Charles Wilson, assistant conductor performing the piano solo. After intermission Mr. Kubelik will conclude with the Franck Symphony in D minor.

FRI. + SAT. #15 JAN. 20 + 21

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
JAN 29 1967
New England Newsclip

McLAREN HARRIS, Musice Critic

Gustav Mahler Explores Feeling

Rafael Kubelik is a tall man with receding hair, broad shoulders, large hands and a profound admiration for the music of Gustav Mahler. As guest conductor with the Boston Symphony week before last he presented Mahler's Symphony No. 9—a formidable task for a conductor and a frightening one, it would seem, for a guest—and accomplished a very nearly definitive reading in many respects.

During a recent talk his thoughts were on Mahler the man. "Many people who had contact with Mahler during his years in Vienna found him very difficult," said Mr. Kubelik, "and they accused him of having no love for either man or God. But it was not true. For all his anger, all the tragedy and despair one may find in his music, Mahler was a great believer in God and humanity.

"Perhaps more than any other composer he explored and tried to express human feeling. The early symphonies deal with man's relationship to God and nature; the middle symphonies, Nos. 5 and 6 in particular, are the tragic ones, raising the questions about man's ability to control his destiny, etc.; the final works attempt a summation, a reconciliation to these views."

Mr. Kubelik is the son of Jen Kubelik, a famous Czech violinist-composer, and was reared in Prague. "Mahler was an early success in Prague," he recalled, "due to the performances under Alexander von Zemlinsky and expecially those under Bruno Walter, who was a frequent guest there. Mahler was always very popular in Amsterdam, too, because of Willem Mengelberg, who conducted the Concertgebouw Orchestra for so long.

"There is also a lot of Mahler in London these days," he continued. "I conducted the 4th at Glyndebourne not so long ago. That was not at all the case during the war, however. You invited failure by conducting Mahler in those days."

Somewhat surprisingly, the conductor indicated that Vienna, where Mahler performed his greatest services in opera, had not taken much to him. "I do not like to say it, but there is still some anti-Semitism there." Mr. Kubelik stated. "Richard Strauss is their hero. Some time ago when I was a guest conductor there I made some remarks about Mahler being the great, creative genius, while Strauss, all right in his own behalf, simply could not compare with Mahler.

"The musicians were very angry with me, as if I had insulted a national hero," he said. "One in particular made some unkind remarks. But you know, more than a year later when I was in Salzburg, the same man came to me and apologized, and said that he now had a new understanding of the composer.

"As the way Mahler is played different now from what it was at the beginning?" he was asked.

"No," Mr. Kubelik responded, "interpretations have not essentially changed from earlier years. Mahler is still fairly new in many areas; his works have gained popularity just during the last 20 years. Perhaps after a while when his music is thoroughly known there will develop a sort of Mahler style; but it is still too early.

"There was a difference between the ways Walter and Zemlinsky played him," the conductor added. "Walter was very soft, you know. Everything was very lyric, very melodic; the movements sang. But sometimes you would get the feeling that it should be more dynamic, more contrasting, that it should be played with fist — and this was Zemlinsky's style.

"Zemlinsky did not look much like a conductor. He was frail, gaunt, and had a twitch" — Mr. Kubelik jerked his shoulder — "but when he conducted Mahler there came a fire into his eyes, and his face expressed every note of the music. He was very interesting to watch."

Mr. Kubelik conducted the National Theater in Brno and administered the Czech Philharmonic until 1948, when he left the country for England. He is "stateless," though he travels with a Swiss passport. Has he been back?

"No," he stated flatly. "I will not go back, even to visit, for a government which treats artists and musicians — my colleagues — so poorly. They have asked me many times — it would be good propaganda for them — but I have always refused. They even offered me an important position with money and prestige and everything, but I turned it down. Some people can't understand my attitude. But how could I accept such a position and then face my colleagues who are barely allowed to make a living?"

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fifteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 20, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 21, at 8:30 o'clock

RAFAEL KUBELIK, Guest Conductor

MOZART ..... Symphony No. 26, in E-flat major, K. 184

I. Molto presto
II. Andante
III. Allegro

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 9

I. Andante comodo
II. Im Tempo eines gemächlichen Ländlers
III. Rondo: Burleske
Allegro assai
IV. Adagio

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[905]

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
JAN 21 1967
New England Newsclip

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Kubelik at Symphony

Mahler's Ninth

By Harold Rogers

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Rafael Kubelik gave us the short and the long of it yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. He initiated his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony with Mozart's little Symphony No. 26 in E-flat, K. 184; and its three short movements, played without pause, whizzed by in less time than it takes for an audience to get settled into its seats.

Before we knew it—in slightly more than five minutes, perhaps — Mr. Kubelik was taking his bows, and the musicians were leaving the stage for the intermission. And so the listeners, a bit stunned, resigned themselves to an early interval.

The little symphony was far from Mozart's best, nor was Mr. Kubelik's reading of it the best Mozart. His baton hand tend to pound the air; he maintains the beat true enough, but the music thus lost its lift.

Questions raised

This curtain raiser merely served, of course, to ready us for the long of it—Mahler's Ninth Symphony. It lasts a full hour and 15 minutes and is not the most felicitous of his symphonies. It tends to greater verbosity, which is tiresome; yet it employs a higher dissonance content, which is compelling.

At times one wondered if the various patches of tonal fogginess were owing to Mahler's orchestration or to Mr. Kubelik's inability to keep the score in good order.

By and large, however, the conductor admirably set forth the vast sweep of the music, whipping up its climactic sunbursts. He is now far better at generating emotion than he was when last heard in Boston during his conductorship of the Chicago Symphony (1950-53).

All things considered, he gave us a most pleasant hour and 15 minutes.

EVENING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 415,850
JAN 18 1967
New England Newsclip

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-6200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JAN 19 1967

Music-Lover's Guide

Symphony to Perform Mahler's Last Work

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Gustav Mahler's last completed symphony, the Ninth, will be played by the Boston Symphony under Rafael Kubelik at its concerts this Friday and Saturday.

Mahler's first four symphonies contain much that is vocal in character. The first, though there is no actual singing, quotes the "Songs of a Wayfarer"; the other three have vocal movements and all draw, though not exclusively, on the collection of folk verse called "The Youth's Magic Horn." Symphonies 5 through 7 are purely instrumental, and Nos. 6 and 7, the least known Mahler, also are the most experimental and forward-looking works.

The next two large works, Symphony No. 8 and "The Song of the Earth," the latter called a symphony by Mahler though not assigned a number, are vocal. The next and final pair, Nos. 9 and 10, the latter incomplete at Mahler's death in 1911, are again for instruments alone.

Like Nos. 1 and 6, the Ninth is in four movements, but while the earlier works are in the tradition of the familiar four-movement symphonic pattern, the Ninth is not. In the Ninth one must attend to a work whose large form is idiosyncratic, if not indeed unique, and in which the expressive and structural focal point occur in unexpected places.

The first movement, Andante comodo, is the biggest and the most complex. Its layout has as much of the Rondo as of the Sonata movement about it. It is also a movement unusually rich in the variety of its episodes and moods.

The first page is a marvelous example of the subtlety of the language in late Mahler: the way the melody gathers momentum as it moves from short phrases (just two notes to start with) to longer ones; the way horn and violins together make up the melody rather than being in counterpoint in a conventional sense; the way the stresses of the violin's bowing seem to contradict the harmonic and rhythmic stresses; the many simultaneous accompaniment figurations; the transparency that informs this exceedingly full activity.

The second movement is a dance series, a Landler, a waltz, and a minuet, returning by way of the waltz to the Landler. It is the rambunctious waltz, rich source material for Shostakovich, that dominates the movement.

The third movement, entitled "Burleske," is the shortest, the quickest, and because it is the most concentrated, the one that is the real counterpoise to the first. It is an angry piece, but the episode with the solo trumpet and the harp glissandos is the sweetest music in the Ninth and, I often think, the most magical page in all Mahler. Mitropoulos said that in the "conventional," pre-Schoenberg repertory, the "Burleske" was the most difficult piece for orchestra he knew.

Some of the Mahler symphonies end in triumph or at least high spirits; the Sixth ends in the aftermath of catastrophe; the Ninth, like "The Song of the Earth," ends with farewell. This Adagio alternates rich chorale texture with cold, remote, desolate, thin-textured passages (dialogues between contrabassoon and violins, flute and basses, and the like). Finally, there is only the desolation: the music becomes slower, thinner, more discontinuous. The last, weak resistance is in the violas as they turn about the note whose sound will complete the cadence.

FRI. + SAT. #15 JAN. 20 + 21

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100

JAN 29 1967

New England Newsclip

McLAREN HARRIS, Musice Critic

Gustav Mahler Explores Feeling

Rafael Kubelik is a tall man with receding hair, broad shoulders, large hands and a profound admiration for the music of Gustav Mahler. As guest conductor with the Boston Symphony week before last he presented Mahler's Symphony No. 9—a formidable task for a conductor and a frightening one, it would seem, for a guest—and accomplished a very nearly definitive reading in many respects.

During a recent talk his thoughts were on Mahler the man. "Many people who had contact with Mahler during his years in Vienna found him very difficult," said Mr. Kubelik, "and they accused him of having no love for either man or God. But it was not true. For all his anger, all the tragedy and despair one may find in his music, Mahler was a great believer in God and humanity.

"Perhaps more than any other composer he explored and tried to express human feeling. The early symphonies deal with man's relationship to God and nature; the middle symphonies, Nos. 5 and 6 in particular, are the tragic ones, raising the questions about man's ability to control his destiny, etc.; the final works attempt a summation, a reconciliation to these views."

Mr. Kubelik is the son of Jen Kubelik, a famous Czech violinist-composer, and was reared in Prague. "Mahler was an early success in Prague," he recalled. "due to the performances under Alexander von Zemlinsky and expecially those under Bruno Walter, who was a frequent guest there. Mahler was always very popular in Amsterdam, too, because of Willem Mengelberg, who conducted the Concertgebouw Orchestra for so long.

"There is also a lot of Mahler in London these days," he continued. "I conducted the 4th at Glyndebourne not so long ago. That was not at all the case during the war, however. You invited failure by conducting Mahler in those days."

Somewhat surprisingly, the conductor indicated that Vienna, where Mahler performed his greatest services in opera, had not taken much to him. "I do not like to say it, but there is still some anti-Semitism there." Mr. Kubelik stated. "Richard Strauss is their hero. Some time ago when I was a guest conductor there I made some remarks about Mahler being the great, creative genius, while Strauss, all right in his own behalf, simply could not compare with Mahler.

"The musicians were very angry with me, as if I had insulted a national hero," he said. "One in particular made some unkind remarks. But you know, more than a year later when I was in Salzburg, the same man came to me and apologized, and said that he now had a new understanding of the composer.

"As the way Mahler is played different now from what it was at the beginning?" he was asked.

"No," Mr. Kubelik responded, "interpretations have not essentially changed from earlier years. Mahler is still fairly new in many areas; his works have gained popularity just during the last 20 years. Perhaps after a while when his music is thoroughly known there will develop a sort of Mahler style; but it is still too early.

"There was a difference between the ways Walter and Zemlinsky played him," the conductor added. "Walter was very soft, you know. Everything was very lyric, very melodic; the movements sang. But sometimes you would get the feeling that it should be more dynamic, more contrasting, that it should be played with fist — and this was Zemlinsky's style.

"Zemlinsky did not look much like a conductor. He was frail, gaunt, and had a twitch" — Mr. Kubelik jerked his shoulder — "but when he conducted Mahler there came a fire into his eyes, and his face expressed every note of the music. He was very interesting to watch."

Mr. Kubelik conducted the National Theater in Brno and administered the Czech Philharmonic until 1948, when he left the country for England. He is "stateless," though he travels with a Swiss passport. Has he been back?

"No," he stated flatly. "I will not go back, even to visit, for a government which treats artists and musicians — my colleagues — so poorly. They have asked me many times — it would be good propaganda for them — but I have always refused. They even offered me an important position with money and prestige and everything, but I turned it down. Some people can't understand my attitude. But how could I accept such a position and then face my colleagues who are barely allowed to make a living?"

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fifteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JANUARY 20, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 21, at 8:30 o'clock

RAFAEL KUBELIK, Guest Conductor

MOZART ..... Symphony No. 26, in E-flat major, K. 184

I. Molto presto
II. Andante
III. Allegro

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MAHLER ..... Symphony No. 9

I. Andante comodo
II. Im Tempo eines gemächlichen Ländlers
III. Rondo: Burleske
Allegro assai
IV. Adagio

These concerts will end about 3:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[905]

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750

JAN 21 1967

New England Newsclip

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Kubelik at Symphony

Mahler's Ninth

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

By Harold Rogers

Rafael Kubelik gave us the short and the long of it yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. He initiated his second week as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony with Mozart's little Symphony No. 26 in E-flat, K. 184; and its three short movements, played without pause, whizzed by in less time than it takes for an audience to get settled into its seats.

Before we knew it—in slightly more than five minutes, perhaps — Mr. Kubelik was taking his bows, and the musicians were leaving the stage for the intermission. And so the listeners, a bit stunned, resigned themselves to an early interval.

The little symphony was far from Mozart's best, nor was Mr. Kubelik's reading of it the best Mozart. His baton hand tends to pound the air; he maintains the beat, true enough, but the music thus lost its lift.

Questions raised

This curtain raiser merely served, of course, to ready us for the long of it—Mahler's Ninth Symphony. It lasts a full hour and 15 minutes and is not the most felicitous of his symphonies. It tends to greater verbosity, which is tiresome; yet it employs a higher dissonance content, which is compelling.

At times one wondered if the various patches of tonal fogginess were owing to Mahler's orchestration or to Mr. Kubelik's inability to keep the score in good order.

By and large, however, the conductor admirably set forth the vast sweep of the music, whipping up its climactic sunbursts. He is now far better at generating emotion than he was when last heard in Boston during his conductorship of the Chicago Symphony (1950-53).

All things considered, he gave us a most pleasant hour and 15 minutes.

EVENING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 415,850

JAN 18 1967

New England Newsclip

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JAN 19 1967

Music-Lover's Guide

Symphony to Perform Mahler's Last Work

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Gustav Mahler's last completed symphony, the Ninth, will be played by the Boston Symphony under Rafael Kubelik at its concerts this Friday and Saturday.

Mahler's first four symphonies contain much that is vocal in character. The first, though there is no actual singing, quotes the "Songs of a Wayfarer"; the other three have vocal movements and all draw, though not exclusively, on the collection of folk verse called "The Youth's Magic Horn." Symphonies 5 through 7 are purely instrumental, and Nos. 6 and 7, the least known Mahler, also are the most experimental and forward-looking works.

The next two large works, Symphony No. 8 and "The Song of the Earth," the latter called a symphony by Mahler though not assigned a number, are vocal. The next and final pair, Nos. 9 and 10, the latter incomplete at Mahler's death in 1911, are again for instruments alone.

Like Nos. 1 and 6, the Ninth is in four movements, but while the earlier works are in the tradition of the familiar four-movement symphonic pattern, the Ninth is not. In the Ninth one must attend to a work whose large form is idiosyncratic, if not indeed unique, and in which the expressive and structural focal point occur in unexpected places.

The first movement, Andante comodo, is the biggest and the most complex. Its layout has as much of the Rondo as of the Sonata movement about it. It is also a movement unusually rich in the variety of its episodes and moods.

The first page is a marvelous example of the subtlety of the language in late Mahler: the way the melody gathers momentum as it moves from short phrases (just two notes to start with) to longer ones; the way horn and violins together make up the melody rather than being in counterpoint in a conventional sense; the way the stresses of the violin's bowing seem to contradict the harmonic and rhythmic stresses; the many simultaneous accompaniment figurations; the transparency that informs this exceedingly full activity.

The second movement is a dance series, a Landler, a waltz, and a minuet, returning by way of the waltz to the Landler. It is the rambunctious waltz, rich source material for Shostakovich, that dominates the movement.

The third movement, entitled "Burleske," is the shortest, the quickest, and because it is the most concentrated, the one that is the real counterpoise to the first. It is an angry piece, but the episode with the solo trumpet and the harp glissandos is the sweetest music in the Ninth and, I often think, the most magical page in all Mahler. Mitropoulos said that in the "conventional," pre-Schoenberg repertory, the "Burleske" was the most difficult piece for orchestra he knew.

Some of the Mahler symphonies end in triumph or at least high spirits; the Sixth ends in the aftermath of catastrophe; the Ninth, like "The Song of the Earth," ends with farewell. This Adagio alternates rich chorale texture with cold, remote, desolate, thin-textured passages (dialogues between contrabassoon and violins, flute and basses, and the like). Finally, there is only the desolation: the music becomes slower, thinner, more discontinuous. The last, weak resistance is in the violas as they turn about the note whose sound will complete the cadence.

53

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
JAN 21 1967
New England Newsclip

Mahler's 9th Given Top Effort by BSO

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Gustav Mahler's expansive, but intense, ninth symphony received a resplendent performance from the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon with Rafael Kubelik as guest conductor. Mahler has been called the greatest failure in music, but this overly harsh judgment does not mean that the Viennese composer was not a fine musician.

As Norman Demuth, English critic, reminds us, "Mahler proves his greatness in the massive slow movements" of his symphonies "He was the last of the subjective romanticists; he closed an epoch and wound up a tradition."

Gustav Mahler

Intense dynamic, Mahler worked at fever pitch, composing eight symphonies of vehemently heartfelt music. When he came to the ninth, he balked (recalling that the ninth was Beethoven's last) and entieled his new opus "Song of the Earth."

Next year, however, he overcame his superstitions and named his new symphony (1909) as his ninth. This work, which hauntingly expresses resignation and peace of spirit, especially in its adagio, was his swansong—the tenth was unfinished, completed by later hands. In his colossal ninth Mahler attained his own personal apotheosis in the realm of musical autobiography.

While Mhaler's symphonic music lacks the sheer artistry of his songs, this ninth symphony, even though it runs to 75 minutes, bears testimony to a refinement of the composer's mental processes late in life. Both outer movements are slow and both grow slowly out of infinity and finally return to almost magical silence Of the four movements, the second and third are the only ones recalling traditional symphonic format.

There is a warm depth of harmony not found elsewhere in Mahler's music. The concluding movement is the nearest to the Beethovenish-Brucknerian style, with calmly expanded phrases.

Therein unison violins state a two-bar recitative which dies away into a segment often referred to affectionately as "Abide With Me" because of its similarity to the hymn tune in melody and harmony in the first three notes .There are moments of phenomenal lightness and extremely delicate extended scoring and the prolonged warmth of the whole is affecting with profound feelings of ineffable sadness.

Kubelik's reading was moving, with sentiment and sensitivity of temperament. Here was warmth and nobility, depth and passionate conviction. The great andante comodo which begins the symphony and the noble adagio at its conclusion are Mahler's true testament and there Kubelik attained singular successes. He was adroit in binding together the fabric of this composition in a tightly molded dramatic statement and the music soared and sang.

Beginning this notable concert was Mozart's 26th symphony (KV-184, in E flat) which reverts strikingly to the Italianate operatic overture type after his preceding "Little G-minor Symphony." The E-flat work's three movements are linked by modulatory bridge passages and the whole takes only ten minutes to perform, yet it was from this work that the symphony, as a form, grew more and more interesting in Mozart's hands, but it is richly enjoyable of its kind.

Kubelik's conducting was energetic and well-phraserd, the orchestral exposition was sleekly elegant and eminently Bostonian.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
JAN 21 1967
New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Mozart, Mahler Program

By McLAREN HARRIS

After this week's Symphony concerts a listener may have to glance at his program to be sure that there was, indeed, a performance of Mozart's Symphony No. 26.

Not disrespect but the overwhelming presence of its companion-piece, Mahler's Symphony No. 9, prompts this reaction. Mozart and Mahler were like two worlds from "Gulliver's Travels," the miniature and the giant—or, as one spectator put it, Mutt and Jeff in reverse.

The early E flat Symphony, K. 184, of Mozart is a true Italian overture, a sort of three-movements-in-one creation. The sections, Presto - Andante - Allegro, are played without pause, bridged quickly and effortlessly; the dignified accent of the opening, the Andante's gentle, lamenting tone and the sparkle of the third section are briefly-spoken and eschew all pretensions at profundity. All is over within ten minutes.

The applause was tentative, for many thought that the pause was to give latecomers entrance; but intermission had come—an early one, for Rafael Kubelik, in his second week as guest conductor, had paired Mozart's symphonic midget with the grandly dynamic and somewhat rhapsodic design of Mahler's last-completed large work.

UNHEARD BY COMPOSER

Mahler never heard the Symphony No. 9. It was scored during the summer of 1910, and though the composer had barely turned 50, it gives a feeling that life is done, that death will soon follow. Many will say that Mahler always had premonitions of death; nevertheless, he died the following May.

In the 9th there is a retreat in orchestral size, though not length, and perhaps in universal striving from the 8th Symphony, as if even the gigantic apparatus and grandiose endeavors of the "Symphony of a Thousand" had not been able to lay all doubts to rest, and Mahler was full of resignation. Bitterness appears evident here —bitterness over dashed hopes, at the limitations of his means, of mankind, of himself; but there is also a decision to relinquish his hold upon what he could not achieve.

The work opens with a theme of peaceful design, even latent optimism, which is challenged by a minor statement of almost hurtful passion. Throughout a movement of changing textures and harmonic modes the two move in opposition; the classic resolution never comes about—only, again retreat from strife.

The Scherzo, with its series of waltzes, looks from the outside like a cheerful attempt at forgetfulness; but Mahler's serious intent, is betrayed in occasionally insistent rhythm, in an awkward melody which hints at mockery and the comedy of despair. The following Rondo unmasks this irony and thinly-veiled anger, rising to a pitch of violent excitement, suddenly concluding as if out of breath. And then, as if the composer had whispered "enough," comes the final Adagio, antidote and answer to the foregoing, floating in the serenity of wisdom and resignation. The end of a symphony or of life? Though Mahler was to begin a Tenth, he must have visualized it as both.

In their trials of endurance and emotion, Mr. Kubelik and the orchestra did not fail. As in last week's Haydn symphony, the conductor laid a noticeable emphasis upon meter,rhythmic play and dynamic scope. It worked to marvelous effect in the inner movements, where the volumes are heaviest and the contrasts broadest; but, as before it caused a sacrifice on continuity, melodic delicacy and tapered phrasing. The first movement became a trifle hesitant, disjointed.

Yet the relaxing, spacious Adagio was greater testimony to Mr. Kubelik's talent that anything else could have been. He approached the concluding expiration with an all-awareness, holding every rein and extending the last bars with precision and graduality; the tonal substance evaporated into silence. It was a fearsome chore and a triumph; Mahler is his.

Following a tour next week, the Symphony will return with Colin Davis as guest conductor; on the program will be Berlioz "King Lear" overture; Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements; and Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 in D minor.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Rafael Kubelik conducting, presented the fifteenth program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall.

Symphony No. 26 in E flat major, K. 184 — Mozart
Symphony No. 9 — Mahler

EVENING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 415,850
JAN 21 1967
New England Newsclip

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
JAN 21 1967
New England Newsclip

At Symphony Hall

Kubelik Conducts Great Mahler Ninth

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Rafael Kubelik conducting. Mozart's Symphony No. 26 in E flat, K. 184, and Mahler's Symphony No. 9. Friday afternoon in Symphony Hall.

Rafael Kubelik conducted a great performance of the Mahler Ninth on Friday afternoon. It was one, actually, that went counter to a couple of prejudices I generally cherish with respect to Mahler interpretation: that is, I believe Mahler needs to be extremely precise, and I like to hear him played with a sharp edge and, to borrow a phrase from Mr. Kubelik, "with fist."

Kubelik's temperament is the opposite of a drillmaster's and he is sometimes fairly casual about technical fine points. The view he takes of Mahler's music is predominantly soft-edged and lyric, more like Walter's than like Mitropoulos's.

Kubelik's performance was intimate and vocal rather than dramatic. Its strength came from an unusual interpretive intelligence with remarkable powers of concentration, and from a deep, empathetic identification with the music.

The first movement is one of fantastical contrasts, partly implying, partly actually asking for a great range of speeds. Such a piece is especially difficult to conduct: its parts need to be highly characteristic, but the organic coherence of those parts must be established. Kubelik was especially masterful here. The performance was vivid, it had a strong sense of direction and a powerfully articulated shape. One could, from Kubelik's interpretation, unhesitatingly pinpoint the place in the score where Mahler writes "Hoechste Kraft" (maximum power).

Kubelik's feeling for pace is remarkable. It is rare to have Mahler's characteristic distinction between a flowing and an urgent kind of forward movement so sensitively felt, or to have the equally characteristic distinction between the abrupt and the gradual tempo changes so tellingly observed. I sensed a miscalculation just once: the end of the last waltz section of the second movement got going so fast that it was impossible to make the jump back to the original Landler tempo without the preparatory retard that Mahler wanted to avoid.

SUPERB

On the whole the second movement went superbly, being full of character even though the grotesqueness was gently illuminated. In the third movement, the "Burleske" I felt some lack of fist and of furious speed. The lyric episode with the trumpet solo and the harp glissandi was beautifully done, with a remarkable and daring improvisatory quality. Throughout the whole symphony, the conductor's feeling for quasi-improvisation, his willingness to leave things loose, contributed marvelously to the shapeliness and the eloquence of the performance.

The heart-piercing Adagio finale was what it must be, love, warmth, pain, cold, made audible. With all its poignant intensity, Kubelik never lost the sovereign inner calm that is so important here. And in no other performance have I experienced so completely the sense of suspended motion, the disintegration of substance on that incredible last page.

TELLING

In a performance three years ago, Szell brought out in an extraordinary way the meaning of the infinite subtleties in Mahler's scoring. Kubelik offered no such illuminating delineation of what Mahler achieves with textures and accents, and I felt a loss of that one dimension. Not that Kubelik is orchestrally unimaginative: the "soft" downbeats and the slow-blooming chords in the finale were masterfully conceived and tellingly executed.

But Mahler said that "the important part of music is not in the notes," and it was Kubelik's sure sense of what is behind the notes and his magnificent architectural grasp that made his performance so moving.

The Boston Symphony's warm, relaxed sounding playing was a pleasure. There were also some beautifully done incidental solos, notably by Joseph Silverstein (violin), Doriot Anthony Dwyer (flute), Lois Schaefer (piccolo), Peter Hadcock (E flat clarinet), Matthew Ruggiero (bassoon), James Stagliano (horn), and Armando Ghitalla (trumpet). There was distinguished percussion playing, and the Mahler Ninth is also a work that offers unusual opportunities to the superb second violin section.

The tiny Symphony or Overture by the 17-year-old Mozart that opened the concert is a piece full of arresting rhythmic, harmonic and textural details, and a touching melancholy hangs about its Andante section. It was elegantly done.

54

TUES. CAMBRIDGE #5 JAN. 31

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 31, at 8:30 o'clock

RAFAEL KUBELIK, Guest Conductor

HAYDN ..... Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102

I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegro; Trio
IV. Finale: Presto

MARTINU ..... Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani

I. Poco allegro
II. Largo; Adagio
III. Allegro

Piano Solo: CHARLES WILSON
(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
JAN 29 1967
New England Newsclip

Music This Week

TUESDAY—Boston Symphony, Rafael Kubelik conducting Haydn's Symphony No. 102, the Martinu Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Percussion, with Charles Wilson, piano, and the Franck Symphony in D minor. Symphony Hall at 8:30. Televised and broadcast on Ch. 2 and WGBH-FM.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
JAN 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony Is on Tour; Back Jan. 31

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on its third one-week tour of the season. Rafael Kubelik, who has been guest conductor for the past two weeks, will conduct all the programs of the coming week.

The next Symphony Hall concert will be Tuesday, Jan. 31, at 8:30, at which Mr. Kubelik will make his final appearance of this present engagement. The next Friday-Saturday concerts will be Feb. 3-4, with Colin Davis as guest conductor.

54

TUES. CAMBRIDGE #5 JAN. 31

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, JANUARY 31, at 8:30 o'clock

RAFAEL KUBELIK, Guest Conductor

HAYDN ..... Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102

I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegro; Trio
IV. Finale: Presto

MARTINU ..... Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani

I. Poco allegro
II. Largo; Adagio
III. Allegro

Piano Solo: CHARLES WILSON
(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

FRANCK ..... *Symphony in D minor

I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
JAN 29 1967
New England Newsclip

Music This Week

TUESDAY—Boston Symphony, Rafael Kubelik conducting Haydn's Symphony No. 102, the Martinu Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Percussion, with Charles Wilson, piano, and the Franck Symphony in D minor. Symphony Hall at 8:30. Televised and broadcast on Ch. 2 and WGBH-FM.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
JAN 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony Is on Tour; Back Jan. 31

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be out of town this week on its third one-week tour of the season. Rafael Kubelik, who has been guest conductor for the past two weeks, will conduct all the programs of the coming week.

The next Symphony Hall concert will be Tuesday, Jan. 31, at 8:30, at which Mr. Kubelik will make his final appearance of this present engagement. The next Friday-Saturday concerts will be Feb. 3-4, with Colin Davis as guest conductor.

55

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
FEB 3 1967
New England Newsclip

FRI. + SAT. #16 FEB 3 + 4

British conductor visits Boston

Colin Davis in offstage chat

Colin Davis

. . . will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for its concerts at Symphony Hall this afternoon, Saturday evening, and Tuesday night. The young British conductor was recently acclaimed when he made his Metropolitan Opera debut as musical director of 'Peter Grimes.' He is interviewed in the adjoining columns.

By Clifford Barnes

Colin Davis is a quiet, unassuming man. Yet when he speaks he is articulate and expresses himself with definite, well-thought-out ideas. His first appearance as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week end has aroused great interest in view of his recent highly praised recording of Handel's "Messiah" and his successful Metropolitan Opera debut two weeks ago conducting Britten's "Peter Grimes."

His career had been gathering steam ever since he substituted for Otto Klemperer in two concert performances of "Don Giovanni" at London's Royal Festival Hall in 1959. Blastoff occurred with the "Messiah," and orbit will be achieved after this short North American tour. There will be conducting stints in Toronto, Montreal, and Los Angeles — in addition to the rest of the "Peter Grimes" performances at the Met.

The return to London by the middle of March will hopefully find that city as more permanent headquarters for at least a year. Kurosh, the two-month-old son of Mr. Davis and his lovely Persian wife, Shamsi, will then have a chance to grow a little — not living out of a trunk. Assuming his duties as musical director of the BBC Symphony Orchestra next September is the factor that will allow the Davis family to be more home-bound. At 40 he will be the youngest conductor ever to occupy that important position.

No absolutes

A glance at the impressive list of recordings in the catalogue shows that he has specialized in the works of Mozart, Berlioz, and Stravinsky. His program with the Boston Symphony includes the Berlioz "King Lear" Overture, and Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements. Stravinsky is a composer he admires, and Philips—the principal company for which he records—wanted to add a substantial number of that composer's works to its catalogue.

"There is no absolute in interpretation. If there were, there wouldn't be any performance. Each conductor tries to shed some light on a work that hasn't been seen in it before. I'm not concerned with Stravinsky's latest interpretation of his works. A composition is like a child that is sent out into the world. It is subject to many different ideas.

"Composers are not gods. I revere Stravinsky, the composer, but I don't like Stravinsky, the oracle. The same principle applies to Benjamin Britten. He may not like the way I conduct 'Peter Grimes,' but I don't agree entirely with the way he conducts it.

"Fifty conductors can perform a great work, and it will still stand. That's what makes it great. Why should a composer admire the way I conduct his music? He has merely provided a means of musical expression."

Mr. Davis's interest in the Berlioz repertoire is a different matter. "I'm fascinated by his music." He is an active member of the Berlioz Society in England, which is flourishing at the present because it is full of lively people. He is proud of the first volume of the complete works recently issued by this society dedicated to furthering the cause of Berlioz.

During the Centennial Year of 1969, plans are under way to present a complete production of "Les Troyens" at Covent Garden. With Mr. Davis conducting, it is hoped that the wrongs of the recent Paris and San Francisco Opera productions can be righted. That is the same year that he returns to the Met for further performances of "Peter Grimes."

The year 1969 may have other surprises in store for Mr. Davis, who is widely acknowledged to be the finest conductor to come out of Britain in a quarter century. His name has been mentioned as a possible replacement for Leonard Bernstein when he steps down as music director of the New York Philharmonic in 1969. Colin Davis is a conductor who seems destined to orbit with the stars.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
JAN 21 1967
New England Newsclip

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony, Colin Davis conducting Berlioz' "King Lear" Overture, Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 in D minor. Symphony Hall at 2. Program repeated Saturday at 8:30.

—Verdi's "Falstaff." See Thursday listing. Loeb Drama Center, Cambridge, at 8:30.

SATURDAY — Boston Symphony, Colin Davis conducting. See Friday listing. Symphony Hall at 8:30.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON ... HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Sixteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 3, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 4, at 8:30 o'clock

COLIN DAVIS, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ ..... Overture, "King Lear," Op. 4

STRAVINSKY ..... Symphony in Three Movements (1945)

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Con moto

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op. 70

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Vivace: Poco meno mosso
IV. Finale: Allegro

BALDWIN PIANO ... RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[969]

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
FEB 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Colin Davis of BBC Takes Podium as BSo's Guest

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Colin Davis, principal conductor of the BBC Symphony, made his debut here yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His interpretations were commanding; his orchestral command was superb.

The opening was the Berlioz "King Lear" overture (Op. 4), music intended as a portrait of the stupendously trgic monarch. The unison theme, played by violas celli and basses at the start, is interpreted as a representation of the selfishness of the two daughters, but those who listen for a musical setting of the hag-ridden drama will be puzzled or disappointed.

That is not what Berlioz was doing; on the contrary, with what George Bernard Shaw called "Berlioz's curious gift of brains and brimstone," the French composer seized upon a chance to do for music what Shakespeare had done for the theater.

From Shakespeare, Berlioz learned to be absoutely free in his format, but he used the play as a musical analagoge. Berlioz's "King Lear" overture is as Sir Francis Tovey put it, "a magnificent piece of rhetoric in the tragic style."

Colin Davis' interpretation was searching and brilliant; the BSO players gave a truly imposing warmth of expression thereto.

Stravinsky's symphony in three movements, written at his home in Hollywood in 1945 especially for the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York, is something of a synthesis of the composer's works during the preceding decade. Rhythmic motifs and laboratory methods recalling Stravinsky's dissecting techniques in his form-shattering "Sacre du Printempts"—melodic and pulsating ostinatos, with the concluding fremescent crescendo—make this symphony (actually his third) exceptionally clear in form and structure, though there are no classical formal concepts therein.

However, the symphony does have a principal theme, occurring in many variants in the opening movement and reappearing in the conclusion. The andante is beautifully transparent, with a comedy theme in Rossinian tum-tum style, seemingly a nostalgic parody. Tension is maintained, right up to the cataclysmic final chord.

Colin Davis' reading was quite as sharply edged as the composer's original version (1946) with the New York Philharmonic and there was considerably more vitality in the orchestral performance.

After the interval, Dvorak's seevnth symphony (Op-70, in D minor) was presented. In this work, the Czech master wished convincingly to show the world that a Brahms and not merely a nationalistic composer could emanate from Bohemia, but he wished also to be true to his native heath. The consequent tension gives point to the dra-content of the work.

That most quotable Bernard Shaw had this to say upon its matic, even tragic, emotional London premiere: "The usual Dvorakian dressing of Bohemian rhythms and intervals which give the analytical programmatist an opportunity of developing his individual traits." In other words, an overdrawn Czech.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
Friday, February 17, 1967 ▲ 5

Our readers write

To The Christian Science Monitor:

The recent appearances of Colin Davis as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony have revealed one of the very few conductors capable of leading the orchestra back to its former greatness. It is no secret that Mr. Davis won the instant respect and deep admiration of the musicians, that they played for him as they have for no other conductor in recent history, and that they saw in him the likely candidate to rescue them from the tedium, boredom, and monotony of the past five seasons.

Colin Davis is on the road to greatness. One hopes sincerely that the powers that be at Symphony Hall will arrange for the orchestra to travel that road with him. What an exciting and rewarding journey it would be for the orchestra, its subscribers, and the whole world of music!

Cambridge, Mass. Stuart A. Anderson

To The Christian Science Monitor:

The wintry winds of Boston are seldom welcome, but the warm wind which swept through Symphony Hall when Colin Davis was conducting more than made up for outdoor conditions. For years I have been hoping we might have him here. Finally the miracle happened — conductor, orchestra, and audience were in close accord, and joy abounded! The good old days returned; music became again completely unifying and refreshing for us all. Must that miracle be only transitory, or dare one hope that Colin Davis might become a familiar figure on the podium at Symphony Hall?

Boston Winifred H. Johnstone

55

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
FEB 3 1967
New England Newsclip

FRI. + SAT. #16 FEB 3 + 4

British conductor visits Boston

Colin Davis in offstage chat

Colin Davis

. . . will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for its concerts at Symphony Hall this afternoon, Saturday evening, and Tuesday night. The young British conductor was recently acclaimed when he made his Metropolitan Opera debut as musical director of 'Peter Grimes.' He is interviewed in the adjoining columns.

By Clifford Barnes

Colin Davis is a quiet, unassuming man. Yet when he speaks he is articulate and expresses himself with definite, well-thought-out ideas. His first appearance as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week end has aroused great interest in view of his recent highly praised recording of Handel's "Messiah" and his successful Metropolitan Opera debut two weeks ago conducting Britten's "Peter Grimes."

His career had been gathering steam ever since he substituted for Otto Klemperer in two concert performances of "Don Giovanni" at London's Royal Festival Hall in 1959. Blastoff occurred with the "Messiah," and orbit will be achieved after this short North American tour. There will be conducting stints in Toronto, Montreal, and Los Angeles — in addition to the rest of the "Peter Grimes" performances at the Met.

The return to London by the middle of March will hopefully find that city as more permanent headquarters for at least a year. Kurosh, the two-month-old son of Mr. Davis and his lovely Persian wife, Shamsi, will then have a chance to grow a little — not living out of a trunk. Assuming his duties as musical director of the BBC Symphony Orchestra next September is the factor that will allow the Davis family to be more home-bound. At 40 he will be the youngest conductor ever to occupy that important position.

No absolutes

A glance at the impressive list of recordings in the catalogue shows that he has specialized in the works of Mozart, Berlioz, and Stravinsky. His program with the Boston Symphony includes the Berlioz "King Lear" Overture, and Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements. Stravinsky is a composer he admires, and Philips—the principal company for which he records—wanted to add a substantial number of that composer's works to its catalogue.

"There is no absolute in interpretation. If there were, there wouldn't be any performance. Each conductor tries to shed some light on a work that hasn't been seen in it before. I'm not concerned with Stravinsky's latest interpretation of his works. A composition is like a child that is sent out into the world. It is subject to many different ideas.

"Composers are not gods. I revere Stravinsky, the composer, but I don't like Stravinsky, the oracle. The same principle applies to Benjamin Britten. He may not like the way I conduct 'Peter Grimes,' but I don't agree entirely with the way he conducts it.

"Fifty conductors can perform a great work, and it will still stand. That's what makes it great. Why should a composer admire the way I conduct his music? He has merely provided a means of musical expression."

Mr. Davis's interest in the Berlioz repertoire is a different matter. "I'm fascinated by his music." He is an active member of the Berlioz Society in England, which is flourishing at the present because it is full of lively people. He is proud of the first volume of the complete works recently issued by this society dedicated to furthering the cause of Berlioz.

During the Centennial Year of 1969, plans are under way to present a complete production of "Les Troyens" at Covent Garden. With Mr. Davis conducting, it is hoped that the wrongs of the recent Paris and San Francisco Opera productions can be righted. That is the same year that he returns to the Met for further performances of "Peter Grimes."

The year 1969 may have other surprises in store for Mr. Davis, who is widely acknowledged to be the finest conductor to come out of Britain in a quarter century. His name has been mentioned as a possible replacement for Leonard Bernstein when he steps down as music director of the New York Philharmonic in 1969. Colin Davis is a conductor who seems destined to orbit with the stars.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
JAN 21 1967
New England Newsclip

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony, Colin Davis conducting Berlioz' "King Lear" Overture, Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 in D minor. Symphony Hall at 2. Program repeated Saturday at 8:30.

—Verdi's "Falstaff." See Thursday listing. Loeb Drama Center, Cambridge, at 8:30.

SATURDAY — Boston Symphony, Colin Davis conducting. See Friday listing. Symphony Hall at 8:30.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON — IUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Sixteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 3, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 4, at 8:30 o'clock

COLIN DAVIS, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ ..... Overture, "King Lear," Op. 4

STRAVINSKY ..... Symphony in Three Movements (1945)

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Con moto

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op. 70

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Vivace: Poco meno mosso
IV. Finale: Allegro

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[969]

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
FEB 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Colin Davis of BBC Takes Podium as BSo's Guest

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Colin Davis, principal conductor of the BBC Symphony, made his debut here yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His interpretations were commanding; his orchestral command was superb.

The opening was the Berlioz "King Lear" overture (Op. 4), music intended as a portrait of the stupendously trgic monarch. The unison theme, played by violas celli and basses at the start, is interpreted as a representation of the selfishness of the two daughters, but those who listen for a musical setting of the hag-ridden drama will be puzzled or disappointed.

That is not what Berlioz was doing; on the contrary, with what George Bernard Shaw called "Berlioz's curious gift of brains and brimstone," the French composer seized upon a chance to do for music what Shakespeare had done for the theater.

From Shakespeare, Berlioz learned to be absoutely free in his format, but he used the play as a musical analagoge. Berlioz's "King Lear" overture is as Sir Francis Tovey put it, "a magnificent piece of rhetoric in the tragic style."

Colin Davis' interpretation was searching and brilliant; the BSO players gave a truly imposing warmth of expression thereto.

Stravinsky's symphony in three movements, written at his home in Hollywood in 1945 especially for the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York, is something of a synthesis of the composer's works during the preceding decade. Rhythmic motifs and laboratory methods recalling Stravinsky's dissecting techniques in his form-shattering "Sacre du Printempts"—melodic and pulsating ostinatos, with the concluding fremescent crescendo—make this symphony (actually his third) exceptionally clear in form and structure, though there are no classical formal concepts therein.

However, the symphony does have a principal theme, occurring in many variants in the opening movement and reappearing in the conclusion. The andante is beautifully transparent, with a comedy theme in Rossinian tum-tum style, seemingly a nostalgic parody. Tension is maintained, right up to the cataclysmic final chord.

Colin Davis' reading was quite as sharply edged as the composer's original version (1946) with the New York Philharmonic and there was considerably more vitality in the orchestral performance.

After the interval, Dvorak's seevnth symphony (Op-70, in D minor) was presented. In this work, the Czech master wished convincingly to show the world that a Brahms and not merely a nationalistic composer could emanate from Bohemia, but he wished also to be true to his native heath. The consequent tension gives point to the dracontent of the work.

That most quotable Bernard Shaw had this to say upon its matic, even tragic, emotional London premiere: "The usual Dvorakian dressing of Bohemian rhythms and intervals which give the analytical programmatist an opportunity of developing his individual traits." In other words, an overdrawn Czech.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
Friday, February 17, 1967 ▲ 5

Our readers write

To The Christian Science Monitor:

The recent appearances of Colin Davis as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony have revealed one of the very few conductors capable of leading the orchestra back to its former greatness. It is no secret that Mr. Davis won the instant respect and deep admiration of the musicians, that they played for him as they have for no other conductor in recent history, and that they saw in him the likely candidate to rescue them from the tedium, boredom, and monotony of the past five seasons.

Colin Davis is on the road to greatness. One hopes sincerely that the powers that be at Symphony Hall will arrange for the orchestra to travel that road with him. What an exciting and rewarding journey it would be for the orchestra, its subscribers, and the whole world of music!

Cambridge, Mass. Stuart A. Anderson

To The Christian Science Monitor:

The wintry winds of Boston are seldom welcome, but the warm wind which swept through Symphony Hall when Colin Davis was conducting more than made up for outdoor conditions. For years I have been hoping we might have him here. Finally the miracle happened — conductor, orchestra, and audience were in close accord, and joy abounded! The good old days returned; music became again completely unifying and refreshing for us all. Must that miracle be only transitory, or dare one hope that Colin Davis might become a familiar figure on the podium at Symphony Hall?

Boston Winifred H. Johnstone

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
FEB 5 1967
New England Newsclip

Colin Davis Interviewed

Berlioz an Ideal Hero To B.S.O. Guest Maestro

By MARGO MILLER

Colin Davis, guest conductor this week of the Boston Symphony, is beginning his program with Berlioz' "King Lear" Overture, a work not done by this orchestra since 1903.

"The 'King Lear'? O, it's like being in the ring with Cassius Clay," says Davis. He is a tall, mild, articulate Englishman, for whom Berlioz is an ideal hero.

"My interest in Berlioz began accidentally. One of my first posts was as an assistant conductor of the Scottish B.B.C. There was the problem of what to put on programs; the principal conductor flogged all the standards to death. So I began looking around for music that wasn't done much."

Davis, born in 1927, becomes the principal conductor of the London B.B.C. in September. His final Boston Symphony concerts are Tuesday and Thursday evenings. At the time of the brief interview, Davis had had two rehearsals with the orchestra.

Already, the players were paying him what for them is the supreme accolade, a favorable comparison with Guido Cantelli: Not only a conductor exciting to work under but a musician who goes straight to the heart of the matter. And among those handicapping conductors for Leonard Bernstein's job at the New York Philharmonic, Davis' name is well up on the list.

But to Berlioz. He was born in 1803, and the concerts and opera revivals of and following the sesquicentennial year included in England a Covent Garden production of "Les Troyens" under Kubelik. "It was the first time that people really began to take Berlioz seriously," Davis said. "He'd been treated as a gifted amateur."

Berlioz' music, Davis feels, "doesn't make anybody feel comfortable. He was too uninhibited, too violent. And he had a curious kind of tenderness, not the passion of Wagner, nor the sentimentality of the others. Extreme classical beauty in his music, and every man's ideal—very virile, and intellectual."

While Davis would like to do "Les Troyens" and "Romeo et Juliette" for the stage, in 1969, when the great man has been dead a hundred years," he realizes the problems. "Berlioz wasn't a good theater composer. His imagination didn't work when confronted with stage action. An emotional situation stimulated him. He could write 20 minutes of music about an inner state of man or about an external state of nature. He was incapable, for example, of writing something like the finale of Act II of 'Figaro.' Berlioz is never factual, as Mozart is.

"Human beings," Davis went on, "have a curious capacity to prefer the reflection of something to the actual thing. They'd rather look at dirty post cards than make love. Or look at films of their children rather than play with them." (The Davises have brought their 2½ month-old baby to Boston.)

Yet few composers wrote such heroic heroes, Davis thinks. "They go down defiantly. There was a mocking and insolence to them—the whole of Faust and Mephistopheles. Wagner was the Romantic: All Wagner wanted to do was to creep back into the womb, to the First Waters."

Berlioz was "obsessed by love," Davis said, moving on to "Romeo." This is the most difficult of the works, one he thinks on often. If someone were to put up "a great pile of money, I would like to do it with ballet. This obsession with love continued to the end of Berlioz' life. He writes to Estelle, whom he hasn't seen for many years: He doesn't want his sins forgiven him, he doesn't want to secure absolution. "Love without pity."

An unbeliever, Berlioz wrote one of the great Requiems. Davis reflected that, indeed, the three great Requiems—by Mozart, Berlioz and Verdi—were composed by sceptics. "This marvelous conflict! They were unbelievers but they were able to imagine, and write music, to make you believe. The only complaint I have about Bach is that he was so damned sure."

Davis says he would like to "invade" France with the Requiem. He had a wicked twinkle to his eye. After all, he thinks Berlioz the greatest French composer; and Berlioz "had no time for the soppy kind of French opera that Paris liked." There was a hint, too, that such an invasion would be one in the eye (and ear) to French musical forces, for Davis would do the Requiem with English singers and orchestra.

Paris, however, has one lure, the acoustics, of Les Invalides, (where the Requiem had its premiere) and the Madeleine. "I'm certain that Berlioz wrote the Requiem with a certain acoustic in mind. He had, I think, an ideal sound in mind for those cosmic raspberries in the brass. You need a church with a rocking reverberation. St. Paul's has it, about seven seconds. Berlioz was thinking of the harmonics in the bands. One chord stays on, then another comes in."

England is taking the lead in matters musicological for the 1969 centennial. A complete edition of the works, edited by Hugh McDonald, is in progress under a grant of 45,000 pounds from the Gulbenkian Foundation. David Cairns is translating and editing the Memoirs, for publication next year.

Pressed continually for cash, and to keep his name before a cold public, Berlioz wrote constantly for the music press: Asked if he thought Berlioz a sound commentator on his contemporaries, Davis smiled and said, "You can never entirely trust one composer on another, can you? Their criticism is always colored by the composers who stimulated them. For Berlioz, Gluck and Weber, and of course, Beethoven."

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
FEB 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Erich Leinsdorf Will Return to Boston Podium

BOSTON — Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will return to the podium at Symphony Hall this weekend following a four-week holiday. He has invited the pianist Gina Bachauer to make her first appearances with the orchestra at these concerts.

Guest Conductor

Colin Davis, music director of the BBC Symphony in London, will conclude his engagement as guest conductor with concerts Tuesday and Thursday.

Davis will conduct the eighth concert of the Tuesday "A" series and the fifth concert of the Thursday "A" series, each begining at 8.30. His program will begin with Berlioz' overture, "King Lear," Op. 4 and continue with Stravinsky's "Symphony in Three Movements." After intermission he will conclude with the Dvorak Symphony No. 7.

Leinsdorf will conduct the 17th pair of weekend concerts, Friday at 2 and Feb. 10 at 8.30.

The first portion of the program will consist of scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64, the ballet by Prokofiev. Intermission will follow, after which Miss Bachauer will join the orchestra in Rachmininoff's Piano Concerto No. 2.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
JAN 29 1967
New England Newsclip

Colin Davis Symphony Conductor

The B.B.C. Orchestra's principal conductor, Colin Davis, will be guest conductor for the first time this week-end at the Boston Symphony concerts. His program, Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30, will be made up of Berlioz' "King Lear" Overture, Symphony in Three Movements by Stravinsky, and the Dvorak Symphony No. 7 in D minor.

After taking the orchestra on its New York tour last week, Rafael Kubelik returns Tuesday to complete his Boston Symphony engagement. The concert will be televised and broadcast on Ch. 2 and WGBH-FM at 8:30, and consists of Haydn's Symphony No. 102, the Martinu Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Percussion, and the Franck D minor Symphony. Pianist in the Martinu will be Charles Wilson, recently appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's music director, returns from mid-Winter conducting engagements and a vacation the week of Feb. 6. His next concerts are Feb. 10-11.

Colin Davis was born in Weybridge, Surrey, in 1927, and rapidly has become one of the leading British conductors. In a comparatively short space of time he has conducted most of the principal orchestras of Great Britain, and also has made regular appearances on the Continent. He is well known for his performances at Glyndebourne, where he produced, apart from the regular repertoire, such works as "Adriadne auf Naxos," Janacek's "Cunning Little Vixen," and Stravinsky's "The Rake's Progress." In addition to his activities at the Opera, he has made recordings and done concerts with all the leading British orchestra. In 1965 he was appointed principal conductor of the BBC Symphony Orchestra, becoming the youngest conductor ever to hold this post.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
FEB 1 1967
New England Newsclip

PRE-SYMPHONY NOTES

Colin Davis to Conduct Stravinsky Program

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Colin Davis will conduct Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements at the Boston Symphony concerts Feb. 3, 4, 7 and 9.

Stravinsky composed the Symphony in Three Movements between 1942 and 1945, and in January, 1946, he conducted the premiere with the New York Philharmonic, which had commissioned it. According to Alexandre Tansman's contemporary account, Stravinsky had begun the work as a piano concerto; according to the composer's own later recollection, he had a concerto for orchestra in mind.

Either way it is true. The work—Stravinsky suggests "Three Symphonic Movements" as a more "exact" title—is concertante in style. The orchestra is normal, but the writing for it is markedly individual, and it is often the soloistic texture that makes it so.

The first movement has a prominent part for solo piano, the second movement one for solo harp, and at a crucial point, the start of the fugue that is the finale's last phase, piano and harp play together and virtually unaccompanied.

The music for harp in the second movement is delicate, melodic, much like old lute music. The composer has commented on this in the book, "Conversations with Igor Stravinsky:" "We compose for solo, virtuoso instrumentalists today, and our soloistic style is still being discovered. For example, harp parts were mostly glissandos or chords as recently as Ravel. The harp can glissando or arpeggiate en masse, but it can't play en masse as I have used it in my Symphony in Three Movements."

★

These remarks are preceded by the sentence, "Though the standard orchestra is not yet an anachronism, perhaps, it can no longer be used standardly except by anachronistic composers."

The contrast of soloistic versus "tuttistic" textures is an element that clarifies the form in the Symphony in Three Movements. The first movement is, in a manner characteristic for Stravinsky ever since "Le Sacre du Printemps," a series of blocks, juxtaposed with abrupt and drastic changes of timbre, dynamics, register, themes, etc. These articulations are most strikingly defined as solo-tutti differences, both in the immediate sense, that is, for local contrast of small structural units, and for the large shape of the whole movement. In the coda, the two are finally synthesized.

It is interesting, too, that though the movement is full of meter changes and displaced accents, its large rhythm is wholly controlled by a single pulse (quarter note 160) that overrides all other modifications. The second movement, Andante, used a more relaxed version of the same pulse. The last part of the finale returns exactly to the pulse of the first movement.

In spite of Stravinsky's idea of a more "exact" title, the work is very much a Symphony, just as the only superficially dissimilar Symphony in C is, and the Symphony of Psalms.

Stravinsky uses the name of Symphony with care. Unique as his deliberately discontinuous formal procedures are, they should not deafen the listener to the magnificent grasp of composition in the largest sense that the Stravinsky symphonies exhibit. These are large and grand utterances.

★

Finally, the Symphony in Three Movements makes a curious contribution to the problem of meaning in music. When the work was new, Stravinsky wrote about "our arduous time of sharp and shifting events, of despair and hope, of continual torments, of tension and, at last, cessation and relief," admitting that all these things may have left repercussions in the Symphony.

In "Dialogues and a Diary," published in 1962, he startled us by revealing in detail certain of the images that had been in his mind and that helped shape "the plot" of the Symphony. It could almost be the scenario for one of those Shostakovich newsreels.

And curiously, the Andante, it turned out, developed out of a soon abandoned attempt by Stravinsky to oblige his friend Franz Werfel by writing a score for "The Song of Bernadette." It does not, of course, do to think of the Virgin Mary's apparition to Jennifer Jones while listening to this Symphony, though it is interesting to consider that Stravinsky's contribution to the subject would have been something as delicate and sensitive in its way as Berlioz's uniquely truthful illumination of the "Romeo and Juliet" love scene.

But let Stravinsky have the last word: ". . . the Symphony is not programmatic. Composers combine notes. That is all. How and in what form the things of this world are impressed upon their music is not for them to say."

57

THURS. A#5 FEB. 9

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
FEB 4 1967
New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Berlioz, Stravinsky, Dvorak And the Baton of Mr. Davis

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

On the scale of successful conductors Colin Davis is still a young man, due to reach 40 this year. He has a string of notable engagements behind him in the British Isles and on the European continent, and is presently music director of London's BBC Orchestra.

His appeals as a conductor are many and immediate. He possesses a passion which reveals itself in expansive curves of lyricism, in the shape of melody, of register, of changing volumes. He imbues each phrase with its own dynamic sweep, seems to rely upon the sum of such individual statements to provide the cumulative force, and matches his conceptions with exhortative gestures on the podium; in this he is reminiscent of Beecham.

But Mr. Davis' passion manifests itself in terms of rhythmic vitality, too, and this attribute served him as well in Friday's Symphony program of Berlioz, Stravinsky and Dvorak.

'KING LEAR' OVERTURE

He opened with Berlioz' "King Lear" Overture, which had not been heard at Symphony Hall in 48 years. It was an early creation, born more under circumstances of unrefined inspiration than of musical discipline; Berlioz' gift for haunting melody and marvels as an orchestrator are displayed in a structure of somewhat uncertain organization. He was an expert with the solo oboe, and one of his finest examples is a plaintive theme in the Introduction. Everywhere the brass assumes a noble character. But there are abrupt contrasts of texture, even tempo, which appear as sudden changes in direction, and it took some effort, not to say urging, from Mr. Davis to pull these threads together. He worked like an artisan with the lyric stretches in strings and woodwinds, and occasionally like a sculptor with a recalcitrant piece of clay; the result was convincing.

Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements brought out Mr. Davis' affinity for rhythmic imagination. There is something strangely akin to Berlioz in parts of this work, probably in Stravinsky's dexterous handling of orchestral forces, delineating the various polyphonic strata by differing strengths and timbres. The forms are freely contrapuntal, the moods range from tender to sinister and both harmony and rhythm hark back to "The Rite of Spring."

The conductor served up these salient traits in appropriate doses while simultaneously stressing a continuity of motion; he avoided overstating the effects, which could have disjointed the substance and caused it to stumble. The orchestra, too, was especially fine, capable of fingertip responses. The audience's reception was warm; Stravinsky's symphony, once the object of many raised eyebrows, is now a welcome convention.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin Davis [illegible] presented the sixteenth program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall.

Overture "King Lear," Op. 4 — Berlioz
Symphony in Three Movements (1945) — Stravinsky
Symphony No. 7 in D minor, Op. 70 — Dvorak

DVORAK'S SEVENTH

Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 in D minor completed a well-rounded program. This symphony, heretofore called No. 2, is perhaps Dvorak's closest approach to Brahms, most obviously in its treatment of woodwinds in the first pair of movements. There are also some apparent ties with Bruckner in brass sonority, even with Schubert in the gentle melodic cadences. But the harmonic chains of thirds and the thematic material, revolving about color tones of the scale, give a purely Slavic outlook to the whole.

This, one thinks, would again be a specialty of Mr. Davis. And it might have been, for each little phrase swelled with its own pride and emotion. Yet the orchestra, which had served so well until now, lagged in both precision and robustness. The strings appeared to lose their round timbres and became ragged when the Scherzo and Finale called for accuracy; the brass and percussion, lumped together at the rear, stood as a fearsome battery, constantly threatening to override all else.

The symphony's outline remained intact, as the silouette of a mountain against the horizon; but the inner details, which should have lifted it above the plane of a two-dimensional landscape, were missing.

Next week Erich Leinsdorf returns from "vacation" to conduct two works: Prokofiev's Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64; and Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18, with Gina Bachauer as soloist.

Fifth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 9, at 8:30 o'clock

COLIN DAVIS, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ ..... Overture, "King Lear," Op. 4

STRAVINSKY ..... Symphony in Three Movements (1945)

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Con moto

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op. 70

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Vivace: Poco meno mosso
IV. Finale: Allegro

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
FEB 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony guest

Davis the dynamic

By Harold Rogers

ARTS ENTERTAINMENT

Filled with Munchian fire, Colin Davis made his Boston conducting debut at the Boston Symphony's Friday afternoon concert and won a cheering ovation from his Symphony Hall listeners. The young and handsome Britisher is dynamic, energetic, even magnetic, yet nonacrobatic. He has no mannerisms. His technique is clean, forthright, honest.

It is his commitment to the music that bases his success. It is 100 percent. Every stroke of his vital baton, how he plants his feet, the way his back leans into a fortissimo —all shout "I believe!" And it is his commitment that determines our commitment. One seldom finds an unbelieving listener when there is a believing conductor.

A balanced artist

He is both intelligent and impassioned. Good conductors can always maintain a proper balance between head and heart. The man who subjugates his emotions to his intellect will be lacking in warmth. The man who abandons his intellect in favor of his emotions may excite his listeners while pulling the music out of shape. But the great conductor is the man who carries his heart a little above his head. Music is an emotional language; therefore the emotions must reign, yet they must be held in check by intelligence.

Mr. Davis opened with the Berlioz Overture to "King Lear," Op. 4. While lacking the beguiling elements of later Berlioz overtures, it is nonetheless expressive of the composer's subject — its moody recitatives darkly tragic.

Winning traversals

Next came Stravinsky's appealing little Symphony in Three Movements that dates from 1945. Mr. Davis's technique is just right for Stravinsky's neo-classical output. His crisp baton cut the air in neat slices, elucidating the elliptical phrases with their sparkling colors, their radiant timbres.

After intermission he closed with Dvorak's magnificent Symphony No. 7 in D minor. He gave us a throbbing reading, awash with romantic intensity. It seethed, foamed, swirled, boiled.

Small wonder his listeners left the hall in a high flush of enthusiasm, after having expressed, of course, their vociferous approval. They just plain liked him, that's all.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
FEB 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Colin Davis to Head BBC Orchestra

British Guest Conductor Draws Applause at Symphony Hall

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Colin Davis, who has a week's guest engagement with the Boston Symphony, is a 39-year-old Englishman, due to assume musical directorship of the B.B.C. Symphony this Fall.

He has made interesting records, has toured in America with the London Symphony, has conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra and at the Metropolitan Opera, through all this rather quickly establishing a reputation as one of the very best of the younger conductors.

Davis's first Boston Symphony concert had some estimable qualities. Certainly it was warmly applauded, and there was particular enthusiasm from the orchestra.

Yet the concert as a whole was curiously disappointing, and I speak primarily from the perspective of one of Davis's Philadelphia concerts a year ago with Elgar's "Falstaff" and the Berlioz "Fantastique," and of a Ravel-Berlioz program with the London Symphony last Summer.

KNOWS BERLIOZ

Davis has a special feeling for Berlioz. He understands his poetry and respects his language in a way that makes him the best Berlioz conductor around. "King Lear," not done by the Symphony since Rabaud in 1918, is an early work, exciting, and not quite satisfying.

The opening, a spacious recitative for strings, is splendidly regal, and it becomes still more awesome at its return when insistent kettledrum crescendos add anger to majesty. Between, there is a lyric theme of great beauty, and this I take to be associated with Cordelia. These, and some others, are strokes worthy of the subject, something that is itself remarkable and rare in musical Shakespeariana.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA: Colin Davis, conducting Berlioz's "King Lear" Overture, Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 (old No. 2) in D minor. Friday Afternoon at Symphony Hall.

As composition, the Overture is sometimes a bit clumsy, hobbled by some mechanical repetitions and perfunctory continuations. It is well worth playing, though—when will someone give us the "Francs-Juges" Overture? — and the conception was persuasive. The recitatives were eloquently spoken and the lyricism was given with the delicacy proper to Berlioz. Only the fiery sections seemed a little casual, and the effect of the whole performance was weakened by some unusually rough playing.

In the Stravinsky Symphony, the orchestral playing was worse, raucous, out of tune, unbalanced, imprecise, and all of these things to a point that they really obscured the music.

Davis has, in any event, a curious idea of the piece. His delivery of it was driven, inflexible, mechanical, almost a parody of the sort of bulldozing people sometimes inflicted in Stravinsky's music when it was thought very modern and very difficult. It was odd, especially since, to judge from records, only a few years ago, Davis's Stravinsky style was exceptionally soft-edged.

At any rate, given the conductor's unwillingness to inflect and articulate the succession of events in time, and his apparent inability to get the orchestra to sort out the textures and balances, what came out was quite the nastiest performance of this work I have heard.

The Dvorak 7th, a grand and consistently interesting work with much to say, went well. Here and there was much of the unforced musicality that had impressed me so with Davis in the past, the ability to get things to move and to refrain from needless pushing, the sure feeling for tempo and tempo relationships, and a strong architectural command that is especially imposing in slow movements.

Some of the Bohemian rubato, for instance the initial upbeat to the Scherzo, seemed too studied and Szellular; some of the energy toward the end of the performance seemed external, like something benzedrine-induced, rather than internally

57

THURS. A #5 FEB. 9

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

FEB 4 1967

New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Berlioz, Stravinsky, Dvorak And the Baton of Mr. Davis

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

On the scale of successful conductors Colin Davis is still a young man, due to reach 40 this year. He has a string of notable engagements behind him in the British Isles and on the European continent, and is presently music director of London's BBC Orchestra.

His appeals as a conductor are many and immediate. He possesses a passion which reveals itself in expansive curves of lyricism, in the shape of melody, of register, of changing volumes. He imbues each phrase with its own dynamic sweep, seems to rely upon the sum of such individual statements to provide the cumulative force, and matches his conceptions with exhortative gestures on the podium; in this he is reminiscent of Beecham.

But Mr. Davis' passion manifests itself in terms of rhythmic vitality, too, and this attribute served him as well in Friday's Symphony program of Berlioz, Stravinsky and Dvorak.

'KING LEAR' OVERTURE

He opened with Berlioz' "King Lear" Overture, which had not been heard at Symphony Hall in 48 years. It was an early creation, born more under circumstances of unrefined inspiration than of musical discipline; Berlioz' gift for haunting melody and marvels as an orchestrator are displayed in a structure of somewhat uncertain organization. He was an expert with the solo oboe, and one of his finest examples is a plaintive theme in the Introduction. Everywhere the brass assumes a noble character. But there are abrupt contrasts of texture, even tempo, which appear as sudden changes in direction, and it took some effort, not to say urging, from Mr. Davis to pull these threads together. He worked like an artisan with the lyric stretches in strings and woodwinds, and occasionally like a sculptor with a recalcitrant piece of clay; the result was convincing.

Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements brought out Mr. Davis' affinity for rhythmic imagination. There is something strangely akin to Berlioz in parts of this work, probably in Stravinsky's dexterous handling of orchestral forces, delineating the various polyphonic strata by differing strengths and timbres. The forms are freely contrapuntal, the moods range from tender to sinister and both harmony and rhythm hark back to "The Rite of Spring."

The conductor served up these salient traits in appropriate doses while simultaneously stressing a continuity of motion; he avoided overstating the effects, which could have disjointed the substance and caused it to stumble. The orchestra, too, was especially fine, capable of fingertip responses. The audience's reception was warm; Stravinsky's symphony, once the object of many raised eyebrows, is now a welcome convention.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Colin Davis ~~conducting~~ presented the sixteenth program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall.

Overture "King Lear," Op. 4 — Berlioz
Symphony in Three Movements (1945) — Stravinsky
Symphony No. 7 in D minor, Op 70 — Dvorak

DVORAK'S SEVENTH

Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 in D minor completed a well-rounded program. This symphony, heretofore called No. 2, is perhaps Dvorak's closest approach to Brahms, most obviously in its treatment of woodwinds in the first pair of movements. There are also some apparent ties with Bruckner in brass sonority, even with Schubert in the gentle melodic cadences. But the harmonic chains of thirds and the thematic material, revolving about color tones of the scale, give a purely Slavic outlook to the whole.

This, one thinks, would again be a specialty of Mr. Davis. And it might have been, for each little phrase swelled with its own pride and emotion. Yet the orchestra, which had served so well until now, lagged in both precision and robustness. The strings appeared to lose their round timbres and became ragged when the Scherzo and Finale called for accuracy; the brass and percsusion, lumped together at the rear, stood as a fearsome battery, constantly threatening to override all else.

The symphony's outline remained intact, as the silouette of a mountain against the horizon; but the inner details, which should have lifted it above the plane of a two-dimensional landscape, were missing.

Next week Erich Leinsdorf returns from "vacation" to conduct two works: Prokofiev's Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64; and Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 in C imnor, Op. 18, with Gina Bachauer as soloist.

Fifth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 9, at 8:30 o'clock

COLIN DAVIS, Guest Conductor

BERLIOZ ..... Overture, "King Lear," Op. 4

STRAVINSKY ..... Symphony in Three Movements (1945)

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Con moto

INTERMISSION

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 7, in D minor, Op. 70

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Poco adagio
III. Scherzo: Vivace: Poco meno mosso
IV. Finale: Allegro

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750

FEB 4 1967

New England Newsclip

Symphony guest

Davis the dynamic

By Harold Rogers

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Filled with Munchian fire, Colin Davis made his Boston conducting debut at the Boston Symphony's Friday afternoon concert and won a cheering ovation from his Symphony Hall listeners. The young and handsome Britisher is dynamic, energetic, even magnetic, yet nonacrobatic. He has no mannerisms. His technique is clean, forthright, honest.

It is his commitment to the music that bases his success. It is 100 percent. Every stroke of his vital baton, how he plants his feet, the way his back leans into a fortissimo —all shout "I believe!" And it is his commitment that determines our commitment. One seldom finds an unbelieving listener when there is a believing conductor.

A balanced artist

He is both intelligent and impassioned. Good conductors can always maintain a proper balance between head and heart. The man who subjugates his emotions to his intellect will be lacking in warmth. The man who abandons his intellect in favor of his emotions may excite his listeners while pulling the music out of shape. But the great conductor is the man who carries his heart a little above his head. Music is an emotional language; therefore the emotions must reign, yet they must be held in check by intelligence.

Mr. Davis opened with the Berlioz Overture to "King Lear," Op. 4. While lacking the beguiling elements of later Berlioz overtures, it is nonetheless expressive of the composer's subject — its moody recitatives darkly tragic.

Winning traversals

Next came Stravinsky's appealing little Symphony in Three Movements that dates from 1945. Mr. Davis's technique is just right for Stravinsky's neo-classical output. His crisp baton cut the air in neat slices, elucidating the elliptical phrases with their sparkling colors, their radiant timbres.

After intermission he closed with Dvořák's magnificent Symphony No. 7 in D minor. He gave us a throbbing reading, awash with romantic intensity. It seethed, foamed, swirled, boiled.

Small wonder his listeners left the hall in a high flush of enthusiasm, after having expressed, of course, their vociferous approval. They just plain liked him, that's all.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

FEB 4 1967

New England Newsclip

Colin Davis to Head BBC Orchestra

British Guest Conductor Draws Applause at Symphony Hall

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Colin Davis, who has a week's guest engagement with the Boston Symphony, is a 39-year-old Englishman, due to assume musical directorship of the B.B.C. Symphony this Fall.

He has made interesting records, has toured in America with the London Symphony, has conducted the Philadelphia Orchestra and at the Metropolitan Opera, through all this rather quickly establishing a reputation as one of the very best of the younger conductors.

Davis's first Boston Symphony concert had some estimable qualities. Certainly it was warmly applauded, and there was particular enthusiasm from the orchestra.

Yet the concert as a whole was curiously disappointing, and I speak primarily from the perspective of one of Davis's Philadelphia concerts a year ago with Elgar's "Falstaff" and the Berlioz "Fantastique," and of a Ravel-Berlioz program with the London Symphony last Summer.

KNOWS BERLIOZ

Davis has a special feeling for Berlioz. He understands his poetry and respects his language in a way that makes him the best Berlioz conductor around. "King Lear," not done by the Symphony since Rabaud in 1918, is an early work, exciting, and not quite satisfying.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Colin Davis conducting Berlioz's "King Lear" Overture. Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements, and Dvorak's Symphony No. 7 (old No. 2) in D minor. Friday Afternoon at Symphony Hall.

The opening, a spacious recitative for strings, is splendidly regal, and it becomes still more awesome at its return when insistent kettledrum crescendos add anger to majesty. Between, there is a lyric theme of great beauty, and this I take to be associated with Cordelia. These, and some others, are strokes worthy of the subject, something that is itself remarkable and rare in musical Shakespeariana.

As composition, the Overture is sometimes a bit clumsy, hobbled by some mechanical repetitions and perfunctory continuations. It is well worth playing, though—when will someone give us the "Francs-Juges" Overture? — and the conception was persuasive. The recitatives were eloquently spoken and the lyricism was given with the delicacy proper to Berlioz. Only the fiery sections seemed a little casual, and the effect of the whole performance was weakened by some unusually rough playing.

In the Stravinsky Symphony, the orchestral playing was worse, raucous, out of tune, unbalanced, imprecise, and all of these things to a point that they really obscured the music.

Davis has, in any event, a curious idea of the piece. His delivery of it was driven, inflexible, mechanical, almost a parody of the sort of bulldozing people sometimes inflicted in Stravinsky's music when it was thought very modern and very difficult. It was odd, especially since, to judge from records, only a few years ago, Davis's Stravinsky style was exceptionally soft-edged.

At any rate, given the conductor's unwillingness to inflect and articulate the succession of events in time, and his apparent inability to get the orchestra to sort out the textures and balances, what came out was quite the nastiest performance of this work I have heard.

The Dvorak 7th, a grand and consistently interesting work with much to say, went well. Here and there was much of the unforced musicality that had impressed me so with Davis in the past, the ability to get things to move and to refrain from needless pushing, the sure feeling for tempo and tempo relationships, and a strong architectural command that is especially imposing in slow movements.

Some of the Bohemian rubato, for instance the initial upbeat to the Scherzo, seemed too studied and Szellular; some of the energy toward the end of the performance seemed external, like something benzedrine-induced, rather than internally [illegible]

FRI. + SAT. #17 FEB. 10-11

SUN (e)
LOWELL, MASS.
CIRC. 44,600
FEB 11 1967
New England Newsclip

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will return to the podium at symphony hall for the week-end concerts of Feb. 10,11. He has invited Gina Bachauer, world famous pianist, to appear as guest. This will mark Miss Bachauer's debut with the Boston Symphony. She will perform the Rachmaninoff "Piano Concert No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18."

Miss Bachauer was born in Athens, Greece, of Austrian forbears, and showed an early talent at the piano. Her father discouraged a musical career at first, and she studied law for two years at the University of Athens. However, she was then allowed to go to Paris for musical study. At the Conservatory she studied under Alfred Cortot and Sergei Rachmaninoff and on graduation received the highest honors.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
FEB 11 1967
New England Newsclip

'Romeo-Juliet' Excerpts Played at Symphony Hall

By JOHN TEMPLE
Contributing Critic

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—Erich Leinsdorf conducted Prokofiev, Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64; Rachmaninoff, Piano Concerto No. 2 in C Minor, Op. 18, Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

Yesterday's Boston Symphony program, in which Erich Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra for the first time since his European trip, offered a number of small satisfactions in a pair of what are by now light works.

The orchestra performed Leinsdorf's own arrangement of "Romeo and Juliet" excerpts. It consisted of material from the composer's own suites and a few scenes found only in the original full score.

The ballet itself was written from that commodious but slightly dated bag of compositional tricks to which Prokofiev and Shostakovitch were the principal heirs from their nineteenth-century Russian predecessors. It contains a good deal of pleasant music, though nothing terribly intense, and the only real problem with it is the feeling that we have heard it all before.

This is most glaringly true, of course, in the case of the Gavotte, taken straight out of the Classical Symphony of twenty years before; but it is a sensation at work in much of the rest as well. Or perhaps the heart of the matter is simply that ballet music does not make very heady concert fare.

Most of the playing was excellent, though at a few points the orchestra was not all together. Some of the best work came from the tuba and the woodwind, but my vote for the greatest individual combination of virtuosity and versatility goes to cellist Martin Hoherman, who spent his time aternating between tenor saxophone and mandolin.

Gina Bachauer was disappointing. The Rachmaninoff Concerto never did really get off the ground except for the slow movement, and part of this was due to the very poor balance between soloist and orchestra, part to her repeated tendency to rush the piece.

In the first movement she was virtually inaudible during the loudest orchestral climaxes, and when left to herself she seemed reluctant to slow down enough to savor the figurations she was playing. As a result, things were often either blurred (too much pedal?) or simply glossed over, and at the end of the movement she was ahead of the orchestra.

The second movement, particularly from her cadenzo on, was much better, and the warm sheen of the strings combined with some beautifully soft playing on her part to produce the best results of the afternoon.

The third movement was well done within the limitations of the first. Sprightlier entrances on the orchestra's part in the contrapuntal passages might have helped, also, but the general preciseness of their playing could not have been faulted.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
FEB 11 1967
New England Newsclip

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Seventeenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 10, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 11, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV . . . . . Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64

PART I	PART II
Introduction	Duel and Death of Tybalt
Juliet — The Young Girl	Interlude
Romeo, Mercutio, and Benvolio Masked	Juliet
Dance of the Knights	Morning Serenade
Gavotte of the Departing Guests	Dance of the Maidens
Romeo	Funeral for Juliet
Dance of Love	Death of the Lovers
Dance for Five Couples at the Festival

INTERMISSION

RACHMANINOFF . . . . . Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18

I. Moderato
II. Adagio sostenuto
III. Allegro scherzando

SOLOIST
GINA BACHAUER
Mme. BACHAUER plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1033]

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
FEB 11 1967
New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Prokofiev Ballet Music Doesn't Stand Up Alone

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

One could escape the task of analyzing Friday's Symphony program of Prokofiev and Rachmaninoff, I suppose, by making the generalization that it seemed like an afternoon of superannuated romanticism. But, despite a ring of half-truth, that would be an injustice, particularly to Prokofiev.

The scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64, were condensed for orchestral performance from the full ballet score because Prokofiev encountered initial opposition from dancers and listeners, who were dismayed by the rhythmic work and other aspects. Eventually three suites and a set of piano pieces were lifted from the score. Erich Leinsdorf, who returned to conduct the orchestra following an absence of several weeks, chose sections from the original score as well as from the suites; the 15 "scenes," divided into two parts, include character portraits as well as events in the play.

Ballet Needed

The simple fact is that this music was conceived to accompany a ballet, and a ballet it needs. 15 scenes make up a long concert piece by any standard—half a program's worth—and despite recurring motives used to identify the personalities, the music lacks unity. Without any theatrical complement to enlarge upon Prokofiev's visions and spread the listener's attention, the musical scenes are left in a state of embarrassed nakedness, revealing moments of naivete and neo-romantic banality for all to hear. By themselves, the Dance of the Knights appears as an overbaked image of bloated stuffiness, the Duel and Death of Tybalt is an obvious bit of swashbuckling, Juliet's Funeral and the Death of the Lovers have no place of their own as musical compositions apart from the story.

Of course, there are endearing moments; the first portrait of Juliet, that of Romeo and the Dance of Love from Part 1; plus the Morning Serenade and Dance of the Maidens fro mPart 2. But in general Prokofiev's sections are not purely parlor miniatures the way Tchaikovsky's ballet excerpts could be made to appear; visual representations are a necessity.

The program's other work was Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto in C minor, for which Gina Bachauer was soloist. My reference to superannuated romantiicism applies more closely here, for this concerto was written at least 25 years behind its time, perhaps more. It has most of the pianistic breadth of the Brahms concerti but neither a well-defined partnership of soloist and orchestra nor solid structural arches: the finale indulges in meaningless alternations between the fussy opening material and the broad, flowing second theme (which Rachmaninoff is said to have borrowed from a friend), with the cymbal marking time elsewhere.

The Concerto No. 2 remains a popular work because of melodic lushness and tender sentiment, but however well one likes it (and I don't), a soloist's abilities cannot be effectively judged from its performance. Mme. Bachauer's keyboard abilities are certainly well-established and widely renowned; her playing contained both strength and direction without a measurable loss of warmth. Yet the times when the piano isn't coping with an interfering counterpoint from the orchestra or being doubled by other instruments appear to be rather few, and they are mostly devoted to chord-pounding or scale-chasing.

Piano Obscured

Perhaps Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra should take some blame for obscuring Miss Bachauer's part here and there; then again, it seems as if Rachmaninoff made the piano an accompanist to longer, more prominent orchestral lines. In any case the symphony's playing standard was high all afternoon, waxing from delicate (and in tune!) woodwind tones to opulent curtains of sound from the strings.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Beethoven's Symphony No. 2; the first Boston performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As," a seven-sectioned contemporary work; and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf [illegible] the 17th program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Gina Bachauer, was piano soloist for the Rachmaninoff concerto.

Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64 . . . . . Prokofiev
Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18 . . . . . Rachmaninoff

Gina Bachauer Dominates BSO at Her Debut

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Gina Bachauer, Athens-born pianiste, made her debut as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Rachmaninoff's mesmerizing second concerto (Op. 18, in C minor). Erich Leinsdorf, conducting, obviously feared this galumphing Greek, even when bearing such melismatic gifts, for she dominated the proceedings from start to finish even as her 88 ivory-and-ebony keys dominated 102 orchestral instruments in the climax of the first movement, which was not as moderato as the score indicates.

Gina Bachauer

Nevertheless, they went all-out to present a pngent, rhapsodic reading, making its points emphatically and effectively. All the hyper-Romantic overtones were there, with the customary percussive bell-and-hammer clangs fortunately absent.

Mme. Bachauer, an acknowledged pupil of the great Russo-American pianist, might be described as an "ava-Tartar," for she is a throwback to the Golden Age of great pianists. "She is at her best in the big virtuoso works, where her flair, grand style, big line and exciting pianistics are put to best use," Harold C. Schonberg of the New York Times wrote in his exemplary recent "Great Pianists."

A Rachmaninoff mood was established at the outset, when declamatory rising chords from the soloist introduce the main theme, played with passionate grandeur by the grand Bostonian strings, decorated by Mme. Bachauer's resilient arpeggios.

Her chrome-steel fingers were forged for the potent heroics of the thrilling opening movement. It was a superbly authentic, superfragilisticexpialidocious performance, even though Danny Kaye was not conducting, full of conviction in the music's noteworthiness, yet sounding almost spontaneous.

Additionally, the orchestral collaboration was a notable contribution to the total effect, for Dr. Leinsdorf's shapely phasing in the slow movement was magical, as was the rise of both pianiste and orchestra to the sustained tension of the gorgeous second theme, pirated in Tin Pan Alley as "Full Moon and Empty Arms," though the transcribing buccaneers did not know that Rachmaninoff had borrowed it himself, with permission from his friend, Nikita Morozov.

Before the interval came excerpts which Dr. Leinsdorf extracted from Prokovieff's evenin-length "Romeo & Juliet" ballet (Op. 64) to form an extended orchestral suite, lasting three-quarters of an hour. As a musical commentary upon Cinquecento gangsterism and juvenile delinquency, it is junior grade Prokovieff. Furthermore, ballet music without ballerinas is like operatic music without sopranos or Johnson without Boswell.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
FEB 5 1967
New England Newsclip

Gina Bachauer Piano Soloist At Symphony

The pianist Gina Bachauer will be soloist in the Rachmaninoff Concerto No. 2 at the Boston Symphony's concerts Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will open with Scenes from Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet."

The orchestra also will be heard Tuesday and Thursday evenings at 8:30, when Colin Davis will complete his engagement as guest conductor. The program lists the "King Lear" Overture by Berliaz, Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements and the Dvorak Symphony No. 7.

FRI. + SAT. #17 FEB. 10-11

58

SUN (e)
LOWELL, MASS.
CIRC. 44,600

FEB 11 1967

New England Newsclip

Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will return to the podium at Symphony hall for the week-end concerts of Feb. 10,11. He has invited Gina Bachauer, world famous pianist, to appear as guest. This will mark Miss Bachauer's debut with the Boston Symphony. She will perform the Rachmaninoff "Piano Concert No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18."

Miss Bachauer was born in Athens, Greece, of Austrian forbears, and showed an early talent at the piano. Her father discouraged a musical career at first, and she studied law for two years at the University of Athens. However, she was then allowed to go to Paris for musical study. At the Conservatory she studied under Alfred Cortot and Sergei Rachmaninoff and on graduation received the highest honors.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

FEB 11 1967

New England Newsclip

'Romeo-Juliet' Excerpts Played at Symphony Hall

By JOHN TEMPLE
Contributing Critic

Yesterday's Boston Symphony program, in which Erich Leinsdorf conducted the orchestra for the first time since his European trip, offered a number of small satisfactions in a pair of what are by now light works.

The orchestra performed Leinsdorf's own arrangement of "Romeo and Juliet" excerpts. It consisted of material from the composer's own suites and a few scenes found only in the original full score.

The ballet itself was written from that commodious but slightly dated bag of compositional tricks to which Prokofiev and Shostakovitch were the principal heirs from their nineteenth-century Russian predecessors. It contains a good deal of pleasant music, though nothing terribly intense, and the only real problem with it is the feeling that we have heard it all before.

This is most glaringly true, of course, in the case of the Gavotte, taken straight out of the Classical Symphony of twenty years before; but it is a sensation at work in much of the rest as well. Or perhaps the heart of the matter is simply that ballet music does not make very heady concert fare.

Most of the playing was excellent, though at a few points the orchestra was not all together. Some of the best work came from the tuba and the woodwind, but my vote for the greatest individual combination of virtuosity and versatility goes to cellist Martin Hoherman, who spent his time aternating between tenor saxophone and mandolin.

Gina Bachauer was disappointing. The Rachmaninoff Concerto never did really get off the ground except for the slow movement, and part of this was due to the very poor balance between soloist and orchestra, part to her repeated tendency to rush the piece.

In the first movement she was virtually inaudible during the loudest orchestral climaxes, and when left to herself she seemed reluctant to slow down enough to savor the figurations she was playing. As a result, things were often either blurred (too much pedal?) or simply glossed over, and at the end of the movement she was ahead of the orchestra.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Erich Prokofiev, Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64; Rachmaninoff, Piano Concerto No. 2 in C Minor, Op. 18. Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

The second movement, particularly from her cadenzo on, was much better, and the warm sheen of the strings combined with some beautifully soft playing on her part to produce the best results of the afternoon.

The third movement was well done within the limitations of the first. Sprightlier entrances on the orchestra's part in the contrapuntal passages might have helped, also, but the general preciseness of their playing could not have been faulted.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Seventeenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 10, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 11, at 8:30 o'clock

PROKOFIEV ..... Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64

PART I	PART II
Introduction	Duel and Death of Tybalt
Juliet — The Young Girl	Interlude
Romeo, Mercutio, and Benvolio Masked	Juliet
Dance of the Knights	Morning Serenade
Gavotte of the Departing Guests	Dance of the Maidens
Romeo	Funeral for Juliet
Dance of Love	Death of the Lovers
Dance for Five Couples at the Festival

INTERMISSION

RACHMANINOFF ..... Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18

I. Moderato
II. Adagio sostenuto
III. Allegro scherzando

SOLOIST
GINA BACHAUER
Mme. BACHAUER plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1033]

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

FEB 11 1967

New England Newsclip

Gina Bachauer Dominates BSO at Her Debut

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Gina Bachauer, Athens-born pianiste, made her debut as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Rachmaninoff's mesmerizing second concerto (Op. 18, in C minor). Erich Leinsdorf, conducting, obviously feared this galumphing Greek, even when bearing such melismatic gifts, for she dominated the proceedings from start to finish even as her 88 ivory-and-ebony keys dominated 102 orchestral instruments in the climax of the first movement, which was not as moderato as the score indicates.

Gina Bachauer

Nevertheless, they went all-out to present a pngent, rhapsodic reading, making its points emphatically and effectively. All the hyper-Romantic overtones were there, with the customary percussive bell-and-hammer clangs fortunately absent.

Mme. Bachauer, an acknowledged pupil of the great Russo-American pianist, might be described as an "ava-Tartar," for she is a throwback to the Golden Age of great pianists. "She is at her best in the big virtuoso works, where her flair, grand style, big line and exciting pianistics are put to best use," Harold C. Schonberg of the New York Times wrote in his exemplary recent "Great Pianists."

A Rachmaninoff mood was established at the outset, when declamatory rising chords from the soloist introduce the main theme, played with passionate grandeur by the grand Bostonian strings, decorated by Mme. Bachauer's resilient arpeggios.

Her chrome-steel fingers were forged for the potent heroics of the thrilling opening movement. It was a superbly authentic, superfragilisticexpialidocious performance, even though Danny Kaye was not conducting, full of conviction in the music's noteworthiness, yet sounding almost spontaneous.

Additionally, the orchestral collaboration was a notable contribution to the total effect, for Dr. Leinsdorf's shapely phasing in the slow movement was magical, as was the rise of both pianiste and orchestra to the sustained tension of the gorgeous second theme, pirated in Tin Pan Alley as "Full Moon and Empty Arms," though the transcribing buccaneers did not know that Rachmaninoff had borrowed it himself, with permission from his friend, Nikita Morozov.

Before the interval came excerpts which Dr. Leinsdorf extracted from Prokovieff's evenin-length "Romeo & Juliet" ballet (Op. 64) to form an extended orchestral suite, lasting three-quarters of an hour. As a musical commentary upon Cinquecento gangsterism and juvenile delinquency, it is junior grade Prokovieff. Furthermore, ballet music without ballerinas is like operatic music without sopranos or Johnson without Boswell.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

FEB 11 1967

New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Prokofiev Ballet Music Doesn't Stand Up Alone

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

One could escape the task of analyzing Friday's Symphony program of Prokofiev and Rachmaninoff, I suppose, by making the generalization that it seemed like an afternoon of superannuated romanticism. But, despite a ring of half-truth, that would be an injustice, particularly to Prokofiev.

The scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64, were condensed for orchestral performance from the full ballet score because Prokofiev encountered initial opposition from dancers and listeners, who were dismayed by the rhythmic work and other aspects. Eventually three suites and a set of piano pieces were lifted from the score. Erich Leinsdorf, who returned to conduct the orchestra following an absence of several weeks, chose sections from the original score as well as from the suites; the 15 "scenes," divided into two parts, include character portraits as well as events in the play.

Ballet Needed

The simple fact is that this music was conceived to accompany a ballet, and a ballet it needs. 15 scenes make up a long concert piece by any standard—half a program's worth—and despite recurring motives used to identify the personalities, the music lacks unity. Without any theatrical complement to enlarge upon Prokofiev's visions and spread the listener's attention, the musical scenes are left in a state of embarrassed nakedness, revealing moments of naivete and neo-romantic banality for all to hear. By themselves, the Dance of the Knights appears as an overbaked image of bloated stuffiness, the Duel and Death of Tybalt is an obvious bit of swashbuckling, Juliet's Funeral and the Death of the Lovers have no place of their own as musical compositions apart from the story.

Of course, there are endearing moments: the first portrait of Juliet, that of Romeo and the Dance of Love from Part 1; plus the Morning Serenade and Dance of the Maidens fro mPart 2. But in general Prokofiev's sections are not purely parlor miniatures the way Tchaikovsky's ballet excerpts could be made to appear; visual representations are a necessity.

The program's other work was Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto in C minor, for which Gina Bachauer was soloist. My reference to superannuated romantiicism applies more closely here, for this concerto was written at least 25 years behind its time, perhaps more. It has most of the pianistic breadth of the Brahms concerti but neither a well-defined partnership of soloist and orchestra nor solid structural arches; the finale indulges in meaningless alternations between the fussy opening material and the broad, flowing second theme (which Rachmaninoff is said to have borrowed from a friend), with the cymbal marking time elsewhere.

The Concerto No. 2 remains a popular work because of melodic lushness and tender sentiment, but however well one likes it (and I don't), a soloist's abilities cannot be effectively judged from its performance. Mme. Bachauer's keyboard abilities are certainly well-established and widely renowned; her playing contained both strength and direction without a measurable loss of warmth. Yet the times when the piano isn't coping with an interfering counterpoint from the orchestra or being doubled by other instruments appear to be rather, few, and they are mostly devoted to chord-pounding or scale-chasing.

Piano Obscured

Perhaps Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra should take some blame for obscuring Miss Bachauer's part here and there; then again, it seems as if Rachmaninoff made the piano an accompanist to longer, more prominent orchestral lines. In any case the symphony's playing standard was high all afternoon, waxing from delicate (and in tune!) woodwind tones to opulent curtains of sound from the strings.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Beethoven's Symphony No. 2; the first Boston performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As," a seven-sectioned contemporary work; and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 17th program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Gina Bachauer was piano soloist for the Rachmaninoff concerto.
Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64 — Prokofiev
Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18 — Rachmaninoff

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

FEB 5 1967

New England Newsclip

Gina Bachauer Piano Soloist At Symphony

The pianist Gina Bachauer will be soloist in the Rachmaninoff Concerto No. 2 at the Boston Symphony's concerts Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will open with Scenes from Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet."

The orchestra also will be heard Tuesday and Thursday evenings at 8:30, when Colin Davis will complete his engagement as guest conductor. The program lists the "King Lear" Overture by Berliaz, Stravinsky's Symphony in Three Movements and the Dvorak Symphony No. 7.

59

TUES. B #5 FEB. 14

JOURNAL (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 66,850
FEB 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Last Night

Boston Symphony, Spanish Guitarist in Performances

By RUTH TRIPP

The fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra series brought an old friend to the podium and this time, as guest conductor. Richard Burgin, who for so many years was associate conductor of the orchestra, retired from that position last season. It was truly a great pleasure to see and hear him last evening.

Gina Bachauer, pianist, was guest soloist in the Concerto No. 2 in C minor by Rachmaninoff. The orchestra played Weber's Overture to "Oberon" and Symphony No. 5, Op. 47, by Shostakovitch. The entire evening was a musical feast.

The interpretation which Burgin brought to the Shostakovitch was a magnificent one and if ever you may have had doubts that this work is one of the masterpieces of the century, this interpretation would have dispelled them. From the outset, there was a mastery of the style with an added instinctive feeling about the beauty of the themes and how best to contrast them. The orchestra is always happy with Richard Burgin on the podium and last evening was no exception. They gave their utmost to the beautiful exposition of the score. We heard entrancing solo bits from Alfred Krips, the acting concertmaster; Doriot Dwyer, flute, and Ralph Gomberg, oboe. The intensity of the Largo movement reached impressive heights. The excitement of the finale communicated volumes to the listeners who may have remembered the first performance of this work in Boston in 1939 when Burgin was on the podium. The growth of the conductor in his art, the growth of the listeners' appreciation and the acceptance of the score which at one time seemed strange and dissonant are all a part of the aging process. Providence gave Richard Burgin a tremendous ovation for his fine work in this excellent interpretation. He was recalled six times.

Gina Bachauer was no less of a success. She is well-liked here, and the power and beauty of her playing were as astonishing as ever. In her interpretation of Rachmaninoff, the freedom of rubato, the tonal balance of the keyboard playing within its own melodic facets and, in turn, in relation to its importance either against or with the orchestral tone, kept the listeners enthralled. There were times when the rhythmic pulse of the soloist was slightly at variance with that of the orchestra but it was only momentary. The familiar themes which have been taken over by the popular song writers were easily recognized, and when the grand closing bars arrived, the soloist and orchestra ended with a brilliant climax. Cheers and hearty applause made an exciting end to a fine evening which had begun with the "Oberon" score setting the stage properly for an evening of musical magic. This is precisely what we had.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 14, at 7:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Guest Conductor

WEBER ..... Overture to "Oberon"

SHOSTAKOVITCH ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 47

I. Moderato
II. Allegretto
III. Largo
IV. Allegro non troppo

INTERMISSION

RACHMANINOFF ..... Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18

I. Moderato
II. Adagio sostenuto
III. Allegro scherzando

SOLOIST
GINA BACHAUER
Mme. BACHAUER plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
FEB 12 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony This Week

Burgin Orchestra's Guest Conductor

Richard Burgin, who retired last season as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will return to Boston for the second time this season to be guest conductor of the orchestra's concert in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, the fifth of the Tuesday "B" series, which begins at 7:30.

Gina Bachauer, pianist, will continue her engagement as soloist in the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2. Mr. Burgin will first lead the Orchestra in Weber's Overture to "Oberon" and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5.

Burgin will conduct the same program Thursday evening at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium in Providence, in the fourth concert of the Orchestra's regular subscription series there.

ERICH LEINSDORF will conduct the Symphony Hall concerts of Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. He has invited Joseph Silverstein, Concertmaster, to be soloist in the concluding number, the Brahms Violin Concerto.

The program will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 2. Mr. Leinsdorf will then introduce a recent work by Michael Colgrass entitled "As Quiet As" (1965-66). The work was commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago and received its first performance last summer at Tanglewood by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Gunther Schuller conducting, during the Festival of Contemporary American Music, which is presented in cooperation with the Fromm Foundation.

The complete program:

Tuesday at 7:30 p.m., Symphony Hall, RICHARD BURGIN, Guest Conductor.
Weber Overture to "Oberon"
Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5, Op. 47
Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18
GINA BACHAUER, Soloist
Friday at 2 p.m., Saturday Feb. 18, 8:30, ERICH LEINSDORF, Conducting.
Beethoven Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 36
Brahms Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77
Colgrass As Qu as As (1965-66)
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, Soloist

STANDARD-TIMES (e)
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 67,000
FEB 16 1967
New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Led With Musical Polish

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

Richard Burgin, former concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned to Symphony Hall Tuesday night as guest conductor, to lead the orchestra in the fifth program of the current Tuesday "B" Series.

For his return Mr. Burgin chose Weber's "Overture to 'Oberon,'" Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 5, Opus 47," and Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2 in C Minor, Opus 18," with Gina Bachauer as soloist.

The Weber, of course, is perhaps the most imaginative of the composer's several overtures, always a sure-fire program filler. It was done with bright musical polish by Mr. Burgin and his musicians.

The Shostakovitch "Symphony No. 5" is no stranger to Mr. Burgin since it was he who conducted the first Boston performance of the work back in 1939. It is a selection that he knows and understands; he builds well to its various climaxes and has his instrumentalists under excellent control.

Nowhere in his composition has Shostakovitch better managed his characteristic melodic ideas than in this symphony. One of the best moments in the work occurs shortly after the opening when the tempo increases slightly and the first violins announce the theme, marked by the soaring octave leap.

This is the same theme that returns with particular effect late in the first movement when it is heard as a canon between the horn and the flute.

This entire movement was superbly played as was the delightful and sometimes amusingly grotesque scherzo, the lyrical largo, and the impressive finale, whose optimistic mood is heralded by trombones, tubas, and tympani in a brash, smashing figure that dominates most of the movement.

As for the Rachmaninoff "Piano Concerto No. 2," its familiar themes are always pleasurable to hear and Miss Bachauer has the bravura approach necessary to a successful reading of the work.

On the whole, hers was a stirring and powerful interpretation, marred only by a decided lack of balance between her and the orchestra in the first movement during which her keyboard work was smothered by the orchestra's lush sound.

In the second movement, however, with its sad and quietly solemn texture of melody above arpeggios, both Miss Bachauer and the orchestra were in excellent form, and in the finale, which alternates between a heroic, almost martial strain and another of sheer lyrical beauty, she and the orchestra were in splendid accord. Miss Bachauer was most cordially received by the enthusiastic audience.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
FEB 11 1967
New Englanc Newscli

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Boston:

Tues. at 7:30:

Richard Burgin, who retired last season as BSO associate conductor, returns to the Symphony Hall podium as guest conductor. He'll lead the orchestra in Weber's Overture to "Oberon"; Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5, Op. 47, and Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Op. 16. Pianist Gina Bachauer will be soloist in the latter work.

Fri. at 2:

Eric Leinsdorf returns to conduct Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 36; Michael Colgrass' recent work, "As Quiet As," and Brahms' Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist. Repeat performance Sat. at 8:30.

59

TUES. B #5 FEB. 14

JOURNAL (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 66,850

FEB 17 1967 New England Newsclip

Music Last Night

Boston Symphony, Spanish Guitarist in Performances

By RUTH TRIPP

The fourth concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra series brought an old friend to the podium and this time, as guest conductor. Richard Burgin, who for so many years was associate conductor of the orchestra, retired from that position last season. It was truly a great pleasure to see and hear him last evening.

Gina Bachauer, pianist, was guest soloist in the Concerto No. 2 in C minor by Rachmaninoff. The orchestra played Weber's Overture to "Oberon" and Symphony No. 5, Op. 47, by Shostakovitch. The entire evening was a musical feast.

The interpretation which Burgin brought to the Shostakovitch was a magnificent one and if ever you may have had doubts that this work is one of the masterpieces of the century, this interpretation would have dispelled them. From the outset, there was a mastery of the style with an added instinctive feeling about the beauty of the themes and how best to contrast them. The orchestra is always happy with Richard Burgin on the podium and last evening was no exception. They gave their utmost to the beautiful exposition of the score. We heard entrancing solo bits from Alfred Krips, the acting concertmaster; Doriot Dwyer, flute, and Ralph Gomberg, oboe. The intensity of the Largo movement reached impressive heights. The excitement of the finale communicated volumes to the listeners who may have remembered the first performance of this work in Boston in 1939 when Burgin was on the podium. The growth of the conductor in his art, the growth of the listeners' appreciation and the acceptance of the score which at one time seemed strange and dissonant are all a part of the aging process. Providence gave Richard Burgin a tremendous ovation for his fine work in this excellent interpretation. He was recalled six times.

Gina Bachauer was no less of a success. She is well-liked here, and the power and beauty of her playing were as astonishing as ever. In her interpretation of Rachmaninoff, the freedom of rubato, the tonal balance of the keyboard playing within its own melodic facets and, in turn, in relation to its importance either against or with the orchestral tone, kept the listeners enthralled. There were times when the rhythmic pulse of the soloist was slightly at variance with that of the orchestra but it was only momentary. The familiar themes which have been taken over by the popular song writers were easily recognized, and when the grand closing bars arrived, the soloist and orchestra ended with a brilliant climax. Cheers and hearty applause made an exciting end to a fine evening which had begun with the "Oberon" score setting the stage properly for an evening of musical magic. This is precisely what we had.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Fifth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 14, at 7:30 o'clock

RICHARD BURGIN, Guest Conductor

WEBER ..... Overture to "Oberon"

SHOSTAKOVITCH ..... Symphony No. 5, Op. 47

I. Moderato
II. Allegretto
III. Largo
IV. Allegro non troppo

INTERMISSION

RACHMANINOFF ..... Piano Concerto No. 2, in C minor, Op. 18

I. Moderato
II. Adagio sostenuto
III. Allegro scherzando

SOLOIST
GINA BACHAUER
Mme. BACHAUER plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100

FEB 12 1967 New England Newsclip

Symphony This Week

Burgin Orchestra's Guest Conductor

Richard Burgin, who retired last season as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will return to Boston for the second time this season to be guest conductor of the orchestra's concert in Symphony Hall Tuesday evening, the fifth of the Tuesday "B" series, which begins at 7:30.

Gina Bachauer, pianist, will continue her engagement as soloist in the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2. Mr. Burgin will first lead the Orchestra in Weber's Overture to "Oberon" and the Sbostakovitch Symphony No. 5.

Burgin will conduct the same program Thursday evening at the Veterans Memorial Auditorium in P rovidence, in the fourth concert of the Orchestra's regular subscription series there.

ERICH LEINSDORF will conduct the Symphony Hall concerts of Friday afternoon at 2 and Saturday evening at 8:30. He has invited Joseph Silverstein, Concertmaster, to be soloist in the concluding number, the Brahms Violin Concerto.

The program will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 2. Mr. Leinsdorf will then introduce a recent work by Michael Colgrass entitled "As Quiet As" (1965-66). The work was commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago and received its first performance last summer at Tanglewood by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Gunther Schuller conducting, during the Festival of Contemporary American Music, which is presented in cooperation with the Fromm Foundation.

The complete program:

Tuesday at 7:30 p.m., Symphony Hall, RICHARD BURGIN, Guest Conductor.
Weber Overture to "Oberon"
Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5, Op. 47
Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18
GINA BACHAUER, Soloist
Friday at 2 p.m., Saturday Feb. 18, 8:30; ERICH LEINSDORF, Conducting.
Beethoven Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 36
Brahms Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77
Colgrass As Qu et As (1965-66)
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN, Soloist

STANDARD-TIMES (e)
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 67,000

FEB 16 1967 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Led With Musical Polish

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

Richard Burgin, former concert master and associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returned to Symphony Hall Tuesday night as guest conductor, to lead the orchestra in the fifth program of the current Tuesday "B" Series.

For his return Mr. Burgin chose Weber's "Overture to 'Oberon,'" Shostakovitch's "Symphony No. 5, Opus 47," and Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 2 in C Minor, Opus 18," with Gina Bachauer as soloist.

The Weber, of course, is perhaps the most imaginative of the composer's several overtures, always a sure-fire program filler. It was done with bright musical polish by Mr. Burgin and his musicians.

The Shostakovitch "Symphony No. 5" is no stranger to Mr. Burgin since it was he who conducted the first Boston performance of the work back in 1939. It is a selection that he knows and understands; he builds well to its various climaxes and has his instrumentalists under excellent control.

Nowhere in his composition has Shostakovitch better managed his characteristic melodic ideas than in this symphony. One of the best moments in the work occurs shortly after the opening when the tempo increases slightly and the first violins announce the theme, marked by the soaring octave leap.

This is the same theme that returns with particular effect late in the first movement when it is heard as a canon between the horn and the flute.

This entire movement was superbly played as was the delightful and sometimes amusingly grotesque scherzo, the lyrical largo, and the impressive finale, whose optimistic mood is heralded by trombones, tubas, and tympani in a brash, smashing figure that dominates most of the movement.

As for the Rachmaninoff "Piano Concerto No. 2," its familiar themes are always pleasurable to hear and Miss Bachauer has the bravura approach necessary to a successful reading of the work.

On the whole, hers was a stirring and powerful interpretation, marred only by a decided lack of balance between her and the orchestra in the first movement during which her keyboard work was somewhat smothered by the orchestra's lush sound.

In the second movement, however, with its sad and quietly solemn texture of melody above arpeggios, both Miss Bachauer and the orchestra were in excellent form, and in the finale, which alternates between a heroic, almost martial strain and another of sheer lyrical beauty, she and the orchestra were in splendid accord. Miss Bachauer was most cordially received by the enthusiastic audience.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100

FEB 11 1967 New England Newsclip

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Boston

Tues. at 7:30:

Richard Burgin, who retired last season as BSO associate conductor, returns to the Symphony Hall podium as guest conductor. He'll lead the orchestra in Weber's Overture to "Oberon"; Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 5, Op. 47, and Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor, Op. 18. Pianist Gina Bachauer will be soloist in the latter work.

Fri. at 2:

Eric Leinsdorf returns to conduct Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 36; Michael Colgrass' recent work, "As Quiet As," and Brahms' Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist. Repeat performance Sat. at 8:30.

FRI. + SAT. #18 FEB. 17 + 18

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Eighteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 17, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 18, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 36

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto

COLGRASS ..... As Quiet As

A Leaf Turning Colors
An Uninhabited Creek
An Ant Walking
Children Sleeping
Time Passing
A Soft Rainfall
The First Star Coming Out
(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ..... Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1095]

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
FEB 12 1967
New England Newsclip

Two Programs, Two Conductors At Symphony

The first Boston performances of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As . . ." will be at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The program will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and conclude with the Brahms Violin Concerto. Soloist in the concerto will be the orchestra's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein.

On Tuesday evening, Richard Burgin returns again to his old orchestra as guest conductor. Gina Bachauer will be soloist in the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2. Burgin also will conduct Weber's "Oberon" Overture and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5.

The new Colgrass piece, first played last Summer by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood, was commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago. There are seven sections to Colgrass' "As Quiet As . . ."—A Leaf Turning Colors, An Uninhabited Creek, An Ant Walking, Children Sleeping, Time Passing, A Soft Rainfall and The First Star Coming Out.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
FEB 18 1967
New England Newsclip

Brahms Violin Concerto Played by Silverstein

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein gave an incisive exposition of the Brahms violin concerto (Op. 77, in D yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchester conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. Their reading caught the veritable spirit and essence of this most noble of violin concerti.

Though it has its bleak and craggy moments, it also contains much music that is warmly expansive and sun-drenched. Silverstein lived up to these changing moods, displaying a technique that was both rock-steady and brilliant.

Of this violin concerto it has been said time and again that the orchestral part is too heavy in relation to the solo part. This type of writing is the logical outgrowth of Brahm's treatment of the solo-orchestral relationship in his earlier first piano concerto (Op. 15, in D minor), which presupposes the conterto as being for soloist and orchestra rather than soloist

In dealing thusly with the concerted format, Brahms struck a telling blow against the tendency of his time to overemphasize the soloist at the expense of the music. For this reason the Brahms is the most difficult of all violin concerti. The violinist who really has mastered it can be considered without question as an outstanding virtuoso.

Yesterday's performance was really outstanding for sheer artistry and depth of sympathy with the music, Silverstein, in top form, elicited tones opulence and phrased the long melodic lines with skill and understanding. Dr. Leinsdorf led the orchestra with finesse, evoking velvety sounds from woodwinds and strings which were just right for Brahms.

Silverstein played the earlier Heifetz cadenza brilliantly. There is a depth and nobility in the first movement and lyrical qualities in the slow movement with Ralph Gomberg's beautifully played oboe solo therein a joy to hear.

Silverstein chose a slightly faster tempo for the finale than is customary and with complete justification, as it turned out, for he never was at a loss for sparkle and brilliance.

Beethoven's second symphony (Op. 36, in D), which began the concert, is a very closely knit work and the fundamental line of the music is vigrous and healthy, full of serenity and courage in the face of the composer's incipient deafness.

60

FRI. + SAT. #18 FEB. 17 + 18

Eighteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 17, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 18, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 36

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto

COLGRASS ..... As Quiet As

A Leaf Turning Colors
An Uninhabited Creek
An Ant Walking
Children Sleeping
Time Passing
A Soft Rainfall
The First Star Coming Out
(First performance in Boston)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ..... Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1095]

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

FEB 12 1967 New England Newsclip

Two Programs, Two Conductors At Symphony

The first Boston performances of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As . . ." will be at the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts of the Boston Symphony. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The program will open with Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and conclude with the Brahms Violin Concerto. Soloist in the concerto will be the orchestra's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein.

On Tuesday evening, Richard Burgin returns again to his old orchestra as guest conductor. Gina Bachauer will be soloist in the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2. Burgin also will conduct Weber's "Oberon" Overture and the Shostakovitch Symphony No. 5.

The new Colgrass piece, first played last Summer by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at Tanglewood, was commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago. There are seven sections to Colgrass' "As Quiet As . . ."—A Leaf Turning Colors, An Uninhabited Creek, An Ant Walking, Children Sleeping, Time Passing, A Soft Rainfall and The First Star Coming Out.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

FEB 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Brahms Violin Concerto Played by Silverstein

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein gave an incisive exposition of the Brahms violin concerto (Op. 77, in D yesterday afternoon with the Boston Symphony Orchester conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. Their reading caught the veritable spirit and essence of this most noble of violin concerti.

Though it has its bleak and craggy moments, it also contains much music that is warmly expansive and sun-drenched. Silverstein lived up to these changing moods, displaying a technique that was both rock-steady and brilliant.

Of this violin concerto it has been said time and again that the orchestral part is too heavy in relation to the solo part. This type of writing is the logical outgrowth of Brahm's treatment of the solo-orchestral relationship in his earlier first piano concerto (Op. 15, in D minor), which presupposes the conterto as being for soloist and orchestra rather than soloist

In dealing thusly with the concerted format, Brahms struck a telling blow against the tendency of his time to overemphasize the soloist at the expense of the music. For this reason the Brahms is the most difficult of all violin concerti. The violinist who really has mastered it can be considered without question as an outstanding virtuoso.

Yesterday's performance was really outstanding for sheer artistry and depth of sympathy with the music. Silverstein, in top form, elicited tones opulence and phrased the long melodic lines with skill and understanding. Dr. Leinsdorf led the orchestra with finesse, evoking velvety sounds from woodwinds and strings which were just right for Brahms.

Silverstein played the earlier Heifetz cadenza brilliantly. There is a depth and nobility in the first movement and lyrical qualities in the slow movement with Ralph Gomberg's beautifully played oboe solo therein a joy to hear.

Silverstein chose a slightly faster tempo for the finale than is customary and with complete justification, as it turned out, for he never was at a loss for sparkle and brilliance.

Beethoven's second symphony (Op. 36, in D), which began the concert, is a very closely knit work and the fundamental line of the music is vigrous and healthy, full of serenity and courage in the face of the composer's incipient deafness.

61

TUES. A #8 MAR. 7
POSTPONED FROM FEB. 7

TUES. A #9 FEB. 21

Eighth Program

(POSTPONED CONCERT)

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 7, at 8:30 o'clock

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 9, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95

I. Adagio; Allegro molto
II. Largo
III. Scherzo; Molto vivace
IV. Allegro con fuoco

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ..... Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

Ninth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 21, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 36

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto

COLGRASS ..... As Quiet As

A Leaf Turning Colors
An Uninhabited Creek
An Ant Walking
Children Sleeping
Time Passing
A Soft Rainfall
The First Star Coming Out

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV ..... Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64

PART I
Introduction
Romeo, Mercutio, and Benvolio Masked
Dance of the Knights
Gavotte of the Departing Guests
Romeo
Dance of Love

PART II
Duel and Death of Tybalt
Interlude
Juliet
Morning Serenade
Funeral for Juliet
Death of the Lovers

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
MAR 8 1967
New England Newsclip

LEDGER-TIMES
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 10,000
FEB 23 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony Orch. Concert Postponed Until March 7

PAGE ONE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert [illegible], one of the Tuesday "A" Series, was postponed because of the snowstorm until Tuesday, March 7. Mr. Leinsdorf has rearranged his scheduled vacation to make the new date possible. The program which he will conduct will consist of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, as soloist.

The Sound of Music

Symphony In The Snow

By Peter M. Knapp

Because of the blizzard Feb. 7, that night's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was postponed to March 7. Back came the snow again yesterday, but the BSO management decided enough was enough and the program went on anyway, though to a greatly reduced audience.

Those who did slosh their way to Symphony Hall heard a splendid performance of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 in e minor, the popular "From the New World," and the equally familiar Brahms violin concerto, for which Joseph Silverstein was soloist.

Flair For Drama

Popularity being a sometime thing, one might say that Dvorak's "New World" actually is not too often heard in the concert halls these days, in relation to a decade or so ago. Not that it's a rarity, but the other Dvorak symphonies are getting their due.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf's approach is a far cry from the genial, sentimental performances that used to be the norm. Instead, he injected drama into the well-thumbed score in a reading of theatrical scope and contrasts. Forte passages in the introduction were given very sharp accents, and Leinsdorf gave the ensuing allegro a grand, sweeping line.

Curiously, he repeated the exposition of the first movement, and whether technically correct or not (does anyone else do it?) the repeat sounded arbitrary and unnecessary. At any rate it made the plunge into the development almost anticlimax.

As a whole, however, Leinsdorf's "New World" stood up well. It was a taut, driving and sonorous performance, with rousing playing by the brasses and beautiful English horn solos in the largo by Laurence Thorstenberg.

In the Brahms concerto, Concertmaster Silverstein worked hard and efficiently, though the total effect was more of skill than inspiration. For all his virtues, Silverstein's tone is not big and bold enough to fully carry off the Brahms concerto and when he tried to project it more, the tone lost its basic sweetness and turned rather hard and wiry.

The first two movements were the best, with Silverstein spinning out the lyrical passages in fine style to Leinsdorf's expressive accompaniment.

In the adagio, Silverstein's occasional coy manner of phrasing, breaking up the line with breathless little pauses, marred the enchantment of the composer's writing. The finale sounded rhythmically uncomfortable and overly hurried.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
FEB 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Postponed Concert By BSO Rescheduled

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of Feb. 7, one of the Tuesday "A" series which was postponed because of the snowstorm, will be performed on Tuesday, March 7. Erich Leinsdorf has rearranged his scheduled vacation to make the new date possible. The program will consist of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, as soloist.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
FEB 25 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony [illegible]

The orchestra and its leader, Erich Leinsdorf, are out of town this week concertizing in Washington and New York. Next BSO concert will be March 7.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
FEB 24 1967
New England Newsclip

BSO Concert Set March 7

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert of Feb. 7, one of the Tuesday "A" series, was postponed because of the snowstorm until Tuesday, March 7. Erich Leinsdorf has rearranged his scheduled vacation to make the new date possible. The program which he will conduct will consist of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, as soloist.

SUNDAY ADVERTISER
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 432,650
FEB 19 1967
New England Newsclip

New Concert Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert of Feb. 7, postponed because of the snowstorm, will be held Tuesday, March 7.

61

TUES. A #8 MAR. 7
POSTPONED FROM FEB. 7

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Eighth Program

(POSTPONED CONCERT)

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 7, at 8:30 o'clock

DVOŘÁK ..... Symphony No. 9, in E minor, "From the New World," Op. 95

I. Adagio; Allegro molto
II. Largo
III. Scherzo; Molto vivace
IV. Allegro con fuoco

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ..... Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
MAR 8 1967
New England Newsclip

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
FEB 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Postponed Concert By BSO Rescheduled

The Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of Feb. 7, one of the Tuesday "A" series which was postponed because of the snowstorm, will be performed on Tuesday, March 7. Erich Leinsdorf has rearranged his scheduled vacation to make the new date possible. The program will consist of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, as soloist.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
FEB 25 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Symphony Hall, Sym
The orchestra and its leader, Eric Leinsdorf, are out of town this week concertizing in Washington and New York. Next BSO concert will be March 7.

TUES. A #9 FEB. 21

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Ninth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 21, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 36

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto

COLGRASS ..... As Quiet As

A Leaf Turning Colors
An Uninhabited Creek
An Ant Walking
Children Sleeping
Time Passing
A Soft Rainfall
The First Star Coming Out

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

PROKOFIEV ..... Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64

PART I
Introduction
Romeo, Mercutio, and Benvolio Masked
Dance of the Knights
Gavotte of the Departing Guests
Romeo
Dance of Love

PART II
Duel and Death of Tybalt
Interlude
Juliet
Morning Serenade
Funeral for Juliet
Death of the Lovers

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

LEDGER-TIMES
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 10,000
FEB 23 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony Orch. Concert Postponed Until March 7

PAGE ONE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert of Feb. 7, one of the Tuesday "A" Series, was postponed because of the snowstorm until Tuesday, March 7. Mr. Leinsdorf has rearranged his scheduled vacation to make the new date possible. The program which he will conduct will consist of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, as soloist.

The Sound of Music

Symphony In The Snow

By Peter M. Knapp

Because of the blizzard Feb. 7, that night's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert was postponed to March 7. Back came the snow again yesterday, but the BSO management decided enough was enough and the program went on anyway, though to a greatly reduced audience.

Those who did slosh their way to Symphony Hall heard a splendid performance of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 in e minor, the popular "From the New World," and the equally familiar Brahms violin concerto, for which Joseph Silverstein was soloist.

Flair For Drama

Popularity being a sometime thing, one might say that Dvorak's "New World" actually is not too often heard in the concert halls these days, in relation to a decade or so ago. Not that it's a rarity, but the other Dvorak symphonies are getting their due.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf's approach is a far cry from the genial, sentimental performances that used to be the norm. Instead, he injected drama into the well-thumbed score in a reading of theatrical scope and contrasts. Forte passages in the introduction were given very sharp accents, and Leinsdorf gave the ensuing allegro a grand, sweeping line.

Curiously, he repeated the exposition of the first movement, and whether technically correct or not (does anyone else do it?) the repeat sounded arbitrary and unnecessary. At any rate it made the plunge into the development almost anticlimax.

As a whole, however, Leinsdorf's "New World" stood up well. It was a taut, driving and sonorous performance, with rousing playing by the brasses and beautiful English horn solos in the largo by Laurence Thorstenberg.

In the Brahms concerto, Concertmaster Silverstein worked hard and efficiently, though the total effect was more of skill than inspiration. For all his virtues, Silverstein's tone is not big and bold enough to fully carry off the Brahms concerto and when he tried to project it more, the tone lost its basic sweetness and turned rather hard and wiry.

The first two movements were the best, with Silverstein spinning out the lyrical passages in fine style to Leinsdorf's expressive accompaniment.

In the adagio, Silverstein's occasional coy manner of phrasing, breaking up the line with breathless little pauses, marred the enchantment of the composer's writing. The finale sounded rhythmically uncomfortable and overly hurried.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
FEB 24 1967
New England Newsclip

BSO Concert Set March 7

SUNDAY ADVERTISER
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 432,650
FEB 19 1967
New England Newsclip

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert of Feb. 7, one of the Tuesday "A" series, was postponed because of the snowstorm until Tuesday, March 7. Erich Leinsdorf has rearranged his scheduled vacation to make the new date possible. The program which he will conduct will consist of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, as soloist.

New Concert Date

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's concert of Feb. 7, postponed because of the snowstorm, will be held Tuesday, March 7.

FRI. + SAT. #19 FEB. 24+25

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
FEB 25 1967
New England Newsclip

B.S.O. Rutgers Choir Performs Hayden Mass

It was Rutgers Day at Symphony Hall yesterday when Hayden's Schopfungsmesse (Creation Mass) opened the concert, Eric Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Rutgers University Choir.

Beverly Sills, soprano, Beverly Wolff, contralto, Placido Domingo, tenor, and Ara Berberian, bass, were the soloists.

Leinsdorf, whose warm relations with the University are reflected in the Doctorate conferred on him by that institution, conducted the Massin his forthright and vigorous manner, a reading both classic and lively that exposed Papa Hayden's ebullience as he "praised God with a cheerful heart." This is festive music, full of Croatian influence — Hayden was more Croatian than Austrian in background—and joyously different from the traditional serious churchly style. In fact it is brilliantly symphonic. The orchestra richly balanced the choir whose tone, except for one or two entrances of the soprano section was smoothly unified.

Sandwiched between two sure-fire numbers was the usual modernist cerebral piece, this time Et Occidentem Illustra by Moevs, its title derived from the mottoes of the Universities of Utrecht and Rutgers. This was also sung by the Rutgers Choir. A heavily orchestrated work—its instruments include an anvil—it is one of those spotty and dislocated statements held together by the voices of the chorus. It was commissioned by Rutgers, now the State University of New Jersey in commemoration of its 200th anniversary when charter was granted by King George in 1766. Based on Ulysses' exhortation to his followers found in Canto 26 of the Divine Comedy of Dante, it urges the expansion of the frontiers of knowledge, especially in the West. This, sung in nglish translation, except for the introduction, gives a feeling of being more the spoken word than music.

Robert Moevs is presently Professor in the music department of Rtugers University.

Last on the program was the Final Scene from Richard Strauss' Daphne the soloist, Beverly Sills.

Neville Cardus of the Manchester Guardian said of this: "Daphne, even more than Aaabella was a well remembered work. It is like the supplementary index given away wtih an encyclopoedia. It is an outline of Strauss for those who have no time to study him." Here, Mr. Leinsdorf begins with Daphne's Libestod as she is transformed into the laurel tree. He compassed the epitome of Strauss in superb conducting while Miss Sills displayed the full range of a gorgeous and powerful voice.

Throughout the concert the soloists showed controlltd taste and excellent voices. They have all been, or are still with the New York City Opera. Miss Sills was particularly melliflous in the final bars of the Daphne.

P.E.W.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Nineteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, February 24, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, February 25, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN ..... Mass in B-flat major ("Schöpfungsmesse")

Kyrie
Gloria
Credo
Sanctus
Benedictus
Agnus Dei

BEVERLY SILLS, Soprano — PLACIDO DOMINGO, Tenor
BEVERLY WOLFF, Contralto — ARA BERBERIAN, Bass

RUTGERS UNIVERSITY CHOIR
F. AUSTIN WALTER, Director
(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

MOEVS ..... Et Occidentem Illustra

RUTGERS UNIVERSITY CHOIR
F. AUSTIN WALTER, Director
(First performance)

STRAUSS ..... "Daphne," Op. 82, Final Scene

BEVERLY SILLS, Soprano
(First performance at these concerts)

The text for Haydn's "Schöpfungsmesse" will be found on page 1164; that for Moevs' Et Occidentem Illustra will be found on page 1186.

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
FEB 19 1967
New England Newsclip

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Haydn's "Creation" Mass, with soprano Beverly Sills, contralto Beverly Woolf, tenor Placido Domingo and basso Ara Berberian, and the Rutgers University Choir; the premiere of Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentum" with the Rutgers Choir, and the final scene of Strauss' "Daphne," with Miss Sills. Symphony Hall at 2 p.m. Program repeated Saturday at 8:30 p.m.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
FEB 23 1967
New England Newsclip

Moevs Premiere Friday

Symphony Chorus To Give Concert

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

"Et occidentem illustra" by Robert Moevs, for chorus and orchestra, will have its premiere performances at the Boston Symphony concerts this Friday and Saturday. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct, and the chorus comes from Rutgers University. Moevs Harvard '42, a pupil in composition of Walter Piston and Nadia Boulanger, has been Associate Professor of Music at Rutgers since 1964.

The work was commissioned by Rutgers for its Bicentennial in 1966. Rutgers adapted its motto from that of the University of Utrecht, "Sol iustitiae illustra" (let the sun of justice shine), turning it into "Sol iustitiae et occidentem illustra" (let the sun of justice shine upon the West also), and it is from this motto that Moevs has taken the title of his work.

The text of "Et occidentem illustra" begins with the opening salutation from the commission given to Theodore Frelinghuysen in 1755 concerning the establishment of colleges of true learning in these newly inhabited ends of the earth. This Latin Prooemium leads into the speech of Ulysses to his sailors as found in lines 112-120 of Canto 26 in Dante's "Inferno."

Moevs set the lines in Italian. At these performances, they will, however, be sung in English in a translation that Moevs describes as a mixture of Longfellow (mainly) Ciardi, and Moevs.

This is the excerpt from Dante:

"O brothers," I said, "through a hundred thousand adventures have you reached the West; waste not this brief remaining vigil, That your senses stand: do not think to deny yourselves the knowledge, beyond the sun, of worlds unpeopled! Consider the seed from which you sprang; you were not formed to live like unto brutes, but to press on toward virtue and knowledge."

The two texts are linked in spirit, and the "sapientia, virtute" of the Prooemium are echoed in the "virtute e conoscenza" of Dante's last line.

Nobody knows, Moevs says, what Ulysses is doing in the "Inferno." It is, in fact, one of the celebrated puzzles of Dante scholarship, and just a few weeks ago Mrs. Moevs, an archaeologist, received notice of a lecture elucidating the subject to be given by a Swiss scholar. Since, however, the lecture will be given Friday afternoon at exactly the moment "Et occidentem illustra" has its premiere, neither Moevs will have a chance to find out about the new hypothesis.

However Ulysses came to be in the "Inferno," Moevs finds these lines immensely exciting. That last apocryphal voyage of Ulysses as invented by Dante is, for Moevs, "a clear call to renew the efforts of the classical Greeks toward the expansion of the frontiers of man's knowledge and understanding. This is really what starts the whole Renaissance going."

Dante's poem is written in "terza rima," sets of three lines with interlocking rhymes, ABA BCB CDC. The score reflects Dante's preoccupation with threes. For example, the twelve pitches of the chromatic scale are divided into three structural units each of four notes, of which the third is the retrograde of the first.

The choral style is mostly declamatory, and it includes a certain amount of speaking, even shouting (the salutation, Ulysses' final exhortation). The composer has made a forceful setting of words he regards as vitally articulating the hope for the life of the mind in our hemisphere.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
FEB 19 1967
New England Newsclip

Premiere This Week At Symphony

The first performance of a choral work, Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra," will be given at the Boston Symphony concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evenings.

The orchestra, under Erich Leinsdorf, will also be heard in two other programs this week, on Tuesday for its regular subscription audience, and on Thursday, for Winterfest.

Tuesday's program is Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As . . ." and Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet."

On Thursday, The Winterfest concert will include the Brahms Violin Concerto, with the orchestra's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein as solist.

There will also be a complete performance of Haydn's Mass in B flat major, "Creation." Solists will be Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Placido Domingo, tenor; and Ara Berberian, bass. The choral parts will be performed by the Rutgers University Choir, F. Austin Walter Director.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will likewise begin with Haydn's "Creation" Mass. Intermission will follow, after which Leinsdorf and the orchestra, assisted by the Rutgers chorus, will present the first performance of "Et Occidentem Illustra" by Robert Moevs of the Rutgers faculty. Moevs' composition was commissioned by the university on the occasion of its 200th anniversary; it will subsequently be performed by this orchestra and the Rutgers chorus in New Brunswick, N.J., on Mar. 2 and at Carnegie Hall Mar. 4. The Friday-Saturday program will conclude with the Final Scene from Richard Strauss' "Daphne," with Miss Sills as soloist.

FRI. + SAT. #19 FEB. 24+25

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
FEB 25 1967
New England Newsclip

B.S.O. Rutgers Choir Performs Hayden Mass

It was Rutgers Day at Symphony Hall yesterday when Hayden's Schopfungsmesse (Creation Mass) opened the concert, Eric Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Rutgers University Choir.

Beverly Sills, soprano, Beverly Wolff, contralto, Placido Domingo, tenor, and Ara Berberian, bass, were the soloists.

Leinsdorf, whose warm relations with the University are reflected in the Doctorate conferred on him by that institution, conducted the Massin his forthright and vigorous manner, a reading both classic and lively that exposed Papa Hayden's ebullience as he "praised God with a cheerful heart." This is festive music, full of Croatian influence — Hayden was more Croatian than Austrian in background—and joyously different from the traditional serious churchly style. In fact it is brilliantly symphonic. The orchestra richly balanced the choir whose tone, except for one or two entrances of the soprano section was smoothly unified.

Sandwiched between two sure-fire numbers was the usual modernist cerebral piece, this time Et Occidentem Illustra by Moevs, its title derived from the mottoes of the Universities of Utrecht and Rutgers. This was also sung by the Rutgers Choir. A heavily orchestrated work—its instruments include an anvil—it is one of those spotty and dislocated statements held together by the voices of the chorus. It was commissioned by Rutgers, now the State University of New Jersey in commemoration of its 200th anniversary when charter was granted by King George in 1766. Based on Ulysses' exhortation to his followers found in Canto 26 of the Divine Comedy of Dante, it urges the expansion of the frontiers of knowledge, especially in the West. This, sung in nglish translation, except for the introduction, gives a feeling of being more the spoken word than music.

Robert Moevs is presently Professor in the music department of Rtugers University.

Last on the program was the Final Scene from Richard Strauss' Daphne the soloist, Beverly Sills.

Neville Cardus of the Manchester Guardian said of this: "Daphne, even more than Aaabella was a well remembered work. It is like the supplementary index given away wtih an encyclopoedia. It is an outline of Strauss for those who have no time to study him." Here, Mr. Leinsdorf begins with Daphne's Libestod as she is transformed into the laurel tree. He compassed the epitome of Strauss in superb conducting while Miss Sills displayed the full range of a gorgeous and powerful voice.

Throughout the concert the soloists showed controlltd taste and excellent voices. They have all been, or are still with the New York City Opera. Miss Sills was particularly mellifluous in the final bars of the Daphne.

P.B.W.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Nineteenth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, FEBRUARY 24, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 25, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN ..... Mass in B-flat major ("Schöpfungsmesse")

Kyrie
Gloria
Credo
Sanctus
Benedictus
Agnus Dei

BEVERLY SILLS, Soprano PLACIDO DOMINGO, Tenor
BEVERLY WOLFF, Contralto ARA BERBERIAN, Bass

RUTGERS UNIVERSITY CHOIR
F. AUSTIN WALTER, Director
(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

MOEVS ..... Et Occidentem Illustra

RUTGERS UNIVERSITY CHOIR
F. AUSTIN WALTER, Director
(First performance)

STRAUSS ..... "Daphne," Op. 82, Final Scene

BEVERLY SILLS, Soprano
(First performance at these concerts)

The text for Haydn's "Schöpfungsmesse" will be found on page 1164; that for Moevs' Et Occidentem Illustra will be found on page 1186.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
FEB 19 1967
New England Newsclip

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Haydn's "Creation" Mass, with soprano Beverly Sills, contralto Beverly Woolf, tenor Placido Domingo and basso Ara Berberian, and the Rutgers University Choir; the premiere of Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentum" with the Rutgers Choir, and the final scene of Strauss' "Daphne," with Miss Sills. Symphony Hall at 2 p.m. Program repeated Saturday at 8:30 p.m.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
FEB 23 1967
New England Newsclip

Moevs Premiere Friday

Symphony Chorus To Give Concert

By MICHAEL STEINBERG

"Et occidentem illustra" by Robert Moevs, for chorus and orchestra, will have its premiere performances at the Boston Symphony concerts this Friday and Saturday. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct, and the chorus comes from Rutgers University. Moevs Harvard '42, a pupil in composition of Walter Piston and Nadia Boulanger, has been Associate Professor of Music at Rutgers since 1964.

The work was commissioned by Rutgers for its Bicentennial in 1966. Rutgers adapted its motto from that of the University of Utrecht, "Sol iustitiae illustra" (let the sun of justice shine), turning it into "Sol iustitiae et occidentem illustra" (let the sun of justice shine upon the West also), and it is from this motto that Moevs has taken the title of his work.

The text of "Et occidentem illustra" begins with the opening salutation from the commission given to Theodore Frelinghuysen in 1755 concerning the establishment of colleges of true learning in these newly inhabited ends of the earth. This Latin Prooemium leads into the speech of Ulysses to his sailors as found in lines 112-120 of Canto 26 in Dante's "Inferno."

Moevs set the lines in Italian. At these performances, they will, however, be sung in English in a translation that Moevs describes as a mixture of Longfellow (mainly) Ciardi, and Moevs.

This is the excerpt from Dante:

"O brothers," I said, "through a hundred thousand adventures have you reached the West; waste not this brief remaining vigil That your senses stand: do not think to deny yourselves the knowledge, beyond the sun, of worlds unpeopled! Consider the seed from which you sprang; you were not formed to live like unto brutes, but to press on toward virtue and knowledge."

The two texts are linked in spirit, and the "sapientia, virtute" of the Prooemium are echoed in the "virtute e conoscenza" of Dante's last line.

Nobody knows, Moevs says, what Ulysses is doing in the "Inferno." It is, in fact, one of the celebrated puzzles of Dante scholarship, and just a few weeks ago Mrs. Moevs, an archaeologist, received notice of a lecture elucidating the subject to be given by a Swiss scholar. Since, however, the lecture will be given Friday afternoon at exactly the moment "Et occidentem illustra" has its premiere, neither Moevs will have a chance to find out about the new hypothesis.

However Ulysses came to be in the "Inferno," Moevs finds these lines immensely exciting. That last apocryphal voyage of Ulysses as invented by Dante is, for Moevs, "a clear call to renew the efforts of the classical Greeks toward the expansion of the frontiers of man's knowledge and understanding. This is really what starts the whole Renaissance going."

Dante's poem is written in "terza rima," sets of three lines with interlocking rhymes, ABA BCB CDC. The score reflects Dante's preoccupation with threes. For example, the twelve pitches of the chromatic scale are divided into three structural units each of four notes, of which the third is the retrograde of the first.

The choral style is mostly declamatory, and it includes a certain amount of speaking, even shouting (the salutation, Ulysses' final exhortation). The composer has made a forceful setting of words he regards as vitally articulating the hope for the life of the mind in our hemisphere.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
FEB 19 1967
New England Newsclip

Premiere This Week At Symphony

The first performance of a choral work, Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra," will be given at the Boston Symphony concerts Friday afternoon and Saturday evenings.

The orchestra, under Erich Leinsdorf, will also be heard in two other programs this week, on Tuesday for its regular subscription audience, and on Thursday, for Winterfest.

Tuesday's program is Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As . . ." and Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet."

On Thursday, The Winterfest concert will include the Brahms Violin Concerto, with the orchestra's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein as solist.

There will also be a complete performance of Haydn's Mass in B flat major, "Creation." Solists will be Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Placido Domingo, tenor; and Ara Berberian, bass. The choral parts will be performed by the Rutgers University Choir, F. Austin Walter Director.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will likewise begin with Haydn's "Creation" Mass. Intermission will follow, after which Leinsdorf and the orchestra, assisted by the Rutgers chorus, will present the first performance of "Et Occidentem Illustra" by Robert Moevs of the Rutgers faculty. Moevs' composition was commissioned by the university on the occasion of its 200th anniversary; it will subsequently be performed by this orchestra and the Rutgers chorus in New Brunswick, N.J., on Mar. 2 and at Carnegie Hall Mar. 4. The Friday-Saturday program will conclude with the Final Scene from Richard Strauss' "Daphne," with Miss Sills as soloist.

63

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

FEB 25 1967

New England Newsclip

AT SYMPHONY HALL

It Was 'All Full of Singers And Absentees Missed Treat

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, with the Rutgers University Choir, F. Austin Walter, director, Beverly Sills, soprano, Beverly Wolff, contralto, Placido Domingo tennor, and Ara Berberian, bass, performing Haydn's "Creation" Mass in B flat, "Et Occidentem Illustra" by Robert Moevs (first performance), and the final scene from Strauss's "Daphne." Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

"O, this is all going to be full of singers—I don't like that so well," said one of the Friday ladies as she looked over the poster on her way into Symphony Hall. And sure enough, there was an unusually large number of empty seats. One of the ladies once explained that it degraded the Boston Symphony "to accompany singers," as she put it. But the absentees who are more interested in hearing instrumentalists play than in hearing music missed a concert that, because of the freshness and strength of the program and because of the high standard performance, was a highly distinguished one.

BICENTENNIAL

"Et Occidentem Illustra" was composed by Robert Moevs for the bicentennial celebrations at Rutgers, where he teaches. The title is taken from the university's motto, "Sol iustitiae et occidentem illustra," itself adopted from that of the University of Utrecht; the text uses part of the commission given in 1755 to Theodore Frelinghuysen concerning the establishment of institutions of learning in America, and the nine lines of Ulysses' exhortation to his sailors as found in the 26th Canto of Dante's "Inferno."

The opening salutation, in which "sapientia' and "virtute" are key words as "virtute" and "conoscenza" are in the Dante excerpt, is set apart in the composition. It uses mainly percussion with the chorus, and the chorus itself shouts, murmurs, speaks, rather than sings.

After this dramatic call to attention, an anvil stroke introduces that extraordinary passage in which Dante has Ulysses remind his sailors that they "were not formed to live like unto brutes, but to press on toward virtue and knowledge," urging them to explore even the unpeopled worlds beyond the sun.

Moevs has devised an exciting declamation for these words. They are given in small units that become smaller and more widely separated as the work goes on. Much of the choral writing is sharply, almost percussively, declamatory, but Moevs also makes a grand and expressive effect with long sustained lines, as in the magnificent and visionary expansion on the words "you have reached the West."

All this is underlined, surrounded, articulated by imaginatively conceived orchestral writing. Its broken texture is characteristically contemporary, but the emphasis is on the continuity that binds the rapidly shifting sounds together. Indeed, the sense of continuity, of the ability confidently to bridge large musical spaces, is an impressive achievement on Moevs' part. Even at the end, when the choral interventions occur very far apart, with each, one immediately picks up the thread. Moevs has learned well the lessons in Stravinsky's "Threni."

"Et Occidentem Illustra" is a strong and gripping work, of considerable individuality. It is also entrancing as a piece of virtuoso writing for chorus and orchestra, and that aspect also made itself strongly felt in Friday's performance. F. Austin Walter is obviously a choral conductor of extraordinary ability, and his Rutgers University Chorus is superb. In the Moevs, the singers sang the difficult pitches, which often are not doubled in the orchestra, with assurance and accuracy; they were magnificently confident and precise in the equally difficult rhythms; they sang with a clean, warm, unforced tone. There were a few rough moments in the orchestra, from which Leinsdorf and the players quickly recovered with ready professionalism, but there was much good playing as well, and the performance was altogether an effective one.

MARVEL

Haydn's "Creation" Mass is a musical and spiritual marvel, and it got an energetic, well paced, and mostly beautifully phrased performance. The choral singing had a most wonderful glow. Th solo quartet, just a little give to dragging and oozing i just after the beat like churcl soloists, mostly did a very good job, and the singing o Beverly Wolff, with its ex citing, metallic sound anc grand sense of phrase, was especially impressive. Could Mr. Leinsdorf not give us one Haydn Mass each year?

The "Daphne" finale, perhaps more sound than music, is one of the best moments in late Strauss. The last pages, as Daphne is metamorphosed into a laurel tree and becomes a wordless voice of nature, is particularly lovely. Beverly Sills was superb here, and most so in her effortless floating of the quiet arabesques at the end. And Leinsdorf produced from the orchestra an appropriately lush and glowing backdrop for Sills' elegant and distinguished singing.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100

FEB 19 1967

New England Newsclip

Symphony This Week

4 Concerts Will Cover Wide Range

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will be heard in four concerts this week at Symphony Hall. Regular subscription concerts are scheduled for Tuesday evening at 8:30, Friday afternoon at 2:00 and Saturday evening at 8:30. A special concert will be given Thursday evening as part of the "Winterfest" events.

The major work on Tuesday's program will be Prokofiev's 15 Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64. Mr. Leinsdorf will begin the Tuesday program with Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and the new work by Michael Colgrass, "As Quiet As."

The opening work at Thursday evening's "Winterfest" concert will be a complete performance of Haydn's Mass in B-flat major, "Creation." Soloists will be Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Placido Domingo, tenor; and Ara Berberian, bass. The Rutgers University Choir will assist. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will then be soloist in the Brahms Violin Concerto.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will likewise begin with Haydn's "Creation" Mass. Mr. Leinsdorf and the Orchestra, assisted by the Rutgers chorus, will then present the first performance of "Et Occidentem Illustra", by Robert Moevs of the Rutgers faculty.

Mr. Moevs' composition was commissioned by the university on the occasion of its 200th anniversary; it will subsequently be performed in New Brunswick (New Jersey) on March 2 and at Carnegie Hall March 4. The Friday-Saturday program will conclude with the Final Scene from Richard Strauss' "Daphne," with Beverly Sills as soloist.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750

FEB 25 1967

New England Newsclip

Rutgers singers at Symphony

By Clifford Barnes

A festive air pervaded the first half of the program Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall — entirely appropriate for Winterfest week. Haydn's "Creation" Mass is a large-scale, festival mass, and Erich Leinsdorf assembled top talent to perform it with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The chorus plays the most important role in this work, leaving little for the four soloists. The Rutgers University Choir (directed by F. Austin Walter) performed with flying colors. The group is supple, responsive to the conductor and the music, and uniformly good in every section.

Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Placido Domingo, tenor; and Ara Berberian, bass, conveyed the flamboyant and theatrical character of the music whether singing as a quartet or in short solo sections. The mass is nonliturgical; it includes interesting bits of orchestral color, such as the organ obbligato when the tenor sings "Et incarnatus est." Haydn can be thanked for "praising God with a cheerful heart," as he described it.

Symphonic fragments

Next week the orchestra is taking on tour to New Brunswick, N.J., and to Carnegie Hall in New York, a work of questionable merit. Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra," premièred at Friday's concert, had a few telling moments, but their impact was dissipated. Mr. Leinsdorf was kept busy cueing the entrances of fragmentary bits of instrumental and vocal sound. After a while some of them remained long enough to leave an impression.

Several conductors kept the choir in precise rhythm as they enunciated the opening section in choral speech. The percussion section had a heyday while the singers sang single words in alternation. Sentences were broken up into phrases and spaced so that no meaning of the text was possible. Could a listener get the point without a program?

The part of Daphne, in Richard Strauss's opera of the same name, must be the kind of role that sopranos dream of. Few composers can equal the glorious and impassioned music that Strauss wrote in his operas for the female voice to soar over the orchestra. The final scene from "Daphne" was given to Beverly Sills to sing, and it was next to impossible not to become involved in the beauty of the music and its performance.

Mr. Leinsdorf is at his best in the operatic (and choral) repertoire. Miss Sills' voice was radiant in the tonal beauty of extended phrases, particularly in the upper register. The orchestra shimmered in Apollo's sunlight, as the soprano sang a soft vocalise.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

FEB 25 1967

New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Moevs' 'Occidentem Illustra' Inspired by Dante's Verse

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

Robert Moevs was a visitor to Symphony on Friday for the second time in the role of composer. In 1960 Richard Burgin conducted the first performance of his "Attis," a setting of lines by the Roman poet Catullus which has since been enlarged; this week the orchestra presented "Et Occidentem Illustra," a setting of lines by an Italian —Dante—and another first performance.

The present work was commissioned by Rutgers University, where Mr. Moevs now teaches, for its 200th anniversary. Appropriately the text delivers an exhortation toward learning, toward achievement of knowledge and virtue, in the words of Ulysses—lines 112-120, Canto 26 of the "Inferno." Mr. Moevs informs us that the terza rima of Dante's verse inspired the tripartite organization of each half of the work, and that this preoccupation with the number 3 is followed in the division of the octave into three units. The units serve as bases for a sort of serialist approach.

The composer employs a chorus and orchestra with an elaborate percussion section including an anvil borrowed from the Millstone Forge in New Jersey (sentiment accounts for this).

A Pro-oemium, taken from a 1755 commission to establish colleges in New York, is recited by the chorus, accompanied by percussion. Most of the text is contained in the first part proper, while choral responses are sparse in the second.

COMPLEX WORK

"Et Occidentem Illustra" is a difficult work both thematically and rhythmically, and its disjointed organization and surface claptrap outweigh its serious intents. The percussion interjections are always protruding, occasionally incongruous; the choral lines (sung in a Longfellow Ciardi-Moevs English translation—so much for terza rima) are well-enough set in the first half, but become so fragmented in the second that textual philosophy is forgotten. Also, Mr. Moevs is overfond of crescendos, which he mounts and then dispels abruptly—a device which became predictable.

The Rutgers University Choir, well-trained (and conducted in part) by F. Austin Walter, wound its way through the pointillistic texture with assurance; its sound was strong, solid, and the soprano peaks essentially well-focused. The orchestra, conducted energetically by Mr. Leinsdorf, did creditable work.

Haydn's "Creation" Mass in B flat opened the program. A late work (1801), it lacks the sublimity of Haydn's chamber works and the spirited facility of the symphonies. Haydn's pen may have been tired, but it was not exhausted; the solo writing eschews display for melodic felicity, the Benedictus contains a Laendler-like sentiment and the Dona nobis pacem possesses a symphonic eloquence. Again the Rutgers choir assisted with Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, alto; Placido Domingo, tenor; and Ara Berberian, bass, as soloists — singly able, ill-blended as a quartet.

The final scene from Strauss' opera, "Daphne," concluded. Setting a story of a mythical coquette whose admirer's death at the hands of Apollo leads to her repentance, the sweeping music contains reminiscences of Mahler and even a hint of Wagner. Miss Sills sang the demanding soprano lines (in terms of power and register) courageously, though her lyric voice is short of its best under such conditions.

After a week on tour the Symphony returns on March 9-10-11, with Thomas Schippers conducting Bizet's Symphony in C major, Menotti's "Apocalypse" and Moussorgsky-Ravel's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the nineteenth concert of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Soloists for the Haydn mass were Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, alto; Placido Domingo, tenor; and Ara Berberian, bass. Miss Sills was soloist in the Strauss work. The Rutgers University Choir assisted in the Haydn and Moevs works.

"Creation" Mass in B flat major — Haydn
Et Occidentem Illustra (first performance) — Moevs
"Daphne," Op. 82, final scene — Strauss

63

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

FEB 25 1967 New England Newsclip

AT SYMPHONY HALL

It Was 'All Full of Singers And Absentees Missed Treat

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, with the Rutgers University Choir, F. Austin Walter, director, Beverly Sills, soprano, Beverly Wolff, contralto, Placido Domingo tennor, and Ara Berberian, bass, performing Haydn's "Creation" Mass in B flat, "Et Occidentem Illustra" by Robert Moevs (first performance), and the final scene from Strauss's "Daphne," Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

"O, this is all going to be full of singers—I don't like that so well," said one of the Friday ladies as she looked over the poster on her way into Symphony Hall. And sure enough, there was an unusually large number of empty seats. One of the ladies once explained that it degraded the Boston Symphony "to accompany singers," as she put it. But the absentees who are more interested in hearing instrumentalists play than in hearing music missed a concert that, because of the freshness and strength of the program and because of the high standard performance, was a highly distinguished one.

BICENTENNIAL

"Et Occidentem Illustra" was composed by Robert Moevs for the bicentennial celebrations at Rutgers, where he teaches. The title is taken from the university's motto, "Sol iustitiae et occidentem illustra," itself adopted from that of the University of Utrecht; the text uses part of the commission given in 1755 to Theodore Frelinghuysen concerning the establishment of institutions of learning in America, and the nine lines of Ulysses' exhortation to his sailors as found in the 26th Canto of Dante's "Inferno."

The opening salutation, in which "sapientia' and "virtute" are key words as "virtute" and "conoscenza" are in the Dante excerpt, is set apart in the composition. It uses mainly percussion with the chorus, and the chorus itself shouts, murmurs, speaks, rather than sings.

After this dramatic call to attention, an anvil stroke introduces that extraordinary passage in which Dante has Ulysses remind his sailors that they "were not formed to live like unto brutes, but to press on toward virtue and knowledge," urging them to explore even the unpeopled worlds beyond the sun.

Moevs has devised an exciting declamation for these words. They are given in small units that become smaller and more widely separated as the work goes on. Much of the choral writing is sharply, almost percussively, declamatory, but Moevs also makes a grand and expressive effect with long sustained lines, as in the magnificent and visionary expansion on the words "you have reached the West."

All this is underlined, surrounded, articulated by imaginatively conceived orchestral writing. Its broken texture is characteristically contemporary, but the emphasis is on the continuity that binds the rapidly shifting sounds together. Indeed, the sense of continuity, of the ability confidently to bridge large musical spaces, is an impressive achievement on Moevs' part. Even at the end, when the choral interventions occur very far apart, with each, one immediately picks up the thread. Moevs has learned well the lessons in Stravinsky's "Threni."

"Et Occidentem Illustra" is a strong and gripping work, of considerable individuality. It is also entrancing as a piece of virtuoso writing for chorus and orchestra, and that aspect also made itself strongly felt in Friday's performance. F. Austin Walter is obviously a choral conductor of extraordinary ability, and his Rutgers University Chorus is superb. In the Moevs, the singers sang the difficult pitches, which often are not doubled in the orchestra, with assurance and accuracy; they were magnificently confident and precise in the equally difficult rhythms; they sang with a clean, warm, unforced tone. There were a few rough moments in the orchestra, from which Leinsdorf and the players quickly recovered with ready professionalism, but there was much good playing as well, and the performance was altogether an effective one.

MARVEL

Haydn's "Creation" Mass is a musical and spiritual marvel, and it got an energetic, well paced, and mostly beautifully phrased performance. The choral singing had a most wonderful glow. Th solo quartet, just a little give to dragging and oozing i just after the beat like churc soloists, mostly did a ver good job, and the singing o Beverly Wolff, with its ex citing, metallic sound anc grand sense of phrase, was especially impressive. Could Mr. Leinsdorf not give us one Haydn Mass each year?

The "Daphne" finale, perhaps more sound than music, is one of the best moments in late Strauss. The last pages, as Daphne is metamorphosed into a laurel tree and becomes a wordless voice of nature, is particularly lovely. Beverly Sills was superb here, and most so in her effortless floating of the quiet arabesques at the end. And Leinsdorf produced from the orchestra an appropriately lush and glowing backdrop for Sills' elegant and distinguished singing.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750

FEB 25 1967 New England Newsclip

Rutgers singers at Symphony

By Clifford Barnes

A festive air pervaded the first half of the program Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall — entirely appropriate for Winterfest week. Haydn's "Creation" Mass is a large-scale, festival mass, and Erich Leinsdorf assembled top talent to perform it with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The chorus plays the most important role in this work, leaving little for the four soloists. The Rutgers University Choir (directed by F. Austin Walter) performed with flying colors. The group is supple, responsive to the conductor and the music, and uniformly good in every section.

Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Placido Domingo, tenor; and Ara Berberian, bass, conveyed the flamboyant and theatrical character of the music whether singing as a quartet or in short solo sections. The mass is nonliturgical; it includes interesting bits of orchestral color, such as the organ obbligato when the tenor sings "Et incarnatus est." Haydn can be thanked for "praising God with a cheerful heart," as he described it.

Symphonic fragments

Next week the orchestra is taking on tour to New Brunswick, N.J., and to Carnegie Hall in New York, a work of questionable merit. Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra," premièred at Friday's concert, had a few telling moments, but their impact was dissipated. Mr. Leinsdorf was kept busy cueing the entrances of fragmentary bits of instrumental and vocal sound. After a while some of them remained long enough to leave an impression.

Several conductors kept the choir in precise rhythm as they enunciated the opening section in choral speech. The percussion section had a heyday while the singers sang single words in alternation. Sentences were broken up into phrases and spaced so that no meaning of the text was possible. Could a listener get the point without a program?

The part of Daphne, in Richard Strauss's opera of the same name, must be the kind of role that sopranos dream of. Few composers can equal the glorious and impassioned music that Strauss wrote in his operas for the female voice to soar over the orchestra. The final scene from "Daphne" was given to Beverly Sills to sing, and it was next to impossible not to become involved in the beauty of the music and its performance.

Mr. Leinsdorf is at his best in the operatic (and choral) repertoire. Miss Sills' voice was radiant in the tonal beauty of extended phrases, particularly in the upper register. The orchestra shimmered in Apollo's sunlight, as the soprano sang a soft vocalise.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100

FEB 19 1967 New England Newsclip

Symphony This Week

4 Concerts Will Cover Wide Range

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will be heard in four concerts this week at Symphony Hall. Regular subscription concerts are scheduled for Tuesday evening at 8:30; Friday afternoon at 2:00 and Saturday evening at 8:30. A special concert will be given Thursday evening as part of the "Winterfest" events.

The major work on Tuesday's program will be Prokofiev's 15 Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Op. 64. Mr. Leinsdorf will begin the Tuesday program with Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and the new work by Michael Colgrass, "As Quiet As."

The opening work at Thursday evening's "Winterfest" concert will be a complete performance of Haydn's Mass in B-flat major, "Creation." Soloists will be Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Placido Domingo, tenor; and Ara Berberian, bass. The Rutgers University Choir will assist. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will then be soloist in the Brahms Violin Concerto.

The Friday-Saturday concerts will likewise begin with Haydn's "Creation" Mass. Mr. Leinsdorf and the Orchestra, assisted by the Rutgers chorus, will then present the first performance of "Et Occidentem Illustra", by Robert Moevs of the Rutgers faculty.

Mr. Moevs' composition was commissioned by the university on the occasion of its 200th anniversary; it will subsequently be performed in New Brunswick (New Jersey) on March 2 and at Carnegie Hall March 4. The Friday-Saturday program will conclude with the Final Scene from Richard Strauss' "Daphne," with Beverly Sills as soloist.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

FEB 25 1967 New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Moevs' 'Occidentem Illustra' Inspired by Dante's Verse

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

Robert Moevs was a visitor to Symphony on Friday for the second time in the role of composer. In 1960 Richard Burgin conducted the first performance of his "Attis," a setting of lines by the Roman poet Catullus which has since been enlarged; this week the orchestra presented "Et Occidentem Illustra," a setting of lines by an Italian —Dante—and another first performance.

The present work was commissioned by Rutgers University, where Mr. Moevs now teaches, for its 200th anniversary. Appropriately the text delivers an exhortation toward learning, toward achievement of knowledge and virtue, in the words of Ulysses—lines 112-120, Canto 26 of the "Inferno." Mr. Moevs informs us that the terza rima of Dante's verse inspired the tripartite organization of each half of the work, and that this preoccupation with the number 3 is followed in the division of the octave into three units. The units serve as bases for a sort of serialist approach.

The composer employs a chorus and orchestra with an elaborate percussion section including an anvil borrowed from the Millstone Forge in New Jersey (sentiment accounts for this).

A Pro-oemium, taken from a 1755 commission to establish colleges in New York, is recited by the chorus, accompanied by percussion. Most of the text is contained in the first part proper, while choral responses are sparse in the second.

COMPLEX WORK

"Et Occidentem Illustra" is a difficult work both thematically and rhythmically, and its disjointed organization and surface claptrap outweigh its serious intents. The percussion interjections are always protruding, occasionally incongruous; the choral lines (sung in a Longfellow Ciardi-Moevs English translation—so much for terza rima) are well-enough set in the first half, but become so fragmented in the second that textual philosophy is forgotten. Also, Mr. Moevs is overfond of crescendos, which he mounts and then dispels abruptly—a device which became predictable.

The Rutgers University Choir, well-trained (and conducted in part) by F. Austin Walter, wound its way through the pointillistic texture with assurance; its sound was strong, solid, and the soprano peaks essentially well-focused. The orchestra, conducted energetically by Mr. Leinsdorf, did creditable work.

Haydn's "Creation" Mass in B flat opened the program. A late work (1801), it lacks the sublimity of Haydn's chamber works and the spirited facility of the symphonies. Haydn's pen may have been tired, but it was not exhausted; the solo writing eschews display for melodic felicity, the Benedictus contains a Laendler-like sentiment and the Dona nobis pacem possesses a symphonic eloquence. Again the Rutgers choir assisted with Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, alto; Placido Domingo, tenor; and Ara Berberian, bass, as soloists — singly able, ill-blended as a quartet.

The final scene from Strauss' opera, "Daphne," concluded. Setting a story of a mythical coquette whose admirer's death at the hands of Apollo leads to her repentance, the sweeping music contains reminiscences of Mahler and even a hint of Wagner. Miss Sills sang the demanding soprano lines (in terms of power and register) courageously, though her lyric voice is short of its best under such conditions.

After a week on tour the Symphony returns on March 9-10-11, with Thomas Schippers conducting Bizet's Symphony in C major, Menotti's "Apocalypse" and Moussorgsky-Ravel's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the nineteenth concert of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Soloists for the Haydn mass were Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, alto; Placido Domingo, tenor; and Ara Berberian, bass. Miss Sills was soloist in the Strauss work. The Rutgers University Choir assisted in the Haydn and Moevs works.

"Creation" Mass in B flat major — Haydn
Et Occidentem Illustra (first performance) — Moevs
"Daphne," Op. 82, final scene — Strauss

64

THURS. B #3 MAR. 9

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
MAR 5 1967
New England Newsclip

Schippers Conducting This Week

Thomas Schippers returns to the Boston Symphony this week for his fifth engagement as guest conductor. He will direct the orchestra's concerts Thursday, Friday, Saturday and a week from Tuesday.

The program for these four concerts will be the same: Bizet's Symphony in C, "Apocalypse" by Gian Carlo Menotti, and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Schippers, artistic director of Menotti's Festival of Two Worlds, in Spoletto, Italy, also conducts at the Metropolitan and La Scala Opera Houses. He has been guest conductor of American and Canadian orchestras and London's Philharmonia, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Vienna Philharmonic and the Israel Philharmonic.

The Boston Symphony also will give a concert Tuesday evening. This date replaces the snow-out concert of Feb. 7. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Dvorak's "New World Symphony" and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
MAR 7 1967
New England Newsclip

Schippers Returns To BSO Conducting

Thomas Schippers will return to Boston for his fifth engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, leading the concerts of Thursday at 8:30 p. m., Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8:30.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has rearranged his vacation time to conduct the orchestra this Tuesday evening in a concert re-scheduled to make up the Feb. 7 program which was postponed by the snow storm. The concert will consist of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 and the Brahms Violin Concerto. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, soloist.

Mr. Schippers' program for all three of his concerts this week will begin with Bizet's Symphony in C major. This will be followed by the first performance at these concerts of "Apocalypse" by Gian-Carlo Menotti, a work in three movements, composed in 1951. Moussorgsyk's Pictures at an Exhibition will conclude the program, which will be repeated Tuesday evening, March 14.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Third Program

THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 9, at 8:30 o'clock

THOMAS SCHIPPERS, Guest Conductor

BIZET ..... Symphony in C major

I. Allegro vivo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace; Trio
IV. Allegro vivace

MENOTTI ..... "Apocalypse"

I. Improperia
II. La cittá celeste
III. Gli angeli militanti

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY ..... "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by MAURICE RAVEL)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate at Kiev

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[5]

SUN (e)
LOWELL, MASS.
CIRC. 44,600
MAR 4 1967
New England Newsclip

THOMAS SCHIPPERS will return to Boston for his fifth engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, leading the concerts of Thursday evening, and the Friday afternoon and next Saturday evening programs. The conductor who has served at the Metropolitan and La Scala operas and as artistic director of the Festival of Two Worlds in Spoleto, Italy, has chosen compositions by Bizet, Gian-Carlo Menotti and Moussorgsky for the week-end events.

To be performed will be the Symphony in C major by the first named composer; "Apocalypse" by Mr. Menotti, and by the last named, "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Rehearsals are well under way for the sponsored twin performances of Puccini's "La Boheme" to be presented on Friday and Saturday evenings, April 7-8, by the Concord Symphony orchestra, Attilio Poto, artistic director.

The event, the first such by the Concord group, promises the area a stage production of high order. A fine cast has been assembled, and plans call for an alternating of soprano and tenor leads for each performance. Among the singers to appear will be tenor Sebastian Lima, of Boston, who is widely known throughout New England opera cricles.

Credits in the area include leads with the Boston-New England company in Lowell in the John A. Hunnewell Fund series, and in the Moses Greely Parker series with the Boston Lyric Opera quartet.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 116,000
MAR 5 1967
New England Newsclip

Schippers to Conduct 3 Boston Concerts

Thomas Schippers will return to Boston for his fifth engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, leading the concerts of Thursday evening, 8.30 p. m., Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, 2 p. m. and 8.30 p. m.

Rescheduled Program

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has rearranged his vacation time to conduct the orchestra Tuesday evening, 8.30 p. m., in a concert rescheduled to make up the Feb. 7 program which was postponed by snowstorm. The concert will consist of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 and the Brahms Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, soloist.

Mr. Schippers' program for all three of his concerts this week will begin with the Symphony in C major by Bizet. This will be followed by the first performance at these concerts of "Apocalypse" by Gian-Carlo Menotti, a work in three movements, composed in 1951.

After intermission Mr. Schippers will conclude with Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." This program will be repeated Tuesday evening, the 14.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
MAR 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Schippers conducting at Symphony

By Harold Rogers

When Thomas Schippers conducted the Boston Symphony last night, he held his gestures to a dynamic minimum. He saw to it that his graceful figure did little to distract. He was obviously more absorbed in the musical idea of the moment than he was during his guest appearances here several seasons ago. Though he has yet to achieve the total communication of a great conductor, at this stage of his career he is nonetheless intense enough to banish tedium. This is a large factor in his favor.

His program—to be repeated at Symphony Hall this afternoon and Saturday night—is weighted on the theatrical side. His closing pièce de résistance is Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" (in the Ravel arrangement). He opens with Bizet's little Symphony in C, and sandwiched between comes the first performance at these concerts of Menotti's "Apocalypse."

Mr. Schippers turned in a winning reading of Bizet's sunny work, written at white heat within a month when the composer was only 17. The conductor kept the texture light, the colors clear; he let the melodies sing their graceful way with ease and joy; the fugato in the Adagio was neatly limned.

Dramatic situation

Gian Carlo Menotti, of course, cannot resist a theatrical situation. He possesses the same sense about the stage that Puccini did; for this reason some of Menotti's operas are among the most effective to be composed in our time.

Apocalyptic literature has its heightened sense of drama; it is not surprising, therefore, that Menotti would be tempted to give us his orchestral impressions of Apocalyptic scenes. Composed in 1951, this three-movement work draws its inspiration not only from the Revelation of John, but also from the writings of Baruch and Enoch.

In the opening "Improperia," the Good Friday events are announced by a fanfare. The movement then proceeds to depict the "confrontation of the benefactions of Jesus and the suffering inflicted upon him by mankind."

This part at times is heightened by great chordal splashes and strong galloping rhythms. There are orotund brasses and anguished trumpets. A prevailing mystical mood recalls passages from Menotti's "The Saint of Bleeker Street."

In the second movement Menotti gives us his impression of "La città celeste." Here he establishes a neo-Renaissance mood that depicts heavenly music as being a kind of eternal lullaby—a soothing song that nevertheless builds into a radiantly shimmering fortissimo.

In "Gli angeli militanti" the angels begin their battle like a swarm of mosquitoes as the violins fiddle on an agitated figure. It's a kind of scherzo war, little designed to cast out red dragons; yet the battle thickens with scurryings in contrary motion; the intensity builds until glory breaks loose in a grand march à la Sousa.

Apart from the "Improperia," the work offers little to inspire but much to entertain.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
MAR 5 1967
New England Newsclip

TUESDAY— Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 in E minor, "From the New World," and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist. Symphony Hall at 8:30. (Snow date for ticket holders of the postponed Feb. 7 concert.

THURSDAY — Boston Symphony, "Thomas Schippers conducting Bizet's Symphony in C, "Apocalypse" by Menotti and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." Symphony Hall at 8:30. Program repeated Friday at 2, Saturday at 8:30, and Tuesday (Mar. 14), at 7:30.

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony, Thomas Schippers conducting. See Thursday program. Symphony Hall at 2.

—New Composers. Works by Bruce Hobson, Peter Moncure, Tibor Pusztai, Burr Van Nostrand, Herman Weiss, Otto-Ernst Lake and Tsunenori Okomoto, students at the New England Conservatory. Jordan Hall at 8:30.

—Wiener Solisten. Works by Bach, Handel, Vivaldi, Corelli and Telemann. Sanders Theater, Cambridge, at 8:30.

—Verdi's 'Rigoletto." Cambridge Opera production, staged by Thomas Neumiller and conducted by Campbell Johnson; with Ernest Triplett in the title role, Julia Shelley as Gilda, Steven Tamkin as the Duke and Harris Poor as Monterone; accompanied by the Arlington Philharmonic Society orchestra and chorus. Arlington High School Auditorium at 8. Repeated Saturday at 8.

SATURDAY — Boston Symphony, Thomas Schippers conducting. See Friday program. Symphony Hall at 8:30.

—Verdi's "Rigoletto." See Friday program. Arlington High School Auditorium at 8.

THURS. B#3 MAR. 9

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

MAR 5 1967 New England Newsclip

Schippers Conducting This Week

Thomas Schippers returns to the Boston Symphony this week for his fifth engagement as guest conductor. He will direct the orchestra's concerts Thursday, Friday, Saturday and a week from Tuesday.

The program for these four concerts will be the same: Bizet's Symphony in C, "Apocalypse" by Gian Carlo Menotti, and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Schippers, artistic director of Menotti's Festival of Two Worlds, in Spoletto, Italy, also conducts at the Metropolitan and La Scala Opera Houses. He has been guest conductor of American and Canadian orchestras and London's Philharmonia, the Berlin Philharmonic, the Vienna Philharmonic and the Israel Philharmonic.

The Boston Symphony also will give a concert Tuesday evening. This date replaces the snow-out concert of Feb. 7. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Dvorak's "New World Symphony" and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

MAR 7 1967 New England Newsclip

Schippers Returns To BSO Conducting

Thomas Schippers will return to Boston for his fifth engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, leading the concerts of Thursday at 8:30 p. m., Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8:30.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has rearranged his vacation time to conduct the orchestra this Tuesday evening in a concert re-scheduled to make up the Feb. 7 program which was postponed by the snow storm. The concert will consist of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 and the Brahms Violin Concerto. Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, soloist.

Mr. Schippers' program for all three of his concerts this week will begin with Bizet's Symphony in C major. This will be followed by the first performance at these concerts of "Apocalypse" by Gian-Carlo Menotti, a work in three movements, composed in 1951. Moussorgsyk's Pictures at an Exhibition will conclude the program, which will be repeated Tuesday evening, March 14.

Third Program

THURSDAY EVENING, MARCH 9, at 8:30 o'clock

THOMAS SCHIPPERS, Guest Conductor

BIZET ..... Symphony in C major

I. Allegro vivo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace; Trio
IV. Allegro vivace

MENOTTI ..... "Apocalypse"

I. Improperia
II. La cittá celeste
III. Gli angeli militanti

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY ..... "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by MAURICE RAVEL)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate at Kiev

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[5]

SUN (e)
LOWELL, MASS.
CIRC. 44,600

MAR 4 1967 New England Newsclip

THOMAS SCHIPPERS will return to Boston for his fifth engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, leading the concerts of Thursday evening, and the Friday afternoon and next Saturday evening programs. The conductor who has served at the Metropolitan and La Scala operas and as artistic director of the Festival of Two Worlds in Spoleto, Italy, has chosen compositions by Bizet, Gian-Carlo Menotti and Moussorgsky for the week-end events.

To be performed will be the Symphony in C major by the first named composer; "Apocalypse" by Mr. Menotti, and by the last named, "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Rehearsals are well under way for the sponsored twin performances of Puccini's "La Boheme" to be presented on Friday and Saturday evenings, April 7-8, by the Concord Symphony orchestra, Attilio Poto, artistic director.

The event, the first such by the Concord group, promises the area a stage production of high order. A fine cast has been assembled, and plans call for an alternating of soprano and tenor leads for each performance. Among the singers to appear will be tenor Sebastian Lima, of Boston, who is widely known throughout New England opera cricles.

Credits in the area include leads with the Boston-New England company in Lowell in the John A. Hunnewell Fund series, and in the Moses Greely Parker series with the Boston Lyric Opera quartet.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 116,000

MAR 5 1967 New England Newsclip

Schippers to Conduct 3 Boston Concerts

Thomas Schippers will return to Boston for his fifth engagement as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, leading the concerts of Thursday evening, 8.30 p. m., Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, 2 p. m. and 8.30 p. m.

Rescheduled Program

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, has rearranged his vacation time to conduct the orchestra Tuesday evening, 8.30 p. m., in a concert rescheduled to make up the Feb. 7 program which was postponed by snowstorm. The concert will consist of Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 and the Brahms Violin Concerto, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, soloist.

Mr. Schippers' program for all three of his concerts this week will begin with the Symphony in C major by Bizet. This will be followed by the first performance at these concerts of "Apocalypse" by Gian-Carlo Menotti, a work in three movements, composed in 1951.

After intermission Mr. Schippers will conclude with Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." This program will be repeated Tuesday evening, the 14.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750

MAR 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Schippers conducting at Symphony

By Harold Rogers

When Thomas Schippers conducted the Boston Symphony last night, he held his gestures to a dynamic minimum. He saw to it that his graceful figure did little to distract. He was obviously more absorbed in the musical idea of the moment than he was during his guest appearances here several seasons ago. Though he has yet to achieve the total communication of a great conductor, at this stage of his career he is nonetheless intense enough to banish tedium. This is a large factor in his favor.

His program—to be repeated at Symphony Hall this afternoon and Saturday night—is weighted on the theatrical side. His closing pièce de résistance is Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" (in the Ravel arrangement). He opens with Bizet's little Symphony in C, and sandwiched between comes the first performance at these concerts of Menotti's "Apocalypse."

Mr. Schippers turned in a winning reading of Bizet's sunny work, written at white heat within a month when the composer was only 17. The conductor kept the texture light, the colors clear; he let the melodies sing their graceful way with ease and joy; the fugato in the Adagio was neatly limned.

Dramatic situation

Gian Carlo Menotti, of course, cannot resist a theatrical situation. He possesses the same sense about the stage that Puccini did; for this reason some of Menotti's operas are among the most effective to be composed in our time.

Apocalyptic literature has its heightened sense of drama; it is not surprising, therefore, that Menotti would be tempted to give us his orchestral impressions of Apocalyptic scenes. Composed in 1951, this three-movement work draws its inspiration not only from the Revelation of John, but also from the writings of Baruch and Enoch.

In the opening "Improperia," the Good Friday events are announced by a fanfare. The movement then proceeds to depict the "confrontation of the benefactions of Jesus and the suffering inflicted upon him by mankind."

This part at times is heightened by great chordal splashes and strong galloping rhythms. There are orotund brasses and anguished trumpets. A prevailing mystical mood recalls passages from Menotti's "The Saint of Bleeker Street."

In the second movement Menotti gives us his impression of "La città celeste." Here he establishes a neo-Renaissance mood that depicts heavenly music as being a kind of eternal lullaby—a soothing song that nevertheless builds into a radiantly shimmering fortissimo.

In "Gli angeli militanti" the angels begin their battle like a swarm of mosquitoes as the violins fiddle on an agitated figure. It's a kind of scherzo war, little designed to cast out red dragons; yet the battle thickens with scurryings in contrary motion; the intensity builds until glory breaks loose in a grand march à la Sousa.

Apart from the "Improperia," the work offers little to inspire but much to entertain.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

MAR 5 1967 New England Newsclip

TUESDAY— Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Dvorak's Symphony No. 9 in E minor, "From the New World," and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist. Symphony Hall at 8:30. (Snow date for ticket holders of the postponed Feb. 7 concert.

THURSDAY — Boston Symphony, "Thomas Schippers conducting Bizet's Symphony in C, "Apocalypse" by Menotti and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition." Symphony Hall at 8:30. Program repeated Friday at 2, Saturday at 8:30, and Tuesday (Mar. 14), at 7:30.

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony, Thomas Schippers conducting. See Thursday program. Symphony Hall at 2.

—New Composers. Works by Bruce Hobson, Peter Moncure, Tibor Pusztai, Burr Van Nostrand, Herman Weiss, Otto-Ernst Lake and Tsunenori Okomoto, students at the New England Conservatory. Jordan Hall at 8:30.

—Wiener Solisten. Works by Bach, Handel, Vivaldi, Corelli and Telemann. Sanders Theater, Cambridge, at 8:30.

—Verdi's 'Rigoletto." Cambridge Opera production, staged by Thomas Neumiller and conducted by Campbell Johnson; with Ernest Triplett in the title role, Julia Shelley as Gilda, Steven Tamkin as the Duke and Harris Poor as Monterone; accompanied by the Arlington Philharmonic Society orchestra and chorus. Arlington High School Auditorium at 8. Repeated Saturday at 8.

SATURDAY — Boston Symphony, Thomas Schippers conducting. See Friday program. Symphony Hall at 8:30.

—Verdi's "Rigoletto." See Friday program. Arlington High School Auditorium at 8.

65

FRI. + SAT. #20 MAR. 10 + 11

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
MAR 10 1967
New England Newsclip

At Symphony Hall

Schippers Leads Lively Concert

By JOHN TEMPLE
Contributing Critic

Thomas Schippers made quite a favorable impression Thursday night in Symphony Hall in a program which told little about his musical intellect and even less about Menotti's.

The Bizet Symphony, which is not too often heard, was given a sprightly and well-shaped performance, and contained some of the most pleasingly unforced playing I have heard from the BSO in some time.

The woodwinds were beautifully expressive all the way through and especially in the Adagio, and the whole orchestra maintained a fluent singing line from beginning to end of the work.

Pleasant as Bizet's Symphony was, however, it seemed like little more than a 20-odd minute overture, and so, judging it from its title alone, one expected to hear grand revelations in the succeeding piece, Gian Carlo Menotti's "Apocalypse."

The failure of the piece to live up to its (apparent) pretensions was not surprising, and does not necessarily condemn it; but the use of old modal sounds, thunderous climaxes interspersed with icy silences, and a large percussion battery was, however interesting, a little too uncomfortably predictable in the end. From time to time I had the awkward feeling that it was all really Respighi in disguise.

It is all too true, though, that very little music in this attempted vein ever completely succeeds—and, perhaps, equally true that its grandiose nomenclature (in the individual movements as well) may work more against than for its expressive content.

Certainly, it was well played, though I am not sure that the shrillness of the brass improved the first movement.

The march-like climax of the last movement was interestingly if unsucessfully Mahlerian in its rhythmic drive.

With the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures" things were once again on safe ground. The performance was if anything too straightforward and a shade tired at first, but things picked up as they went along, and I recall Armando Ghitalla's contribution to "Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle" with particular glee.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Thomas Schippers, guest conductor, in Bizet's Symphony in C, Menotti's "Apocalypse," and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition." Thursday evening at Symphony Hall.

Schippers' gestures were for the most part quite spare, and he presented an attractive and sensitive image on the podium, with a left hand executing graceful pirouettes of its own that almost stole the show.

On its own plane the concert was very satisfying, but it would have been interesting to hear Schippers tackle something of a more challenging nature than works of the sort we heard.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Twentieth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 10, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 11, at 8:30 o'clock

THOMAS SCHIPPERS, Guest Conductor

BIZET ..... Symphony in C major

I. Allegro vivo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace; Trio
IV. Allegro vivace

MENOTTI ..... "Apocalypse"

I. Improperia
II. La cittá celeste
III. Gli angeli militanti

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY ..... "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by MAURICE RAVEL)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1228]

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
MAR 11 1967
New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Schipper's Sense of Drama Shapes Music's Emotions

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

Thomas Schippers is a man of the theater with a flair for dramatic events big and small —exalted grandeur, heroic conflict, gentle poetry, graceful surface. In short, he gives overt expression to musical emotion. Such a purely theatrical sense is doubtless not all he possesses, but it is the salient feature on the Symphony programs he is conducting this week.

His choices include Bizet's classic-proportioned Symphony in C, regarded as such a trifle alongside the composer's operatic creations that it lay without a first performance for 80 years; Menotti's "Apocalypse," a three-movement work inspired by mystical writings of Baruch and Enoch, as well as St. Jchn in the book of Revelation; and the familiar Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Trifle though it still may be, Bizet's lone symphonic effort is one of the better such works by a composer whose principal domain is opera. Its lack of sublime depth is countered by the soaring lyricism of the Adagio and Scherzo and the dash of the outer movements.

Mr. Schippers attempted to make no more of it than it is, using as high cards Ralph Gomberg's exquisite oboe passages in the Adagio (the conductor has a fondness for shaping melodic curves with his left hand), abrupt dynamic contrasts and chattering string-woodwind exchanges of the quicker movements. The orchestra followed his wishes in sound, though each violinist seemed to bow as he pleased.

VIGOROUS IMAGES

Gian-Carlo Menotti is another theater man. Though he contends that his "Apocalypse" is not descriptive music and follows no narrative, his aural images seem very apparent and their relation to the apocalyptic subjects quite plain. The poetic impressions, as he wishes them to be known, include the "Improperia," a confrontation of Christ's benevolence to man with the injustice of His crucifixion; "The Celestial City," recalling a description of the new Jerusalem; and "The Militant Angels."

Menotti builds his impressions on a basis of consonant harmony, sometimes open, touched with soft dissonance; he gives rein to the brass and percussion to provide solemnity or outrage in the "Improperia," cumulative splendor for the "Celestial City" and a snappy, quick-time martial bearing for the "Angels."

From the very first fanfare and through successive build-ups from quiet to crashing volumes, Menotti's thoughts are never understated. Yet it is not the physical force which cripples the work but its obvious devices—the sort of realist-emotional projections one finds in movie scores, served up in the same harmonic flavor.

"Apocalypse" was received very cordially, which again struck me as the result of conscious design.

If the musicians' union could swing it, the brass section, perhaps percussion as well, should be paid double salary on days when the orchestra performs "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Their work was more courageous than flawless throughout this entertaining museum-tour, which I often suspect should be credited to Moussorgsky-RAVEL or even Ravel-Moussorgsky.

There was no lack of lung power, while in "Bydlo" tubist Chester Schmitz filled Symphony Hall as much with his resplendent tone as with volume.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf returns to conduct Mozart's overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and the Piano Concerto in B flat, K. 456, with Evelyn Crochet as soloist also Bruckner's Ninth Symphony.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thomas Schippers conducting, presented the twentieth program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall.

Symphony in C major — Bizet
Apocalypse — Menotti
Pictures at an Exhibition — Moussorgsky-Ravel

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
MAR 11 1967
New England Newsclip

Schippers Conducts Menotti Work

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Springand gorgeous melody entered Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon when Thomas Schippers was guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. H presented melodious music of Bizet, Menotti and Musorgski-Ravel.

Thos. Schippers

Schipper's performance of Bizet's teenage symphony was on a rather larger scale than earlier hearing of this charming opus, but there was a compensating neatness, somewhat alleviated by underpitch strings.

The second movement adagio, featuring a sinuous oboe solo, played beautifully by Ralph Gomberg, was apparent in has something of the character of an operatic intermezzo.

The scherzo is a vigorous and more expansive treatment of the basic musical material. The finale, allegro vivace, is a whirlwind, constantly challenging the strings, especially the fiddles, to ever more mercurial feats of articulation and speed.

Schipperd' reading was an astonishing exposition of articulation and precision.

Next came Gian-Carlo Menotti's "Apocalypse," a delightful exposition of the music of Puccini and Aaron Copland. This is not to disparage the work, for it has considerable merit.

What struck these ears most was the elegant string writing in the first movement and the gorgeous brass writing throughout. It is, in fact, the best piece of contemporary music heard here this season.

After the interval came an absolutely stunning performance of the Nusorgski-Ravel "Pictures From an Exhibition." There is no doubt that Ravel was a veritable wizard in manipulating orchestral sounds, whether to attain stunning effects or to depict delicate moods. In his orchestral arrangement of Musorgski's witty and pictorial suite, he achieved perhaps an ever greater triumph than he did in "Daphnis & Chloe." Here, at least, is one instance where the purist will not boggle at an arrangement.

The first segment was impressive and in the showpiece tradition, but the edginess of the brasses in the louder tuttis became trying to the ear. The saxophone solo, played by Rolland Tapley, was spectacular in its depiction of the moldering old castle. The climax in Bydlo was a triumph of orchestral virtuosity and there was more of the same in Limoges, followed by solemn, rich brass effects in Catacombs. Schippers' slightly faster tempo for the Great Gate of Kiev was marked by impetuous string attacks.

65

FRI. + SAT. #20 MAR. 10 + 11

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

MAR 10 1967

New England Newsclip

At Symphony Hall

Schippers Leads Lively Concert

By JOHN TEMPLE
Contributing Critic

Thomas Schippers made quite a favorable impression Thursday night in Symphony Hall in a program which told little about his musical intellect and even less about Menotti's.

The Bizet Symphony, which is not too often heard, was given a sprightly and well-shaped performance, and contained some of the most pleasingly unforced playing I have heard from the BSO in some time.

The woodwinds were beautifully expressive all the way through and especially in the Adagio, and the whole orchestra maintained a fluent singing line from beginning to end of the work.

Pleasant as Bizet's Symphony was, however, it seemed like little more than a 20-odd minute overture, and so, judging it from its title alone, one expected to hear grand revelations in the succeeding piece, Gian Carlo Menotti's "Apocalypse."

The failure of the piece to live up to its (apparent) pretensions was not surprising, and does not necessarily condemn it; but the use of old modal sounds, thunderous climaxes interspersed with icy silences, and a large percussion battery was, however interesting, a little too uncomfortably predictable in the end. From time to time I had the awkward feeling that it was all really Respighi in disguise.

It is all too true, though, that very little music in this attempted vein ever completely succeeds—and, perhaps, equally true that its grandiose nomenclature (in the individual movements as well) may work more against than for its expressive content.

Certainly, it was well played, though I am not sure that the shrillness of the brass improved the first movement.

The march-like climax of the last movement was interestingly if unsucessfully Mahlerian in its rhythmic drive.

With the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures" things were once again on safe ground. The performance was if anything too straightforward and a shade tired at first, but things picked up as they went along, and I recall Armando Ghitalla's contribution to "Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle" with particular glee.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Thomas Schippers, guest conductor, in Bizet's Symphony in C, Menotti's "Apocalpse," and the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition," Thursday evening at Symphony Hall.

Schippers' gestures were for the most part quite spare, and he presented an attractive and sensitive image on the podium, with a left hand executing graceful pirouettes of its own that almost stole the show.

On its own plane the concert was very satisfying, but it would have been interesting to hear Schippers tackle something of a more challenging nature than works of the sort we heard.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

MAR 11 1967

New England Newsclip

Schippers Conducts Menotti Work

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—Springand gorgeous melody entered Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon when Thomas Schippers was guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. H presented melodious music of Bizet, Menotti and Musorgski-Ravel.

Schipper's performance of Bizet's teenage symphony was on a rather larger scale than earlier hearing of this charming opus, but there was a compensating neatness, somewhat alleviated by underpitch strings.

Thos. Schippers

The second movement adagio, featuring a sinuous oboe solo, played was apparent in beautifully by Ralph Gomberg, has something of the character of an operatic intermezzo.

The scherzo is a vigorous and more expansive treatment of the basic musical material. The finale, allegro vivace, ie a whirlwind, constantly challenging the strings, especially the fiddles, to ever more mercurial feats of articulation and speed.

Schipperd' reading was an astonishing exposition of articulation and precision.

Next came Gian-Carlo Menotti's "Apocalypse," a delightful exposition of the music of Puccini and Aaron Copland. This is not to disparage the work, for it has considerable merit.

What struck these ears most was the elegant string writing in the first movement and the gorgeous brass writing throughout. It is, in fact, the best piece of contemporary music heard here this season.

After the interval came an absolutely stunning performance of the Nusorgski-Ravel "Pictures From an Exhibition." There is no doubt that Ravel was a veritable wizard in manipulating orchestral sounds, whether to attain stunning effects or to depict delicate moods. In his orchestral arrangement of Musorgski's witty and pictorial suite, he achieved perhaps an ever greater triumph than he did in "Daphnis & Chloe." Here, at least, is one instance where the purist will not boggle at an arrangement.

The first segment was impressive and in the showpiece tradition, but the edginess of the brasses in the louder tuttis became trying to the ear. The saxophone solo, played by Rolland Tapley, was spectacular in its depiction of the moldering old castle. The climax in Bydlo was a triumph of orchestral virtuosity and there was more of the same in Limoges, followed by solemn, rich brass effects in Catacombs. Schippers' slightly faster tempo for the Great Gate of Kiev was marked by impetuous string attacks.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Twentieth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 10, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 11, at 8:30 o'clock

THOMAS SCHIPPERS, Guest Conductor

BIZET ..... Symphony in C major

I. Allegro vivo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace; Trio
IV. Allegro vivace

MENOTTI ..... "Apocalypse"

I. Improperia
II. La cittá celeste
III. Gli angeli militanti

(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY ..... "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by MAURICE RAVEL)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1223]

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

MAR 11 1967

New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Schipper's Sense of Drama Shapes Music's Emotions

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

Thomas Schippers is a man of the theater with a flair for dramatic events big and small —exalted grandeur, heroic conflict, gentle poetry, graceful surface. In short, he gives overt expression to musical emotion. Such a purely theatrical sense is doubtless not all he possesses, but it is the salient feature on the Symphony programs he is conducting this week.

His choices include Bizet's classic-proportioned Symphony in C, regarded as such a trifle alongside the composer's operatic creations that it lay without a first performance for 80 years; Menotti's "Apocalypse," a three-movement work inspired by mystical writings of Baruch and Enoch, as well as St. John in the book of Revelation; and the familiar Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Trifle though it still may be, Bizet's lone symphonic effort is one of the better such works by a composer whose principal domain is opera. Its lack of sublime depth is countered by the soaring lyricism of the Adagio and Scherzo and the dash of the outer movements.

Mr. Schippers attempted to make no more of it than it is, using as high cards Ralph Gomberg's exquisite oboe passages in the Adagio (the conductor has a fondness for shaping melodic curves with his left hand), abrupt dynamic contrasts and chattering string-woodwind exchanges of the quicker movements. The orchestra followed his wishes in sound, though each violinist seemed to bow as he pleased.

VIGOROUS IMAGES

Gian-Carlo Menotti is another theater man. Though he contends that his "Apocalypse" is not descriptive music and follows no narrative, his aural images seem very apparent and their relation to the apocalyptic subjects quite plain. The poetic impressions, as he wishes them to be known, include the "Improperia," a confrontation of Christ's benevolence to man with the injustice of His crucifixion; "The Celestial City," recalling a description of the new Jerusalem; and "The Militant Angels."

Menotti builds his impressions on a basis of consonant harmony, sometimes open, touched with soft dissonance; he gives rein to the brass and percussion to provide solemnity or outrage in the "Improperia," cumulative splendor for the "Celestial City" and a snappy, quick-time martial bearing for the "Angels."

From the very first fanfare and through successive build-ups from quiet to crashing volumes, Menotti's thoughts are never understated. Yet it is not the physical force which cripples the work but its obvious devices—the sort of realist-emotional projections one finds in movie scores, served up in the same harmonic flavor.

"Apocalypse" was received very cordially, which again struck me as the result of conscious design.

If the musicians' union could swing it, the brass section, perhaps percussion as well, should be paid double salary on days when the orchestra performs "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Their work was more courageous than flawless throughout this entertaining museum-tour, which I often suspect should be credited to Moussorgsky-RAVEL or even Ravel-Moussorgsky.

There was no lack of lung power, while in "Bydlo" tubist Chester Schmitz filled Symphony Hall as much with his resplendent tone as with volume.

Next week Mr. Leinsdorf returns to conduct Mozart's overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and the Piano Concerto in B flat, K. 456, with Evelyn Crochet as soloist also Bruckner's Ninth Symphony.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Thomas Schippers conducting, presented the twentieth program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall.

Symphony in C major — Bizet
Apocalypse — Menotti
Pictures at an Exhibition — Moussorgsky-Ravel

TUES. B #6 MAR. 14

STANDARD-TIMES (e)
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 67,000
MAR 15 1967
New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Offers Exciting Fare

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

Thomas Schippers, who looks like a matinee idol but uses his baton with commendable musicianly authority, was guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night, in Symphony Hall, in the concluding program of the Tuesday "B" Series.

Mr. Schippers, American-born and artistic director of the famous Spoletto Festival, scheduled works by Biget, Gian-Carlo Menotti, and Moussorgsky.

The program opened with an engaging reading of Bizet's youthful "Symphony in C," a work written when the composer was only 17. Like most works by young composers, this one shows a number of influences — Haydn, the early Beethoven, Schubert, and, particularly in the final movement, Mendelssohn.

Not a Profound Work

It is not a profound work, but it is appealingly melodious, bright and lively, filled with contagiously lilting rhythm. It was done beautifully by Mr. Schippers and his musicians, with an excellent piece of solo work by oboist Ralph Gomberg, who performed the same role last Sunday with the Boston Ballet Orchestra.

Menotti's "Apocalpyse," written in 1951, also shows various influences — that of Stavinsky and Aaron Copland especially. Religious in nature, its three movements have laudatory variety.

The first is based on liturgical chants; the second, "The Celestial City," begins in muted manner but rises in intensity to inspirational heights; the third, "The Militant Angels," begins in scherzo style, with a gossamer lightness, and then rises to a series of musical climaxes.

Derivative though it may be (at this date, some of its sonorities sound almost old-fashioned), it is, nevertheless, pleasurable listening.

Put Through Paces

Concluding the program was Ravel's orchestral transcription of Moussorgsky's piano pieces, "Picture at an Exhibition." In this election, Mr. Schipper put the orchestra through their paces in exciting style.

During the proceedings, Ravel, who had a genius for lavish and telling orchestration, uses, in addition to the traditional instruments, such others as the tamtam, whip, celestra, glockenspiel, rattle, and chimes.

The result is often glorious sound, reaching its zenith in the final section, "The Great Gate of Kiev," in which the orchestra shook the rafters of staid Symphony Hall in a demonstration of the sort of tone and texture that only a virtuoso ensemble can produce.

SUNDAY STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 56,800
MAR 19 1967
New England Newsclip

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

On Tuesday night, I was at Symphony Hall for the concluding program of the Boston Symphony's "B" Series, with Thomas Schippers on the podium as guest conductor. Schippers, 37, is a handsome young man with a shock of curly hair and classically regular features. Born in Michigan and educated at Philadelphia's Curtis Institute, he has conducted most of the world's great orchestras, has conducted at the Metropolitan Opera and at La Scala in Milan, and is artistic director of Gian-Carlo Menotti's internationally-famous summer festival in Spoletto, Italy.

Although he is the glamor boy of contemporary conductors, a sort of matinee idol with baton, he is a thoroughly sound musician, and both he and the Boston Symphony made pleasurable music.

Schippers scheduled three works on his program—Bizet's melodious and bright "Symphony in C," Menotti's "Apocalypse," and Ravel's brilliant orchestral treatment of Moussorgsky's popular set of piano pieces, "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Two of these works are, of course, familiar to most concert-goers — the Bizet and the Moussorgsky. Both were done with style and skill, with especial excitement generated by Raval's exuberant use of the orchestra—an exuberance that enabled the virtuoso musicians of the Boston Symphony to strut their stuff and to achieve a tone and texture of sound that in the closing section, the magnificent "The Great Gate of Kiev," was thrilling to hear.

As for the Menotti work, it has overtones of Stravinsky and Aaron Copland in its meanderings up and down the musical scale, in its occasional driving quality, in its alternation of a mystical quietness and noisy emotion. Written in 1951, it now sounds, in comparison with some of the more avant-garde music of our day, somewhat old-fashioned. It is easily assimilated and, although not exactly memorable, it makes for twenty minutes or so of pleasant listening.

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 14, at 7:30 o'clock

THOMAS SCHIPPERS, Guest Conductor

BIZET ..... Symphony in C major

I. Allegro vivo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace; Trio
IV. Allegro vivace

MENOTTI ..... "Apocalypse"

I. Improperia
II. La cittá celeste
III. Gli angeli militanti

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY ..... "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by MAURICE RAVEL)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000
MAR 2 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO PRESENTS MOEVS' PREMIERE

The combination of symphony programming and the happenstance of Winterfest required something large last week, and the first performance of Robert Moev's Et Occidentem Illustra for Chorus and Orchestra was it.

The occasion for the work was the two hundredth anniversary of the charter of Rutgers University, now State University of New Jersey. Its inspiration, the seven-hundredth anniversary of Dante's birth, from whose Divine Comedy came the text. The message stems from those Cantos, inexplicably found in the Inferno, where Ulysses on his last voyage challenges his followers in a valedictory not to live "like unto brutes, but to press on toward virtue and knowledge." The translation is by John Ciardi and the composer himself, while the structure of the music, the latter advises, makes obeisance to Dante's preoccupation with the number 3.

Now Professor of Music at Rutgers, Mr. Moevs is no stranger here. He studied at Harvard, was on the music faculty for a time and has twice previously had his compositions performed by the Symphony. His is a reasonably advanced serial technique and, a certain amount of hailing to the contrary notwithstanding, the initial impact of this latest work seems strictly routine among first hearings in the genre. Maybe there was indeed a taut musical argument lurking behind those seemingly disconnected and loosely organized sounds, though if so it sailed by this listener.

The voice material consisted largely of chanting in unison, which, to be sure, contained an initial dramatic impact — but whose effect quickly wore off. The loftiness of the enterprise is granted, but that scarcely sufficed to hide basically arid patches of choral writing with basically uninspired orchestral punctuation. The forces includes the Rutgers University Choir, F. Austin Walter, director, which seemed competent and well drilled if a little thin in comparison with several of the local choruses which turn up from time to time with the orchestra.

The Rutgers people combined with Beverly Sills, soprano, Beverly Wolff, contralto, Placido Domingo, tenor, and Ara Berberian, bass — all from the New York City Opera Company — to open the concert with the first performance here of the Haydn Mass in B flat major ("Schopfungsmesse"). This, of course, is one of the products of that gigantic burst of inspiration for composing choral works that ensued after Haydn, now at the end of his career, had written all his symphonies. The white hot genius of "The Creation" and "The Seasons" may not be present in any great abundance in this mass; yet the joyousness and serenity of Haydn's own very special brand of piety are very much in evidence. Only in Mozart at his best does one encounter in choral writing such prodigies of freshness, inventiveness and expressive but subtle interplay of voice and orchestra support. The performance was quite rousing all around, with Miss Sills and Miss Wolff giving particularly distinguished accounts of themselves.

Miss Sills was the soloist in the other work on the program, the Final Scene from Strauss' "Daphne," Opus 82. It, too, was a first at these concerts and the reason for its non-appearance was plain. "Daphne" is Strauss' last opera, written in 1938 when the composer was seventy-four. Strauss as a geriatric phenomenon was no Haydn nor Verdi, and "Daphne," at least so far as this excerpt reveals, is a pale carbon which comes close to being a parody of the Strauss of "Salome" and "Rosenkavalier" of thirty years before. Miss Sills and Mr. Leinsdorf went at it with a will, however, and with a little suspension of belief you could almost imagine for a few bars here and there that "Daphne" was the real article.

The orchestra is taking the foregoing and other offerings on the road this week. On its return next week Thomas Schippers will conduct a program which includes Bizet's Symphony in C major, the first performance of Menotti's "Apocalypse" and the Ravel arrangement of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

66

TUES. B #6 MAR. 14

STANDARD-TIMES (e)
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 67,000

MAR 15 1967 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Offers Exciting Fare

By EARL J. DIAS
Standard-Times Music Critic

Thomas Schippers, who looks like a matinee idol but uses his baton with commendable musicianly authority, was guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night, in Symphony Hall, in the concluding program of the Tuesday "B" Series.

Mr. Schippers, American-born and artistic director of the famous Spoletto Festival, scheduled works by Biget, Gian-Carlo Menotti, and Moussorgsky.

The program opened with an engaging reading of Bizet's youthful "Symphony in C," a work written when the composer was only 17. Like most works by young composers, this one shows a number of influences — Haydn, the early Beethoven, Schubert, and, particularly in the final movement, Mendelssohn.

Not a Profound Work

It is not a profound work, but it is appealingly melodious, bright and lively, filled with contagiously lilting rhythm. It was done beautifully by Mr. Schippers and his musicians, with an excellent piece of solo work by oboist Ralph Gomberg, who performed the same role last Sunday with the Boston Ballet Orchestra.

Menotti's "Apocalpyse," written in 1951, also shows various influences — that of Stavinsky and Aaron Copland especially. Religious in nature, its three movements have laudatory variety.

The first is based on liturgical chants; the second, "The Celestial City," begins in muted manner but rises in intensity to inspirational heights; the third, "The Militant Angels," begins in scherzo style, with a gossamer lightness, and then rises to a series of musical climaxes.

Derivative though it may be (at this date, some of its sonorities sound almost old-fashioned), it is, nevertheless, pleasurable listening.

Put Through Paces

Concluding the program was Ravel's orchestral transcription of Moussorgsky's piano pieces, "Picture at an Exhibition." In this election, Mr. Schipper put the orchestra through their paces in exciting style.

During the proceedings, Ravel, who had a genius for lavish and telling orchestration, uses, in addition to the traditional instruments, such others as the tamtam, whip, celesta, glockenspiel, rattle, and chimes.

The result is often glorious sound, reaching its zenith in the final section, "The Great Gate of Kiev," in which the orchestra shook the rafters of staid Symphony Hall in a demonstration of the sort of tone and texture that only a virtuoso ensemble can produce.

SUNDAY STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 56,800

MAR 19 1967 New England Newsclip

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

On Tuesday night, I was at Symphony Hall for the concluding program of the Boston Symphony's "B" Series, with Thomas Schippers on the podium as guest conductor. Schippers, 37, is a handsome young man with a shock of curly hair and classically regular features. Born in Michigan and educated at Philadelphia's Curtis Institute, he has conducted most of the world's great orchestras, has conducted at the Metropolitan Opera and at La Scala in Milan, and is artistic director of Gian-Carlo Menotti's internationally-famous summer festival in Spoletto, Italy.

Although he is the glamor boy of contemporary conductors, a sort of matinee idol with baton, he is a thoroughly sound musician, and both he and the Boston Symphony made pleasurable music.

Schippers scheduled three works on his program—Bizet's melodious and bright "Symphony in C," Menotti's "Apocalypse," and Ravel's brilliant orchestral treatment of Moussorgsky's popular set of piano pieces, "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Two of these works are, of course, familiar to most concert-goers — the Bizet and the Moussorgsky. Both were done with style and skill, with especial excitement generated by Raval's exuberant use of the orchestra—an exuberance that enabled the virtuoso musicians of the Boston Symphony to strut their stuff and to achieve a tone and texture of sound that in the closing section, the magnificent "The Great Gate of Kiev," was thrilling to hear.

As for the Menotti work, it has overtones of Stravinsky and Aaron Copland in its meanderings up and down the musical scale, in its occasional driving quality, in its alternation of a mystical quietness and noisy emotion. Written in 1951, it now sounds, in comparison with some of the more avant-garde music of our day, somewhat old-fashioned. It is easily assimilated and, although not exactly memorable, it makes for twenty minutes or so of pleasant listening.

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 14, at 7:30 o'clock

THOMAS SCHIPPERS, Guest Conductor

BIZET ..... Symphony in C major
- I. Allegro vivo
- II. Adagio
- III. Allegro vivace; Trio
- IV. Allegro vivace

MENOTTI ..... "Apocalypse"
- I. Improperia
- II. La cittá celeste
- III. Gli angeli militanti

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

MOUSSORGSKY ..... "Pictures at an Exhibition" (Piano Pieces, Arranged for Orchestra by MAURICE RAVEL)

Promenade — Gnomus — Promenade — Il vecchio castello — Tuileries — Bydlo — Promenade — Ballet of Chicks in Their Shells — Samuel Goldenburg and Schmuyle — Limoges: The Marketplace — Catacombs (Con mortuis in lingua mortua) — The Hut on Fowls' Legs — The Great Gate of Kiev

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000

MAR 2 1967 New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO PRESENTS MOEVS' PREMIERE

The combination of symphony programming and the happenstance of Winterfest required something large last week, and the first performance of Robert Moev's Et Occidentem Illustra for Chorus and Orchestra was it.

The occasion for the work was the two hundredth anniversary of the charter of Rutgers University, now State University of New Jersey. Its inspiration, the seven-hundredth anniversary of Dante's birth, from whose Divine Comedy came the text. The message stems from those Cantos, inexplicably found in the Inferno, where Ulysses on his last voyage challenges his followers in a valedictory not to live "like unto brutes, but to press on toward virtue and knowledge." The translation is by John Ciardi and the composer himself, while the structure of the music, the latter advises, makes obeisance to Dante's preoccupation with the number 3.

Now Professor of Music at Rutgers, Mr. Moevs is no stranger here. He studied at Harvard, was on the music faculty for a time and has twice previously had his compositions performed by the Symphony. His is a reasonably advanced serial technique and, a certain amount of hailing to the contrary notwithstanding, the initial impact of this latest work seems strictly routine among first hearings in the genre. Maybe there was indeed a taut musical argument lurking behind those seemingly disconnected and loosely organized sounds, though if so it sailed by this listener.

The voice material consisted largely of chanting in unison, which, to be sure, contained an initial dramatic impact — but whose effect quickly wore off. The loftiness of the enterprise is granted, but that scarcely sufficed to hide basically arid patches of choral writing with basically uninspired orchestral punctuation. The forces includes the Rutgers University Choir, F. Austin Walter, director, which seemed competent and well drilled if a little thin in comparison with several of the local choruses which turn up from time to time with the orchestra.

The Rutgers people combined with Beverly Sills, soprano, Beverly Wolff, contralto, Placido Domingo, tenor, and Ara Berberian, bass — all from the New York City Opera Company — to open the concert with the first performance here of the Haydn Mass in B flat major ("Schopfungsmesse"). This, of course, is one of the products of that gigantic burst of inspiration for composing choral works that ensued after Haydn, now at the end of his career, had written all his symphonies. The white hot genius of "The Creation" and "The Seasons" may not be present in any great abundance in this mass; yet the joyousness and serenity of Haydn's own very special brand of piety are very much in evidence. Only in Mozart at his best does one encounter in choral writing such prodigies of freshness, inventiveness and expressive but subtle interplay of voice and orchestra support. The performance was quite rousing all around, with Miss Sills and Miss Wolff giving particularly distinguished accounts of themselves.

Miss Sills was the soloist in the other work on the program, the Final Scene from Strauss' "Daphne," Opus 82. It, too, was a first at these concerts and the reason for its non-appearance was plain. "Daphne" is Strauss' last opera, written in 1938 when the composer was seventy-four. Strauss as a geriatric phenomenon was no Haydn nor Verdi, and "Daphne," at least so far as this excerpt reveals, is a pale carbon which comes close to being a parody of the Strauss of "Salome" and "Rosenkavalier" of thirty years before. Miss Sills and Mr. Leinsdorf went at it with a will, however, and with a little suspension of belief you could almost imagine for a few bars here and there that "Daphne" was the real article.

The orchestra is taking the foregoing and other offerings on the road this week. On its return next week Thomas Schippers will conduct a program which includes Bizet's Symphony in C major, the first performance of Menotti's "Apocalypse" and the Ravel arrangement of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

67

FRI. + SAT. #21 MAR. 17 + 18

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
MAR 18 1967
New England Newsclip

At Symphony Hall

Concert Soars at Last

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Erich [redacted]'s "Abduction from the Seraglio" Overture and Piano Concerto in B flat, K.456, with Evelyne Crochet, soloist, and Bruckner's Symphony No. 9 in D minor. Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

The last 20 minutes of this concert went well. The Adagio with which the Ninth Symphony ends is Bruckner's greatest, certainly his freest, achievement, and during its performance Erich Leinsdorf, for the first time all afternoon, seemed fully awake. He shaped the movement well, managing the contrapuntal passages especially effectively, though spoiling the tranquility of the last five measures by his casual, irreverent romp through them.

Before the Adagio, though, the performance had gone badly. The Scherzo was lumpy, but it was the first movement that suffered most. It is a movement whose faults are obvious: it is too square with all its four-bar phrases, and it is too conscious of the Beethoven Ninth. Just the same, it has a grandeur that is very much its own, and it can make a most powerful impression.

To do so, however, it needs a carefully controlled performance. Tempi are used as structural points of reference, and it is important, therefore, that when Bruckner asks for a return to a previous tempo, he be given just that rather than something considerably faster, as happened repeatedly.

As early as the seventh measure, when Leinsdorf, by hurrying over the inactive beats, clipped the bar down to seven-eight time, the rhythm became confused. This sort of inattention occurred repeately, on a large scale as well as in detail, and the whole movement came to be inchoate in a way that took as terrible a toll of the rhetoric as well as of the structure.

Leinsdorf used the original score, as all conductors do now, though he makes some quite capricious changes of his own in articulation and tempi. Incidentally, the program note by George H. L. Smith suggested that the Loewe edition, discredited when what Bruckner really wrote was published in 1932, was not really so bad after all. That, as every bar of Bruckner's marvelous scoring served to remind us, is a preposterous idea.

Except perhaps for its finale, a piece in the hunt style that one finds in the concertos for horn and a few of those for piano, this B flat Concerto, K.456, not to be confused with its great near-neighbor, K.-450, is not one of Mozart's strong pieces. Its format design and the melodies are a bit routine, though it is rich in witty surface detail and its sonority is exceptionally charming.

Since it is a rather neutral piece, this concerto needs an unusually creative and active performance, one of a kind Mozart himself doubtless gave, or one that I could imagine being given today by Britten or a fanciful right-hand pianist like Frager.

Evelyne Crochet's small-scale playing was about the opposite of what was wanted. Her playing was tasteful and musical in the sense that it did nothing actually against the flow of the music, but a mere uncommitted playing of the notes is not a performance. The piano playing as such was accurate, though not often articulated clearly.

There were some nicely executed details in the orchestra, for example the sforzandi in the bridge to the second theme in the first movement, but for the most part Leinsdorf's conducting produced results that were to an extreme degree insipid.

The approach to the "Abduction" Overture was gingerly and the effect deadly.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
MAR 18 1967
New England Newsclip

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Miss Crochet at Symphony

By Clifford Barnes

Two Mozarts for one third and one Bruckner for two thirds balanced Friday's Boston Symphony program between classicism and romanticism. In addition, the Symphony Hall audience was treated to the talents of the French pianist Evelyne Crochet, at present artist-in-residence at Rutgers University.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf chose the Overture to "The Abduction From the Seraglio" by Mozart to set the classic tone. The violins sounded unusually thin, and it was not because of the reduced number of strings.

Then came the opportunity to hear Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 18 (K. 456), one of four that he wrote in the key of B-flat major. Miss Crochet was in complete rapport with the composer's style and the spirit of his music. She brought to life a lesser-known Mozart concerto through a direct, youthful geniality.

Her touch was decisive, yet it was light in the ornamental passages that were notable because of their sense of direction. The cadenzas were somewhat scaled down and unpretentious, without making Mozart's grace and charm seem feminine.

The second half of the concert was devoted to Bruckner's last, unfinished Symphony No. 9 in D minor. The three existing movements are so gigantic that the finale is hardly missed.

Mr. Leinsdorf presided over spinning out the expansive themes with loving care. He succeeded admirably in evoking and maintaining an intensity of mood throughout the length and breadth of the work. In fact he was put through an almost athletic workout.

The brightest moments occurred in the second-movement Scherzo and Trio, as might be expected. The two outer movements call for warm-blooded romanticism. Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra can't be blamed for giving it to us.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Twenty-first Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 17, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 18, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Overture to "Die Entführung aus dem Serail"

MOZART ..... Piano Concerto in B-flat major, K. 456

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante un poco sostenuto
III. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BRUCKNER ..... Symphony No. 9, in D minor

I. Feierlich, misterioso
II. Scherzo (bewegt, lebhaft); Trio (schnell)
III. Adagio (langsam, feierlich)

SOLOIST
EVELYNE CROCHET
Miss CROCHET plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1287]

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
MAR 18 1967
New England Newsclip

Evelyn Crochet Soloist In Mozart Piano Concerto

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—If Mozart was the hero of yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra, mini-skirted Evelyn Crochet, Parisienne pianiste now settled here, was the soubrette, for she played the Swan of Salzburg's 18th concerto (KV-456, in B flat) with aplomb, if not perfection. It is beautiful, a miniature masterpiece, but it is miniature only in the same degree as the poems of Heinrich Heine or Christina Rossetti.

It has hidden depths of passion and is endowed with a strange ambiguity of mood and character that make it enduringly attractive. for the solo part has a different, more mini-bopper, more sensuous, character than Mozart's preceding piano concerti. It was said to have been composed in 1784 for Maria - Theresia Paradis, Viennese virtuosa blind since childhood, but recent musicological research scouts that thesis.

Mozart in 1784

Mlle. Crochet is an earnest young pianiste; however, this early in her career she brings to Mozart's music little except fluent technical facility and good will. Whether she adheres to the crisp French piano-playing-all wrists and fingers—was not ascertained, since her hands could not be seen from H-3, but the shapely gambs were lovely to look at, delightful to observe.

Curtain-raiser was Mozart's sparkling "Abduction from the Seraglio" overture, with its enchanting Turkish janizary orchestral effects. Erich Leinsdorf's exposition manifested generous animation in his customary vigor, with dynamic contrasts and changes of pace.

After the interval Anton Bruckners' final symphony, unfinished in D minor, received a vibrant expansive performance. Though musicologists refer to Bruckner as "the last giant of Romanticism," his works had suffered from protarcted neglect until fairly recently, being popular only in Germany and his native Austria.

His symphonies have be

His symphonies have bestirred prolonged and heated controversy. The reason music of such sturdy and forthright eloquence has failed to catch on may be that we have moved into an age wherein prolixity no longer fits.

The uncompleted ninth in many ways is the boldest stroke of Bruckner's magical muse. Its opening is truly magnificent and awe-inspiring; yet, as in so many other of his works, Bruckner fails to make good the promise of his introduction.

Extraordinary are the darkling fantasy and titanic dissonances of the diabolically elfin scherzo, in contrast to the seraphic utterances of the concluding, Wagnerian, slow movement . Indeed, the two slow movements essentially stress nobility and eloquence in deeply religious feeling,s as befits a church organist. These two lengthy segments are separated by a delgihtful scherzo, much lighter in texture than most counterparts in Buckner's other symphonies, but Mozart could say twice as much in half the time.

67

FRI. + SAT. #21 MAR. 17 + 18

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

MAR 18 1967 New England Newsclip

At Symphony Hall

Concert Soars at Last

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio" Overture and Piano Concerto in B flat, K.456, with Evelyne Crochet, soloist, and Bruckner's Symphony No. 9 in D minor. Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

The last 20 minutes of this concert went well. The Adagio with which the Ninth Symphony ends is Bruckner's greatest, certainly his freest, achievement, and during its performance Erich Leinsdorf, for the first time all afteernoon, seemed fully awake. He shaped the movement well, managing the contrapuntal passages especially effectively, though spoiling the tranquility of the last five measures by his casual, irreverent romp through them.

Before the Adagio, though, the performance had gone badly. The Scherzo was lumpy, but it was the first movement that suffered most. It is a movement whose faults are obvious: it is too square with all its four-bar phrases, and it is too conscious of the Beethoven Ninth. Just the same, it has a grandeur that is very much its own, and it can make a most powerful impression.

To do so, however, it needs a carefully controlled performance. Tempi are used as structural points of reference, and it is important, therefore, that when Bruckner asks for a return to a previous tempo, he be given just that rather than something considerably faster, as happened repeatedly.

As early as the seventh measure, when Leinsdorf, by hurrying over the inactive beats, clipped the bar down to seven-eight time, the rhythm became confused. This sort of inattention occurred repeately, on a large scale as well as in detail, and the whole movement came to be inchoate in a way that took as terrible a toll of the rhetoric as well as of the structure.

Leinsdorf used the original score, as all conductors do now, though he makes some quite capricious changes of his own in articulation and tempi. Incidentally, the program note by George H. L. Smith suggested that the Loewe edition, discredited when what Bruckner really wrote was published in 1932, was not really so bad after all. That, as every bar of Bruckner's marvelous scoring served to remind us, is a preposterous idea.

Except perhaps for its finale, a piece in the hunt style that one finds in the concertos for horn and a few of those for piano, this B flat Concerto, K.456, not to be confused with its great near-neighbor, K.-450, is not one of Mozart's strong pieces. Its formal design and the melodies are a bit routine, though it is rich in witty surface detail and its sonority is exceptionally charming.

Since it is a rather neutral piece, this concerto needs an unusually creative and active performance, one of a kind Mozart himself doubtless gave, or one that I could imagine being given today by Britten or a fanciful right-hand pianist like Frager.

Evelyne Crochet's small-scale playing was about the opposite of what was wanted. Her playing was tasteful and musical in the sense that it did nothing actually against the flow of the music, but a mere uncommitted playing of the notes is not a performance. The piano playing as such was accurate, though not often articulated clearly.

There were some nicely executed details in the orchestra, for example the sforzandi in the bridge to the second theme in the first movement, but for the most part Leinsdorf's conducting produced results that were to an extreme degree insipid.

The approach to the "Abduction" Overture was gingerly and the effect deadly.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750

MAR 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Twenty-first Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 17, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 18, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Overture to "Die Entführung aus dem Serail"

MOZART ..... Piano Concerto in B-flat major, K. 456

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante un poco sostenuto
III. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BRUCKNER ..... Symphony No. 9, in D minor

I. Feierlich, misterioso
II. Scherzo (bewegt, lebhaft); Trio (schnell)
III. Adagio (langsam, feierlich)

SOLOIST
EVELYNE CROCHET
Miss CROCHET plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1287]

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

MAR 18 1967 New England Newsclip

Evelyn Crochet Soloist In Mozart Piano Concerto

(By ROLFE BOSWELL)—If Mozart was the hero of yesterday afternoon's Boston Symphony Orchestra, mini-skirted Evelyn Crochet, Parisienne pianiste now settled here, was the soubrette, for she played the Swan of Salzburg's 18th concerto (KV-456, in B flat) with aplomb, if not perfection. It is beautiful, a miniature masterpiece, but it is miniature only in the same degree as the poems of Heinrich Heine or Christina Rossetti.

It has hidden depths of passion and is endowed with a strange ambiguity of mood and character that make it enduringly attractive, for the solo part has a different, more mini-bopper, more sensuous, character than Mozart's preceding piano concerti. It was said to have been composed in 1784 for Maria - Theresia Paradis, Viennese virtuosa blind since childhood, but recent musicological research scouts that thesis.

Mozart in 1784

Mlle. Crochet is an earnest young pianiste; however, this early in her career she brings to Mozart's music little except fluent technical facility and good will. Whether she adheres to the crisp French piano-playing-all wrists and fingers—was not ascertained, since her hands could not be seen from H-3, but the shapely gambs were lovely to look at, delightful to observe.

Curtain-raiser was Mozart's sparkling "Abduction from the Seraglio" overture, with its enchanting Turkish janizary orchestral effects. Erich Leinsdorf's exposition manifested generous animation in his customary vigor, with dynamic contrasts and changes of pace.

After the interval Anton Bruckners' final symphony, unfinished in D minor, received a vibrant expansive performance. Though musicologists refer to Bruckner as "the last giant of Romanticism," his works had suffered from protarcted neglect until fairly recently, being popular only in Germany and his native Austria.

His symphonies have be His symphonies have bestirred prolonged and heated controversy. The reason music of such sturdy and forthright eloquence has failed to catch on may be that we have moved into an age wherein prolixity no longer fits.

The uncompleted ninth in many ways is the boldest stroke of Bruckner's magical muse. Its opening is truly magnificent and awe-inspiring; yet, as in so many other of his works, Bruckner fails to make good the promise of his introduction.

Extraordinary are the darkling fantasy and titanic dissonances of the diabolically elfin scherzo, in contrast to the seraphic utterances of the concluding, Wagnerian, slow movement. Indeed, the two slow movements essentially stress nobility and eloquence in deeply religious feeling,s as befits a church organist. These two lengthy segments are separated by a delgihtful scherzo, much lighter in texture than most counterparts in Buckner's other symphonies, but Mozart could say twice as much in half the time.

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Miss Crochet at Symphony

By Clifford Barnes

Two Mozarts for one third and one Bruckner for two thirds balanced Friday's Boston Symphony program between classicism and romanticism. In addition, the Symphony Hall audience was treated to the talents of the French pianist Evelyne Crochet, at present artist-in-residence at Rutgers University.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf chose the Overture to "The Abduction From the Seraglio" by Mozart to set the classic tone. The violins sounded unusually thin, and it was not because of the reduced number of strings.

Then came the opportunity to hear Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 18 (K. 456), one of four that he wrote in the key of B-flat major. Miss Crochet was in complete rapport with the composer's style and the spirit of his music. She brought to life a lesser-known Mozart concerto through a direct, youthful geniality.

Her touch was decisive, yet it was light in the ornamental passages that were notable because of their sense of direction. The cadenzas were somewhat scaled down and unpretentious, without making Mozart's grace and charm seem feminine.

The second half of the concert was devoted to Bruckner's last, unfinished Symphony No. 9 in D minor. The three existing movements are so gigantic that the finale is hardly missed.

Mr. Leinsdorf presided over spinning out the expansive themes with loving care. He succeeded admirably in evoking and maintaining an intensity of mood throughout the length and breadth of the work. In fact he was put through an almost athletic workout.

The brightest moments occurred in the second-movement Scherzo and Trio, as might be expected. The two outer movements call for warm-blooded romanticism. Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra can't be blamed for giving it to us.

68

FRI. + SAT. #22 MAR. 24 + 25

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Toscanini Memory Honored

Concerts Dedicated To Famed Director

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

BOSTON — Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Hall, yesterday's cated the pair of concerts at ymphony Hall, yesterday's and tonight's, to the memory of Arturo Toscanini, born 100 years ago today. Bach's "The Passion According to St. John" was also a highly suitable choice for Good Friday.

Leinsdorf first met Toscanini in Europe in 1934. It was Toscanini who recommended young Leinsdorf to the Metropolitan Opera in 1937.

The Bach presentation was given full sacred meaning, not only by the manner of performance, bue by the absence of applause except when the soloists first came onstage.

Gazette Review

The 45 Boston Symphony players co-starred with a splendid group of soloists, and the Chorus pro Musica, trained by Alfred Nash Patterson. Ernst Haefliger, Swiss tenor, as the Evangelist, gave the long recitatives, sung in German, gracious enunciation and dignified feeling. His voice, high and clear, was perfect for the part, never dull and never cheaply melodramatic.

Norman Treigle, bass-baritone, sang the words of Christ with rich quality and a demeanor which was gripping and reverent.

Ara Berberian, substituting for the ill Thomas Paul, was splendid as Pilate and Peter, and his bass arias had warmth and relaxed beauty.

Phyllis Curtin, noted soprano, was more at home in the second of her arias, the fault being I think in the music rather than the singer. Beverly Wolff, contralto, also had a task at first to make her ornate music seem suitable, but was tremendously real and effective in her later aria, with an appealing obbligato on the viola da gamba by Alfred Zighera.

Gene Bullard's glowing high tenor seemed tense at times, but he had his best assignment near the end of the work, and made it live in rich colors.

The orchestra included a group of distinguished continuo and obbligato players on flute, bassoon, oboe d'amore, oboe da caccia, viola d'amore, viola da gamba and lute. Stanley Silverman's lute was charming with Berberian's bass in "Come, ponder, O my soul."

The chorus sang with wonderful spirit and religious import. The numerous chorales were far more thrilling than Bach's long choruses in depiction of dramatic moments. Leinsdorf worked the chorus and ochestra up to a tingling climax on "Away with Him."

The long chorus, just before the concluding chorale, was a masterpiece of counterpoint and tender feeling as it adjured the entombed Christ, "Rest well."

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

These performances are played in honor of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Arturo Toscanini.

Twenty-second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 24, at 2:00 o'clock
SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 25, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Johannespassion (The Passion of our Lord According to Saint John)

ERNST HAEFLIGER	Evangelist
NORMAN TREIGLE	Jesus
PHYLLIS CURTIN	Solo soprano and maid
BEVERLY WOLFF	Solo contralto
GENE BULLARD	Solo tenor and servant
THOMAS PAUL	Solo bass, Pilate and Peter

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

IGOR KIPNIS, Harpsichord continuo CHARLES WILSON, Organ continuo
JULES ESKIN, MARTIN HOHERMAN, Cello continuo
HENRY FREEMAN, Double bass continuo

DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, JAMES PAPPOUTSAKIS	Flute
RALPH GOMBERG, JOHN HOLMES	Oboe obbligato
SHERMAN WALT, ERNST PANENKA	Bassoon continuo
HUGH MATHENY	Oboe d'amore obbligato
LAURENCE THORSTENBERG, JOHN HOLMES	Oboe da caccia obbligato (English horn)
BURTON FINE, ALBERT BERNARD	Viola d'amore obbligato
ALFRED ZIGHERA	Viola da gamba obbligato
STANLEY SILVERMAN	Lute obbligato

Because of the sacred nature of the work the audience is requested not to applaud.

These concerts will end about 4:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 11:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

The text will be found beginning on page 1370.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Bach's St. John Passion Given by BSO

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Symphony Hall was teleported into the nave of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Good Friday for a stirring performance of Sebastian Bach's Johannespassion (The Passion According to St. John) by the Chorus Pro Musica, forty-odd members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and six examplary soloists, all under Erich Leinsdorf's direction. It was a singular variety of religious experience.

Sebastian Bach

Bach is said to have composed five passions, of which only the St. Matthew and St. John are extant, though there is a St. Luke Passion in manuscript whose authorship has not been ascertained. The choral portions of Bach's St. John Passion embrace some of his finer music, but the dramatic structure is weakened by a flimsy libretto.

It might be of interest to contrast the St. Matthew Passion with the St. John. Where the latter is vivid and dramatic, if episodic, the former vouchsafes more soundly musical values. The greatest progress of the St. Matthew over the earlier passion lies, however, in Bach's new representation of Jesus. In the St. John, his recitatives are supported by organ and basso continuo; in the St. Matthew, Bach adds a string quartet to the conventional accompaniment, thus distinguishing Jesus from the other characters, giving Him a more individualistic and sacrosanct background.

A chronological outline of th narraetive is presented by the Evangelist (Ernst Haefliger, tenor). Others are Jesus (Norman Treigle, basso), Peter and Pontius Pilate (both sung by Ara Berberian, called upon at 7:30 a. m. Friday to supplant Thomas Paul, an indisposed basso), a man-servant (Gene Bullard, tenor) and two women, a solo soprano (Phyllis Curtin) and solo contralto (Beverly Wolff).

Certain reflections on the narrative are interpreted by the chorus, the text which provides the narrative being assigned to the principal tenor, as previously noted. Fifteen chorales of the Lutheran Church we introduced and in the singing of these the congregation was expected to join, as presumably was done at the first performance in Leipzig's St. Thomas Church on Good Friday, 1723.

The choruses embrace powerful and dramatic part-writing. A double chorus is employed, each having separate orchestral and organ accompaniments.

NO LOOSE ENDS

Dr. Leinsdorf offered a warm, dramatic and well-executed performance, impressive for its technical polish; there were no loose ends, but neither was there much heart. Rhythms tended to be flabby and the interpretation lacked strength.

The wonderful chorale, "Ach Herr, lass dein lieb' Engelein," was very fine. 'Rüh't wohl, ihr heiligen Gebeine" was deeply moving, affectingly phrased and the texture of Bach's fulsome writing was particularly well-defined. The contralto's 'Es ist vollbracht" was a soaring vocal achievement, full of the resignation found in the music.

OFF BALANCE

To give a valid Bach performance, forty skilled voices are more than sufficient; in doubling those forces yesterday, nothing was gained except sheer volume and body, thus throwing out of balance the attenuated orchstra of historic Bachnian proportions. Furthermore, a small chorus is more flexible when it comes to achieving the subtly expressive nuances which add so much to Bach performances.

This concert was played in commemoration of Arturo Toscanini's centenary. If memory serves, the Maestro presented his Bach in mits and pieces, not in the whole cloth. More opposite a tribute would have been Verdi's "Quattro Pezzi Sacri" and, possibly, Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
MAR 19 1967
New England Newsclip

Bach Passion BSO Memorial To Toscanini

The Boston Symphony will observe the centennial of Arturo Toscanini's birth with performances Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8:30 of Bach's St. John Passion.

Soloists will be soprano Phyllis Curtin, mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff, tenors Gene Bullard and Ernst Haefliger and bassos Thomas Paul and Norman Treigle. The Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, director, also will participate. There will be an open rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30.

Erich Leinsdorf, who will conduct, has written an article for the program book on his personal reminiscences of Toscanini. Born Mar. 25, 1867, Toscanini died Jan. 16, 1957. He made his first Boston appearance in 1908 conducting a Metropolitan Opera production of "Aida," and returned in 1910 to direct "Tristan und Isolde."

Subsequent dates, all in Symphony Hall, were with visiting orchestras: 1921 and the La Scala Orchestra, 1936 and the New York Philharmonic, and 1939 and the NBC Symphony.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

A secular performance

St. John Passion

By Harold Rogers 047

This weekend Erich Leinsdorf is observing the Easter season by conducting the Boston Symphony in Bach's Passion According to St. John, one of the great sacred masterworks of all time. In this he is being assisted by the Chorus Pro Musica, trained by Alfred Nash Patterson, their excellent director. Mr. Leinsdorf has also selected a roster of fine soloists — Ernst Haefliger, Norman Treigle, Phyllis Curtin, Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard, and Ara Berberian.

Mr. Berberian, whose rich basso added strength to the roles of Pilate and Peter, was asked at 7 o'clock yesterday morning if he would sing at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, standing in for the indisposed Thomas Paul. He accepted the challenge and discharged it with distinction.

Drama underscored

As a musical experience Mr. Leinsdorf's conception of the St. John Passion had much to commend it in yesterday's performance at Symphony Hall. It was straightforward, vigorous, neat. He underlined the drama of the Good Friday events, if not always catching the spiritual overtones.

One can praise the fine tenor singing of Mr. Haefliger as the Evangelist, the thoughtful bass statements by Mr. Treigle as Jesus, as well as the fine display of oratorio singing by Miss Curtin, Miss Wolff, and Mr. Bullard.

But taken as a whole, it was a religious work shorn of its sacred moods. The chorales, in particular, were set forth more as secular pieces.

There were no halos around them.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
MAR 24 1967
New England Newsclip

The ARTS

B.S.O. Concert At 2 Today

The Boston Symphony's concert today will begin at 2 p.m., rather than the later hour customary on Good Friday. The program will be devoted to Bach's Passion According to St. John.

Tenor Ernst Haefliger will sing the role of the Evangelist and Normal Treigle will be Jesus. The solo quartet is composed of soprano Phyllis Curtin, mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff, tenor Gene Bullard and baritone Norman Paul.

The program will be repeated Saturday at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
MAR 19 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony This Week

Orchestra to Offer 'St. John Passion'

Two Symphony Hall performances of Bach's St. John Passion will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of music director Erich Leinsdorf.

These concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will be dedicated to the memory of Arturo Toscanini and Mr. Leinsdorf has written an article on his personal reminiscences of Toscanini for the weekend program book.

Participating as soloists in the St. John Passion will be Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, mezzo-soprano; Gene Bullard, tenor; Ernst Haefliger, tenor; Thomas Paul, bass; Norman Treigle, bass. The chorus will be the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, director.

The Friday-Saturday programs will be the only Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts this week, but an open rehearsal is scheduled for Thursday evening at 7:30.

FRI. + SAT. #22 MAR. 24 + 25

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Toscanini Memory Honored

Concerts Dedicated To Famed Director

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

BOSTON — Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony Hall, yesterday's cated the pair of concerts at ymphony Hall, yesterday's and tonight's, to the memory of Arturo Toscanini, born 100 years ago today. Bach's "The Passion According to St. John" was also a highly suitable choice for Good Friday.

Leinsdorf first met Toscanini in Europe in 1934. It was Toscanini who recommended young Leinsdorf to the Metropolitan Opera in 1937.

The Bach presentation was given full sacred meaning, not only by the manner of performance, bue by the absence of applause except when the soloists first came onstage.

Gazette Review

The 45 Boston Symphony players co-starred with a splendid group of soloists, and the Chorus pro Musica, trained by Alfred Nash Patterson. Ernst Haefliger, Swiss tenor, as the Evangelist, gave the long recitatives, sung in German, gracious enunciation and dignified feeling. His voice, high and clear, was perfect for the part, never dull and never cheaply melodramatic.

Norman Treigle, bass-baritone, sang the words of Christ with rich quality and a demeanor which was gripping and reverent.

Ara Berberian, substituting for the ill Thomas Paul, was splendid as Pilate and Peter, and his bass arias had warmth and relaxed beauty.

Phyllis Curtin, noted soprano, was more at home in the second of her arias, the fault being I think in the music rather than the singer. Beverly Wolff, contralto, also had a task at first to make her ornate music seem suitable, but was tremendously real and effective in her later aria, with an appealing obbligato on the viola da gamba by Alfred Zighera.

Gene Bullard's glowing high tenor seemed tense at times, but he had his best assignment near the end of the work, and made it live in rich colors.

The orchestra included a group of distinguished continuo and obbligato players on flute, bassoon, oboe d'amore, oboe da caccia, viola d'amore, viola da gamba and lute. Stanley Silverman's lute was charming with Berberian's bass in "Come, ponder, O my soul."

The chorus sang with wonderful spirit and religious import. The numerous chorales were far more thrilling than Bach's long choruses in depiction of dramatic moments. Leinsdorf worked the chorus and ochestra up to a tingling climax on "Away with Him."

The long chorus, just before the concluding chorale, was a masterpiece of counterpoint and tender feeling as it adjured the entombed Christ, "Rest well."

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

These performances are played in honor of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Arturo Toscanini.

Twenty-second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 24, at 2:00 o'clock
SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 25, at 8:30 o'clock

BACH ..... Johannespassion (The Passion of our Lord According to Saint John)

ERNST HAEFLIGER	Evangelist
NORMAN TREIGLE	Jesus
PHYLLIS CURTIN	Solo soprano and maid
BEVERLY WOLFF	Solo contralto
GENE BULLARD	Solo tenor and servant
THOMAS PAUL	Solo bass, Pilate and Peter

CHORUS PRO MUSICA
ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, Conductor

IGOR KIPNIS, Harpsichord continuo CHARLES WILSON, Organ continuo
JULES ESKIN, MARTIN HOHERMAN, Cello continuo
HENRY FREEMAN, Double bass continuo

DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, JAMES PAPPOUTSAKIS	Flute
RALPH GOMBERG, JOHN HOLMES	Oboe obbligato
SHERMAN WALT, ERNST PANENKA	Bassoon continuo
HUGH MATHENY	Oboe d'amore obbligato
LAURENCE THORSTENBERG, JOHN HOLMES	Oboe da caccia obbligato (English horn)
BURTON FINE, ALBERT BERNARD	Viola d'amore obbligato
ALFRED ZIGHERA	Viola da gamba obbligato
STANLEY SILVERMAN	Lute obbligato

Because of the sacred nature of the work the audience is requested not to applaud.

These concerts will end about 4:45 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 11:15 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

The text will be found beginning on page 1370.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Bach's St. John Passion Given by BSO

By ROLFE BOSWELL

Symphony Hall was teleported into the nave of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Good Friday for a stirring performance of Sebastian Bach's Johannespassion (The Passion According to St. John) by the Chorus Pro Musica, forty-odd members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and six examplary soloists, all under Erich Leinsdorf's direction. It was a singular variety of religious experience.

Sebastian Bach

Bach is said to have composed five passions, of which only the St. Matthew and St. John are extant, though there is a St. Luke Passion in manuscript whose authorship has not been ascertained. The choral portions of Bach's St. John Passion embrace some of his finer music, but the dramatic structure is weakened by a flimsy libretto.

It might be of interest to contrast the St. Matthew Passion with the St. John. Where the latter is vivid and dramatic, if episodic, the former vouchsafes more soundly musical values. The greatest progress of the St. Matthew over the earlier passion lies, however, in Bach's new representation of Jesus. In the St. John, his recitatives are supported by organ and basso continuo; in the St. Matthew, Bach adds a string quartet to the conventional accompaniment, thus distinguishing Jesus from the other characters, giving Him a more individualistic and sacrosanct background.

A chronological outline of th narraetive is presented by the Evangelist (Ernst Haefliger, tenor). Others are Jesus (Norman Treigle, basso), Peter and Pontius Pilate (both sung by Ara Berberian, called upon at 7:30 a. m. Friday to supplant Thomas Paul, an indisposed basso), a man-servant (Gene Bullard, tenor) and two women, a solo soprano (Phyllis Curtin) and solo contralto (Beverly Wolff).

Certain reflections on the narrative are interpreted by the chorus, the text which provides the narrative being assigned to the principal tenor, as previously noted. Fifteen chorales of the Lutheran Church we introduced and in the singing of these the congregation was expected to join, as presumably was done at the first performance in Leipzig's St. Thomas Church on Good Friday, 1723.

The choruses embrace powerful and dramatic part-writing. A double chorus is employed, each having separate orchestral and organ accompaniments.

NO LOOSE ENDS

Dr. Leinsdorf offered a warm, dramatic and well-executed performance, impressive for its technical polish; there were no loose ends, but neither was there much heart. Rhythms tended to be flabby and the interpretation lacked strength.

The wonderful chorale, "Ach Herr, lass dein lieb' Engelein," was very fine. 'Ruh't wohl, ihr heiligen Gebeine" was deeply moving, affectingly phrased and the texture of Bach's fulsome writing was particularly well-defined. The contralto's 'Es ist vollbracht" was a soaring vocal achievement, full of the resignation found in the music.

OFF BALANCE

To give a valid Bach performance, forty skilled voices are more than sufficient; in doubling those forces yesterday, nothing was gained except sheer volume and body, thus throwing out of balance the attenuated orchstra of historic Bachnian proportions. Furthermore, a small chorus is more flexible when it comes to achieving the subtly expressive nuances which add so much to Bach performances.

This concert was played in commemoration of Arturo Toscanini's centenary. If memory serves, the Maestro presented his Bach in mits and pieces, not in the whole cloth. More opposite a tribute would have been Verdi's "Quattro Pezzi Sacri" and, possibly, Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
MAR 19 1967
New England Newsclip

Bach Passion BSO Memorial To Toscanini

The Boston Symphony wiii observe the centennial of Arturo Toscanini's birth with performances Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8:30 of Bach's St. John Passion.

Soloists will be soprano Phyllis Curtin, mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff, tenors Gene Bullard and Ernst Haefliger and bassos Thomas Paul and Norman Treigle. The Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, director, also will participate. There will be an open rehearsal Thursday evening at 7:30.

Erich Leinsdorf, who will conduct, has written an article for the program book on his personal reminiscences of Toscanini. Born Mar. 25, 1867, Toscanini died Jan. 16, 1957. He made his first Boston appearance in 1908 conducting a Metropolitan Opera production of "Aida," and returned in 1910 to direct "Tristan und Isolde."

Subsequent dates, all in Symphony Hall, were with visiting orchestras: 1921 and the La Scala Orchestra, 1936 and the New York Philharmonic, and 1939 and the NBC Symphony.

A secular performance

St. John Passion

By Harold Rogers 047

This weekend Erich Leinsdorf is observing the Easter season by conducting the Boston Symphony in Bach's Passion According to St. John, one of the great sacred masterworks of all time. In this he is being assisted by the Chorus Pro Musica, trained by Alfred Nash Patterson, their excellent director. Mr. Leinsdorf has also selected a roster of fine soloists — Ernst Haefliger, Norman Treigle, Phyllis Curtin, Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard, and Ara Berberian.

Mr. Berberian, whose rich basso added strength to the roles of Pilate and Peter, was asked at 7 o'clock yesterday morning if he would sing at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, standing in for the indisposed Thomas Paul. He accepted the challenge and discharged it with distinction.

Drama underscored

As a musical experience Mr. Leinsdorf's conception of the St. John Passion had much to commend it in yesterday's performance at Symphony Hall. It was straightforward, vigorous, neat. He underlined the drama of the Good Friday events, if not always catching the spiritual overtones.

One can praise the fine tenor singing of Mr. Haefliger as the Evangelist, the thoughtful bass statements by Mr. Treigle as Jesus, as well as the fine display of oratorio singing by Miss Curtin, Miss Wolff, and Mr. Bullard.

But taken as a whole, it was a religious work shorn of its sacred moods. The chorales, in particular, were set forth more as secular pieces.

There were no halos around them.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
MAR 24 1967
New England Newsclip

The ARTS

B.S.O. Concert At 2 Today

The Boston Symphony's concert today will begin at 2 p.m., rather than the later hour customary on Good Friday. The program will be devoted to Bach's Passion According to St. John.

Tenor Ernst Haefliger will sing the role of the Evangelist and Normal Treigle will be Jesus. The solo quartet is composed of soprano Phyllis Curtin, mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff, tenor Gene Bullard and baritone Norman Paul.

The program will be repeated Saturday at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 260,100
MAR 19 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony This Week

Orchestra to Offer 'St. John Passion'

Two Symphony Hall performances of Bach's St. John Passion will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of music director Erich Leinsdorf.

These concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening will be dedicated to the memory of Arturo Toscanini and Mr. Leinsdorf has written an article on his personal reminiscences of Toscanini for the weekend program book.

Participating as soloists in the St. John Passion will be Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, mezzo-soprano; Gene Bullard, tenor; Ernst Haefliger, tenor; Thomas Paul, bass; Norman Treigle, bass. The chorus will be the Chorus Pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, director.

The Friday-Saturday programs will be the only Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts this week, but an open rehearsal is scheduled for Thursday evening at 7:30.

69

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

A Boston Symphony Profile

Noted Tenor Is the Evangelist in Passion Concert Here

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Ernst Haefliger, the Swiss tenor who sings the Evangelist in the Boston Symphony performance of Bach's St. John Passion this week-end, is today probably the most renowned exponent of the part and of the one in the St. Matthew Passion. In such performances, the Evangelist's role is central.

Lutheran 17th and 18th century Passion settings, of which the two surviving ones by Bach are the only generally familiar examples today, make much of their effect by means of a counterpoint, verbal, spiritual, and psychological, of various "layers" of text, and of the different kinds of music that go with these layers.

In Bach's St. John Passion, the core of the text is the narrative drawn from the 18th and 19th chapters of the fourth gospel. Two distinct types of commentary are made upon the familiar story. For one there are eight arias, two preceded by contemplative recitatives, and also two choruses, the opening and penultimate numbers, which serve as architectonic pillars as well. For the other type of commentary we have the hymns or chorales, eight of them occurring at twelve points in the work, and representing the popular, familiar element in contrast to the more complex verbal and musical style of the arias and choruses.

In the two chapters of scriptural chronicle, the personae themselves speak, Judas, Peter, and Pilate, in bass; the servants who confront Peter, in high voices; the soldiers and the crowd as a four-part chorus. The rest is sung by a tenor who represents the narrating Evangelist. His music is a plastic and vivid recitative, itself one of Bach's most extraordinary achievements.

Ernst Haefliger flew to Boston from Amsterdam where he had just sung a Palm Sunday St. Matthew Passion under Eugen Jochum. He finds the St. John more difficult. The feared high tessiture of the St. Matthew recitative is, according to Haefliger, "actually easier for a tenor," whereas the St. John makes considerable demands on a robust low register that is by no means standard equipment.

The singer also pointed out the difference between the types of musical line in the two works. "In St. Matthew you start with a smooth line that is easily sung and learned," — to illustrate he sang 'Da Jesu diese Rede vollendet hatte . . .' "and you have always a good line like that. In St. John you also start that way, 'Jesus ging mit seinen Juengern,' but after that beginning the line is rarely smooth, much more often jagged, disruptive, with big leaps, difficult ones, too." This probably reflects the difference in emotional tone beween the two gospels themselves.

Haefliger sang his first Evangelist in 1943. He was then 23, and only a year earlier he had been a violinist and music education student at the Zurich Conservatory. Music education students are expected to perform on instruments other than their major ones and to sing a bit. Haefliger went to his licensing examination prepared to play the Bach Chaconne. He was, as he expected, asked to sing also; what he did with an aria from "Messiah" so impressed the jurors that one of them, the conductor Volkmar Andreae, immediately engaged him for his St. John Passion performance the following year, and arranged a scholarship for him to study with the great Austrian tenor, Julius Patzak, himself a superb Evangelist.

Since then, Haefliger has sung the Bach Passions countless times and recorded both. Characteristically, though, he took time out during the past Winter to restudy both works completely, and with a composer, Boris Blacher.

He realizes now that both in harmonic terms and in linear-melodic shape, the recitatives have much longer musical lines than he had previously supposed. A remark by one of the personae may break into the continuity of the narration, but it does not stop it. His awareness of all the points of unresolved harmonic and melodic tension, he feels, produces a more sensitive rendering of the text as well because of Bach's way of underlining musically those words whose affective connotations are particularly strong.

Haefliger believes that Bach's rhythmic proportions must be strictly observed, but that at the same time the recitative should proceed with great elasticity of tempo, again in order to help bring out the pattern of tension and release in the vocal line and in the harmonic bass.

Haefliger's teacher, Patzak, was what he calls "an abstract Evangelist," and Haefliger's own earlier performances have been in that mold. He has changed his mind about that. One big difference between Bach's Passion settings and contemporary ones like Telemann's or earlier ones like Schuetz's lies in Bach's concern for the coloration, phonic and expressive, of individual words, and in the greater intensity generally. This calls for a more dramatic approach to the narration. "I must now," says Haefliger, "sing the Evangelist as a participant who is himself deeply involved in the events he is describing and in what those events mean."

TENOR Ernst Haefliger is singing the role of the Evangelist in Bach's St. John Passion with the Boston Symphony.

Passion Concerts Review Monday

Reviews of the Boston Symphony performance of Bach's St. John Passion, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, and of the Festival Orchestra of New York performance of St. Matthew Passion, Thomas Dunn conducting, will appear in Monday's Globe.

AMERICAN (e)
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 41,650
MAR 3 1967
New England Newsclip

Miss Christy Rio

Middlebury

Miss Rio Sings With Pro Musica

MIDDLEBURY — Miss Christy Rio, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dominic Rio, Middlebury, has been accepted as a member of the Boston Pro Musica. The chorus, is 100 voices, under the direction of Alfred Nash Patterson and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will perform J. S. Bach's "The Passion According to St. John" March 24 and 25 in Symphony Hall, Boston.

Miss Rio a former voice student of Constance Wilson at the University of Connecticut, Storrs, is presently employed as assistant to the production manager at a commercial artists advertising outlet in Boston, and is continuing her vocal studies with Gertrude Tangley at her tudio in Steinert Hall.

The Pro Musica chorus has performed at Tanglewood and has as members of the musical board both Leonard Bernstein and Aaron Copeland.

Miss Rio graduated from Naugatuck High School with honors in 1962, and is a graduate of the University of Connecticut at Storrs.

She will be guest soloist at Immanuel Lutheran Church Naugatuck, Palm Sunday.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
MAR 24 1967
New England Newsclip

BSO Concert For Good Friday

The Good Friday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin at the usual starting time of 2 p. m. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a performance of Bach's St. John Passion, with Beverly Wolff, Phyllis Curtin, Gene Bullard, Ernst Haefliger, Thomas Paul and Norman Treigle as soloists.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000
MAR 16 1967
New England Newsclip

BSO IN BACH

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Bach's St. John Passion on Friday and Saturday, Mar. 24 and 25, and WGBH-FM will broadcast both performances live, direct from Symphony Hall. The Friday concert, aired in stereo, begins at 2 p.m.; Saturday evening's broadcast starts at 8:30 p.m. Joining the orchestra will be the Chorus Pro Musica and soloists Ernst Haefliger, tenor; Norman Greigle, bass; Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, alto; Gene Bullard, tenor and Thomas Paul, bass. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

St. John Passion Is Amazing Work

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

The Symphony's Good Friday service took place in the form of a performance of Bach's St. John Passion, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The orchestra was assisted by the Chorus pro Musica with Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Ernst Haefliger and Gene Bullard, tenors; and Norman Treigle and Ara Berberian, basses.

This Johannes passion, in honor of the 100th anniversary of Arturo Toscanini's birth, was anticipated by a previous performance in July at Tanglewood. The forces employed were largely the same with the exceptions of the Tanglewood Choir (students of the Berkshire Music Center) and tenor soloist Walter Carringer (Bullard in this week's concerts). Further, Thomas Paul was bass soloist and was due to repeat that role Friday; Berberian substituted on extremely short notice of Paul's indisposition.

In general the present rendition reaffirmed the strengths of the earlier one—a stable battery of soloists, a well-trained choir, an attentive orchestra and a conductor to whom phrase, as it expresses content and links each element to the entire compound, is of paramount importance. In spite of the work's formidable length and breadth of form and mood, there was not a single monotonous tone, for to produce monotony the expression must become static, which is something Leinsdorf would not allow. Each note from the orchestra and chorus had its antecedent and resultant, each section was lifted by its own melodic arch; even the pauses were expectant.

WORK AMAZING

Haefliger continues to amaze the listener with his work as the Evangelist. His virtuoso command of the role was matched only by his care to ennoble every recitative, however brief, with emotional concern. The tenor's understanding of Bach extends to the significance of the size of melodic intervals, and thus simple angularity was transformed into excitement.

Treigle's singing as Jesus was robust and dignified, carried out in measured slowness, yet not stiffly. The remaining soloists were all firm in voice—Bullard's tenor achieving a mellow warmth here and there; Berberian smoothly eloquent in "Mein teurer Heiland," harsher elsewhere; and the Misses Curtin and Wolff both secure but with slightly fussy vibratos.

The Chorus pro Musica was fine throughout—snappy in the "turba" (crowd) sequences, gentle and moving in the chorales.

Next week Leinsdorf will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 13 in D major; Gunther Schuller's Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra; Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel;" Webern's Six Pieces, Op. 6; and Stravinsky's Firebird Suite.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
MAR 19 1967
New England Newsclip

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Bach's St. John Passion (in memoriam Arturo Toscanini, March 25, 1867-Jan. 16, 1957). With soloists soprano Phyllis Curtin, mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff, tenors Gene Bullard and Ernst Haefliger, bassos Thomas Paul and Norman Treigle and the Boston Chorus pro Musica. Symphony Hall at 2. Repeated Saturday at 8:30.

SATURDAY—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. See Friday program. Symphony Hall at 8:30.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 22nd concert of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. The program consisted of J. S. Bach's Passion According to St. John, performed in honor of the 100th anniversary of Arturo Toscanini's birth. The Chorus pro Musica, assisted, as did soloists Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Ernst Haefliger and Gene Bullard, tenors, and Norman Treigle and Ara Berberian, basses.

69

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

MAR 25 1967

New England Newsclip

A Boston Symphony Profile

Noted Tenor Is the Evangelist in Passion Concert Here

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

Ernst Haefliger, the Swiss tenor who sings the Evangelist in the Boston Symphony performance of Bach's St. John Passion this week-end, is today probably the most renowned exponent of the part and of the one in the St. Matthew Passion. In such performances, the Evangelist's role is central.

Lutheran 17th and 18th century Passion settings, of which the two surviving ones by Bach are the only generally familiar examples today, make much of their effect by means of a counterpoint, verbal, spiritual, and psychological, of various "layers" of text, and of the different kinds of music that go with these layers.

In Bach's St. John Passion, the core of the text is the narrative drawn from the 18th and 19th chapters of the fourth gospel. Two distinct types of commentary are made upon the familiar story. For one there are eight arias, two preceded by contemplative recitatives, and also two choruses, the opening and penultimate numbers, which serve as architectonic pillars as well. For the other type of commentary we have the hymns or chorales, eight of them occurring at twelve points in the work, and representing the popular, familiar element in contrast to the more complex verbal and musical style of the arias and choruses.

In the two chapters of scriptural chronicle, the personae themselves speak, Judas, Peter, and Pilate, in bass; the servants who confront Peter, in high voices; the soldiers and the crowd as a four-part chorus. The rest is sung by a tenor who represents the narrating Evangelist. His music is a plastic and vivid recitative, itself one of Bach's most extraordinary achievements.

Ernst Haefliger flew to Boston from Amsterdam where he had just sung a Palm Sunday St. Matthew Passion under Eugen Jochum. He finds the St. John more difficult. The feared high tessiture of the St. Matthew recitative is, according to Haefliger, "actually easier for a tenor," whereas the St. John makes considerable demands on a robust low register that is by no means standard equipment.

The singer also pointed out the difference between the types of musical line in the two works. "In St. Matthew you start with a smooth line that is easily sung and learned," — to illustrate he sang 'Da Jesu diese Rede vollendet hatte . . .' "and you have always a good line like that. In St. John you also start that way, 'Jesus ging mit seinen Juengern,' but after that beginning the line is rarely smooth, much more often jagged, disruptive, with big leaps, difficult ones, too." This probably reflects the difference in emotional tone between the two gospels themselves.

Haefliger sang his first Evangelist in 1943. He was then 23, and only a year earlier he had been a violinist and music education student at the Zurich Conservatory. Music education students are expected to perform on instruments other than their major ones and to sing a bit. Haefliger went to his licensing examination prepared to play the Bach Chaconne. He was, as he expected, asked to sing also; what he did with an aria from "Messiah" so impressed the jurors that one of them, the conductor Volkmar Andreae, immediately engaged him for his St. John Passion performance the following year, and arranged a scholarship for him to study with the great Austrian tenor, Julius Patzak, himself a superb Evangelist.

Since then, Haefliger has sung the Bach Passions countless times and recorded both. Characteristically, though, he took time out during the past Winter to restudy both works completely, and with a composer, Boris Blacher.

He realizes now that both in harmonic terms and in linear-melodic shape, the recitatives have much longer musical lines than he had previously supposed. A remark by one of the personae may break into the continuity of the narration, but it does not stop it. His awareness of all the points of unresolved harmonic and melodic tension, he feels, produces a more sensitive rendering of the text as well because of Bach's way of underlining musically those words whose affective connotations are particularly strong.

Haefliger believes that Bach's rhythmic proportions must be strictly observed, but that at the same time the recitative should proceed with great elasticity of tempo, again in order to help bring out the pattern of tension and release in the vocal line and in the harmonic bass.

Haefliger's teacher, Patzak, was what he calls "an abstract Evangelist," and Haefliger's own earlier performances have been in that mold. He has changed his mind about that. One big difference between Bach's Passion settings and contemporary ones like Telemann's or earlier ones like Schuetz's lies in Bach's concern for the coloration, phonic and expressive, of individual words, and in the greater intensity generally. This calls for a more dramatic approach to the narration. "I must now," says Haefliger, "sing the Evangelist as a participant who is himself deeply involved in the events he is describing and in what those events mean."

TENOR Ernst Haefliger is singing the role of the Evangelist in Bach's St. John Passion with the Boston Symphony.

Passion Concerts Review Monday

Reviews of the Boston Symphony performance of Bach's St. John Passion, Erich Leinsdorf conducting and of the Festival Orchestra of New York performance of St. Matthew Passion, Thomas Dunn conducting, will appear in Monday's Globe.

AMERICAN (e)
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 41,650

MAR 3 1967

New England Newsclip

Middlebury

Miss Rio Sings With Pro Musica

Miss Christy Rio

MIDDLEBURY — Miss Christy Rio, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dominic Rio, Middlebury, has been accepted as a member of the Boston Pro Musica. The chorus is 100 voices, under the direction of Alfred Nash, Patterson and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will perform J. S. Bach's "The Passion According to St. John" March 24 and 25 in Symphony Hall, Boston.

Miss Rio a former voice student of Constance Wilson at the University of Connecticut, Storrs, is presently employed as assistant to the production manager at a commercial artists advertising outlet in Boston, and is continuing her vocal studies with Gertrude Tangley at her tudio in Steinert Hall.

The Pro Musica chorus has performed at Tanglewood and has as members of the musical board both Leonard Bernstein and Aaron Copeland.

Miss Rio graduated from Naugatuck High School with honors in 1962, and is a graduate of the University of Connecticut at Storrs.

She will be guest soloist at Immanuel Lutheran Church Naugatuck, Palm Sunday.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

MAR 24 1967

New England Newsclip

BSO Concert For Good Friday

The Good Friday concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin at the usual starting time of 2 p. m. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a performance of Bach's St. John Passion, with Beverly Wolff, Phyllis Curtin, Gene Bullard, Ernst Haefliger, Thomas Paul and Norman Treigle as soloists.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000

MAR 16 1967

New England Newsclip

BSO IN BACH

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Bach's St. John Passion on Friday and Saturday, Mar. 24 and 25, and WGBH-FM will broadcast both performances live, direct from Symphony Hall. The Friday concert, aired in stereo, begins at 2 p.m.; Saturday evening's broadcast starts at 8:30 p.m. Joining the orchestra will be the Chorus Pro Musica and soloists Ernst Haefliger, tenor; Norman Greigle, bass; Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, alto; Gene Bullard, tenor and Thomas Paul, bass. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

MAR 25 1967

New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

St. John Passion Is Amazing Work

By McLAREN HARRIS
Music Critic

The Symphony's Good Friday service took place in the form of a performance of Bach's St. John Passion, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. The orchestra was assisted by the Chorus pro Musica with Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Ernst Haefliger and Gene Bullard, tenors; and Norman Treigle and Ara Berberian, basses.

This Johannes passion, in honor of the 100th anniversary of Arturo Toscanini's birth, was anticipated by a previous performance in July at Tanglewood. The forces employed were largely the same with the exceptions of the Tanglewood Choir (students of the Berkshire Music Center) and tenor soloist Walter Carringer (Bullard in this week's concerts). Further, Thomas Paul was bass soloist and was due to repeat that role Friday; Berberian substituted on extremely short notice of Paul's indisposition.

In general the present rendition reaffirmed the strengths of the earlier one—a stable battery of soloists, a well-trained choir, an attentive orchestra and a conductor to whom phrase, as it expresses content and links each element to the entire compound, is of paramount importance. In spite of the work's formidable length and breadth of form and mood, there was not a single monotonous tone, for to produce monotony the expression must become static, which is something Leinsdorf would not allow. Each note from the orchestra and chorus had its antecedent and resultant, each section was lifted by its own melodic arch; even the pauses were expectant.

WORK AMAZING

Haefliger continues to amaze the listener with his work as the Evangelist. His virtuoso command of the role was matched only by his care to ennoble every recitative, however brief, with emotional concern. The tenor's understanding of Bach extends to the significance of the size of melodic intervals, and thus simple angularity was transformed into excitement.

Treigle's singing as Jesus was robust and dignified, carried out in measured slowness, yet not stiffly. The remaining soloists were all firm in voice—Bullard's tenor achieving a mellow warmth here and there; Berberian smoothly eloquent in "Mein teurer Heiland," harsher elsewhere; and the Misses Curtin and Wolff both secure but with slightly fussy vibratos.

The Chorus pro Musica was fine throughout—snappy in the "turba" (crowd) sequences, gentle and moving in the chorales.

Next week Leinsdorf will conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 13 in D major; Gunther Schuller's Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra; Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel;" Webern's Six Pieces, Op. 6; and Stravinsky's Firebird Suite.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 22nd concert of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. The program consisted of J. S. Bach's Passion According to St. John, performed in honor of the 100th anniversary of Arturo Toscanini's birth. The Chorus pro Musica, assisted, as did soloists Phyllis Curtin, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Ernst Haefliger and Gene Bullard, tenors, and Norman Treigle and Ara Berberian, basses.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

MAR 19 1967

New England Newsclip

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Bach's St. John Passion (in memoriam Arturo Toscanini, March 25, 1867-Jan. 16, 1957). With soloists soprano Phyllis Curtin, mezzo-soprano Beverly Wolff, tenors Gene Bullard and Ernst Haefliger, bassos Thomas Paul and Norman Treigle and the Boston Chorus pro Musica. Symphony Hall at 2. Repeated Saturday at 8:30.

SATURDAY—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. See Friday program. Symphony Hall at 8:30.

TUES. A #10 MAR. 28

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000
MAR 23 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO PLAYS BRUCKNER, MOZART

For waves of just sheer beauty, set out in eloquent contrasting frames of the classic and romantic, one would have to go a long way to surpass last week's Symphony program. The works played consisted of Mozart's Overture to "Die Entfuhrung aus dem Serail," Mozart's Piano Concerto in B flat, K. 456, with Evelyne Crochet as soloist, and Bruckner's Ninth Symphony in D minor.

The Concerto in question is a virtual rarity here, its sole previous performance at these concerts being fourteen years ago. A senseless circumstance this, for it is so marvelously an organized work, with so many wonderful things going on in it that they defy enumeration. Basically, the interplay of figuration and mood by and between piano and orchestra is in the realm of great chamber music, with a slow movement which surely must be one of the most affecting in the literature.

As she has done here previously with the orchestra, Miss Crochet demonstrated that she knows what she is about with Mozart. Her reading was smooth, ardent and intricately meshed and phased with the subtle accents of the fine-spun orchestral accompaniment. My cavil is with her tone, which was rather more spiny and brilliant than called for in this gentle, conversational work. Mr. Leinsdorf, who had led off with a crisp traversal of the Overture, was very much on top of things in enhancing and shaping the dialogue.

He has been doing one Bruckner symphony each year since coming here and the Ninth was the one he led off with in his first season. This symphony, of course, is Bruckner's final one, and though the composer never lived to complete the last movement, obviously one is not needed: the organic unity of the work from its materials is profound.

Its mood is one of solemnity rather than grace or certainly this is the way Mr. Leinsdorf sees it. The sonorities are remarkable even for Bruckner, and in this connection we were treated to some especially dark-hued and splendorous playing from the brass. Still, the interpretation had for the most part a certain ponderousness, a lack of internal energy. Then suddenly it sprang to life about half way through the adagio, whose coda, with that hanging E major chord followed by the tender resignation of the concluding bars, is not of this world.

This weekend Mr. Leinsdorf for the first time will conduct Bach's St. John Passion here. The choral group will be the Chorus Pro Musica and the soloists include Phyllis Curtin, Ernst Haefliger, Norman Treigle, Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard and Thomas Paul.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Tenth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 28, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Overture to "Die Entführung aus dem Serail"

MOZART ..... Piano Concerto in B-flat major, K. 456

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante un poco sostenuto
III. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BRUCKNER ..... Symphony No. 9, in D minor

I. Feierlich, misterioso
II. Scherzo (bewegt, lebhaft); Trio (schnell)
III. Adagio (langsam, feierlich)

SOLOIST
EVELYNE CROCHET
Miss CROCHET plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[9]

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
MAR 29 1967
New England Newsclip

The Sound of Music

Symphonic Farewell

By Peter M. Knapp

Anton Bruckner's massive Ninth Symphony is a program in itself. Last night it formed the second half of an all-Austrian program by the Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

Bruckner never completed the ninth and last of his symphonies; the fourth movement, partially sketched by the composer, remained unfinished at his death. Nor did the composer live to hear it performed, the premiere of the three large movements occurring in Vienna in 1903, seven years after Bruckner's death.

But who needs a fourth movement in a work of this scope? And could Bruckner come close to the peak of his symphonic writing in the adagio that now closes the Symphony No. 9? Truncated as it is, his d minor symphony comprises Bruckner's summing up, his "farewell to life."

Emotional Peak

Leinsdorf's performance, in the "original" version going back to the manuscript instead of the edition prepared by the Bruckner disciple Ferdinand Loewe, was a powerful and moving conception. Properly, it reached its peak of fervor in the eloquent adagio, where the lovely melodies bloomed with a nobility of statement. The great climaxes were carefully prepared and built to proportionate scale — grand rather than grandiose.

The scherzo also went exceptionally well, the bustling pizzicato introducing the dissonant, choppy main section with unusual clarity. And after a few initial moments that seemed overly self-important, the first movement settled into perspective, great Wagnerian swells of melody in a Michelangelo-sized symphonic structure stretching some 25 minutes. But it is, after all, the adagio that crowns the work and which one remembers in this stirring performance by the orchestra.

Two works by Mozart opened the program as a kind of prelude to the Bruckner: the overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and the B-flat Piano Concerto, K. 456, for which Evelyne Crochet was soloist. The overture, with its "Turkish" flavor, ranks among Mozart's most good-natured compositions, and the performance scurried along nicely, though with a bit of reserve.

Concerto Carved Up

The concerto, however, was subjected to a graceless run-through, one which degenerated as it progressed. Miss Crochet, an attractive, dark-haired woman, is a native of Paris, a student of Edwin Fischer and Rudolf Serkin, and a winner of international prizes. But she brought limited resources to her playing of the Mozart concerto.

Especially disastrous was her way of hacking up the natural flow of Mozart's music into romantically-mannered sections, spurts and starts, meaningless contrasts of dynamics, all with a flourish of arms and elbows and a monochromatic tone.

This sentimental appraoch thoroughly spoiled the beautiful g minor variations, and for all her emoting Miss Crochet remained on the surface of the music. The rondo, moreover, was beset by rhythmic sloppiness in which the orchestra participated.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
MAR 26 1967
New England Newsclip

Evelyne Crochet will be soloist in the closing program of Tuesday's Series A concerts at 8:30. With Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra she will perform Mozart's Piano Concerto, K.456. The concert will begin with Mozart's overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio," and the entire second half of the concert will be devoted to Symphony No. 9 by Bruckner.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give their final

TUES. A #10 MAR. 28

70

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000

MAR 23 1967

New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO PLAYS BRUCKNER, MOZART

For waves of just sheer beauty, set out in eloquent contrasting frames of the classic and romantic, one would have to go a long way to surpass last week's Symphony program. The works played consisted of Mozart's Overture to "Die Entfuhrung aus dem Serail," Mozart's Piano Concerto in B flat, K. 456, with Evelyne Crochet as soloist, and Bruckner's Ninth Symphony in D minor.

The Concerto in question is a virtual rarity here, its sole previous performance at these concerts being fourteen years ago. A senseless circumstance this, for it is so marvelously an organized work, with so many wonderful things going on in it that they defy enumeration. Basically, the interplay of figuration and mood by and between piano and orchestra is in the realm of great chamber music, with a slow movement which surely must be one of the most affecting in the literature.

As she has done here previously with the orchestra, Miss Crochet demonstrated that she knows what she is about with Mozart. Her reading was smooth, ardent and intricately meshed and phased with the subtle accents of the fine-spun orchestral accompaniment. My cavil is with her tone, which was rather more spiny and brilliant than called for in this gentle, conversational work. Mr. Leinsdorf, who had led off with a crisp traversal of the Overture, was very much on top of things in enhancing and shaping the dialogue.

He has been doing one Bruckner symphony each year since coming here and the Ninth was the one he led off with in his first season. This symphony, of course, is Bruckner's final one, and though the composer never lived to complete the last movement, obviously one is not needed: the organic unity of the work from its materials is profound.

Its mood is one of solemnity rather than grace or certainly this is the way Mr. Leinsdorf sees it. The sonorities are remarkable even for Bruckner, and in this connection we were treated to some especially dark-hued and splendorous playing from the brass. Still, the interpretation had for the most part a certain ponderousness, a lack of internal energy. Then suddenly it sprang to life about half way through the adagio, whose coda, with that hanging E major chord followed by the tender resignation of the concluding bars, is not of this world.

This weekend Mr. Leinsdorf for the first time will conduct Bach's St. John Passion here. The choral group will be the Chorus Pro Musica and the soloists include Phyllis Curtin, Ernst Haefliger, Norman Treigle, Beverly Wolff, Gene Bullard and Thomas Paul.

Tenth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, MARCH 28, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Overture to "Die Entführung aus dem Serail"

MOZART ..... Piano Concerto in B-flat major, K. 456

I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante un poco sostenuto
III. Allegro vivace

INTERMISSION

BRUCKNER ..... Symphony No. 9, in D minor

I. Feierlich, misterioso
II. Scherzo (bewegt, lebhaft); Trio (schnell)
III. Adagio (langsam, feierlich)

SOLOIST
EVELYNE CROCHET
Miss CROCHET plays the Steinway Piano

BALDWIN PIANO

RCA VICTOR RECORDS

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100

MAR 29 1967

New England Newsclip

The Sound of Music

Symphonic Farewell

By Peter M. Knapp

Anton Bruckner's massive Ninth Symphony is a program in itself. Last night it formed the second half of an all-Austrian program by the Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

Bruckner never completed the ninth and last of his symphonies; the fourth movement, partially sketched by the composer, remained unfinished at his death. Nor did the composer live to hear it performed, the premiere of the three large movements occurring in Vienna in 1903, seven years after Bruckner's death.

But who needs a fourth movement in a work of this scope? And could Bruckner come close to the peak of his symphonic writing in the adagio that now closes the Symphony No. 9? Truncated as it is, his d minor symphony comprises Bruckner's summing up, his "farewell to life."

Emotional Peak

Leinsdorf's performance, in the "original" version going back to the manuscript instead of the edition prepared by the Bruckner disciple Ferdinand Loewe, was a powerful and moving conception. Properly, it reached its peak of fervor in the eloquent adagio, where the lovely melodies bloomed with a nobility of statement. The great climaxes were carefully prepared and built to proportionate scale — grand rather than grandiose.

The scherzo also went exceptionally well, the bustling pizzicato introducing the dissonant, choppy main section with unusual clarity. And after a few initial moments that seemed overly self-important, the first movement settled into perspective, great Wagnerian swells of melody in a Michelangelo-sized symphonic structure stretching some 25 minutes. But it is, after all, the adagio that crowns the work and which one remembers in this stirring performance by the orchestra.

Two works by Mozart opened the program as a kind of prelude to the Bruckner: the overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and the B-flat Piano Concerto, K. 456, for which Evelyne Crochet was soloist. The overture, with its "Turkish" flavor, ranks among Mozart's most good-natured compositions, and the performance scurried along nicely, though with a bit of reserve.

Concerto Carved Up

The concerto, however, was subjected to a graceless run-through, one which degenerated as it progressed. Miss Crochet, an attractive, dark-haired woman, is a native of Paris, a student of Edwin Fischer and Rudolf Serkin, and a winner of international prizes. But she brought limited resources to her playing of the Mozart concerto.

Especially disastrous was her way of hacking up the natural flow of Mozart's music into romantically-mannered sections, spurts and starts, meaningless contrasts of dynamics, all with a flourish of arms and elbows and a monochromatic tone.

This sentimental appraoch thoroughly spoiled the beautiful g minor variations, and for all her emoting Miss Crochet remained on the surface of the music. The rondo, moreover, was beset by rhythmic sloppiness in which the orchestra participated.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100

MAR 26 1967

New England Newsclip

Evelyne Crochet will be soloist in the closing program of Tuesday's Series A concerts at 8:30. With Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra she will perform Mozart's Piano Concerto, K.456. The concert will begin with Mozart's overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio," and the entire second half of the concert will be devoted to Symphony No. 9 by Bruckner.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give their final

71

FRI + SAT #23 MAR. 31 + APR. 1

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750

APR 1 1967

New England Newsclip

Premières at Symphony

Inventive Diptych

041

By Harold Rogers

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Erich Leinsdorf is conducting a varied concert at Symphony Hall this weekend—lightened, it would seem, for the feeling of spring in the air. It's not a pops program (it could hardly be with Webern's Six Pieces on it) but it's a popular program, pleasant to listen to, at times with a challenge.

It includes two premières for these concerts—a winsome little symphony by Haydn, No. 13 in the bright key of D major, and Gunther Schuller's Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra. Then there are Richard Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, the Webern distillations, and the suite from Stravinsky's "L'Oiseau de feu."

For the Haydn Mr. Leinsdorf conducted from the harpsichord, thus keeping himself busy in the 18th-century role of conductor-cembalist. No sound issued from the instrument, at least to my ears; it was quite as if he were striking a dead keyboard. Yet it's a charming stunt, and the players responded with more verve than usual when playing Haydn.

Exciting sounds

The Schuller Diptich was originally composed for band in 1964; its performance by the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon was the première of its version for orchestra. Mr. Leinsdorf deployed the brass quintet in a semicircle down stage — Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin, trumpets; James Stagliano, horn; William Gibson, trombone; and Chester Schmitz, tuba.

It is a marvelously inventive work, filled with neo-impressionistic timbres of shimmering harmonies. Mr. Schuller uses sound excitingly in lambent dissonances and expostulatory outbursts. The quintet does not function as a concertino; it sometimes emerges as an entity, though its main role is to add color to the richness of the general fabric.

Classical atonality

In the second part the rhythm takes on momentum as nervous and staccato figures appear, increasing the tension. It builds to a wild and giddy climax, after which there is a falling away to earlier moods—the muted instruments making underwater sounds. Then lo and behold, a screaming eruption, and all is done.

Mr. Schuller came on stage to accept the warm applause.

Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, now belong to the classical school of atonal expressionism; and they are indeed becoming so traditional to ears acquainted with contemporary idioms that some listeners must have to ask themselves if the pieces are truly atonal. They are musical poems of gossamer loveliness, and Mr. Leinsdorf played them eloquently.

While his way with "Til" was a little wanting in whimsicality, it was nonetheless bold and straightforward in a jaunty reading. His handling of "The Firebird" also came forth in primary colors, building to a stirring climax as the final sweeping theme gathers power through at least 11 restatements.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Twenty-third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 31, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 1, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN ..... Symphony in D major, No. 13

I. Allegro molto
II. Adagio cantabile
III. Minuet
IV. Finale: Allegro molto

(First performance at these concerts)

SCHULLER ..... Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra

ARMANDO GHITALLA, Trumpet — ROGER VOISIN, Trumpet
JAMES STAGLIANO, Horn — WILLIAM GIBSON, Trombone
CHESTER SCHMITZ, Tuba

(First performance in this version)

STRAUSS ..... *Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner—in Rondo Form, Op. 28

INTERMISSION

WEBERN ..... Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6

I. Langsam (Slowly)
II. Bewegt (With motion)
III. Mässig (Moderately)
IV. Sehr mässig (Very moderately)
V. Sehr langsam (Very slowly)
VI. Langsam (Slowly)

STRAVINSKY ..... *Suite from the Ballet, "L'Oiseau de feu"

Introduction: Jardin enchanté de Katschei et danse de l'oiseau de feu
Supplications de l'oiseau de feu
Jeu de princesses avec les pommes d'or
Ronde des princesses
Danse infernale de tous les sujets de Katschei
Berceuse
Finale

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1415]

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000

APR 6 1967

New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: AND NOW WEBERN

Anton Webern, it is said, once assured a friend that in fifty years the public would be whistling his tunes. Webern's prescience has turned out to be quite a bit wide of the mark, but the enormity of his influence upon a generation of serial composers cannot be overstated. The number of them whose technique derives directly from him is legion. We have been hearing such compositions every three weeks or so in Symphony Hall for years.

The most germinal single composition of Webern's limited output is the Six Pieces. This ten-minute composition, composed in 1913, must stand beside Monteverdi's "Poppea," Beethoven's Ninth symphony or Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" in its impact on subsequent musical development. Yet, astonishing to say, its only performance in the original version here was under Mr. Leinsdorf last weekend (Eleazar de Carvalho conducted the 1928 version several years ago). To hear it for the first time with knowledge of its estate in the musical order of things could be, of course, no other than a reverential occasion. Yet, questions arise as to how the work stands on its own merits: Like a great archetype to whose shoulders the imitators don't quite reach? A little tame, even cliche ridden? What would one's views be if he were unaware of the identity of its creator?

I think; to answer all three questions in a paragraph, that a listener hearing the Six Pieces unindentified would probably not be especially aware of the presence of towering genius. He might comprehend some of the quality of delicacy, the poignancy of the fragmentary melodies, some of the subtlety of the pointillistic scoring, and he would feel the usual restlessness that attacks upon trying to follow anything so compressed and totally uncentered. He would also appreciate that exploitation of orchestral resource has travelled a long way beyond the work — there were bars in Gunther Schuller's Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra, a Boston premiere on the same program, which proved that — and he would ponder whether repeated hearings would confer any more understanding and absorption. Anent the latter, I inquired of an orchestra player particularly well seasoned in the modern idiom, who replied that after two and a half hours of rehearsal acquaintance his answer was no.

Still, its rendition was an occasion I for one had been awaiting a long long time, and I would not have wanted under any circumstances to have missed it.

Leading off the program was the first performance here of Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 13. This, it would seem, is a real rarity, but that is not to say that the music is unworthy. Like all Haydn symphonies, the Number 13 is joyous, melodic, witty and very sturdily constructed indeed. In most places it portends the breadth and inventiveness of the Haydn to come, and only in the occasional abrupt sawings off of a development or in some recurring squareness of melody does it betray the Mannheim antecedents that it is so plainly sloughing off. The slow movement is a particular charmer, the equivalent of a slow movement of a cello concerto with orchestral accompaniment. Beautifully rendered, by the way, by Mr. Eskin. Mr. Leinsdorf, conducting from a harpsichord, employed a vastly reduced orchestra, on which his hand lay a good deal heavier than it need have.

Also present in the proceedings were Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and the Stravinsky "Firebird Suite." They were written eighteen years and three years, respectively, before the Six Pieces, but the figures might as well have been a hundred.

The orchestra is away for two weeks on its annual mid-West and Eastern Seaboard tour. On its return on the weekend of the twenty-first the season will end with Smetana's "The Moldau," Nielsen's Flute Concerto, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist, and Schubert's C major Symphony No. 9. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct.

71

FRI + SAT #23 MAR. 31 + APR. 1

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750

APR 1 1967 New England Newsclip

Premières at Symphony

Inventive Diptych

041 By Harold Rogers

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Erich Leinsdorf is conducting a varied concert at Symphony Hall this weekend—lightened, it would seem, for the feeling of spring in the air. It's not a pops program (it could hardly be with Webern's Six Pieces on it) but it's a popular program, pleasant to listen to, at times with a challenge.

It includes two premières for these concerts—a winsome little symphony by Haydn, No. 13 in the bright key of D major, and Gunther Schuller's Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra. Then there are Richard Strauss's "Til Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, the Webern distillations, and the suite from Stravinsky's "L'Oiseau de feu."

For the Haydn Mr. Leinsdorf conducted from the harpsichord, thus keeping himself busy in the 18th-century role of conductor-cembalist. No sound issued from the instrument, at least to my ears; it was quite as if he were striking a dead keyboard. Yet it's a charming stunt, and the players responded with more verve than usual when playing Haydn.

Exciting sounds

The Schuller Diptich was originally composed for band in 1964; its performance by the Boston Symphony yesterday afternoon was the première of its version for orchestra. Mr. Leinsdorf deployed the brass quintet in a semicircle down stage — Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin, trumpets; James Stagliano, horn; William Gibson, trombone; and Chester Schmitz, tuba.

It is a marvelously inventive work, filled with neo-impressionistic timbres of shimmering harmonies. Mr. Schuller uses sound excitingly in lambent dissonances and expostulatory outbursts. The quintet does not function as a concertino; it sometimes emerges as an entity, though its main role is to add color to the richness of the general fabric.

Classical atonality

In the second part the rhythm takes on momentum as nervous and staccato figures appear, increasing the tension. It builds to a wild and giddy climax, after which there is a falling away to earlier moods—the muted instruments making underwater sounds. Then lo and behold, a screaming eruption, and all is done.

Mr. Schuller came on stage to accept the warm applause.

Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, now belong to the classical school of atonal expressionism; and they are indeed becoming so traditional to ears acquainted with contemporary idioms that some listeners must have to ask themselves if the pieces are truly atonal. They are musical poems of gossamer loveliness, and Mr. Leinsdorf played them eloquently.

While his way with "Til" was a little wanting in whimsicality, it was nonetheless bold and straightforward in a jaunty reading. His handling of "The Firebird" also came forth in primary colors, building to a stirring climax as the final sweeping theme gathers power through at least 11 restatements.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Twenty-third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 31, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 1, at 8:30 o'clock

HAYDN ..... Symphony in D major, No. 13
I. Allegro molto
II. Adagio cantabile
III. Minuet
IV. Finale: Allegro molto
(First performance at these concerts)

SCHULLER ..... Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra
ARMANDO GHITALLA, Trumpet — ROGER VOISIN, Trumpet
JAMES STAGLIANO, Horn — WILLIAM GIBSON, Trombone
CHESTER SCHMITZ, Tuba
(First performance in this version)

STRAUSS ..... *Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner—in Rondo Form, Op. 28

INTERMISSION

WEBERN ..... Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6
I. Langsam (Slowly)
II. Bewegt (With motion)
III. Mässig (Moderately)
IV. Sehr mässig (Very moderately)
V. Sehr langsam (Very slowly)
VI. Langsam (Slowly)

STRAVINSKY ..... *Suite from the Ballet, "L'Oiseau de feu"
Introduction: Jardin enchanté de Katschei et danse de l'oiseau de feu
Supplications de l'oiseau de feu
Jeu de princesses avec les pommes d'or
Ronde des princesses
Danse infernale de tous les sujets de Katschei
Berceuse
Finale

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1415]

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000

APR 6 1967 New England Newsclip

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: AND NOW WEBERN

Anton Webern, it is said, once assured a friend that in fifty years the public would be whistling his tunes. Webern's prescience has turned out to be quite a bit wide of the mark, but the enormity of his influence upon a generation of serial composers cannot be overstated. The number of them whose technique derives directly from him is legion; we have been hearing such compositions every three weeks or so in Symphony Hall for years.

The most germinal single composition of Webern's limited output is the Six Pieces. This ten-minute composition, composed in 1913, must stand beside Monteverdi's "Poppea," Beethoven's Ninth symphony or Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" in its impact on subsequent musical development. Yet, astonishing to say, its only performance in the original version here was under Mr. Leinsdorf last weekend (Eleazar de Carvalho conducted the 1928 version several years ago). To hear it for the first time with knowledge of its estate in the musical order of things could be, of course, no other than a reverential occasion. Yet, questions arise as to how the work stands on its own merits: Like a great archetype to whose shoulders the imitators don't quite reach? A little tame, even cliche ridden? What would one's views be if he were unaware of the identity of its creator?

I think; to answer all three questions in a paragraph, that a listener hearing the Six Pieces unindentified would probably not be especially aware of the presence of towering genius. He might comprehend some of the quality of delicacy, the poignancy of the fragmentary melodies, some of the subtlety of the pointillistic scoring, and he would feel the usual restlessness that attacks upon trying to follow anything so compressed and totally uncentered. He would also appreciate that exploitation of orchestral resource has travelled a long way beyond the work — there were bars in Gunther Schuller's Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra, a Boston premiere on the same program, which proved that — and he would ponder whether repeated hearings would confer any more understanding and absorption. Anent the latter, I inquired of an orchestra player particularly well seasoned in the modern idiom, who replied that after two and a half hours of rehearsal acquaintance his answer was no.

Still, its rendition was an occasion I for one had been awaiting a long long time, and I would not have wanted under any circumstances to have missed it.

Leading off the program was the first performance here of Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 13. This, it would seem, is a real rarity, but that is not to say that the music is unworthy. Like all Haydn symphonies, the Number 13 is joyous, melodic, witty and very sturdily constructed indeed. In most places it portends the breadth and inventiveness of the Haydn to come, and only in the occasional abrupt sawings off of a development or in some recurring squareness of melody does it betray the Mannheim antecedents that it is so plainly sloughing off. The slow movement is a particular charmer, the equivalent of a slow movement of a cello concerto with orchestral accompaniment. Beautifully rendered, by the way, by Mr. Eskin. Mr. Leinsdorf, conducting from a harpsichord, employed a vastly reduced orchestra, on which his hand lay a good deal heavier than it need have.

Also present in the proceedings were Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and the Stravinsky "Firebird Suite." They were written eighteen years and three years, respectively, before the Six Pieces, but the figures might as well have been a hundred.

The orchestra is away for two weeks on its annual mid-West and Eastern Seaboard tour. On its return on the weekend of the twenty-first the season will end with Smetana's "The Moldau," Nielsen's Flute Concerto, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist, and Schubert's C major Symphony No. 9. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

APR 1 1967 New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Variety Marks Program List

By McLAREN HARRIS

The music on this week's Symphony program is reminiscent of the oft-quoted phrase about New England weather: if you don't like it, wait a minute.

For confirmed antiquarians there was Haydn, for the more general conservatives add Strauss and Stravinsky, for the up-to-date add again Webern and Schuller. Of course, such divisions of one's preferences ore dangerous; all of them are quite excellent.

Between works by the last two composers named, Gunther Schuller's Diptych is the only modern one in terms of date. It was composed in 1964 for brass quintet and band, subsequently rescored for quintet and orchestra; this was the first performance of the new version. The first movement sets brief brass interjections against an expansive orchestral fabric, the second is more actively antiphonal, the lively exchanges culminating in a climax and coda with jazz inferences, interrupted once by return of first-movement material.

Schuller's orchestration is expert, both in the delineation and combination of timbres, and his counterpoint is nearly as tightly-knit as Webern's, and reveals a highly-developed rhythmic sense. Not having heard the first version, I can only guess that the jazz elements may be sharper with the presence of saxophones.

Mr. Leinsdorf chose the original form of Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, written in 1909 (that's 58 years old!). It differs from the 1928 version in its expanded wind sections. The short pieces are perfect demonstrations of Klangfarbenmelodien — richly coloristic lines forming substances which move through the tonal spectrum as a leaf changes hue.

The Six Pieces are examples of extreme concentration. (About writing, someone remarked, "Writing is easy. All you do is sit in front of a typewriter until little drops of blood appear on your forehead." If the same is true of composition, one wonders how Webern survived each composition without bleeding to death.)

The season's final pair of Symphony concerts, at which Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct Smetana's "The Moldau," Carl Nielsin's Flute Concerto (with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist) and Schubert's "posthumous" Symphony In C major, will be given on April 21 and 22.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, presented the 23rd concert of the 39th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin, trumpets; James Stagliano, horn; William Gibson, trombone; and Chester Schmitz, tuba, were soloists for the Schuller work.

Symphony In D major, No. 13	Haydn
Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra	Schuller
Till Eulenspiegel	Strauss
Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6	Webern
Suite from "The Firebird"	Stravinsky

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

APR 1 1967 New England Newsclip

Schuller Diptych Premiered by BSO

(By ROLFE BOSWELL) — Five outstanding orchestral offerings were presented in yesterday afternoon's well-chosen Boston Symphony program, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. Leading off was a fine ~~early Hayden~~ symphony in its BSO performance, followed by the world premiere of a meritorious masterwork by a contemporary American composer; then came a rollicking, rambunctious tone-poem by Richard Strauss and, after the interval, a pioneering twelve-tone textbook treatise, also, last, but not least, music from the Diaghilev ballet which set Igor Stravinsky on the road to royalties and riches.

Igor Stravinsky

Haydn's charming 13th symphony (in D) has been nicknamed "Jupiter" because its final anticipates the final of Mozart's last symphony. It is an energetic, confident and assertive work, foreshadowing Hayden's later symphony maturity. Dr. Leinsdorf conducted a performance as zesty as it was sive harpsichord, whose snap, painstaking from an unobtrucrackle and pop was inaudible.

Gunther Schuller, like Sir Edward Elgar, is an extraordinarily gifted autodidact. Only two other American composers — George Gershwin and Aaron Copland — have been able to graft jazz onto accepted symphonic format, in the former instance, consonance; in the latter, mild dissonance. Dr. Schuller has taken the rather inflexible twelvetone technique and made it breathe with injected jazz rhythms and semi-improvised passages.

In his Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra, premiered yesterday, he has skillfully revised his original score for five brasses and military band, first offered just two years ago, providin ga fascinating skein of original sonorities. Every note of his well-indited score is stamped by talented individuality. There is tension and delicacy, drama and poetry, far in excess of anything expected from the somewhat incongruous combination of brasses and stringed instruments. Dr. Schuller well merits the presidency of the New England Conservatory which he assumes in the Autumn.

Our Bostonians manifested superb orchestral virtuosity in their thrilling performance of Richard Strauss's Till Eulenspiegel (Op 28). Dr. Leinsdorf's direction was marked by Straussian panache and especial warmth and spontaeity in the more romanticized episodes. He painted a piquant, humorous picture of the unregenerate rapscallion. There also was a thoroughly Viennese, gemuetlich and avuncular carressing of the Coda after Till had met his come-uppance on the grisley gibbet.

After the interval came Anton von Webern's Six Pieces for original 1909 scoring for a Large Orchestra (Op 6) in its gargantuan band, including 18 woodwinds, 15 brasses and a percussion battery which out-Mahlers Strauss with its assorted kitchen utensials. Yet, strange to say, amid all this musical stippling a la Debussey, most of the musicians appeared to be noodling and doodling much of the time.

Dr. Leinsdorf wisely used the 145 9revised version of the "Firebird" suite. Perhaps he did not elicit the last measure of sensuousness from the score as Leopold Stokowski does and the composer himself doesn't.

The shadow of his mentor, Nikolai Rimski-Korsakov, lies heavily on Stravinsky's "Firebird" (L'Oiseau de Feu) suite, which concluded yesterday's fine concert.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

APR 1 1967 New England Newsclip

Symphony Concert Ebbs, Flows

By MICHAEL STEINBERG
Globe Critic

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Haydn's Symphony No. 13 in D. "Diptych" for Brass Quintet and Orchestra by Gunther Schuller (with Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin, trumpets, James Stagliano, horn, William Gibson, trombone, and Chester Schmitz, tuba), Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, and Suite from Stravinsky's ballet, "Firebird." Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall.

Opus 6, written in 1909, is the one work of Webern's have become established as a repertory piece. The shapeliness of its melodies, the supple rhythmic flow, the exquisite textures, its stance of reserve, make it a beautiful and affecting thing to hear.

The actual sound surface of the work is especially entrancing in the original orchestration which Erich Leinsdorf for the most part used. Webern's original plan calls for a very large orchestra, not as extravagance, but because blocks of uniform color, as in a trumpet melody accompanied by three more trumpets, was often an important part of the composition design. The 1928 revision for more "normal" orchestra, which is the one used in most performances including the Boston Symphony, inevitably sacrifice this timbral unity because more conventional color mixtures have to be introduced.

Actually, the performance on Friday also introduced some compromises in that only 4 trumpets and 4 trombones were used instead of the 6 of each required by the original score, and I do regret the loss of the marvelous sounding chords for 6 trombones at the beginning of the 5th piece. The Webern goes on the orchestra's forthcoming tour and one understands the management's hesitation at carrying two trombonists to play five notes each in one piece.

But while it is one thing for a conductor to make a practical amendment of that sort, it is quite another for the program notes to misrepresent the situation to the audience by a flat statement that the "original version . . . calls for . . . 4 trumpets, 4 trombones." The notes on the Webern were bad in other respects also, misleading readers with the statement that "the standard orchestra is called for" (brasses in half dozens, alto flute, two bass clarinets, etc., not being "standard" by any reasonable definition); misleading them further by saying that Webern, in his melodies, is "addicted to wide skips," which is true of his later music, but strikingly untrue about this work; or in perpetrating a historical obfuscation that represents Webern as a man who pursued an activity that "Schoenberg had implanted but failed to carry through consistently."

The performance of the music fell far short of the ideal, particularly with respect to rhythm and pacing.

It was a pleasure to hear Haydn's early D major Symphony, No. 13 The scoring, with its full quartet of horns, is delightful, and it is rich in lively ideas. The Adagio, an expressive movement for cello solo, and the finale, which treats the do-re-fa-mi motive most famously used in Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony, are especially fine.

The performance, except for the excessively slow and placid Adagio, was enjoyable. Leinsdorf, as is his custom with such pieces, conducted seated at a harpsichord, which he played for the first time in the 68th measure, and rarely, erratically, and mostly inaudibly thereafter. If he thinks the work needs a harpsichord continuo, he should either play one or have someone else do it; if he does not really think it necessary, which is what the sound of the performance suggested, then he should leave it alone and stand up and conduct in the ordinary way.

And were those little recompositional touches in the Menuet and the finale necessary or appropriate?

SLIGHTLY JAZZY

It may be that Schuller's "Diptych" suffered from an unsympathetic, or at least unidiomatic, performance. Its two brief and uneventful sections struck me as exceedingly uncommitted examples of the new academicism, slightly jazzy variety. The work, originally for quintet with band, was heard for the first time in its orchestral rescoring at this concert. The composer took two bows from the stage and was last seen carrying James Stagliano's horn.

The program notes also failed in their obligation to state which version of the "Firebird" Suite was being played, the 1945 edition, which was one used, being both in content and scoring rather different from the more familiar 1919 score. Both the Stravinsky and Strauss showpieces received unusually unconcentrated performances.

73

TUES. - CAMBRIDGE #6 APR. 18 THURS. A #6 APR 20

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100

APR 16 1967

New England Newsclip

Finale of Symphony Season

Orchestra Returns For Four Concerts

Following a two-week tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra returns to Symphony Hall for four concerts this week. Music director Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the four programs concluding the orchestra's 86th winter season.

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will be soloist at the concerts on Tuesday and Thursday in Brahms' Violin Concerto. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

For the closing pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the music director has invited principal flute Doriot Anthony Dwyer to play Nielson's Flute Concerto. These concerts will begin with The Moldau by Smetana and conclude with Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

THIS EVENING E. Power Biggs, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Wilson conducting, will give the final program of the Symphony Hall Organ Concert series.

Wednesday evening the Boston Symphony String Quartet will be heard at Jordan Hall, Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins, Burton Fine, viola; and Jules Eskin, cello, will perform quartets by Haydn, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn. Tickets for the concert are available at the Jordan Hall box office.

Also on Wednesday evening at Symphony Hall Richard Bouchett, winner of the 1966 Young Artists Competition sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists, will give a recital at 8:30.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

APR 16 1967

New England Newsclip

—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, "As Quiet As . . . " by Michael Colgrass, and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist, Symphony Hall at 8:30. Repeated Thursday at 8:30.

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Moldau by Smetana, Nielsen's Flute Concerto, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist, and Schubert's Symphony No. 9. Symphony Hall at 2. Program repeated Saturday at 8:30.

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 18, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 36

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto

COLGRASS . . . . . As Quiet As

A Leaf Turning Colors
An Uninhabited Creek
An Ant Walking
Children Sleeping
Time Passing
A Soft Rainfall
The First Star Coming Out
(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Sixth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 20, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 36

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto

COLGRASS . . . . . As Quiet As

A Leaf Turning Colors
An Uninhabited Creek
An Ant Walking
Children Sleeping
Time Passing
A Soft Rainfall
The First Star Coming Out
(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS . . . . . Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

73

TUES. - CAMBRIDGE #6 APR. 18 THURS. A #6 APR 20

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100

APR 16 1967 New England Newsclip

Finale of Symphony Season

Orchestra Returns For Four Concerts

Following a two-week tour, the Boston Symphony Orchestra returns to Symphony Hall for four concerts this week. Music director Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the four programs concluding the orchestra's 86th winter season.

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, will be soloist at the concerts on Tuesday and Thursday in Brahms' Violin Concerto. Mr. Leinsdorf will also conduct Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

For the closing pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the music director has invited principal flute Doriot Anthony Dwyer to play Nielson's Flute Concerto. These concerts will begin with The Moldau by Smetana and conclude with Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

THIS EVENING E. Power Biggs, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Wilson conducting, will give the final program of the Symphony Hall Organ Concert series.

Wednesday evening the Boston Symphony String Quartet will be heard at Jordan Hall, Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins, Burton Fine, viola; and Jules Eskin, cello, will perform quartets by Haydn, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn. Tickets for the concert are available at the Jordan Hall box office.

Also on Wednesday evening at Symphony Hall Richard Bouchett, winner of the 1966 Young Artists' Competition sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists, will give a recital at 8:30.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

APR 16 1967 New England Newsclip

—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, "As Quiet As . . ." by Michael Colgrass, and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist. Symphony Hall at 8:30. Repeated Thursday at 8:30.

FRIDAY—Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Moldau by Smetana, Nielsen's Flute Concerto, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist, and Schubert's Symphony No. 9. Symphony Hall at 2. Program repeated Saturday at 8:30.

Sixth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 18, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 36

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto

COLGRASS ..... As Quiet As

A Leaf Turning Colors
An Uninhabited Creek
An Ant Walking
Children Sleeping
Time Passing
A Soft Rainfall
The First Star Coming Out

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ..... Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Sixth Program

THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 20, at 8:30 o'clock

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 2, in D major, Op. 36

I. Adagio molto; Allegro con brio
II. Larghetto
III. Scherzo: Allegro
IV. Allegro molto

COLGRASS ..... As Quiet As

A Leaf Turning Colors
An Uninhabited Creek
An Ant Walking
Children Sleeping
Time Passing
A Soft Rainfall
The First Star Coming Out

(First performance in this series)

INTERMISSION

BRAHMS ..... Violin Concerto in D major, Op. 77

I. Allegro non troppo
II. Adagio
III. Allegro giocoso, ma non troppo vivace

SOLOIST
JOSEPH SILVERSTEIN

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

FRI. + SAT. #24 APR. 21 + 22

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
APR 22 1967
New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Leinsdorf Shows Sure Hand In Conducting of Schubert

By McLAREN HARRIS

One thing for which Erich Leinsdorf has always deserved credit is his insistence upon clear orchestral textures wherever possible and the preservation of inner detail along with outer highlights.

Mr. Leinsdorf's latest trial came in the form of Schubert's 9th Symphony, the "Great" C major, on the closing program of the Symphony's 86th season Friday afternoon. Schubert's grandest symphonic work has fallen prey to many eccentric, often distasteful interpretations through the years, usually having to do with individual preferences of tempo. Either the introduction was hit at practically full stride, which made a seeming retard necessary at the Allegro if the entire movement was not to sound ridiculous; or pauses at the first movement's conclusion went unheeded, making the final bars stumble over each other; or the Finale was taken at such a relaxed pace that the opening fanfare virtually resembled "Taps."

Not Guilty

Mr. Leinsdorf was guilty of none of these. There is another troublesome point about the Schubert, however, related to the inclusion of three trombones in the orchestration. They, along with pairs of horns and trumpets, can create havoc with the composer's system of interweaving countermelodies and woodwind color in general, if not held in judicious check.

The conductor did not fail us. Only in the opening movement, toward the end, did I have any fear of overpowering brass; and during the finale the trombones, horns and trumpets were balanced to a degree that brought out an additional tonal dimension. The inner movements displayed the customary transparence—such a valuable characteristic which I'm afraid I may begin to take for granted. The total result in any case, was ingratiating.

Rhapsodic Spirit

Doriot Anthony Dwyer was soloist for Carl Nielsen's Flute Concerto, performed for the first time at these concerts. In many ways it is typical of the composer: the two movements, while related by thematic elements, are essentially free-formed in their own right. The orchestral passages are energetic, sometimes forceful, and the flute wends its independent, melodic way, occasionally slipping into periods of gently, lyric euphoria. Mrs. Dwyer captured the rhapsodic spirit with her quick adjustment to divergent moods, and her agile fingers took care of the flashing cadenzas. As the renascence of Nielsen's music continues, this work should take up a solid position in the rather diminutive flute literature.

The orchestra opened with Smetana's "The Moldau," performing it pleasantly and animatingly—a breath of spring, if you will, and for winter-weary Boston it came none too early.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, performed the 24th program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, was soloist for the Nielsen concerto.

"The Moldau" — Smetana
Concerto for Flute and Orchestra — Nielsen
Symphony in C major (Posthumous) — Schubert

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
APR 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Final weekend at Symphony

By Roland Nadeau

Spring has been a long time in coming this year. It seemed about to come yesterday as the Friday afternoon series of Boston Symphony concerts came to a close.

But neither the music nor its performance sparkled very much, except perhaps the solo playing of the orchestra's principal flute, Doriot Anthony Dwyer. The vehicle for her sensitive, polished playing was the Concerto for Flute and Orchestra by Danish composer Carl Nielsen.

The concerto is slight and entertaining, thankfully not overly pastoral or vaporous as is often true in music for the flute. Apparently Nielsen had gotten Debussy's "Faune" thoroughly out of his head by the time he wrote this piece in 1926.

In fact, there are many cheeringly bouncy rhythmic moments in this piece. And the composer's essentially linear style soon cuts short any musical gushing that often seems about to emerge.

A rather spare orchestration, kid-gloved by her considerate gentlemen colleagues and by conductor Erich Leinsdorf provided a sensitive and discriminating background for Miss Dwyer.

As for the other items on the program, Smetana's "The Moldau" and Schubert's Symphony in C Major, neither is much of a rouser. Everybody knows that the Schubert tends to get stuck in its repetitions; that the times of superb glow and wonder barely compensate for the long arid stretches.

In this piece, given a scintillating, propulsive reading, it satisfies almost completely. But with many of the players audibly tired—especially the upper strings, and the woodwinds — and with Mr. Leinsdorf sometimes holding things back to a near standstill, Schubert nearly lost out, along with the audience. For example, the Scherzo was simply not fast enough. It didn't scurry. There was little zest. No zing whatsoever.

The finale did catch fire, however. We heard true musical motion, not especially because the tempo was very fast, but because climaxes really crested, and phrases bobbed and danced. This was exciting. A little late in the day perhaps, but worth the waiting.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
APR 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Brilliant Concert Ends BSO Series

The quality and richness of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its 24th and final afternoon concert was a tribute to the brilliance of the conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, and his 104 tireless musicians.

Following a strenuous two-week tour that began at Carnegie Hall and included their last Tuesday, the BSO gave a splendid concert concluding its 86th season.

The concert, which will be repeated tonight at Symphony Hall, was an exciting and in-None of the orchestra showed a trace of fattigue or anticipation over the impending summer vacation from concert tours.

The performance consisted of three compositions. The first—a combination of great clarity and richness of tone—was the symphonic poem by the CZechoslovakian composer Smetana. The composition "Moldau" is a musical cruise on a river, and Maestro Leinsdorf guided the enthralled audience past ancient castles and picturesque sceniery, tactfully rolling sounds to effect the movement of the river.

FLUTIST SHINES

As superb as this performance was, it was quickly overshadowed by Mrs. Dorio Anthony Dwyer, the BSO's sole member of the distaff set and its principal flutist.

It was a concerto by the Danish composer Carl August Nielsen that brought the genius of Mrs. Dwyer to the fore. Accompanied majestically by a reduced-sized orchestra, being careful not to drown out the sweet flute, she rose to the occasion.

The piece showed why Nielsen had exploited the flute in all its registers, in his composition. It was an interesting addition to the revival now in progress of the works of the great Danish composer (1865-1931).

Leinsdorf has in the past conducted Nielsen's 6th Symphony, a rather capricious piece, whereas, the flute concerto was devoid of eccentricity sometimes characteristic of the composer. It was sheerly beautiful music.

There was a remarkable passage in the concerto calling for the curious combination of flute and bass trombone. The result was extraordinary and the trombone part was given a masterful performance by Josef Orosz.

PIECE BY SHUBERT

The pleasant afternoon came to a close with the Great C Major Symphony of Shubert. It was one of the greatest performances that veteran symphony-goers had ever heard. It had a particular quality that only a native Viennese is able to give to the music of Shubert. Vienna is Maestro Leinsdorf's native land.

Following tonight's performance, the BSO disbands for the summer. But many of the members, with the exception of the principal players, will join Arthur Fiedler for his Boston Pops series.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
APR 16 1967
New England

Symphony Concludes This Week

The Boston Symphony ends its Winter season this week with four concerts. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The program Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8:30 will feature Nielsen's Flute Concerto. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flute, will be soloist. The concerts will open with the Moldau by Smetana and conclude with Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

On Tuesday and Thursday evenings, the orchestra will be heard in Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, "As Quiet As..." by Michcael Colgrass, and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Twenty-fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 21, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 22, at 8:30 o'clock

SMETANA ..... "The Moldau" ("Vltava"), Symphonic Poem

NIELSEN ..... Concerto for Flute and Orchestra
I. Allegro moderato
II. Allegretto; Poco adagio; Tempo di marcia
(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT ..... *Symphony in C major (Posthumous)
I. Andante; Allegro ma non troppo
II. Andante con moto
III. Scherzo
IV. Finale

SOLOIST
DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

BALDWIN PIANO • *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1479]

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
APR 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Doriot Dwyer's Flute Bright in BSO Finale

The final concert of the Boston Symphony's 86th season was given in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, and finishing his fifth season, and with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist.

Mrs. Dwyer, the Symphony's principal flute since 1952, played Carl Nielsen's Concerto, composed in 1926. It is a generally light-hearted, certainly light-weight, not highly concentrated, product of the Danish composer's inventive and amusingly quirky mind. It is also an effective virtuoso piece, with orchestration that is not merely sympathetic to the solo, but quite ingenious as well.

The playing of the solo was brilliant and musically apropos in every way, and Mrs. Dwyer, looking very pretty in a sleeveless variant of Wieland Wagner's gold Lohengrin costume, was given a demonstrative good-will hand when she appeared on stage, and warmly applauded afterwards.

Much of the orchestral part of Nielsen's Concerto is chamber-musical, and it asks for more highly characterized solo playing than it mostly got in work that was dutiful rather than convinced.

The concert began with Smetana's "Moldau." It ended with Schubert's great C major Symphony, most interestingly thought out and given, in fact, an excellent performance, though played energetically more than finely.

TRAVELER (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 146,300
APR 19 1967
New England Newsclip

MORE SIGNS OF SPRING: The Boston Symphony concludes its 86th winter season this week. The closing pair of concerts will be Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

FRI. + SAT. #24 APR. 21 + 22

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
APR 22 1967
New England Newsclip

SYMPHONY

Leinsdorf Shows Sure Hand In Conducting of Schubert

By McLAREN HARRIS

One thing for which Erich Leinsdorf has always deserved credit is his insistence upon clear orchestral textures wherever possible and the preservation of inner detail along with outer highlights.

Mr. Leinsdorf's latest trial came in the form of Schubert's 9th Symphony, the "Great" C major, on the closing program of the Symphony's 86th season Friday afternoon. Schubert's grandest symphonic work has fallen prey to many eccentric, often distasteful interpretations through the years, usually having to do with individual preferences of tempo. Either the introduction was hit at practically full stride, which made a seeming retard necessary at the Allegro if the entire movement was not to sound ridiculous; or pauses at the first movement's conclusion went unheeded, making the final bars stumble over each other; or the Finale was taken at such a relaxed pace that the opening fanfare virtually resembled "Taps."

Not Guilty

Mr. Leinsdorf was guilty of none of these. There is another troublesome point about the Schubert, however, related to the inclusion of three trombones in the orchestration. They, along with pairs of horns and trumpets, can create havoc with the composer's system of interweaving countermelodies and woodwind color in general, if not held in judicious check.

The conductor did not fail us. Only in the opening movement, toward the end, did I have any fear of overpowering brass; and during the finale the trombones, horns and trumpets were balanced to a degree that brought out an additional tonal dimension. The inner movements displayed the customary transparence—such a valuable characteristic which I'm afraid I may begin to take for granted. The total result in any case, was ingratiating.

Rhapsodic Spirit

Doriot Anthony Dwyer was soloist for Carl Nielsen's Flute Concerto, performed for the first time at these concerts. In many ways it is typical of the composer: the two movements, while related by thematic elements, are essentially free-formed in their own right. The orchestral passages are energetic, sometimes forceful, and the flute wends its independent, melodic way, occasionally slipping into periods of gently, lyric euphoria. Mrs. Dwyer captured the rhapsodic spirit with her quick adjustment to divergent moods, and her agile fingers took care of the flashing cadenzas. As the renascence of Nielsen's music continues, this work should take up a solid position in the rather diminutive flute literature.

The orchestra opened with Smetana's "The Moldau," performing it pleasantly and animatingly—a breath of spring, if you will, and for winter-weary Boston it came none too early.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, performed the 24th program of the 86th season Friday at Symphony Hall. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, was soloist for the Nielsen concerto.

"The Moldau" Smetana
Concerto for Flute and Orchestra Nielsen
Symphony in C major (Posthumous) Schubert

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
APR 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Final weekend at Symphony

By Roland Nadeau

Spring has been a long time in coming this year. It seemed about to come yesterday as the Friday afternoon series of Boston Symphony concerts came to a close.

But neither the music nor its performance sparkled very much, except perhaps the solo playing of the orchestra's principal flute, Doriot Anthony Dwyer. The vehicle for her sensitive, polished playing was the Concerto for Flute and Orchestra by Danish composer Carl Nielsen.

The concerto is slight and entertaining, thankfully not overly pastoral or vaporous as is often true in music for the flute. Apparently Nielsen had gotten Debussy's "Faune" thoroughly out of his head by the time he wrote this piece in 1926.

In fact, there are many cheeringly bouncy rhythmic moments in this piece. And the composer's essentially linear style soon cuts short any musical gushing that often seems about to emerge.

A rather spare orchestration kid-gloved by her considerate gentlemen colleagues and by conductor Erich Leinsdorf provided a sensitive and discriminating background for Miss Dwyer.

As for the other items on the program, Smetana's "The Moldau" and Schubert's Symphony in C Major, neither is much of a rouser. Everybody knows that the Schubert tends to get stuck in its repetitions; that the times of superb glow and wonder barely compensate for the long arid stretches.

If the piece gets a scintillating, propulsive reading, it satisfies almost completely. But with many of the players audibly tired —especially the upper strings, and the woodwinds — and with Mr. Leinsdorf sometimes holding things back to a near standstill, Schubert nearly lost out, along with the audience. For example, the Scherzo was simply not fast enough. It didn't scurry. There was little zest. No zing whatsoever.

The finale did catch fire, however. We heard true musical motion, not especially because the tempo was very fast, but because climaxes really crested, and phrases bobbed and danced. This was exciting. A little late in the day perhaps, but worth the waiting.

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
APR 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Brilliant Concert Ends BSO Series

The quality and richness of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its 24th and final afternoon concert was a tribute to the brilliance of the conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, and his 104 tireless musicians.

Following a strenuous two-week tour that began at Carnegie Hall and included their last Tuesday, the BSO gave a splendid concert concluding its 86th season.

The concert, which will be repeated tonight at Symphony Hall, was an exciting and in-None of the orchestra showed a trace of fattigue or anticipation over the impending summer vacation from concert tours.

The performance consisted of three compositions. The first—a combination of great clarity and richness of tone—was the symphonic poem by the CZechoslovakian composer Smetana. The composition "Moldau" is a musical cruise on a river, and Maestro Leinsdorf guided the enthralled audience past ancient castles and picturesque scenery, tactfully rolling sounds to effect the movement of the river.

FLUTIST SHINES

As superb as this performance was, it was quickly overshadowed by Mrs. Dorio Anthony Dwyer, the BSO's sole member of the distaff set and its principal flutist.

It was a concerto by the Danish composer Carl August Nielsen that brought the genius of Mrs. Dwyer to the fore. Accompanied majestically by a reduced-sized orchestra, being careful not to drown out the sweet flute, she rose to the occasion.

The piece showed why Nielsen had exploited the flute in all its registers, in his composition. It was an interesting addition to the revival now in progress of the works of the great Danish composer (1865-1931).

Leinsdorf has in the past conducted Nielsen's 6th Symphony, a rather capricious piece, whereas, the flute concerto was devoid of eccentricity sometimes characteristic of the composer. It was sheerly beautiful music.

There was a remarkable passage in the concerto calling for the curious combination of flute and bass trombone. The result was extraordinary and the trombone part was given a masterful performance by Josef Orosz.

PIECE BY SHUBERT

The pleasant afternoon came to a close with the Great C Major Symphony of Shubert. It was one of the greatest performances that veteran symphony-goers had ever heard. It had a particular quality that only a native Viennese is able to give to the music of Shubert. Vienna is Maestro Leinsdorf's native land.

Following tonight's performance, the BSO disbands for the summer. But many of the members, with the exception of the principal players, will join Arthur Fiedler for his Boston Pops series.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
APR 16 1967
New England

Symphony Concludes This Week

The Boston Symphony ends its Winter season this week with four concerts. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

The program Friday at 2 and Saturday at 8:30 will feature Nielsen's Flute Concerto. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flute, will be soloist. The concerts will open with the Moldau by Smetana and conclude with Schubert's Symphony No. 9.

On Tuesday and Thursday evenings, the orchestra will be heard in Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, "As Quiet As..." by Michcael Colgrass, and the Brahms Violin Concerto, with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
APR 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Doriot Dwyer's Flute Bright in BSO Finale

The final concert of the Boston Symphony's 86th season was given in Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, and finishing his fifth season, and with Doriot Anthony Dwyer as soloist.

Mrs. Dwyer, the Symphony's principal flute since 1952, played Carl Nielsen's Concerto, composed in 1926. It is a generally light-hearted, certainly light-weight, not highly concentrated, product of the Danish composer's inventive and amusingly quirky mind. It is also an effective virtuoso piece, with orchestration that is not merely sympathetic to the solo, but quite ingenious as well.

The playing of the solo was brilliant and musically apropos in every way, and Mrs. Dwyer, looking very pretty in a sleeveless variant of Wieland Wagner's gold Lohengrin costume, was given a demonstrative good-will hand when she appeared on stage, and warmly applauded afterwards.

Much of the orchestral part of Nielsen's Concerto is chamber-musical, and it asks for more highly characterized solo playing than it mostly got in work that was dutiful rather than convinced.

The concert began with Smetana's "Moldau." It ended with Schubert's great C major Symphony, most interestingly thought out and given, in fact, an excellent performance, though played energetically more than finely.

EIGHTY-SIXTH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIX–SIXTY-SEVEN

Twenty-fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 21, at 2:00 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 22, at 8:30 o'clock

SMETANA ..... "The Moldau" ("Vltava"), Symphonic Poem

NIELSEN ..... Concerto for Flute and Orchestra
I. Allegro moderato
II. Allegretto; Poco adagio; Tempo di marcia
(First performance at these concerts)

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT ..... *Symphony in C major (Posthumous)
I. Andante; Allegro ma non troppo
II. Andante con moto
III. Scherzo
IV. Finale

SOLOIST
DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

BALDWIN PIANO • *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

[1479]

TRAVELER (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 146,300
APR 19 1967
New England Newsclip

MORE SIGNS OF SPRING: The Boston Symphony concludes its 86th winter season this week. The closing pair of concerts will be Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

75

FRIENDS

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800
MAR 8 1967
New England Newsclip

SMART SET

BSO Friends Get Treat

By ROSE WALSH

FRIENDS of Boston Symphony Orchestra (due to their generosity it has remained in the top echelon of the world's great musical organizations) are going to get a first hand "look and listen" of a "shirt-sleeve" rehearsal on Wednesday afternoon, March 15. After a short business session with Henry B. Cabot and the trustees of the orchestra, the Friends attending their 33d annual meeting and tea at Symphony Hall will hear the working rehearsal conducted by Erich Leinsdorf play portions of the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 456 with Evelyne Crochet, pianist soloist.

Tea in the lower foyer will follow the music. The annual event is planned by the Council of Friends, headed by dynamic Mrs. Norman L. Cahners and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot. Mrs. Robert Reiser is chairman of the tea-reception.

Assisting in hostess roles will be Mrs. Frank G. Allen, Mrs. Forrest Cranmer, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. Albert Goodhue, Mrs. Donald F. Harding, Mrs. Charles P. Howard, Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, Mrs. Hollis Plimpton, Jr., Mrs. O. B. Rapalyea, Mrs. William F. Ray, Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld, Mrs. Roger Sonnabend, Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky, Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer, Mrs. Philip H. Walker, Mrs. Kay Whitty and Mrs. Henry A. Morss, Jr., (who has arranged the decor for the foyer).

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
MAR 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Hub Symphony Friends To Meet Wednesday

The annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be Wednesday in Symphony Hall in Boston. The meeting, which begins at 3.30, will mark the 33d such event since the establishment of the Friends in 1934.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra, will preside at the business session and will indicate the progress of the Friends campaign this year. To qualify for a grant of $100,000 under the terms of the Ford Foundation's larger grant to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Friends must raise $325,000.

Following the business portion of the meeting, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra in a short performance with the pianist Evelyne Crochet.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
MAR 8 1967
New England Newsclip

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100
MAR 9 1967
New England Newsclip

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

It is to be hoped that a repeat of Tuesday's storm doesn't occur on March 15, or confusion will reign in the social world. For that day is shaping up to be yet another of the multi-event dates that plague social Boston at least once a month nowadays.

Scurrying from one event to another and finding somewhere to park is bad enough in the best of weather, and well nigh impossible in bad. And if the five big events planned for that day are cancelled it will be almost impossible to reschedule most of them.

The whirlwind day begins with an extra lecture by Lord Montagu of Beaulieu at 11 p.m. at the English Speaking Union on "The Stately Homes of England." So popular is his afternoon lecture at 5 p.m. that reservations were sold out within days of the announcement. So the English Speaking Union has persuaded him to give a second lecture at 11 p.m. Coffee will be served before the lecture, which will be held at the English Speaking Union headquarters on Commonwealth Avenue.

* * * * *

Many people will hurry from this event to Symphony Hall where the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are having their annual meeting. Area chairmen have been invited to join the Steering Committee for lunch in the Ancient Instrument Room at 1:30 p.m. Aperitifs and a box luncheon will be served.

At 3:30 p.m. Henry B. Cabot of Dover, president, and the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold the 33rd annual Friends meeting. A short business meeting is planned, following this members will hear a "shirt sleeve" rehearsal of the orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. They will play portions of the Mozart Piano Concerto, K 456, with Evelyne Crochet as soloist. After the rehearsal tea will be served in the lower foyer.

Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Brookline are co-chairmen of the Friends of the B.S.O. It is only fitting the Trustees should honor the Friends at this meeting as it is the financial support they have given the orchestra over the years that has enabled it to stay in the top ranks of the world's musical organizations, and this without city, state or national subsidy.

Mrs. Robert Reiser of Brookline is chairman of the tea and reception. Hostesses will be, in addition to Mrs. Cahners and Mrs. Cabot, Mrs. Frank G. Allen, Mrs. Forrest Cranmer and Mrs. Charles P. Howard, all of Boston; Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, Mrs. Hollis Plimpton Jr., Mrs. William F. Ray and Mrs. Philip H. Walker of Brookline; Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord; Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead; Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld of Newton; Mrs. Vcevold Strekalovsky of Dedham and Mrs. Robert G. Wiese of Wellesley.

* * * * *

From Symphony Hall guests will have to hurry to change to black tie and long dress to attend one of two dinners. At 6:30 p.m. the Trustees Dinner at Suffolk Downs for the Flower Show Preview guests will take place, followed at 8:30 p.m. by the Champagne Preview itself.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
JAN 3 1967
New England Newsclip

Symphony Concert-Reception

In November, the trustees and Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a concert and reception at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum to honor the 500 women who have been annual contributors to the Friends of the Orchestra for 25 years or more. Included among the guests were six women who have attended Symphony since the time of George Henschel, the first conductor.

TRAVELER (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 146,300
MAY 11 1967
New England Newsclip

hundreds of North Shore residents pitching in, the day promises to be a big success.

ANOTHER GREAT Boston institution, the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will hold its annual meeting on Monday in the auditorium of Symphony Hall. It will have a Pops Concert atmosphere with tables and chairs set up as they are for the spring concerts. Box lunches will be served.

Council members are ladies from 12 Boston areas who further the work of the Friends of the Boston Symphony. The Friends are the group of citizens who, year after year, make up the operating deficit of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Wenham are co-chairmen of the council and will preside at the meeting. Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, and Philip K. Allen will tell about the Orchestra's future plans and the progress of the fund drive.

It was Cabot who conducted the "Toy Symphony" featuring Trustee soloists at the unique fund-raising kick-off dinner planned so delightfully by Council members Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord and Mrs. Benjamin Tilghman of Cambridge a couple of months ago.

The council was also responsible for the lovely concert-tea at Fenway Court honoring the 25-year Friends of the Orchestra this winter.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
MAY 4 1967
New England Newsclip

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Symphony Friends Council Annual Meeting Is Monday

BOX LUNCHES will be served members of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its annual meeting in Symphony Hall, Monday, May 15. Tables and chairs will be set up as at Pops Concerts. The Council of Friends are the women who, throughout 12 Boston areas, further the work of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

During the past season, the Council staged the tea and reception honoring the 25-year Friends of the Orchestra, the reception following the Pension Fund Concert, and the annual meeting and tea for the Friends.

Recently, two members of the Council, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock and Mrs. Benjamin Tilghman, planned the unique entertainment for the dinner at the Somerset, which started the Symphony Fund Drive. Never-to-be-forgotten will be the Toy Symphony, performed by trustees of the Orchestra under the baton of Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees.

However, by far the Council's most important work is enlarging and furthering the support of the Friends of the Orchestra, that dedicated group of citizens, who, year after year, make up the operating deficit of the world famous Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mrs. Norman L. Cahners and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot, co-chairmen, will preside at the annual meeting. Mrs. John L. Grandin will present the slate of officers and new members of the Council to be elected for the 1967-68 season. Mr. Cabot and Philip K. Allen will discuss the future plans for the Orchestra and the progress of the Fund Drive.

Among members of the Council who will be present are Mrs. James H. Perkins, Mrs. Frank G. Allen, Mrs. Albert Goodhue, Mrs. James H. Grew, Mrs. Albert C. England Jr., Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich, Mrs. Charles Devens and Mrs. William M. McCormick.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2076, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
NOV 29 1966

Over box lunches Monday at Pops tables in Symphony Hall, the really enterprising Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, responsible for so many good ideas (the Toy Symphony party, the 25-year Friends tea, the Symphony Ball and many more) will begin planning Cahners and Mrs. Louis W. for 1968. Mrs. Norman L. Cabot are co-chairmen of the Council which will get a progress report Monday from Symphony President Henry B. Cabot and Philip Allen on the Fund Drive for the Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
OCT 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 94,357
NOV 5 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 155,060
SEP 12 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,841
NOV 3 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,433
NOV 3 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
NOV 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,433
SEP 16 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
SEP 15 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
NOV 3 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 7 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
NOV 10 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Old Colony Memorial
PLYMOUTH, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,359
NOV 9 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 432,648
NOV 6 1966

Silver Anniversary For 500 Ladies

Friends Of The Symphony Plan Party

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

The first event on the 1966-67 calendar of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be a concert and reception to honor some 500 ladies who have contributed to the Friends of the Boston Symphony for 25 years or more.

Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld of Newton is chairman of this Silver Anniversary party. It will be held Nov. 7 at the Gardner Museum. The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will give a concert at 3:30 p.m. and the reception will follow.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Trustees, will greet the guests. Also on hand will be Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Wenham, co-chairmen of the Council of Friends, and Music Director Erich Leinsdorf and Mrs. Leinsdorf.

Interestingly, both the Chamber Players and the Council are just three years old.

The Players recently returned from their first tour of this country. The members of this group are all principal players in the Orchestra, rocognized solo performers who have received national acclaim.

The Council of Friends was established three years ago by the Trustees and is newly charged with the major responsibility of the Friends program. Though the Symphony covers 90 per cent of its annual budget from various enterprises, the nearly 5,000 friends make up the deficit.

There are 13 area chairmen. Among them are Mrs. James H. Grew for Andover, Mrs. Lewis P. Cabot for Boston, Mrs. Robert Cain and Mrs. Donald F. Harding for Brookline-Chestnut Hill and Cambridge is represented by Mrs. John C. Coolidge and Mrs. Charles H. Gessner.

For the North Shore are Mrs. Thomas Gardiner of Manchester and Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike of Beverly Farms. Mrs. G. Lincoln Dow Jr. of Duxbury handles the South Shore. Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard and Mrs. Samuel Levine are chairmen for the Newton area.

Socially Speaking

Symphony Party Honors Friends Of 25 Years

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra is making final preparations for a party, which will be the first of its kind in the Orchestra's long history—a private concert and champagne tea to honor some five hundred ladies who, many with their husbands, have been Friends of the Orchestra for 25 years or more.

The event will take place next Monday afternoon, November 7, at 3:30 at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, through the courtesy of the trustees of the museum.

The concert for the honored guests will be given by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, who are principal players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The guests will be greeted by Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the orchestra, and Mrs. Leinsdorf; Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, and Mrs. Cabot; by other trustees and their wives and by members of the Council of Friends, the women's association of the orchestra which was asked to plan the event.

The concert will take place in the Tapestry Room of the Museum. The reception following will be held in the Raphael Room and tea and champagne will be served in the Dutch Room.

Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld, chairman of the Silver Anniversary event, has designed a souvenir program reminiscent of Symphony's program book of 25 years ago. The honored guests will also be presesnted with a commemorative gift which is certain to be cherished and will be kept as a surprise until the afternoon of the concert. Yet another innovation planned by Mrs. Rosenfeld will be an informal semi - circular seating arrangement for the concert in the Tapestry Room.

Amid hanging chrysanthemums in a three-story Venetian garden, Helen G .Lee of 36 Aborn St. was honored Monday by the Boston Symphony with a private concert and champagne tea at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum for the Silver Anniversary Friends of the Orchestra.

With almost 500 guests, the concert was given by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, principal players of the B.S.O. and took place in the Tapestry Room of the museum. The reception was in the Raphael Room, with tea and champagne in the Dutch room.

A souvenir program reminiscent of the Symphony's program 25 years ago was presented to each guest.

A recording of the symphony with Serge Koussezitztky directing was presented them as a surprise, wrapped in a white jacket with a silver-lettered inscription. Koussezitztky directed the orchestra when these Silver Anniversary Friends first joined.

The Friends was founded as a group in 1937 as a means of providing financial support for the orchestra. Their service to the orchestra consists solely in private annual donations.

Miss Lee has been a member of the Friends since 1934, responding immediately when requests for support were issued publicly.

A resident of Peabody for three years, she is also a Friday Afternoon subscriber. Each year she has a reserved seat for each concert on Friday afternoons, the most fashionable time for the symphony. These programs are "symphony at its most traditional," according to the BSO; limousines, fur coats, and retired gentry are in abundance then.

Greeting the guests were Erich Leinsdorf, music director, and Mrs. Leinsdorf; Henry B. Cabot president of the trustees, and Mrs. Cabot; the trustees and their wives, and members of the Council of Friends, who planned this event.

Lee Feted With Private Concert, Tea

SMART SET

By ROSE WALSH

Symphony Will Host 'Friends'

A distinguished audience of some 500 ladies who have contributed to the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 25 years or more will be the guests of the Trustees and Council of Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra at a private concert on Monday afternoon, Nov. 7, in the famed Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum. This is through the courtesy of the trustees of the museum. Only recently returned from their first tour of this country, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players (formed three years ago) will present the program. They are the principal BSO players, recognized solo performers and eminent artists who have received national acclaim.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, will greet the guests. Others honoring the long-time friends of the Boston Symphony will be Dr. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, and Mrs. Leinsdorf; Mrs. Norman L. Cahners, Mrs. Louis W. Cabot, co-chairman of the Council of Friends, and Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld, chairman of this silver anniversary concert.

Though the BSO covers 90 per cent of its annual budget from various enterprises, the nearly 5000 Friends make up the deficit, thus enabling the orchestra to continue to bring superior artistic achievement to this city.

For its first event of the 1966-67 season, the Council of Friends, established three years ago by the trustees, has planned this gala tribute to the contributors who have given so generously during these past years.

Serving on the steering committee with Mrs. Cabot and Mrs. Cahners are Mrs. Benjamin C. Tilghman, secretary; Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, treasurer; Mrs. Frank G. Allen, Mrs. Albert Goodhue, Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr., members-at-large, and Mrs. George Lee Sargent, publicity.

★ ★ ★

Concert for Benefactors

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's trustees and Council of Friends will express their appreciation to some 500 women who have contributed annually for 25 years or more, with a concert by its Chamber Players, tomorrow afternoon at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum.

The concert in the Museum's Tapestry Room will precede a reception, with tea in the Dutch Room and sparkling wine in the Raphael Room. Bouquets of gold and red chrysanthemums, a reminder of the color scheme at last year's brilliant Golden Trumpet Ball at Symphony Hall, will decorate the tables.

Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld, chairman of this silver anniversary tribute, has planned this special occasion with a committee including Mrs. David Bird, Mrs. William McCormick, Mrs. George E. Bates, Mrs. Louis A. McMillen, and Mrs. Richard Ehrlich.

Honor Roll Lists 25-Year Symphony Contributors

The following honor roll is a unique one, never before made public. Its 500 members are Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who have contributed to the orchestra each of the past 25 years. There are half a dozen, like Mrs. Edwin S. Webster and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, who have been patrons of the orchestra since its beginning.

Tribute by the trustees of symphony and a special program by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, will pay return tribute to these loyal quarter-century friends, who will also receive a special silver anniversary recording made by the orchestra. By courtesy of the trustees of the Gardner Museum, the program is to be held in this beautiful setting.

To be honored are:

Mrs. A. Howard Abell, Mrs. Pennell N. Aborn, Mrs. H. L. Achilles, Miss Clara A. Adams, Mrs. Thomas Adams, Miss Dora L. Adler, Mrs. Horatio Alden, Mrs. Talbot Aldrich, Mrs. William T. Aldrich, Miss Louisa R. Alger, Mrs. Arthur W. Allen, Miss Eleanor W. Allen, Miss Hildegarde Allen, Miss Mary Norton Allen, Mrs. Philip K. Allen, Mrs. Philip R. Allen, Mrs. John S. Ames, Mrs. Harold Greene Arnold, Mrs. Herbert Ashton, Mrs. Frederick Ayer.

Mrs. Courtlandt W. Babcock, Mrs. Charles E. Bacon, Mrs. Theodore L. Badger, Mrs. Hamilton W. Baker, Mrs. John Barker, Jr., Miss Phyllis F. Barker, Mrs. Joel M. Barnes, Mrs. S. J. Barnet, Mrs. Ralph S. Barrew, Miss Grace E. Bartlett, Mrs. Matthew Bartlett, Mrs. Nelson S. Bartlett, Mrs. E. F. W. Bartol, Mrs. Henry B. Batchelor, Mrs. Oric Bates, Mrs. Arthur W. Bell, Mrs. Alan C. Bemis, Mrs. John R. Bemis, Miss Frances Z. T. Benner, Mrs. C. Harold Berry, Miss Dorothy L. Betts, Miss Grace M. Bigelow, Mrs. Arthur W. Bingham, Mrs. Horace Binney, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mrs. Francis W. Bird, Mrs. Archibald Blanchard, Mrs. Henry M. Bliss, Mrs. John H. Blodgett, Mrs. John E. Bolt, Mrs. Stanley M. Bolster, Mrs. Henry G. Bradlee, Mrs. Ralph Bradley, Mrs. Dwight S. Brigham, Mrs. George R. Brown, Mrs. W. A. Burnham, Miss Elizabeth Burrage, Mrs. George A. Bushee.

Mrs. Charles C. Cabot, Mrs. Chilton R. Cabot, Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Mrs. Thomas D. Cabot, Mrs. Richard M. Cameron, Mrs. Thomas B. Card, Mrs. Fred S. Carver, Mrs. W. R. Castle, Miss Mary H. Chamberlin, Mrs. Arthur I. Charron, Mrs. Barbara S. Chase, Miss Helen B. Chase, Mrs. Philip F. Chase, Mrs. A. D. Chesterton, Mrs. Edward D. Churchill, Mrs. Lawrence W. Churchill, Mrs. James L. Chute, Mrs. William H. Claflin, Mrs. Henry Cannon Clark, Mrs. Paul F. Clark, Mrs. Philip M. Clark, Mrs. Walter B. Clifford, Mrs. William B. Coffin, Miss Florence Colby, Miss Grace Collier, Mrs. Arthur C. Comey, Mrs. James B. Conant, Mrs. W. P. Conklin, Mrs. John T. Coolidge, Mrs. Julian L. Coolidge, Mrs. Harry D. Cooper, Miss Dorothy A. Cornish, Miss Priscilla Cornish, Mrs. Charles E. Cotting, Mrs. Bartow Crocker, Mrs. Bigelow Crocker, Mrs. Frank W. Crocker, Mrs. Lyneham Crocker, Mrs. F. S. Crofts, Mrs. Arthur F. Crosby, Mrs. John H. Cunningham, Miss Mary Cunningham, Miss Harriot S. Curtis, Miss Elisabeth A. Cutler, Mrs. G. Ripley Cutler, Mrs. Edward L. Cutter, Mrs. John Cutter.

Mrs. George B. Dabney, Miss Susanna R. Dabney, Mrs. Marshall B. Dalton, Mrs. Ernest B. Dane, Mrs. Nicholas W. Danforth, Miss Mabel Daniels, Mrs. Richard E. Danielson, Mrs. Edward Davis, Mrs. Livingston Davis, Mrs. Archibald T. Davison, Mrs. Frank A. Day, Jr., Miss Dorothy L. Deane, Mrs. Robert L. Dexter, Mrs. William Dexter, Mrs. William H. Dimick, Miss Sally Dodge, Mrs. Malcolm Donald, Miss Lillian Dorion, Mrs. Jerome I. H. Downes, Mrs. Eben S. Draper.

Mrs. Edward H. Earle, Mrs. Melville Eastham, Miss Blanche E. Eaton, Mrs. Henry C. Eaton, Mrs. John M. Elliot, Mrs. Henry A. Erhard, Mrs. Roger Ernst, Mrs. David J. Evans.

Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. Jarvis Farley, Mrs. James M. Faulkner, Mrs. Richard D. Fay, Mrs. S. Prescott Fay, Mrs. W. Rodman Fay, Mrs. Dana H. Ferrin, Mrs. Arthur Fiedler, Miss Margaret A. Fish, Miss Sara L. Fisher, Mrs. Charles H. Flood, Mrs. Allan Forbes, Miss Lina H. Frankenstein, Miss Evelyn P. Frost, Mrs. Horace W. Frost.

Mrs. William W. Gallagher, Mrs. William A. Gallup, Mrs. Elizabeth Gamble, Mrs. Harry Ganz, Mrs. Robert N. Ganz, Mrs. G. Peabody Gardner, Miss Annette Garel, Miss Eleanor Garfield, Mrs. James Garfield, Mrs. William L. Garrison, Jr., Mrs. Richard S. Gates, Mrs. Kirkland H. Gibson, Mrs. Carleton S. Gifford, Miss Rosamond Gifford, Miss Louise Giles, Mrs. Nelson Glover, Miss Susan Godoy, Mrs. Joel A. Goldthwait, Miss Constance Goodrich, Mrs. Frederic S. Goodwin, Mrs. Harry M. Goodwin, Mrs. John D. Gordan, Mrs. C. Lane Goss, Miss Eleanore P. Gould, Mrs. G. Philip Grafield, Mrs. Isabella Grandin, Mrs. Henry Copley Greene, Mrs. Jerome D. Greene, Mrs. Robert Greenough, Mrs. Paul Gring, Mrs. Julius Grossman.

Miss Anna Hall, Miss Emily Hallowell, Mrs. John W. Hallowell, Mrs. N. Penrose Hallowell, Mrs. Lawrence H. Hansel, Mrs. Norman Harrower, Mrs. Carroll S. Harvey, Mrs. Charles H. Haskins, Mrs. Norman L. Hatch, Mrs. Harold B. Hayden, Miss Muriel S. Haynes, Mrs. Harold L. Hazen, Mrs. Hamilton Heard, Mrs. Irving Heidell, Mrs. Andrew H. Hepburn, Mrs. Christian A. Herter, Mrs. Chester Heywood, Mrs. John W. Higgins, Miss Dorothy E. Hildreth, Mrs. Adams S. Hill, Mrs. Frank L. Hinckley, Mrs. E. Sturgis Hinds, Mrs. Samuel Hoar, Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. R. Hoermann, Miss Alice M. Holmes, Miss Marian J. Homans, Mrs. Robert H. Hopkins, Mrs. Mark M. Horblit, Mrs. Ralph Hornblower, Miss Elizabeth B. Hough, Miss Mabel E. Houghton, Mrs. Parkman D. Howe, Mrs. Osborne Howes, Mrs. David H. Howie, Mrs. Llewellyn Howland, Mrs. Chester B. Humphrey, Mrs. Arnold W. Hunnewell.

Mrs. Franc D. Ingraham, Mrs. Henry B. Jackson, Mrs. James Jackson, Jr., Mrs. David D. Jacobus, Miss Helen M. Jameson, Miss Alice C. Jenckes, Mrs. Maurice Jenckes, Mrs. Charles S. Jenney, Mrs. Kenneth E. Jewett, Mrs. Edwin G. Johnson, Mrs. Raymond B. Johnson, Miss Winifred H. Johnstone, Mrs. Fredericks Jones, Miss Margaret H. Jones.

Mrs. Hetty L. R. Kaffenburgh, Mrs. Joseph H. Keenan, Mrs. H. Nelson Keene, Mrs. George A. Keeney, Mrs. Shaun Kelly, Mrs. Kenneth D. Ketchum, Mrs. Phillips Ketchum, Miss Margaret W. Kettell, Mrs. L. S. Klorick, Mrs. Henry Parsons King, Miss Elena H. Klasky, Mrs. Harry J. Klotz, Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, Miss Margaret Kyle.

Miss Aimee Lamb, Miss Margaret Runyen Lamb, Miss Elizabeth Lassell, Mrs. Henry A. Laughlin, Mrs. Charles E. Lee, Miss Helene G. Lee, Mrs. Roger I. Lee, Miss Elizabeth C. Leland, Mrs. Bryan Leonard, Mrs. H. Frederick Lesh, Mrs. Colman Levin, Mrs. Myer J. Levin, Mrs. George Lewis, Mrs. Alexander Lincoln, Miss Elizabeth Lobdell, Mrs. Dunbar Lockwood, Mrs. H. deForest Lockwood, Mrs. E. Frothingham Lombard, Mrs. Laurence M. Lombard, Mrs. W. A. Longcope, Mrs. Frederick H. Lovejoy, Miss Anna Lutz, Mrs. George Armstrong Lyon.

Mrs. Eldon MacLeod, Mrs. Edward F. Macomber, Mrs. L. W. Macomber, Mrs. Eunice I. Mackie, Mrs. Calvert Magruder, Miss Alice A. Main, Miss Florence Mason, Mrs. Sydney R. Mason, Miss Anna R. Maxwell, Mrs. Lawrence S. Mayo, Mrs. Stanley McCormick, Mrs. John McCrea, Mrs. Lewis S. McCreary, Mrs. Holden Mcginley, Mrs. Allyn B. Mcintire, Miss Emily W. McIlvaine, Mrs. J. Howard Means, Mrs. Joe Vincent Meigs, Mrs. C. R. S. Merrill, Mrs. Roger D. Merriman, Mrs. Houghton P. Metcalf, Mrs. Alton L. Miller, Mrs. Norman F. Milne, Mrs. Donald Morrison, Mrs. Samuel E. Morison, Mrs. Charles R. Morris, Mrs. Alan R. Morse, Mrs. Arthur H. Morse, Miss Charlotte G. S. Morse, Mrs. Henry A. Morse, Jr., Miss Jessie G. Morse, Miss Leonice S. Morse, Miss Helen C. Moseley, Mrs. George S. Mumford, Mrs. Willis Munro, Jr., Josephine Murray, Mrs. Max T. Mygand.

Mrs. Robert Nason, Miss Grace M. Neill, Mrs. Samuel J. Newman, Mrs. Edwin M. Newton, Miss Joan Nicolaisade, Miss Penelope E. Noyes, Miss Carolyn Olmsted, Miss Margaret Olmsted.

Miss Elsie M. Paine, Mrs. Frank C. Paine, Mrs. John B. Paine, Mrs. Richard C. Paine, Mrs. Stephen Paine, Mrs. Robert B. Parker, Mrs. William Parker, Mrs. Ernst M. Parsons, Miss Amena Peabody, Mrs. Robert E. Peabody, Miss Katharine E. Peirce, Mrs. Samuel Pennoyer, Mrs. Fairey Perkins, Mrs. Roger A. Perry, Mrs. Constantin A. Pertzoff, Mrs. Franklin A. Pheasant, Mrs. John C. Phillips, Mrs. Walter G. Phillips, Mrs. Edward M. Pickman, Miss Catherine W. Pierce, Mrs. Arthur D. W. Pigors, Mrs. Walter Piston, Mrs. Vivian T. Pomeroy, Mrs. Carlyle Pope, Mrs. John Briggs Pouter, Mrs. Edwin H. B. Pratt, Mrs. H. Irving Pratt, Jr., Mrs. William M. Preston, Mrs. Edward W. Price, Mrs. Joseph S. Priest, Mrs. Thomas E. Proctor, Mrs. Henry B. Prout, Mrs. Lewis I. Pouty, Mrs. F. Deland Putnam, Mrs. George Putnam.

Miss Harriet C. Rantoul, Mrs. Farnield E. Raymond, Miss Mary Ellen Reilly, Mrs. Charles A. Rheault, Mrs. Albert W. Rice, Mrs. Charles O. Richardson, Miss Ruth K. Richardson, Miss Mabel L. Riley, Mrs. Hilda J. Ripley, Miss Gertrude L. Robinson, Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Miss Bertha F. Rogers, Mrs. Horatio Rogers, Mrs. Julian W. Rogers, Mrs. Eugene Rosenthal, Mrs. Louis Rosenthal, Mrs. Morris Rosenthal, Mrs. Charles F. Rowley, Mrs. C. Adrian Rupel, Mrs. Otis T. Russell, Mrs. Richard S. Russell.

Mrs. Stephen W. Sabine, Miss Elizabeth Saltonstall, Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall, Mrs. Richard Saltonstall, Mrs. Ashton R. Sanborn, Miss Ruth D. Sanderson, Mrs. Frank M. Sawtell, Miss Elizabeth Schneider, Mrs. Francis P. Sears, Mrs. George Segal, Mrs. Robert Seymour, Mrs. George C. Shattuck, Mrs. Mayo A. Shattuck, Miss Miriam Shaw, Mrs. Sohier Shaw, Mrs. T. Mott Shaw, Miss Emily B. Shepard, Mrs. Henry M. Shreve, Miss Olive Simes, Mrs. Richard I. Smith, Mrs. Stanley W. Smith, Mrs. M. N. Smith Petersen, Mrs. William B. Snow, Mrs. John C. Snyder, Mrs. Hannah B. Solomon, Mrs. Princess W. Sprague, Mrs. Creighton B. Stanwood, Miss Anna Stearns, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mrs. Abbot Stevens, Mrs. Brooks Stevens, Jr., Miss Lena M. Stevens, Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, Mrs. Herbert N. Straus, Mrs. Jacob H. Strauss, Mrs. Vevold W. Strekalovsky, Mrs. Homer N. Sweet, Mrs. George H. Swift, Mrs. John B. Swift.

Mrs. Edward A. Taft, Miss Elizabeth D. Tallman, Mrs. Frederick Tauber, Miss Margaret E. Taylor, Miss Millicent J. Taylor, Mrs. Louis B. Thacher, Mrs. William B. Thomas, Mrs. Ward Thorndike, Mrs. George Timmins, Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb, Mrs. John M. Tomb, Mrs. Adella R. Tousey, Mrs. Alfred M. Tozzer, Mrs. George W. Treat, Mrs. Irving Usen, Mrs. Abbott P. Usher, Mrs. Kenneth P. Usher, Mrs. Byron E. Van Raalte, Mrs. Arthur Hale Veasey, Mrs. Cushing Vose.

Mrs. R. G. Wadsworth, Mrs. William Wadsworth, Mrs. Quincy W. Wales, Mrs. Alice L. Walker, Mrs. William H. Walker, Mrs. Sheldon E. Wardwell, Mrs. W. Seaver Warland, Mrs. Roger S. Warner, Mrs. Bayard Warren, Miss Miriam E. Warren, Mrs. George H. Watson, Miss Sylvia H. Watson, Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, Mrs. Albert H. Wechsler, Mrs. Frederick R. Weed, Mrs. F. Carrington Weems, Mrs. E. Sohier Welch, Mrs. Raynor G. Wellington, Mrs. John H. Wells, Mrs. Lawrence H. Wetherell, Miss Adaline E. Wheeler, Mrs. Alexander Wheeler, Miss Eunice Wheeler, Miss Ruth A. Whipple, Mrs. Ross Whistler, Mrs. James N. White, Mrs. Paul Dudley White, Mrs. James E. Whitin, Miss Dorothy Whitman, Mrs. Frank Wigglesworth, Mrs. Rufus L. Wilbor, Mrs. Ben Ames Williams, Miss Hilda W. Williams, Mrs. Ralph B. Williams, Sr., Mrs. Frederick Winsor, Mrs. Max Wit, Mrs. Oliver Wolcott, Mrs. R. G. Wallace Woodworth, Mrs. Edward L. Young, Mrs. H. Melvin Young.

77

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 3 1966

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Private Anniversary Concert To Honor Symphony's Friends

BOSTON'S FIRST FAMILIES will be well represented at the Silver Anniversary Friends Concert planned by the Trustees and the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Monday afternoon. Through the courtesy of the trustees of Gardner Museum, the private concert by the Boston Symphony Players will be held at Fenway Court.

Included in the nearly 500 women to be honored are six who have attended Symphony since the time of George Henschel, first conductor of the orchestra. They are Mrs. Carleton S. Gifford, Mrs. Robert Greenough, Miss Margaret Ruthven Lang, Mrs. John Briggs Potter, Mrs. F. Delano Putnam and Mrs. Ward Thoron.

This unique occasion is the first of its kind, in which the Trustees and the Council will express their deep appreciation for the loyalty of these Friends of more than 25 years standing.

The guests will be greeted by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Orchestra's Trustees, Erich Leinsdorf, music director, and Mrs. Leinsdorf, Mrs. James H. Perkins, Trustee, and Mrs. Norman L. Cahners and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot, co-chairmen of the Council of Friends.

Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld, chairman of the event, has designed a souvenir program reminiscent of Symphony's program book of 25 years ago. The honored guests will also be presented with a commemorative gift which is certain to be cherished and will be kept as a surprise until the afternoon of the concert. Still another innovation planned by Mrs. Rosenfeld will be an informal semi-circular seating arrangement for the concert in the Tapestry Room.

Hostesses helping Mrs. George E. Bates throughout the Museum will be Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich, Mrs. Charles Almy, Mrs. David Bird, Mrs. John W. Bradley, Mrs. Lewis P. Cabot, Mrs. Charles Devens, Mrs. Richard A. Ehrlich, Mrs. Hans Estin, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. Thomas B. Gannett, Mrs. Albert Goodhue, Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr. and Mrs. Edwin T. Green.

Also, Mrs. James H. Grew, Mrs. Richard R. Higgins, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, Mrs. James F. Hunnewell, Mrs. Hans J. Kroto, Mrs. B. Barton Loomis, Mrs. Charles P. Lyman, Mrs. John A. McCandless, Mrs. William M. McCormick, Mrs. Louis A. McMillen, Mrs. William B. Moses Jr., Mrs. John T. G. Nichols 3rd, Mrs. Endicott Peabody, Mrs. Richard H. Solomon and Mrs. Edward S. Stimpson.

Among others planning to attend are Mrs. Philip K. Allen, Mrs. Nelson S. Bartlett, Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird, Mrs. Ralph Bradley, Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Mrs. Thomas D. Cabot, Mrs. Julian L. Coolidge, Mrs. Malcolm Donald, Mrs. G. Peabody Gardner, Miss Eleanor Garfield, Miss Marian J. Homans and Mrs. Henry A. Laughlin.

Also Mrs. George S. Mumford, Mrs. Edwin H. B. Pratt, Mrs. Thomas Proctor, Mrs. Richard S. Russell, Miss Elizabeth Saltonstall, Mrs. George C. Shattuck, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mrs. Vcevold Strakalovsky, Mrs. Edward A. Taft, Mrs. Sheldon E. Wardwell, Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, Mrs. E. Sohier Welch and Mrs. Ben Ames Williams.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 8 1966

Social Chatter

By Alison Arnold

Friends, Trustees of Symphony Listen to Concert in Their Honor

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—or, as most Bostonians say, The Orchestra—is a unique institution. Not only does it excel in music-making, but also in the loyalty and devotion of its audiences. Yesterday afternoon, the trustees and Council of Friends gave a concert and reception at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum to honor the 500 women who have been annual contributors to the Friends of the Orchestra for 25 years or more. During that time their gifts have amounted to more than $2,250,000.

Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld was chairman of this Silver Anniversary party, which began with a concert by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in the Tapestry Room. To the delight of the group, Beethoven was included in the program.

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Orchestra, spoke of his gratitude to the Friends and told them that TV lights were the price they had to pay for their glory. After the concert, Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, added his words of welcome.

Included among the guests of honor were six women who have attended Symphony since the time of George Henschel, first conductor of the orchestra. They are Mrs. John Briggs Potter, Mrs. Ward Thoron, Mrs. F. Delano Putnam, Mrs. Robert Greenough, Miss Margaret Ruthven Lang, and Mrs. Carleton S. Gifford, who attended with her daughter, Rosamond.

Even the slippery tile floor of the Tapestry Room and the autumn chill that made fur coats comfortable failed to lessen the enthusiasm of the gathering. Everyone was delighted that the familiar pinky-beige cover has been restored to the Symphony program. "We have the Boston Herald to thank for that," we heard a happy woman exclaim.

There were stalwart policemen stationed at every corner and we agreed with the woman who said: "I wish there were as many policemen on the streets of Boston as there are in this building!" (It seems that inanimate treasures are more valuable than humans.)

As the music floated down into the courtyard that was bright with great globes of yellow and white chrysanthemums and pots of amaryllis and orchids, it seemed most appropriate this party be held at Fenway Court.

Mrs. Jack Gardner was a faithful friend of the Orchestra, too, and on the cold January night in 1903 when she first opened her Italian palace, 50 members of the Orchestra gave a concert there.

As a commemorative gift, each Friend was given a record of a recording by the Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitzky at Carnegie Hall in 1949 and in Symphony Hall in 1940.

In contrast to the dignified, older Friends of Symphony in their Bostonian hats and serviceable suits, were the new younger Friends with their modish hairdos and chic knee-length dresses. But the two groups mingle pleasantly as they work together for the Orchestra.

Among those in the younger group were Mrs. Rosenfeld, Mrs. Norman L. Cahners, Mrs. Hans Kroto, Mrs. Richard Ehrlich, Mrs. Hans Estin, and Mrs. Eliot Snider, who recently returned from Africa.

With Mrs. Charles F. Hovey was her mother, Mrs. Frank L. Hinkley of Providence. Mrs. George Lee Sargent, sister-in-law of Francis Sargent, is having a busy week, and among others at the party were Mrs. Charles Devens, Mrs. Nelson Aldrich, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. Edwin T. Green and Mrs. Thomas B. Gannett.

Also, Mrs. E. Sohier Welch, Mrs. Ralph Bradley, Mrs. Frank Sawtell, Miss Elizabeth C. Leland, Miss Marian Homans, Miss Mabel Daniels, Mrs. Augustus W. Soule and Miss Susanna Dabney.

* * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Suburban Press & Recorder
NATICK, Mass.
Bi-Weekly Circ. 13,650
NOV 7 1966

Boston Symphony Friends Honored At Museum Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold a private concert and champagne tea to honor some five hundred ladies who, many with their husbands, have been Friends of the Orchestra for 25 years or more. The party, the first of its kind in the Orchestra's long history, will be at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, through the courtesy of the Trustees of the Museum on Monday, Nov. 7 at 3:30 pm.

The following women from Dover were invited: Mrs. Nelson S. Bartlett, Mrs. Charles C. Cabot, Mrs. Henry B. Cabot, Mrs. Carroll S. Harvey, Mrs. George S. Mumford and Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall.

From Sherborn, Mrs. Henry M. Bliss, Mrs. George Lewis and Mrs. Richard Saltonstall received invitations.

Other "Silver Anniversary Friends" are Mrs. Paul J. W. Pigors of Framingham; Mrs. Phillips Ketchum of South Natick; Mrs. Joel A. Goldthwait, Miss Jessie G. Morse and Mrs. James N. White, all of Medfield.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
NOV 8 1966

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

Music such as Beethoven's String Trio No. 1 in E Flat was surely written to be performed in the setting in which it was heard yesterday afternoon.

At Mrs. Jack Gardner's lovely palazzo museum on the Fenway the Boston Symphony Chamber Players serenaded their friends of 25 years in an atmosphere and setting that was so perfect it almost brought tears to the eyes of many.

As dusk fell outside the long gothic windows of the Tapestry Room, with their tracery of winter branches on one side, and the breathtaking view down into the inner courtyard on the other, guests who have been Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 25 years, and had given the orchestra their support for that long, were honored by members of the B.S.O., playing especially for them.

The huge tapestries and medieval paintings of the long room looked down on a scene that would have indeed pleased "Mrs. Jack", for she was a faithful patron of Symphony, and would have been delighted to see so many loyal friends under her roof.

There were at least six ladies, who must have attended Symphony while Mrs. Jack was a regular patron. Their names were called with special affection by Henry Cabot, president of the trustees, as all six of these ladies have been attending Symphony concerts ever since Henry Higginson started the orchestra back in 1881. They were Mrs. Ward Thoron, Mrs. F. Delano Putnam and Mrs. Carleton Gifford, all of whom live on Commonwealth Avenue, and Mrs. Robert B. Greenough of Milton, and all four were present at the reception. They rose with charming dignity as their names were called. Also on this honor roster are Miss Margaret R. Lang of Brimmer St. and Mrs. John Briggs Potter of Pinckney St.

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the B.S.O., greeted the guests. He said it was "a joy, a privilege, an honor and a pleasure to give due homage to the faithful friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra." Henry Cabot thanked them for all their support in the past, and spoke of the Ford Foundation's grant of $2 million, which would come to the orchestra in 1971, if $2 million is raised by the supporters of Symphony here.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
NOV 8 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
BEVERLY, Mass.
Circ. 8,433
NOV 9 1966

Superb Afternoon At Fenway Court

Symphony Friends Honored

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

Socially Speaking

The grand dames of Boston's First Families and greatest friends of music spent a superb afternoon at Fenway Court yesterday, gazing at great art and listening to fine music.

Through the courtesy of the Trustees of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, a concert and reception was held in the Tapestry Room of the late Mrs. Jack Gardner's magnificent Venetian palace to honor some 500 ladies who have been annual contributors to the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 25 years or more.

The Silver Anniversary fete was planned by the Trustees and the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The Trustees, headed by Henry B. Cabot, are the venerable directors behind the orchestra. The Council is a 4-year-old group of vital young women charged with increasing the number of Friends, thereby raising financial support for the famed orchestra.

Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld of Newton, chairman of the event, planned everything perfectly to make the afternoon a cherished one—from the salmon-covered souvenir program reminiscent of Symphony's program book 25 years ago (the color is about all that's changed) to the surprise gift—a recording of Serge Koussevitzky, music director 25 years ago, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mme. Koussevitsky was among the members of the large audience who sat in an informal semi-circular seating arrangement to hear the Boston Symphony Chamber Players—all eight principals of the orchestra—in their special program.

Included in the nearly 500 ladies honored are six who have attended Symphony since the time of George Henschel, first conductor of the Orchestra—which dates them back to 1881 when Henry Lee Higginson founded the BSO.

Three of them—Mrs. Ward Thoron, Mrs. F. Delano Putnam and Mrs. Carlton S. Gifford, all of Commonwealth Ave.—were present yesterday. The others are Mrs. Robert Greenough of Milton, Margaret Lang of Brimmer St. and Mrs. John B. Potter of Pinckney St.

"To be friends for 25 years—for a quarter of a century—is a sign of deep mutual affection, a sign of getting along beyond the normal confines of courtesy. And it means more than casually nodding to one another," noted Music Director Erich Leinsdorf in his greeting to the faithful Friends.

"All your performers, including the opening speaker, have been associated with the Boston Symphony not nearly as long as you; and that gives us a particularly grateful feeling for the loyalty, for the steadiness, and for the help which your friendship constitutes."

"It's hard to follow that music and Mr. Leinsdorf," Henry Cabot told the audience after the Chamber Players had performed a wind quintet by Reicha and a string trio by Beethoven. "Consider me the comic relief."

But he spoke seriously of the goal to raise $4 million for the Orchestra and of the important role of the Council of Friends, co-chairmanned by Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Wenham and Mrs. Norman Cahners of Brookline, before introducing Helene Cahners.

Charming, blonde Mrs. Cahners—wearing a black mink hat with her sleeveless gray and mauve tweed dress by California designer Nova Reese—invited the ladies to tea or champagne in the Raphael Room and announced the presentation of the recordings.

Elaine Rosenfeld, chic in a bone-white gabardine adaptation of a St. Laurent dress, and her concert committee held court at the reception along with Mrs. George E. Bates of Beacon St. and her pretty young hostesses. Louise Bates' dress was beige silk.

Mrs. Charles Devens of Milton was sunny and bright in lemon yellow, Mrs. Thomas Gannett of Wayland chose a blue wool suit and Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord, co-chairman of last year's Golden Trumpet Ball, wore a black afternoon frock by Fiandaca.

Strawberry sherbet was the pretty suit color for Mrs. George Sargent of Dover. And Mary Lou (Mrs. Louis) Cabot's black wool suit was by Ben Zuckerman. Mrs. Hans Estin's sleeveless shift had a white turtle-neck bodice and Mrs. Louis McMillen of Concord wore a dark mink hat and a coat over her blue dress.

Suits were in order for the door committee which included Mrs. Lewis Cabot of Louisburg Sq., Mrs. David Bird of Cambridge and Mrs. Richard Erlich of Brookline.

Joan (Mrs. William) McCormick, also of Brookline, wore a mink-lined jacket over her black wool sleeveless dress by Pauline Trigere—a perfect costume for duty in the drafty cloister around the courtyard.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 29 1966

AT BOSTON SYMPHONY GALA, Mrs. John T. G. Nichols 3d (left) and Mrs. H. M. Goodwin enjoy the special program honoring 25-year donors. In error, Mrs. Nichols was identified as Mrs. Robert Reiser.

TRAVELER (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 146,300

MAR 10 1967

New England Newsclip

They'll Hear A 'Shirt-Sleeve' Performanc

Treat For Symphony Friends

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

A special treat is in store for Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra following their 33rd annual meeting with President Henry B. Cabot and the trustees of the Orchestra on Mar. 15 at 3:30 p.m.

After a short business meeting at Symphony Hall, they will hear a "shirt-sleeve" or working rehearsal of the Orchestra with Evelyne Crochet, pianist, who will be gues tartist at the Symphony concerts the weekend of Mar. 17.

Following the rehearsal, guests will have tea in the lower foyer — an annual event planned by the Council of Friends so ably headed by dynamic Mrs. Norman Cahners of Chesntut Hill and Mrs. Louis Cabot of Wenham.

Mrs. Robert Reiser of Brooklin eis chairman of the tea and reception and Mrs. Henry A. Morss Jr. of Beacon Hill has change of the decor. The former Elisabeth Mixter's imaginative motifs, always appropriate to the concert of the week, have become conversation pieces in the last three years.

SCINTILLATING CONVERSATION over the teacups will probably include much speculation and anticipation of the "fun" and entertaining evening planned by Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord and Mrs. Benjamin Tilghman of Cambridge for friends of music and Symphony.

On Monday, Mar. 27, the crystal chandeliers of the Louis XIV Ballroom at the Somerset Hotel will tinkle with vibrations from a symphonic extravaganza designed to delight all those present.

Henry Cabot will change places with Erich Leinsdorf and raise the music director's baton to conduct the Mozart Toy Symphony. And the customary conductor of the BSO, for this one performance only, will be heard in his debut on the rattle.

PLANNING BIBLIOTHEQUE BALL to benefit Tufts University libraries Saturday, Mar. 18, are (left to right) Mrs. Burton M. Johnson of Boston, president of the Jackson College Association of Tufts Alumnae; Mrs. Frederick M. Ellis of Burlington, general chairman; and Maurene Golden of Winchester, vice president of the association. The ball, to be held on the Medford campus, will be preceded by a social hour and dinner.

Cabot is a man of many talents. Word has it that he is still a proficient skier although he hasn't indulged in the sport much lately. And he just returned from a vacation in Montego Bay, Jamaica, where he enjoyed horseback riding every dya. Most of us have yet to see him wield a baton, however.

And that's not all. Several other corchestra trustees will participate in this singular musical offering. The sound of the nightingale will be by Mrs. James H. Perkins; cuckoo, Harold D. Hodgkinson; quail, Edward A. Taft; on triangle, Sidney Rabb; tin trumpet, Francis W. Hatch. Philip K. Allen will perform as percussionist.

Gen. Robert Cutler will serve as master of ceremonies to introduce the distinguished group whose program will ze heard fillowing dinner at which members of the orchestra and their wives will join the 500 expected guests at their tables.

Mrs. James Jackson and Mrs. Raymond E. Ellis have preared an invitation printed in 18th century type. The final selection on the musical program is to be Haydn's Farewell Symphony, conducted by Leinsdorf. It has a surprise ending for which the orchestra will be in 18th century costume.

The trustees and committee, who have been winter vacationing, are home now preparing for this momentary departure from serious music-making which will be televised by WGBH-TV and other national educational television networks.

Leinsdorf is returning from a week's holiday in Martinique. Robert Cutler had been in Palm Beach. Trustees Henry Laughlin and Abram Berkowitz have been in Antigua and Florida, respectively. Francis Hatch went in the opposite direction — to Castine Me.

Elizabeth Tilghman has been south, too — to Philadelphia — and is planning a trip to Holland, probably in the fall. Mrs. Perkins goes to and from Baltimore to visit her mother.

TIMES (e)
BEVERLY, MASS.
CIRC. 8,450

MAR 9 1967

New England Newsclip

Working Rehearsal Is Highlight Of Meeting

BOSTON — Friends of the Boston Symphony will enjoy a special treat following their 33rd annual meeting and tea at Symphony Hall on Wednesday, March 15 — a working rehearsal of the orchestra.

047

Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra will preside at a meeting of the trustees. Following this formality, guests will hear a working rehearsal with Evelyne Crochet, pianist, who will be the guest artist with the orchestra on the weekend of March 17. The orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will play portions of the Mozart Piano Concerto, K456 with Miss Crochet as soloist.

Tea will be served in the lower foyer following the rehearsal. This annual event is planned by the Council of Friends headed by Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Wenham. They have asked Mrs. Robert Reiser of Brookline to be chairman of the tea and reception. Among those she has selected to assist as hostesses is Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead.

Mrs. Henry A. Morss Jr. is again in charge of the decor of the foyer. Her imaginative motifs, always appropriate to the concert of the week, have became conversatioon pieces in the last three years.

79

YOUTH CONCERTS

Clip

The Boston Globe—Friday, September 23, 1966 27

A CLOSE INSPECTION—Teenagers attending Boston Symphony rehearsal hear first harpist Bernard Zhigera tune up. (LeRoy Ryan Photo)

Young View the BSO: 'Definitely Not a Bore'

By RAY RICHARD
Globe Staff Reporter

Ladies and gentlemen of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, rise for some more applause.

Fifty teen-agers from poverty neighborhoods of Boston heard and saw you perform Thursday night at the first open rehearsal concert of the season.

None had ever seen a symphony orchestra before. Most had never heard one, even on records. Many probably never would have had the chance if the Ford Foundation and Action for Boston Community Development, the city's anti-poverty agency, didn't agree that good music is for poor kids as well as the rich.

Here's what the poor kids said about the orchestra during intermission and afterwards, of course, because nobody talks during a performance:

"Some of the time it made you feel happy, then when the music went down real low you got goose pimples," said a 15-year-old girl from South Boston.

"What surprised me was all the surprises. First it would be nice and quiet; then all of a sudden something big would happen," said another.

And these:

"Boy, they must really love music to play it so good."

"I've gotta tell the kids on the corner that it's definitely not a bore. Some of them were shook about us going. They said it was highbrow, and stuff like that. I never thought I would appreciate it so much."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is "beautifully organized," offered a girl from the Parker Hill Fenway section.

"All the time," declared another, "they kept making me wonder what was going to come at the end."

Many of them compared the orchestra, and the rarely heard Third Symphony of Gustave Mahler, the major work of the evening, with the Beatles. And most of them agreed that the Beales have talent—but not as much as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"After all," said one girl with a sigh, "you can't do homework to the Beatle beat. It keeps you moving around all the time."

Could you do it to the Boston Symphony Orchestra? she was asked.

"Well, I guess you could try," she replied. "But it is such beautiful music that after a while, I guess, you'd want to forget about your homework and just listen."

Listen they did. Just as the other 2581 music lovers present in Symphony Hall for the concert, these boys and girls, listened with awe and deep concentration.

These boys and girls who twist and frug and gyrate and jerk as part of their everyday teen-age fun, were delighted by the animation of the conductor as he gestured, pointed and spun on the platform at center-stage.

"I was looking at the man bouncing around that little stage all night," offered a big-eyed Roxbury girl. "I kept saying, boy, he's going to fall off, he's going to fall off."

Leinsdorf, to them, was the star.

"He looked," offered a cute little girl from East Boston, "like every motion he made said to the musicians, "let's show these people out there tonight what we can really do."

"I always thought," said a Dorchester girl, "that all the conductor did was just stand up there and point his arms."

One girl thought "the conductor gets emotional about it, too," but others agreed that feeling had to be put into it by Leinsdorf as well as his musicians.

"After all," a Roxbury girl interjected, "they have to feel it to play it right."

Others were amazed that Leinsdorf conducts the orchestra from memory.

"He must have a good mind," one suggested. Another girl, who once took piano lessons and is "going to try to take them again sometime," took the part of the musicians as to who had the tougher job.

"They've got to look at him and at the same time keep track of their own music. And that can be hard," she said.

The boys and girls, accompanied by 10 adult supervisors, had been selected because of an interest they had showed in music and the fact that all came from families with incomes of under $3000 (for a family of three.).

Their attentiveness proved their interest.

Many had been briefed on how to enjoy a symphony, what to listen for, what to see.

And to many of them, the sight was as awesome as the sound.

"It was beautiful to see all the players of the same instruments, like the violins, say, all play together. It looked so nice to see all their arms going back and forth at the same time," said one girl.

Summarizing the feelings of most of the group was a Jamaica Plain boy, "They're great. "They really beat the Battle of the Bands."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Townsman
WELLESLEY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,841
SEP 15 1966

Youth Symphony Orchestra Returns From Summer Workshop In Maine

Six students from Wellesley returned last week from an eight-day Summer Workshop of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestras at West Poland, Maine.

One hundred and fifty members of the junior and senior orchestras, all high and junior high school students of Greater Boston and surrounding communities, combined tennis, water-skiing, swimming, and boating with a full schedule of orchestra and chamber ensemble rehearsals, sectional practice and music sight reading, in preparation for their fall and winter concert schedule.

Dr. Artin Arslanian conducted the senior orchestra, and Robert Corley, the junior group. On the workshop staff were five members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Manuel Valerio clarinet. Giora Bernstein violin, Leslie Martin double bass, Bernard Kadinoff viola, and Laurence Thorstenberg oboe and english horn. They worked with the young members of the orchestras in section rehearsals and chamber music.

The young musicians concluded their workshop with a concert presented in the Oxford Hills High School gymnasium, receiving a standing ovation at the end of the program from an audience of nearly one thousand persons.

The Greater Boston Youth Symphony was founded in 1958 and is sponsored by the School of Fine and Applied Arts of Boston University, in cooperation with the music departments of junior and senior high schools in Massachusetts, and a Board of Directors from the community.

Wellesley members of the orchestra include Carol Connolly, viola; Nancy Dillard, flute; Deborah Thompson and Erica Whipple, cello; Nathaniel Tetrick, violin; and Scott Corley, French horn.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER DEM. CHRONICLE
Sunday, December 11, 1966

30% of Our Symphonies Composed of Teen-Agers!

By DELOS SMITH, United Press International

NEW YORK (UPI)—Of 492 American symphony orchestras, 146, or almost 30 per cent, are made up in the main of teen-age and even younger players. This will be a reassuring statistic for all the musical people who are convinced youth is going to the musical dogs.

They have been depressed by the publicity of beatnik guitar strummers and folk-song crooners. If the future of musical culture depends upon the likes of them, say musical people, then goodbye culture.

The reassurance is from a survey of the 1965-66 symphonic season by the American Symphony Orchestra League and Broadcast Music, Inc. Some 800 other orchestras were omitted because their "seasons" comprised only one or a few concerts. The proportion of youth orchestras among them probably is even higher.

Major cities like New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Boston, Washington, Pittsburgh and Kansas City have full symphonies of 12 to 21-year-old players. But smaller cities have them, too, such as Huntsville, Ala., Greeley, Colo., Flint, Mich., and Beloit, Wis.

The 146 children orchestras of the 492 surveyed included high school and college groups. There were 276 "community" orchestras manned in the main by adult amateurs and 43 professional orchestras called "metropolitan."

The top classification was "major," and 27 other orchestras made it, such as the Philadelphia, the Boston Symphony and the New York Philharmonic.

The 492 orchestras gave 4,871 concerts in their 1965-66 seasons and played a total of 19,375 works of which 6,720 were by the 20th Century composers. Of the 783 composers represented 573 worked or work in this century which gave the "modern" composer a preponderance of almost 3 to 1.

However, Mozart had 1,298 performances, leading all the rest. Then came Beethoven with 1,202 and Brahms with 776. In performances Stravinsky topped the 20th Century composers, with 326 and Ravel was second with 288.

Of composers active since 1938, Aaron Copland did the best with 167 performances. Leonard Bernstein came next with 136 and Samuel Barber and Bela Bartok had 105 each.

The programs of the youth orchestras were no less musically sophisticated and daring than those of the professionals.

As an example of what the children are doing, New York's Youth Symphony, which has 86 players, opened its fourth season in Philharmonic Hall with a program that included the 17th Century Angelo Corelli and the 20th Century Barber and Darius Milhaud.

A 21-year-old conductor presided. He is Leonard Slatkin, son of the late composer-conductor, Felix Slatkin, and a scholarship student at the Juilliard School of Music.

In all the youth groups the top performers are music students—children so gifted that professional careers loom for them. But most players probably will always be "talented amateurs."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 16,222
SEP 29 1966

Federal Funds Finance Quest for Arts Council

An arts council for the Greater Boston area is the ultimate goal of those planning a program of cultural enrichment financed by a $113,000 federal grant.

Public, private and parochial school children in six communities, Newton, Waltham, Brookline, Belmont, Lexington and Watertown will benefit from the project intended to develop school curricula in co-operation with cultural organizations, such as the Boston Museum of Fine Arts; Boston Symphony Orchestra and others.

Dr. Charles E. Brown told the Newton School Committee this week that the grant obtained under Title 3 of the Education Act will go for the most part to pay the salaries of a director, and one person representing each community.

Brookline, which submitted the joint proposal, is acting as recipient of the funds. A second proposal for an operating grant will be submitted to the federal government next spring, Dr. Brown said.

DRAW ON AREA

Plans will revolve around methods of integrating the cultural resources available in the Boston area into the school curriculum in a meaningful way, rather than stressing the performance aspect of the various arts.

It is hoped that teachers will be able to draw on the groups involved for instructional materials to fit into courses being offered, and for consultation.

There will also be opportunities for students to hear musicians perform in small groups or watch individual actors or dancers perform.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

JAN 18 1967

Conductor Harry Dickson, the B.S.O.'s "Music Man" to his Youth Concert fans, goes over the score with Ralf Gjestby, Albert Buckley, Michael Crissmore, Laurie Festor, Hillary Jones.

Mary White, 8, of Cohasset Is With It

PHOTOS BY SAM MASOTTA

Music, Magic for Youth

By MARJORIE SHERMAN
Globe Society Editor

Talk about your "in" groups. You should see Symphony Hall on a Youth Concert day.

Chief magician is founder-conductor Harry Dickson, leader of 60 of the Boston Symphony's supermen.

And one of the best committees around is adept at bringing dozens of pumpkin-color buses filled with children from nearly 100 communities.

The committee will hold the first benefit for this remarkable six-Saturday series on Sunday when the world's famous guitarist Spain's Andres Segovia, makes his only Boston appearance at Symphony Hall.

After his 3 p.m. concert, Spanish Consul General and Mrs. Victor Sanchez-Mesas will give a reception in his honor.

Katherine Prudden, 9, of Hingham Is Charmed

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 61,100

MAR 10 1967

New England Newsclip

GOING TO CONCERT

MARLBORO —The third and final Boston Symphony Concert will be attended by members of the Fine Arts group at 11 a.m. Saturday in Boston.

This year's "Festival Program" will open with the festival overture by William Walton. Transportation will be furnished by the Recreation Department and Mrs. Robert Collier heads the committee in charge of arrangements.

HERALD NEWS (e)
FALL RIVER, MASS.
CIRC. 40,250

MAR 14 1967

New England Newsclip

Junior League Sponsored Youth Concert Trips Enjoyed by 40

The Junior League of Fall River, Inc., sponsored the last in a series of bus trips to the youth concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston, on Saturday to hear a program performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Through the cooperation of Mrs. Lincoln P. Holmes, town chairman of youth symphony concerts, and Miss Helen Ladd, supervisor of music in the public schools, 40 pupils were transported to Boston, under supervision, to hear the concerts which are planned to enrich youth with an appreciation for music.

The concerts were financed by the Community Trust Fund set up within the league. All proceeds from fund-raising activities of the league go into this fund. From it, community projects are supported after the league appraises community needs and finds one that is suited to its financial and volunteer resources.

Every dollar raised by the Junior League is returned to the community. All the administrative expenses are derived from membership dues.

Chaperones for the event were Mrs. James S. Panos, a league member, and Mrs. Frederick Lindquist, music supervisor in the Fall River Public School System.

PATRIOT-LEDGER (e)
QUINCY, MASS.
CIRC. 51,100

JAN 24 1967

New England Newsclip

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

Andres Segovia must be a very generous man. On Sunday afternoon, at his one performance in Boston which was a benefit for the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, he returned again and again to the stage of Symphony Hall in response to the applause of his enthusiastic audience. Encore after encore was given by this artist, whose talent amounting to genius with the guitar, a delight not only to hear but to see as well.

He sat, this elderly man whose appearance is the epitome of a "father image", alone in the center of the huge stage, completely relaxed, holding his guitar as if it were a part of him. He sat there patiently while, sad to relate, many ill-mannered members of the audience paraded in, with much stamping of feet, up to half an hour late.

It was mentioned recently in another column that Boston audiences leave much to be desired in the matter of manners towards the visiting artists and each other. Sunday certainly was no exception. Although wildly enthusiastic, they, neverless, thought nothing of walking in and out, coughing continually all through what was, by the very nature of the instrument, a rather intimate performance, and unwrapping crackling candy wrappers. It is to be hoped that the warmth of their applause offset the unfortunate impression that Senor Segovia must have received.

One thing is certain, though, and that is that the young audiences at the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, for whose Development Fund the benefit was given could give Sunday's audience a lesson in manners. These children, who are bused in from 85 cities and towns around Boston to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform in three concerts a year just for them, are the most attentive and appreciative audience anyone could wish for. Seats for these concerts are at a premium, and as a result of Sunday's benefit, the committee hopes to be able to widen the entire scope of the concerts in many different ways.

After Senor Segovia's performance, which with his many encores was a long one, a reception was held for the sponsors of the benefit in the Picture Gallery of Symphony Hall. Silver candelabra holding black candles were on two long tables, one of which, through the kindness of the Spanish Consul in Boston, Victor Sanchez-Mesas, held Spanish sherry, and the other "Sangria," a typical Spanish drink made of red wine, fruits and spices. Unfortunately, Senor Sanchez-Mesas and his wife were unable to be at the reception as they are presently in Spain.

Mrs. B. Barton Loomis of Beacon Hill, chairman of the benefit, was greeting guests as they come up the marble stairs and into the gallery. She looked lovely in an off white shantung silk dress and jacket, the red Youth Concert committee ribbon bright on her shoulder. Mrs. Manuel Kurland of Brookline in a dark red suit was taking tickets at the door, and Mrs. David Bird of Cambridge, in a bright pink dress with a paisley design, was talking with friends.

There were many of the younger generation both at the concert and at the reception. Mrs. Robert Dean of Wellesley had brought her little granddaughter, Linda, whose eager face, framed in long brown braids, was watching for Senor Segovia to appear. She is a serious student of the guitar, and had come all the way down from Hanover, N.H. where her father teaches, just for the concert. Mr. and Mrs. R. Willis Leith Jr. of Westwood had brought their tall young sons, Alexander and John, and Mrs. William Morton of Cohasset brought her daughter, Sally, and Kristin Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Jones Jr. of Cohasset. Millicent Thayer, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Thayer of Chestnut Hill and Cohasset, and a student at the Winsor School, was another there.

Others at this very pleasant reception were Mr. and Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten of Brookline and Mr. and Mrs. Stanford Calderwood of Cambridge, all of whom had been at the big Age of Rembrandt opening at the Museum of Fine Arts the evening before; Mrs. J. Clark Boas of Chestnut Hill, looking most attractive in black; Mr. and Mrs. C. Russell Eddy of Duxbury and Beacon Hill; Mrs. M. Hoffman MacNaught of Hingham; and Mrs. James S. Russell of Milton.

81

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
MAR 13 1967
New England Newsclip

YOUTH CONCERT AT SYMPHONY HALL

Saturday and the perennial miracle of the busloads and a Symphony Hall full of small faces and quiet feet, the Youth Concerts and the magic of Harry Ellis Dickson and the Boston Symphony Orchestra shared by nearly a hundred communities round Massachusetts.

Bright yellow table cloths and gay centerpieces of gold and white miniature mums arranged by Mrs. B. Barton Loomis of Lime St. put sunshine into the Picture Gallery of Symphony Hall yesterday noon.

It was pouring outside. But the pouring inside was of aperitifs, clear and crimson, for a reception and luncheon in honor of the town chairmen for Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall.

Not all 87 town chairmen were able to attend. But Mrs. Ralph Katz of Brookline, chairman of the town chairmen, welcomed the happy gathering which included members of the Youth Concert Board and Henry B. Cabot, president of the Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chairman of the Youth Concerts in Symphony Hall.

The town chairmen have been most important to the success of the Youth Concerts which each year attract a sell-out audience of young people for two series of three concerts.

"This year we're luckier than usual. We sold out a month before the first concert," Mrs. Katz said.

The first concert of the season will take place Nov. 5 at 11 a.m. in Symphony Hall.

Mrs. Katz also announced that a benefit concert by the Vienna Choir Boys last season raised over $2,500 for the series. And she introduced Betty Loomis who is chairman of this year's benefit, the only Boston performance of classical guitarist Andre Segóvia on Jan. 22 at 3 p.m.

Mrs. Albert Titcomb of Lime St., who was at the luncheon, is in charge of a reception following the Segovia recital. She will be working with Spanish Consul Victor Sanchez-Mesas, appropriately. Sponsors tickets for this event will be $10.

Youth Concerts Music Director Harry Ellis Dickson, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and assistant conductor of the Pops, also spoke to the group and introduced the "dignified" chairman, Henry Cabot.

"I'll report to my wife tonight that I'm dignified.' She doesn't always think so," quipped Cabot, standing directly in front of the stony stare of the bust of Frederick Pickering Cabot, first president of Symphony from 1918-1932.

Among the Youth Concert Board members attending were Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten of Brookline, vice chairman; Mrs. Leo M. Pistorino of Winchester, Mrs. James S. Russell of Milton, Mrs. Sanford Calderwood of Cambridge, Ellen Stillman of Beacon St. and Mrs. David Bird of Cambridge.

Ellen and Jeanne Bird were discussing getting together for a musical evening — a guitar evening, in fact. Jeanne and her husband both play guitar and sing — Russian and Swedish are included in David's repertoire.

Discussing today's youth in general were Mrs. William Morton of Cohasset, Mrs. Manuel Kurland of Brookline and Mrs. Joseph Goldman of Quincy.

SUBURBAN FREE PRESS AND RECORDER
NATICK, MASS.
BI-WEEKLY
MAR 20 1967
New England Newsclip

Youth Concerts

The final Youth Concert of the 1966-67 season was held at Boston Symphony Hall Mar. 11, with 90 students of grades 5 and 6 and their chaperones attending. The grand finale of the Hallelujah Chorus from Handel's "Messiah," featured the New England Conservatory Chorus.

The programs have been designed to stimulate young people's interest in good music, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson, has turned out exciting concerts for this young age group.

The ancient and rare instrument room in Symphony Hall is open each week, and the students are allowed to view this unusual collection of instruments.

Holliston has become a leader in these Youth Concert events, and parents of grade 5 and 6 are urged to return the application forms for next year's concerts. They will be on strictly a first-come, first-serve basis.

Chaperones at the last concert were Miss Linda Jackson, Holliston's Youth Concert representative, Miss Beverly Newberry and Miss Janet Myers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times
WALPOLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,300
SEP 15 1966

Youths Attend Music Seminar

Joel Brenner and Albert Sprague of Walpole returned last week from an eight-day Summer Workshop of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestras at West Poland, Maine.

One hundred and fifty members of the junior and senior orchestras, all high and junior high school students of Greater Boston and surrounding communities, combined tennis, waterskiing, swimming, and boating with a full schedule of orchestra and chamber ensemble rehearsals, sectional practice and music sight reading, in preparation for their fall and winter concert schedule.

Dr. Artin Arslanian conducted the senior orchestra, and Robert Corley, the junior group. On the workshop staff were five members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Manuel Valerio, clarinet; Giora Bernstein, violin; Leslie Martin, double bass; Bernard Kadinoff, viola; and Laurence Thorstenberg, oboe and english horn. They worked with the young members of the orchestras in section rehearsals and chamber music.

The young musicians concluded their workshop with a concert presented in the Oxford Hills High School gymnasium, receiving a standing ovation at the end of the program from an audience of nearly 1000 persons.

The Greater Boston Youth Symphony was founded in 1953 and is sponsored by the School of Fine and Applied Arts of Boston University, in cooperation with the music department of junior and senior high schools in Massachusetts, and a Board of Directors from the community.

ENTERPRISE (e)
MARLBORO, MASS.
CIRC. 5,600
MAR 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Youth Concert To Be Saturday

The third and final Boston Symphony Youth Concert for the 1966-67 Season will be held Saturday, March 11th, at 11:00 a. m., it was announced today by the Town Chairman, Mrs. Robert Collier.

Students are reminded that the bus supplied by the Marlboro Recreation Department will leave the parking area, rear of City Hall, promptly at 9:30 a. m. Chaperones provided by the Fine Arts Group of Marlboro will be Mrs. Albert Blackman and Mrs. William S. Field.

This year's "Festival Program" will open with Festival Overture by William Walton, probably the most celebrated among English composers born in the first decade of the twentieth century. Originally written for the 70th anniversary of Johannesburg, South Africa, Walton has incorporated modern techniques in this music. His individuality is shown in the use of many melodies (polyphony) and clearness of texture or structure, in combination with original harmonies, rhythmic vigor, melodic invention (especially lyric style), and very brilliant orchestration.

The concert continues with a special work commissioned for the Youth Concerts by Tison Street.

Concerto for Tuba and Orchestra by Malcolm Arnold, a Twentieth Century British instrumental composer, will follow. Soloist: Chester Schmitz.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue with "Stomp Your Foot" from the Opera, The Tenter Land by Aaron Copland, a well-known Twentieth Century American composer, whose general style tends toward simplicity and textural clarity. In this composition, Copland has combined with his distinctive style the ingredients of American folklore and borrowed nationalism which he calls "tourist music".

Ending the concert program will be George Frederick Handel's very famous and inspirational Hallelujah from the Oratorio, "Messiah", with the New England Conservatory Chorus directed by Lorna Cook DeVaron.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
AUBURN CITIZEN ADVERTISER
Friday, December 16, 1966

Fourth of Symphony Orchestras Made up of Teen-Age Players

A prime encourager of musical children is American Youth Performs, Inc., which is directed by Charles Abdoo, a concert singer, and sponsored by American Airlines. It has a hand in youthful musical groups in 99 cities, by supplying them with high-quality young professional soloists. AYP's 1966-67 season opened in Phoenix, Ariz., Nov. 30 when Arthur Delmoni of Saint-Saens' violin concerto with the Phoenix Symphonette whose players are 10 to 15 years old.

NEWS (e)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
CIRC. 15,900
MAR 15 1967
New England Newsclip

90 Holliston Students Attend Youth Concert

HOLLISTON — The final Youth Concert of the 1966-67 season was held at Boston Symphony Hall last Saturday. Ninety students of grades 5 and 6 and their chaperones attended.

The program included Arnold's "Concerto for Tuba and Orchestra," Copland's "The Tender Land," and the grand finale of the Hallelujah Chorus from Handel's "Messiah," which featured the New England Conservatory Chorus.

These programs have done a great deal to stimulate young people's interest in good music. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson, has constantly turned out exciting concerts and has catered to this young age group.

The ancient and rare instrument room in Symphony Hall is open each week, and the students are allowed to view this unusual collection of instruments. Holliston has become a leader in these Youth Concert events and parents of grade 5 and 6 are urged to return the application forms for next year's concert as soon as they receive them. They will be on strictly a first-come, first-serve basis. Chaperones Saturday were Miss Linda Jackson, Holliston's Youth Concert representative; Miss Beverly Newberry and Miss Janet Myers.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000
FEB 9 1967
New England Newsclip

YOUTH CONCERT

Youth Concert will be held Saturday, Feb. 11, from 2-3 p.m. at Brookline High School, Roberts Auditorium. Program features Harry Ellis Dickson conducting members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Brookline High School Concert Choir, directed by William A. Seymour and two young soloists, Stephen Goble, winner of the Harry Dubbs Memorial Award and Peter Voisin. Remaining tickets will be sold at the door prior to the concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Graphic
NEWTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 9,543
SEP 15 1966

Youth Concerts Subscriptions Deadline Friday

Mrs. Herbert Kotzen, 45 Fenwick Rd., Waban, local chairman for Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, announces that subscriptions for the 1966-67 series must be returned by Friday, Sept. 23.

The Newton PTA Creative Arts Committee will distribute application blanks in all Newton schools, grades 5 through 8, Monday, Sept. 19.

The Youth Concerts, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have been sold out each season since they began in 1959. Two series of three concerts are presented on Saturdays at 11 a. m. at Symphony Hall. Newton schoolchildren will attend Series 2, scheduled for November 12, January 21, and March 18. Tickets are sold by the series only, at $5 for three concerts.

The hour-long programs are planned to stimulate young people's interest in good music by presenting both classical and contemporary compositions played by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the tradition-filled atmosphere of Symphony Hall. In addition, the Ancient Instruments Room, with its priceless collection of rare ad unusual instruments, is open to the young concert-goers; Laning Humphrey of the Symphony staff will give informal talks on the history of the instruments and will demonstrate their use.

For further information call Mrs. Kotzen at DE 2-4706.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Minute Man
LEXINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,405
SEP 29 1966

Concerts Again For Students

Students in the William Diamond Junior High School are again being given the opportunity to attend Youth Concerts at Symphony. This is a series of three concerts under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Concerts are held Saturday mornings at Symphony Hall, Boston. The series selected by Lexington includes concerts on November 5, 1966, January 14, 1967 and March 11, 1967. Since the number of tickets is definitely limited, requests for them will be honored on a first-come basis. For any further information parents may contact Miss Cavalieri at Diamond Junior High.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Fence Viewer
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,489
SEP 22 1966

Youth Concerts

Lincoln - Subscription applications for the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall series must be returned by Friday, September 30, to music instructor Sheila Reid, Brooks School music room, or to the Lincoln chairman, Mrs. M. S. Page, Giles rd., 259-9754. Tickets are sold by series only. For the first concerts, on November 5 and November 12, 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Harry Ellis Dickson conducting, will perform works by Mozart, Prokofieff, Liszt, and Respighi, with Ilan Rogoff, pianist, as soloist. Transportation to and from the concerts will be arranged. For information, call Mrs. Page.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 171,536
NOV 14 1966

Season Opens Nov. 5

Youth Symphony Sell-Out in Sight

A sell-out by subscription is in sight for the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, as their eighth season approaches, so conductor Harry Ellis Dickson announces from a vacation hideaway, after being supplied with reports from schools and family groups.

Among schools now joining the subscribers are those of Carlisle, Marblehead, Mattapoisett, Millis, Somerset, Stoughton, Wayland, and Weymouth.

As before, the concerts will take place on Saturday mornings from 11 to 12 o'clock in a series of three programs, each repeated a week later. The dates are to be: Nov. 5 and 12, Jan. 14 and 21; and Mar. 11 and 18, 1967.

As a feature of the opening pair of concerts, Mr. Dickson will present a remarkably gifted young Israeli piano soloist, Ilan Rogoff. He will play the Second Piano Concerto of Liszt.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
OCT 9 1966

Symphony Hall Youth Concerts

The first pair of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall will have the young Israeli pianist, Ilan Rogoff, as soloist in the Liszt Concerto No. 2. The program, on Nov. 5 and 12, begins at 11 a.m. Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct his colleagues in the Boston Symphony.

The program will open with Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro." Prokofiev's Classical Symphony and "The Pines of Rome" by Respighi are also listed.

The remaining pairs of concerts, all on Saturday mornings, are Jan. 14 and 21 and Mar. 11 and 18. Subscriptions are available at Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 13 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,258
OCT 18 1966

In these days of rock 'n roll and the "beat," it is sometimes forgotten how many children enjoy classical music. One of the most popular series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is the Youth Concerts.

Each of the 83 town chairmen will be honored Oct. 19 at a reception and luncheon in the Picture Gallery of Symphony Hall.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and chairman of the Youth Concerts, will speak to the ladies.

Among Youth Concert board members expected are Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten of Brookline, vice chairman, and Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell, both of Wellesley; Mrs. Ralph Katz of Brookline, Mrs. B. Barton Loomis of Beacon Hill, Miss Ellen Stillman of Boston, Mrs. Leo M Pistorino of Winchester, Mrs. Stanford Calderwood of Cambridge, Mrs. William Morton of Cohasset, Mrs. Justin Driscoll of Scituate, Mrs. David Bird of Cambridge, Mrs. Manuel Kurland of Brookline and Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb of Beacon St.

The first concert of the season is Nov. 5 at 11 a.m. in Symphony Hall. Harry Ellis Dickson, BSO member and assistant conductor of Pops, is music director.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
NOV 2 1966

ISRAELI pianist Ilan Rogoff will play the Liszt Concerto No. 2 at the Boston Symphony Youth Concerts on Nov. 5 and 12 at 11 a.m.

Youth Concert spectacle delights the child's eye

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

By Richard J. Cattani

"Do they have no tubas?" the three-year-old asked as we entered Symphony Hall. We arrived early for the Saturday morning Youth Concert given by Harry Ellis Dickson and the Boston Symphony. The musicians had not yet taken their places.

Yes, they would have tubas, I answered.

The boy looked around. The great organ pipes over the stage: "They look like rolls of Life Savers." A piano picture in the program: "When I went to Romper Room I got a picture of Miss Flora."

Then he asked, "Is this where you and Mommy sit when you go to Symphony?"

"Yes, in these very seats."

But I had never seen a performance quite in the way I was about to see that one. At least not since grade school days when I heard Walter Poole lead the Detroit Symphony. But then it was a kettledrum that caught my eye, not a tuba.

The children Saturday morning were entranced by the visual spectacle of the performance — the vigorously bowing arms, the sliding in and out of the trombones, the gleaming hardware. Most of the youngsters, according to a show of hands, had never seen a symphony concert before. They thought it was grand.

Under Mr. Dickson's leadership the orchestra played with great presence, geniality, and taste. Nothing was slack or routine. One was reminded of the musicmaking in the Bach household and the infinite care the Baroque master gave to the musical education of his children.

The hour-long program began with the overture to Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro." The orchestra demonstrated the work's two themes before getting under way. Prokofiev's sense of humor was stressed in his "Classical" Symphony. The young audience was delighted with the rich array of sounds, most notably in the angular, galumphing Gavotte.

Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 2 in A major was performed by the young Israeli pianist Ilan Rogoff. His interpretation was broad and affirmative, even bold—qualities obviously discerned by the young audience.

Respighi's symphonic poem "The Pines of Rome" was yet another success. There was a buzz of approval for the snappy march in the "Villa Borghese" section and the nightingale's song in the "Janiculum"—with a taped solo by a real Rome nightingale.

But the concluding "Appian Way" section had the greatest impact: the huge drums and gongs, the organ, trumpets, trombones gave a mighty tonal picture of Roman legions marching triumphantly into the empire's capital. For sheer noise it was splendid.

The three-year-old noticed they even used a tuba.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Assabet Valley Beacon
MAYNARD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,192
NOV 3 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Enterprise (e)
MARLBORO, Mass.
Circ. 5,575
NOV 3 1966

Maynard Students To Hear Symphony

MAYNARD — Thirty-four Maynard students will leave for Symphony Hall on Saturday morning, November 12, to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra perform in the first of three Youth Concerts to be present during the season. The bus will leave from the High School at 9:15 a.m. for the 11:00 a.m. concert in Boston. This first program will be as follows:

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" . . . . Mozart

Symphony No. 1 in D ("Classical") . . . . Prokofieff

a. Allegro
b. Larghetto
c. Gavotte
d. Molto Vivace

Concerto No. 2 in A Major for Piano and Orchestra . . . Liszt

Soloist: Ilan Rogoff

The Pines of Rome. . .Respighi

Students from Maynard who will attend are:

Richard Orsi, Faith Taylor, Roxanne Rogers, Rae Eileen Wuorio, Elizabeth Popieniuck, Kevin Mulcahy, Ellen Forster, Deborah Barilone, John O'Buck, Antonina Tarara, Susan Morrissey Lise LeBlanc, Gail Marshall, Debra Poirier, Ann Marie Costanzo, Mark Dionne, Stephen Perkins, Marguerite Buckley, Ellen Rizzo, Clifford Hicks, Robert Pinolehto, Karen Yuchnevich, Michael Reiniger, Dale Carruth, Kenneth Regan, Debra Regan, Christopher Cutaia, Kurt Helander, Michael Karpiechick, Lynn Toppe, Glynnis Aromaa, Mark Gaspari, Jane Hebert, Ann Lent.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
OCT 30 1966

SATURDAY

Children

YOUTH CONCERT — Symphony Hall, Boston; Boston Symphony Orchestra; conductor, Harry Ellis Dickson; soloist, Ilan Rogoff; 11 a.m.; subscriptions at Symphony Hall. . . "SARA CREWE" by Eleanor Boylan.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 21 1966

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

Congratulations were very much in order on Wednesday at Symphony Hall. The good news was passed around that the two series of Youth Concerts given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra were complete sell-outs this year.

This is due in no small measure to the hard work of the local town chairmen who were honored on Wednesday at a reception and luncheon at Symphony Hall.

The telephones have rung and the wires hummed as these 87 ladies spread the good word about the concerts for young people, and Wednesday was their day of appreciation. From Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to Mrs. Ralph Katz of Brookline, chairman of the series, and Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, vice-chairman, the ladies were lauded for their achievements.

Yellow cloths covered the small tables for the lunch and centerpieces of gold and white chrysanthemums echoed the color scheme. Two huge "lily trees" flanked the speaker's rostrum, and around the walls typical New England scenes by New England artists looked down on the cheerful event.

Mrs. B. Barton Loomis of Beacon Hill had been responsible for the decorations, and she also will be the chairman for the benefit for the Youth Concerts which is planned for Jan. 22 in Symphony Hall. Tall, attractive, with prematurely grey hair, she told her audience of plans for this Andre Segovia, guitarist, benefit and for the reception to follow the performance, for which Mrs. Albert Titcomb of Boston will be chairman.

Among the guests at this very pleasant luncheon were Ivor Nelson, superintendent of music in the Quincy schools, Mrs. William Gibson of Needham, Mrs. James Russell of Milton, Mrs. Stanford Calderwood of Cambridge, wearing an attractive bright pink wool dress, cheerful on such a dreary day; Miss Ellen Stillman of Boston, Mrs. David Bird of Cambridge and Mrs. Charles Maloney and Mrs. William Morton of Cohasset.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
SEP 15 1966

As Symphony begins its 86th season on Sept. 23, all manner of good things get under way with it.

The Youth Concerts start Nov. 5, with eight additional communities joining the bus parade in to Symphony Hall from around the state.

Mattapoisett will be a newcomer this season, as will Weymouth, Wayland, and Stoughton, Carlisle, Somerset, Marblehead, and Millis.

The far-thinking committee, headed by Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell, will meet Monday at Mrs. Anthony Kutten's to complete plans with that wizard who keeps thousands of tickets in apple-pie order, Mrs. Manuel Kurland.

Symphony's Council of Friends, which has given major service since its founding three years ago, will pay special tribute to 500 donors who have contributed to the Boston Symphony for 25 years or more at a concert by the Symphony Chamber Players, who have just returned from a tour of the United States.

Through the courtesy of the Trustees of the Gardner Museum, the concert will be given there Nov. 7 at 3:30.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Symphony Board of Trustees, will welcome the guests.

So, too, will Music Director and Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf, Mrs. Norman Cahners and Mrs. Louis Cabot, co-chairmen of the council, and Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld, chairman of this Silver Anniversary occasion.

83

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 13 1966

Youth Concert patrons are prompt, unlike many an adult audience in Symphony Hall. Ted Hathaway of Cohasset catches up on his reading while the orchestra tunes up. (Photos by Bill Brett)

Mrs. George Blackland of Brookline and son, Ian.

Concert soloist Ilan Rogoff shares piano backstage with Bruce Adams and his sister, Joan, of Lexington.

Absorbed listener is Brian Farrington of Andover.

Youth Concerts 'Amazi

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN
Society Editor

Few productions, even in this multiple age, have 87 heroines.

And there is no other word for the patient and dedicated women who give uncalculated hours to tickets, bus transportation, and personal responsibility for the thousands of boys and girls who fill every seat at Symphony Hall for six Youth Concerts a year.

The enthusiasm with which these town chairmen tackle their year-round planning is contagious—every year the list grows.

The one-woman "committee" who made this unified effort possible is Mrs. Manuel Kurland, who started with a handful of mothers willing to canvass their own towns to drum up interest in attending these unique music programs.

Founded eight years ago by Boston Symphony player Harry Ellis Dickson, who conducts the series and captivates his audience, the series was completely sold out weeks before it opened.

Why does this brilliant musician, speaker, and writer add to his already overwhelming schedule these many hours of painstaking research and programming?

"Because it is one of the most rewarding experiences I have known" is the prompt answer of the man who was this month awarded France's distinguished Medal of Arts and Letters.

What special ingredient keeps those young faces lifted toward the stage, those restless feet still, even to the six-year-old scufflers?

"These are people — we don't underestimate their intelligent interest and we always have it," said conductor Dickson. His first program included Mozart, Prokofiev, Liszt, and Respighi, and throughout the big familiar hall, small hands clapped and clapped.

Watching with particular delight officers and directors of the committees, who worked together with such affinity of purpose, find their reward, too, in the eager young faces, row after row after row.

Symphony Conductor Erich Leinsdorf likes to quote Sir John Barbirolli's "Amazing—I've seldom seen—or heard — its equal," when the eminent British conductor came to Symphony Hall especially for the Saturday morning concert.

Serving with Mr. Leinsdorf as executive members are Symphony Trustees President Henry Cabot, Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten, Stephen Paine, James Brosnahan, Benjamin H. Lacy, and John N. Burk.

Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell is chairman of the advisory committee, and Mrs. William Morton is her co-chairman. Mrs. Ralph Katz is Town Chairman Coordinator.

An unusual benefit will bring Spain's notable guitarist, Andres Segovia, for a single performance at Symphony Hall on Jan. 22 in the interests of these wonderful concerts. A sponsors' reception for Mr. Segovia will follow the concert.

Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb and Mrs. B. Barton Loomis, both original patrons of the Youth Concerts, will be chairmen for the benefit.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
JAN 12 1967

Symphony Hall Youth Concerts

The Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and principal cellist Jules Eskin will be soloists at the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall Jan. 14 and 21. Under Harry Ellis Dickson's direction they will play the first movement of the Brahms Double Concerto.

The program, which begins at 11 a.m. and lasts about an hour, includes the Overture to Rossini's "Semiramide," the Bach-Stokowski Passacaglia, and Ravel's "La Valse" and excerpts from his "Mother Goose" Suite.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
JAN 15 1967

Youth Concerts At Symphony Hall

The Boston Symphony's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein and principal cellist Jules Eskin will be soloists at the Youth Concert at Symphony Hall, Jan. 21. Under Harry Ellis Dickson's direction, they will play the first movement of the Brams Double Concerto.

The program, which begins at 11 a.m. and lasts about an hour, includes the Overture to Rossini's "Semiramide," the Bach-Stokowski Passacaglia, and Ravel's "La Valse" and excerpts from his "Mother Goose" Suite.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Shoppers' News
LYNNFIELD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,600
JAN 12 1967

SYMPHONY HALL YOUTH CONCERT

On Saturday morning, Jan. 14th, the 2nd program offered by the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall in Boston will feature a violin solo by Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Another soloist will be Jules Eskin, its principal cellist. They will present Brahms' Concerto for Violin, Cello and Orchestra.

Harry Ellis Dickson, music director and conductor, will also lead members of the Boston Symphony in excerpts from other famous classical works selected for their appeal to the youthful audience. Musical selections composed by Rossini, Bach, Stokowski, Brahms and Ravel will be played. Excerpts from Ravel's Mother Goose should prove especially absorbing to the young concert-goers.

The program starts at 11 and lasts until noon. The bus will leave Lynnfield Jr. High School at 9:45 a.m., and Huckleberry Hill School at 10 a.m. It will return to the same schools about 1 p.m. Chaperones accompanying the children will be Mrs. Wilmot Decker, Mr. & Mrs. Hugh B. Dickey and Mrs. Manton Spear.

The Youth Concert is completely sold out. The 3rd and final program will be presented on Saturday, March 11.

OPEN REHEARSALS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
SEP 23 1966

A CLOSE INSPECTION—Teenagers attending Boston Symphony rehearsal hear first harpist Bernard Zhigera tune up. (LeRoy Ryan Photo)

Young View the BSO: 'Definitely Not a Bore'

By RAY RICHARD
Globe Staff Reporter

Ladies and gentlemen of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, rise for some more applause.

Fifty teen-agers from poverty neighborhoods of Boston heard and saw you perform Thursday night at the first open rehearsal concert of the season.

None had ever seen a symphony orchestra before. Most had never heard one, even on records. Many probably never would have had the chance if the Ford Foundation and Action for Boston Community Development, the city's anti-poverty agency, didn't agree that good music is for poor kids as well as the rich.

Here's what the poor kids said about the orchestra during intermission and afterwards, of course, because nobody talks during a performance:

"Some of the time it made you feel happy, then when the music went down real low you got goose pimples," said a 15-year-old girl from South Boston.

"What surprised me was all the surprises. First it would be nice and quiet; then all of a sudden something big would happen," said another.

And these:

"Boy, they must really love music to play it so good."

"I've gotta tell the kids on the corner that it's definitely not a bore. Some of them were shook about us going. They said it was highbrow, and stuff like that. I never thought I would appreciate it so much."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is "beautifully organized," offered a girl from the Parker Hill Fenway section.

"All the time," declared another, "they kept making me wonder what was going to come at the end."

Many of them compared the orchestra, and the rarely heard Third Symphony of Gustave Mahler, the major work of the evening, with the Beatles. And most of them agreed that the Beales have talent—but not as much as the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"After all," said one girl with a sigh, "you can't do homework to the Beatle beat. It keeps you moving around all the time."

Could you do it to the Boston Symphony Orchestra? she was asked.

"Well, I guess you could try," she replied. "But it is such beautiful music that after a while, I guess, you'd want to forget about your homework and just listen."

Listen they did. Just as the other 2581 music lovers present in Symphony Hall for the concert, these boys and girls, listened with awe and deep concentration.

These boys and girls who twist and frug and gyrate and jerk as part of their everyday teen-age fun, were delighted by the animation of the conductor as he gestured, pointed and spun on the platform at center-stage.

"I was looking at the man bouncing around that little stage all night," offered a big-eyed Roxbury girl. "I kept saying, boy, he's going to fall off, he's going to fall off."

Leinsdorf, to them, was the star.

"He looked," offered a cute little girl from East Boston, "like every motion he made said to the musicians, "let's show these people out there tonight what we can really do."

"I always thought," said a Dorchester girl, "that all the conductor did was just stand up there and point his arms."

One girl thought "the conductor gets emotional about it, too," but others agreed that feeling had to be put into it by Leinsdorf as well as his musicians.

"After all," a Roxbury girl interjected, "they have to feel it to play it right."

Others were amazed that Leinsdorf conducts the orchestra from memory.

"He must have a good mind," one suggested. Another girl, who once took piano lessons and is "going to try to take them again sometime," took the part of the musicians as to who had the tougher job.

"They've got to look at him and at the same time keep track of their own music. And that can be hard," she said.

The boys and girls, accompanied by 10 adult supervisors, had been selected because of an interest they had showed in music and the fact that all came from families with incomes of under $3000 (for a family of three.).

Their attentiveness proved their interest.

Many had been briefed on how to enjoy a symphony, what to listen for, what to see.

And to many of them, the sight was as awesome as the sound.

"It was beautiful to see all the players of the same instruments, like the violins, say, all play together. It looked so nice to see all their arms going back and forth at the same time," said one girl.

Summarizing the feelings of most of the group was a Jamaica Plain boy, "They're great. "They really beat the Battle of the Bands."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
SEP 23 1966

(Traveler Staff Photo by Frank Cushing)

ATTENDING OPEN REHEARSAL of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf are, from left, Toni Francis, 16, Donna Letteriello, 15, and Angela Tirone, 15, all of East Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
SEP 22 1966

60 Children Of Poor to Get Symphony Treat

By RAY RICHARD

Sixty children from poverty-level families will attend a rehearsal performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tonight under a cultural improvement program sponsored by Action for Boston Community Development.

The youngsters, who otherwise might have gone a lifetime without seeing or hearing the famed orchestra, will be treated to more than music.

They'll sit in on tonight's open rehearsal at Symphony Hall, meet Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and inspect the museum of ancient instruments.

The trip is the first of seven planned by the city's anti-poverty agency for culturally-deprived children in the 10 "target areas" serviced by ABCD.

A different group will attend each of the seven rehearsals and, in all, 420 boys and girls will benefit.

A total of $1020 spent for the series tickets by the ABCD will come from Ford Foundation funds.

Each of the city's "target areas" will be represented by a supervisor and five adolescents, two of whom must have been enrolled in the Summer Work Program that employed 600 throughout the city during school vacation under ABCD sponsorship.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Chronicle-Citizen
BROOKLINE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 8,441
SEP 22 1966

St. Mary's Choir To Sing With Boston Symphony

The Boy's Choir from St. Mary of the Assumption School in Brookline will sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf tonight Sept. 22, at Symphony Hall.

Sept. 22, at Symphony all in an open rehearsal.

Orchestra with the Boy's Choir of the Church of the Transfiguration.

Future plans call for a televised program on Oct. 18 and a plan trip to Carnegie Hall where the St. Mary's Boys Choir will again join with the Symphony Orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf for a guest appearance.

In late November the boys will appear at Jordan Hall.

The boys will join their voices with the Women's Chorus from the New England Conservatory of Music to sing in the "Bell Chorus" from the Fifth Movement of Mahler's "Third Symphony."

Under the guidance of Sister M. Julian, music director of Saint Mary's School, 28 boys from grades five through eight have been rehearsing since Aug. 24.

The Boy's Choir was selected to sing the "Bell Chorus" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra upon the recomendation of several choir directors and music critics.

Performances are scheduled

(Continued On Page Eight)

85

ORGAN CONCERTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
DEC 18 1966

Charles Wilson to Conduct Boston Organ Concert Series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has made an early announcement of plans for the 1967 Symphony Hall Organ Concerts, and tickets are already available at the Symphony Hall Box Office for holiday gift purchases.

1967 Series

The 1967 series will consist of three concerts, each with E. Power Biggs as organist and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra assisting.

Each program will be a full-length evening concert beginning at 8:30 p. m., in contrast to the one-hour programs at 6 p. m. of former seasons.

First Concert

The first Symphony Hall Organ Concert will be Sunday evening, Feb. 19, featuring music for organ and strings. The second concert, Monday, March 27, will consist of music for organ, brass and double chorus.

The third and final program will be Sunday evening, April 19, featuring organ, trumpets, obes and timpani.

New Conductor

All three programs will be conducted by Charles Wilson, newly appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Series tickets for the three concerts will be available tomorrow morning at the Symphony Hall Box Office at $8, $5, and $5.

TRAVELER (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 146,300
FEB 15 1967
New England Newsclip

the performing arts

Open Sunday Evening

3 Organ Concerts At Symphony Hall

BOSTON — E. Power Biggs, who will be the organist for the three programs, and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Wilson will give the first concert of this season's Symphony Hall Organ Concert series this Sunday evening at 8:30.

The concerts will be full length programs with all seats in Symphony Hall reserved.

Sunday's program will begin with Franz Joseph Haydn's Concerto in C major for Organ, Strings, Trumpets and Timpani followed by Jan Sweelinck's The Grand Duke's Ballet.

Also to be heard prior to the intermission will be Vivaldi's Concerto in A minor for Strings and Continuo and "Festival" Sonatas for Orchestra and Organ by Mozart.

The concert will resume after intermission with the Concerto in G major by Johann Ernst as adapted by J. S. Bach. This first program of the organ concert series concludes with Bach's Sinfonia to Cantata No. 29, "Wir danken dir, Gott", and the Concerto in G minor for Organ, Strings and Timpani by Poulenc.

Tickets are available at the Symphony Hall Box Office at $8, $6.50 and $5 for the three programs.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
MAR 26 1967
New England Newsclip

MONDAY—Boston Symphony Organ Series, with E. Power Biggs as soloist, conducted by Charles Wilson. Corelli's Concerto in C, Vivaldi's Concerto in A minor, Handel's Concerto in C, Hindemith's Sonata No. 2, Piston's Prelude and Allegro, and "Festival" Sonatas by Mozart. Symphony Hall at 8:30.

TUESDAY — Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Mozart's Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and Piano Concerto, K. 456, with Evelyne Crochet as soloist, and the Bruckner Symphony No. 9 in D major. Symphony Hall at 8:30.

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
FEB 13 1967
New England Newsclip

Organ Concert To Open Series Sunday in Hub

BOSTON — E. Power Biggs, who will be organist for the three programs, and members of Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Wilson will give the first concert of the season's Symphony Hall organ concert series Sunday at 8.30. All seats in Symphony Hall will be reserved.

Sunday's program will include Franz Joseph Haydn's "Concerto in C major for Organ, Strings, Trumpets, and Tympani"; Jan Sweelinck's "Grand Duke's Ballet," Vivaldi's "Concerto in A minor for Strings and Continuo," "Festival" sonatas for orchestra and organ by Mozart, Concerto in G major by Johann Ernst as adapted by J. S. Bach and Bach's sinfonia to Cantata No. 29, "Wir danken dir, Gott," and the "Concerto in G minor for Organ, Strings, and Timpani" by Poulenc.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
APR 9 1967
New England Newsclip

Final Organ Concert Next Sunday Night

On Sunday evening, April 16, the closing concert of the Symphony Hall Organ Concert series will take place at 8:30 with E. Power Biggs and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Wilson conducting. Music by Bach and Gabrieli will be performed, with the Boston University Chorus, James Cunningham, director, assisting in the series for the first time.

The program for this concert includes Bach's Toccata in F major; Pastorale in F major; the Chorale Prelude, "Schmucke dich, O liebe Seele"; and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, and by Gabrieli Two Canzoni for Brass and Organ and Intonations for Organ.

Wednesday evening, April 19, in Jordan Hall the Boston Symphony String Quartet will give the final concert in the New England Conservatory and Boston Symphony Orchestra Chamber Music Series. The program begins at 8:30 and consists of Haydn's String Quartet in F-sharp minor, Op. 50, No. 4; the Quartet in C minor, Op. 18, No. 4 by Beethoven and Mendelssohn's Quartet in A major, Op. 13. The members of the Boston Symphony String Quartet are Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins; Burton Fine, viola and Jules Eskin, cello.

Also on April 19 at 8:30 in Symphony Hall, Richard Bouchett will give an organ recital under the joint sponsorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
APR 9 1967
New England Newsclip

NEWS (e)
NEWBURYPORT, MASS.
CIRC. 6,600
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Music

Easter Concert — By Kenneth Wilson, Sunday, March 26, at 4 p.m. at Hammond Museum, Hesperus Avenue, Gloucester. Tour of castle at 2 p.m. on Easter.

Organ Concert — E. Power Biggs with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Wilson at Symphony Hall, Boston, on Monday, March 27 at 8:30 p.m.

Chamber Music Series — New England Conservatory and Boston Symphony Orchestra present Boston Symphony Chamber Players at Jordan Hall, Boston, on Wednesday, March 29, at 8:30 p.m. in program of Mozart, Barber of Schubert.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
APR 9 1967
New England Newsclip

BSO Series: Organ Concert, String Quartet

Final concerts in two Boston Symphony sponsored series of programs will take place this month. Sunday evening, Apr. 16, E. Power Biggs will join members of the orchestra in Symphony Hall for the season's last organ concert. And Wednesday evening, Apr. 19, in Jordan Hall, the Boston Symphony String Quartet will conclude its season.

The organ concert will be conducted by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the B.S.O. Participating will be the Boston University Chorus, James Cunningham, musical director. The program for this concert will include Bach's Toccata in F major, Pastorale in F major, Chorale Prelude "Schmucke dich, O liebe Seele," and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. Two works by Gabrieli will also be heard, Two Canzoni for Brass and Orchestra and Intonations for Organ.

The Boston Symphony Quartet will perform three works. They are Haydn's F sharp minor, Op. 50, No. 4; Beethoven's C minor, Op. 18, No. 4; and the Mendelssohn A major, Op. 13. Quartet members are Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins, Burton Fine, viola, and Jules Eskin, cello.

Also Apr. 19, in Symphony Hall, Richard Bouchett will give a solo organ recital. He was the 1966 winner of the young artists' competition co-sponsored by the Boston Symphony and the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists. His program lists works by Bach, Dupre, Verne, Alain and Liszt.

These three concerts are at 8:30.

The Boston Symphony is currently on tour. The orchestra gave concerts last week in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago and Ann Arbor. This week they are in New London, Philadelphia and New York.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
FEB 20 1967
New England Newsclip

E. Power Biggs Plays At Symphony Hall

By RENA FRUCHTER

Last night's Symphony Hall program presented by E. Power Biggs and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was victim of that sad concert tradition of saving the best performance for the end. Unfortunately, in this case the best performance was given to the inferior—at best comical—Poulenc Concerto for Organ, String and Timpani. The Poulenc Concerto might best be described as a work which, hopefully written tongue in cheek, alternates between passionately tortured serious wails and barroom song. Adding to the effect of this musical content is the scoring for booming organ, strings, and timpani.

As performed last night, it was evident that the lyrical and stirring rendition which would have enhanced the performances of the other works on the program was employed only in the Poulenc. The dynamic range, phrasing, and orchestral unity were excellent in the Poulenc, which was, incidentally, the only work in which the cello section could be heard at all.

In many respects the inadequacies in the overall effect of the works for organ and orchestra were due to the heavy and rhythmically stiff approach of Mr. Biggs. In the Haydn concerto, the Bach Sinfonia, and the Mozart Sonatas, and occasionally in the Poulenc, he lagged behind the orchestra. His interpretation contrasted strongly with that of Mr. Wilson, who conducted with a considerably lighter approach. In the Vivaldi Concerto for Strings and Continuo, with Alfred Krips as violin soloist, Mr. Wilson achieved much of the freedom which was lacking in the organ works. He showed good understanding of the structure and textural variety of the work.

The Sweelinck Balletto del Granduca for solo organ and the Ernst Concerto in G Major for pedal harpsichord were given straightforward, at times ostentatious performances. In the Sweelinck, Mr. Biggs obliterated much of the music by using the loudest possible volume. He performed the Ernst Concerto with a much greater degree of clarity, and exhibited excellent technical control of the instrument, but his performance was disappointing in its lack of variety.

The Program

E. Power Biggs and members of the Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Wilson, presented a program in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, February 19.

Concerto No. 2 in C major for Organ, Strings, Trumpets and Timpani — Haydn
The Grand Duke's Ballet — Sweelinck
Concerto in A minor for Strings and Continuo — Vivaldi
"Festival" Sonatas for Orchestra and Organ — Mozart
Concerto in G major (Adapted J. S. Bach) — Ernst
Sinfonia to Cantata No. 29, "Wir danken dir, Gott" — Bach
Concerto in G minor, for Organ, String and Timpani — Poulenc

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
MAR 28 1967
New England Newsclip

Biggs Excels As Organist At Symphony

By DANIEL ROSEN

E. Power Biggs gave his second concert in a series of three with members of the Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Wilson Monday night. Biggs long ago proved himself as a first-rate musician and exponent of his instrument and his latest concert was no exception.

The Handel Concerto with its famous Cuckoo and the Nightingale appellation was played with great charm and warmth. The Corelli and Haydn concerti were also negotiated in the no nonsense manner that has become Biggs' trademark.

He had several moments though when his playing seemed to suffer from a lack of articulation. This might have been the instrument's fault rather than the player's but passages of the organ solo in the Handel and the first movement of the Hindemith were disconcertingly muffled.

The Program

E. Power Biggs, organist, and members of the Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Wilson gave a concert at Symphony Hall Monday night. The program:

Concerto in C major for organ and strings — Corelli
Concerto in A minor (played on the pedal harpsichord) — Vivaldi
Concerto No. 13 in F major — Handel
Concerto No. 3 in C major for organ and strings — Haydn
Sonata No. 2 for Organ (1937) — Hindemith
Prelude and Allegro for Organ and Strings — Piston
Festival Sonatas for Strings and Organ — Mozart
Sonata in D major, K. 245
Sonata in C major, K. 336
Sonata in C major, K. 328

TIMES (e)
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 10,200
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Organ Concert — E. Power Biggs with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Wilson at Symphony Hall, Boston, on Monday, March 27 at 8:30 p.m.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
FEB 5 1967
New England Newsclip

Organ Series Adds Orchestra

This season's Symphony Hall Organ Series will feature E. Power Biggs with members of the Boston Symphony under the direction of the orchestra's assstant conductor, Charles Wilson.

Concerts will begin at 8:30 Feb. 19, Mar. 27 and April 16. The first program will include concertos and sonatas by Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Poulenc and Vivaldi.

In previous years, the organ series was made up of one-hour recitals by various performers.

85

ORGAN CONCERTS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
DEC 18 1966

Charles Wilson to Conduct Boston Organ Concert Series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has made an early announcement of plans for the 1967 Symphony Hall Organ Concerts, and tickets are already available at the Symphony Hall Box Office for holiday gift purchases.

1967 Series

The 1967 series will consist of three concerts, each with E. Power Biggs as organist and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra assisting.

Each program will be a full-length evening concert beginning at 8:30 p. m., in contrast to the one-hour programs at 6 p. m. of former seasons.

First Concert

The first Symphony Hall Organ Concert will be Sunday evening, Feb. 19, featuring music for organ and strings. The second concert, Monday, March 27, will consist of music for organ, brass and double chorus.

The third and final program will be Sunday evening, April 19, featuring organ, trumpets, obes and timpani.

New Conductor

All three programs will be conducted by Charles Wilson, newly appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Series tickets for the three concerts will be available tomorrow morning at the Symphony Hall Box Office at $8, $5, and $5.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
APR 9 1967
New England Newsclip

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
APR 9 1967
New England Newsclip

Final Organ Concert Next Sunday Night

On Sunday evening, April 16, the closing concert of the Symphony Hall Organ Concert series will take place at 8:30 with E. Power Biggs and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Wilson conducting. Music by Bach and Gabrieli will be performed, with the Boston University Chorus, James Cunningham, director, assisting in the series for the first time.

The program for this concert includes Bach's Toccata in F major; Pastorale in F major; the Chorale Prelude, "Schmucke dich, O liebe Seele"; and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, and by Gabrieli Two Canzoni for Brass and Organ and Intonations for Organ.

Wednesday evening, April 19, in Jordan Hall the Boston Symphony String Quartet will give the final concert in the New England Conservatory and Boston Symphony Orchestra Chamber Music Series. The program begins at 8:30 and consists of Haydn's String Quartet in F-sharp minor, Op. 50, No. 4; the Quartet in C minor, Op. 18, No. 4 by Beethoven; and Mendelssohn's Quartet in A major, Op. 13. The members of the Boston Symphony String Quartet are Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins; Burton Fine, viola and Jules Eskin, cello.

Also on April 19 at 8:30 in Symphony Hall, Richard Bouchett will give an organ recital under the joint sponsorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
FEB 20 1967
New England Newsclip

E. Power Biggs Plays At Symphony Hall

By RENA FRUCHTER

Last night's Symphony Hall program presented by E. Power Biggs and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was victim of that sad concert tradition of saving the best performance for the end. Unfortunately, in this case the best performance was given to the inferior—at best comical—Poulenc Concerto for Organ, String and Timpani. The Poulenc Concerto might best be described as a work which, hopefully written tongue in cheek, alternates between passionately tortured serious wails and barroom song. Adding to the effect of this musical content is the scoring for booming organ, strings, and timpani.

As performed last night, it was evident that the lyrical and stirring rendition which would have enhanced the performances of the other works on the program was employed only in the Poulenc. The dynamic range, phrasing, and orchestral unity were excellent in the Poulenc, which was, incidentally, the only work in which the cello section could be heard at all.

In many respects the inadequacies in the overall effect of the works for organ and orchestra were due to the heavy and rhythmically stiff approach of Mr. Biggs. In the Haydn concerto, the Bach Sinfonia, and the Mozart Sonatas, and occasionally in the Poulenc, he lagged behind the orchestra. His interpretation contrasted strongly with that of Mr. Wilson, who conducted with a considerably lighter approach. In the Vivaldi Concerto for Strings and Continuo, with Alfred Krips as violin soloist, Mr. Wilson achieved much of the freedom which was lacking in the organ works. He showed good understanding of the structure and textural variety of the work.

The Sweelinck Balletto del Granduca for solo organ and the Ernst Concerto in G Major for pedal harpsichord were given straightforward, at times ostentatious performances. In the Sweelinck, Mr. Biggs obliterated much of the music by using the loudest possible volume. He performed the Ernst Concerto with a much greater degree of clarity, and exhibited excellent technical control of the instrument, but his performance was disappointing in its lack of variety.

The Program

E. Power Biggs and members of the Boston Symphony, conducted by Charles Wilson, presented a program in Symphony Hall on Sunday evening, February 19.

Concerto No. 2 in C maior for Organ, Strings, Trumpets and Timpani — Haydn
The Grand Duke's Ballet — Sweelinck
Concerto in A minor for Strings and Continuo — Vivaldi
"Festival" Sonates for Orchestra and Organ — Mozart
Concerto in G maior (Adapted J. S. Bach) — Ernst
Sinfonia to Cantata No. 29, "Wir danken dir, Gott" — Bach
Concerto in G minor, for Organ, String and Timpani — Poulenc

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500
MAR 28 1967
New England Newsclip

Biggs Excels As Organist At Symphony

By DANIEL ROSEN

E. Power Biggs gave his second concert in a series of three with members of the Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Wilson Monday night. Biggs long ago proved himself as a first-rate musician and exponent of his instrument and his latest concert was no exception.

The Handel Concerto with its famous Cuckoo and the Nightingale appellation was played with great charm and warmth. The Corelli and Haydn concerti were also negotiated in the no nonsense manner that has become Biggs' trademark.

He had several moments though when his playing seemed to suffer from a lack of articulation. This might have been the instrument's fault rather than the player's but passages of the organ solo in the Handel and the first movement of the Hindemith were disconcertingly muffled.

The Program

E. Power Biggs, organist, and members of the Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Wilson gave a concert at Symphony Hall Monday night. The program:

Concerto in C maior for organ and strings — Corelli
Concerto in A minor (played on the pedal harpsichord) — Vivaldi
Concerto No. 13 in F major — Handel
Concerto No. 3 in C major for organ and strings — Haydn
Sonata No. 2 for Organ (1937) — Hindemith
Prelude and Allegro for Organ and Strings — Piston
Festival Sonatas for Strings and Organ — Mozart
Sonata in D major, K. 245
Sonata in C major, K. 336
Sonata in C major, K. 328

TRAVELER (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 146,300
FEB 15 1967
New England Newsclip

the performing arts

Open Sunday Evening

3 Organ Concerts At Symphony Hall

BOSTON — E. Power Biggs, who will be the organist for the three programs, and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Wilson will give the first concert of this season's Symphony Hall Organ Concert series this Sunday evening at 8:30.

The concerts will be full length programs with all seats in Symphony Hall reserved.

Sunday's program will begin with Franz Joseph Haydn's Concerto in C major for Organ, Strings, Trumpets and Timpani followed by Jan Sweelinck's The Grand Duke's Ballet.

Also to be heard prior to the intermission will be Vivaldi's Concerto in A minor for Strings and Continuo and "Festival" Sonatas for Orchestra and Organ by Mozart.

The concert will resume after intermission with the Concerto in G major by Johann Ernst as adapted by J. S. Bach. This first program of the organ concert series concludes with Bach's Sinfonia to Cantata No. 29, "Wir danken dir, Gott", and the Concerto in G minor for Organ, Strings and Timpani by Poulenc.

Tickets are available at the Symphony Hall Box Office at $8, $6.50 and $5 for the three programs.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
MAR 26 1967
New England Newsclip

MONDAY—Boston Symphony Organ Series, with E. Power Biggs as soloist, conducted by Charles Wilson. Corelli's Concerto in C, Vivaldi's Concerto in A minor, Handel's Concerto in C, Hindemith's Sonata No. 2, Piston's Prelude and Allegro, and "Festival" Sonatas by Mozart. Symphony Hall at 8:30.

TUESDAY — Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting Mozart's Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and Piano Concerto, K. 456, with Evelyne Crochet as soloist, and the Bruckner Symphony No. 9 in D major. Symphony Hall at 8:30.

NEWS (e)
NEWBURYPORT, MASS.
CIRC. 6,600
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Music

Easter Concert — By Kenneth Wilson, Sunday, March 26, at 4 p.m. at Hammond Museum, Hesperus Avenue, Gloucester. Tour of castle at 2 p.m. on Easter.

Organ Concert — E. Power Biggs with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Wilson at Symphony Hall, Boston, on Monday, March 27 at 8:30 p.m.

Chamber Music Series — New England Conservatory and Boston Symphony Orchestra present Boston Symphony Chamber Players at Jordan Hall, Boston, on Wednesday, March 29, at 8:30 p.m. in program of Mozart, Barber of Schubert.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
APR 9 1967
New England Newsclip

UNION (m)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 79,350
FEB 13 1967
New England Newsclip

Organ Concert To Open Series Sunday in Hub

BOSTON — E. Power Biggs, who will be organist for the three programs, and members of Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Wilson will give the first concert of the season's Symphony Hall organ concert series Sunday at 8.30. All seats in Symphony Hall will be reserved.

Sunday's program will include Franz Joseph Haydn's "Concerto in C major for Organ, Strings, Trumpets, and Tympani"; Jan Sweelinck's "Grand Duke's Ballet," Vivaldi's "Concerto in A minor for Strings and Continuo," "Festival" sonatas for orchestra and organ by Mozart, Concerto in G major by Johann Ernst as adapted by J. S. Bach and Bach's sinfonia to Cantata No. 29, "Wir danken dir, Gott," and the "Concerto in G minor for Organ, Strings, and Timpani" by Poulenc.

BSO Series: Organ Concert, String Quartet

Final concerts in two Boston Symphony sponsored series of programs will take place this month. Sunday evening, Apr. 16, E. Power Biggs will join members of the orchestra in Symphony Hall for the season's last organ concert. And Wednesday evening, Apr. 19, in Jordan Hall, the Boston Symphony String Quartet will conclude its season.

The organ concert will be conducted by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the B.S.O. Participating will be the Boston University Chorus, James Cunningham, musical director. The program for this concert will include Bach's Toccata in F major, Pastorale in F major, Chorale Prelude "Schmucke dich, O liebe Seele," and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor. Two works by Gabrieli will also be heard, Two Canzoni for Brass and Orchestra and Intonations for Organ.

The Boston Symphony Quartet will perform three works. They are Haydn's F sharp minor, Op. 50, No. 4; Beethoven's C minor, Op. 18, No. 4; and the Mendelssohn A major, Op. 13. Quartet members are Joseph Silverstein and George Zazofsky, violins, Burton Fine, viola, and Jules Eskin, cello.

Also Apr. 19, in Symphony Hall, Richard Bouchett will give a solo organ recital. He was the 1966 winner of the young artists' competition co-sponsored by the Boston Symphony and the Boston Chapter of the American Guild of Organists. His program lists works by Bach, Dupre, Verne, Alain and Liszt.

These three concerts are at 8:30.

The Boston Symphony is currently on tour. The orchestra gave concerts last week in Rochester, Toledo, Bloomington, Chicago and Ann Arbor. This week they are in New London, Philadelphia and New York.

TIMES (e)
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 10,200
MAR 25 1967
New England Newsclip

Organ Concert — E. Power Biggs with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Wilson at Symphony Hall, Boston, on Monday, March 27 at 8:30 p.m.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
FEB 5 1967
New England Newsclip

Organ Series Adds Orchestra

This season's Symphony Hall Organ Series will feature E. Power Biggs with members of the Boston Symphony under the direction of the orchestra's assstant conductor, Charles Wilson.

Concerts will begin at 8:30 Feb. 19, Mar. 27 and April 16. The first program will include concertos and sonatas by Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Poulenc and Vivaldi.

In previous years, the organ series was made up of one-hour recitals by various performers.

PENSION FUND CONCERT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
DEC 6 1966

'Unusual 'First' In Decor Is Handiwork Of 16 Wives

Symphony Hall To Be Decked With Christmas Greenery

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

Regular Friday Symphony-goers will have a special treat this week. Symphony Hall decked with holly — or at least Christmas greenery.

"This unusual "first" in decor for staid Symphony Hall (which has been blossoming out ever since the magnificent transformation at the Golden Trumpet Ball last year) is through the courtesy of Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., wife of the Orchestra's manager, and 15 wives of Symphony players who will create the holiday motif on Thursday.

Originally the decorating was to have been done Saturday for Sunday night's Pension Fund Concert and reception. Fortunately for Friday subscribers, the ladies found Saturday less convenient.

So their handiwork, which will see seasonal greens used throughout the foyers and gallery including around the base of the statue of Henry Lee Higginson (founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra), will be enjoyed by many more

Friday's concert, by the way, with Dr. Charles Munch as guest conductor, features Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ," which he is conducting for the first time in 10 years.

The special Pension Fund Concert on Sunday features three artists — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, pianist Misha Dichter and cellist Stephen Kates.

Sen. Kennedy will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The senator first appeared with the Boston Symphony last summer when he turns to the U. S. this summer after winning prizes at the famed Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow.

[redacted]

All the participants, including the players, guest artists and music director, will contribute their services to this concert for the benefit of the Pension Fund. The fund pays out some $240,000 each year to help support over 95 retired orchestra members or their widows.

The Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, co-chairmanned by Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Wenham, has planned a reception for the guest artists following the concert. Mrs. Richard R. Higgins of Dedham is heading the reception committee.

Tickets for the concert are on sale at Symphony Hall Box Office, 266-1492.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 21,500
DEC 2 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY SPECIAL FUND CONCERT

The members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra take particular interest in the selection of artists for their Pension Fund Concerts. They know that the Boston Symphony Pension Fund supports some 95 retired members and widows annually—almost the equivalent of an entire second orchestra. The orchestra members and Music Director contribute their services for these concerts, and give warm welcome to the guest artists who help them add to the Fund, which pays out some $240,000 each year.

For their Pension Fund concert Sunday evening, December 11, Erich Leinsdorf and the Orchestra have invited no less than three artists to appear: Misha Dichter, pianist, Stephen Kates, cellist, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, narrator. The two young musicians made a triumphant return to the United States this summer after winning prizes in Moscow at the famed Tchaikovsky Competition. In September they performed at a special concert in the White House at which President and Mrs. Johnson honored the American winners of the contest. Mr. Kates will open the Symphony Hall concert with Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, Op. 104. Mr. Dichter will close the program with the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1.

Senator Kennedy has accepted the Orchestra's invitation to narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The Senator first appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood last summer when he also was narrator in "A Lincoln Portrait" at a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,258
NOV 30 1966

Kennedy to Read At Concert for Pension Fund

BOSTON (UPI) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., in the unusual role of dramatic reader, will share the stage with two young Moscow competition winners at a benefit concert Dec. 11.

Kennedy will be narrator in Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" during a Boston Symphony Orchestra pension fund concert.

The other featured soloists will be pianist Misha Dichter and cellist Stephen Kates, both winners in last summer's Tchaikovsky competition. They will perform concertos by Tchaikovsky and Dvorak in the program conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 5 1966

Senator Edward Kennedy and his Joan, just returning from the African trip Joan discussed in this column in October, will be top-spot in two parties this coming weekend, one here and one in Washington.

On Friday, the senator will be master of ceremonies with Gilbert Hahn Jr. in a byplay written by Art Buchwald especially for the Symphony Ball at Washington's Sheraton Park ballroom. Joan Kennedy is co-chairman of the ball with Mrs. Hahn, and their table of guests will include Italian Ambassador and Mrs. Fenoaltea and Vice President and Mrs. Humphrey. French Ambassador and Mme. Lucet, who were in Boston last weekend for the Legion of Honor reception at the French Consulate, will also join the diplomatic guests, and the Sargent Shrivers plan to join the Kennedys for this thousand-guest party.

On Sunday the senator and his wife will of course be in Boston, where he is repeating his impressive Tanglewood narration of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" with the BSO. There won't be a repetition of the memorable party that Mme. Serge Koussevitzky gave at her beautiful Lenox house, but the Council of Friends of the BSO will give a reception after the concert, which benefits the orchestra's Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 6 1966

Dichter Not a Contest Trotter

PIANIST MISHA DICHTER
. . . B.S.O. Pension Fund soloist

By MARGO MILLER
Globe Critic

Misha Dichter spent a month last Summer in Moscow and came home with a silver medal in the piano division of the Tchaikovsky Competition, some observations about Russian student life and the hope he wouldn't be tied to one concerto.

This was in reference to Van Cliburn and the Rachmaninoff Third, a combination which shot the Texan to the top Tchaikovsky prize and a non-stop concert career.

Dichter, who is 21 and Juilliard '68, says every performance date now means several weeks away from his work on building a repertoire.

Dichter and the cellist Stephen Kates, also a second prize winner in Moscow, will be soloists at Sunday's evening Boston Symphony Pension Fund concert.

Kates will open the program with the Dvorak Concerto and after intermission Dichter will play the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1. This work and Beethoven's "Emperor" were the concertos played by Dichter in Moscow.

"I'd like to learn some of the early Mozart concertos and more Schubert for recitals. I don't listen much to records, except Schnabel. There isn't a great deal of contemporary music that interests me. For the moment I'll leave that to the others."

Dichter was born in Shanghai. His parents were Poles who left war-torn Europe via Shanghai. They accompanied him to the Moscow competition and then took him to see their former home in "a beautiful little city on the Baltic near Danzig."

Dichter, brought up in Beverly Hills, considered majoring in English at U.C.L.A. When he decided on music, he transferred to Juilliard, where he is a student of Rosina Lhevinne.

Moscow, Dichter recalls, was all work and little sightseeing or socializing. For many Europeans and all Russians, competitions like the Tchaikovsky are the first step in an artist's career and something they work toward from the moment they are selected to enter the state conservatories.

"They (the Russians) don't understand that we are free to enter or not, that we aren't sent by some official selection committee. It puzzled them that so many Americans, who weren't up to competition standards, came to Moscow."

Dichter is not a competition trotter. Their chief value, he thinks, is the publicity which helps a prize winner come to the attention of concert managers.

"The top people at Moscow are all of such a high level technically that you don't speak of technique but of artistic sensitivity."

Besides performing set competition pieces in Moscow, contestants were also asked to give their opinions on the first Russian concert grand.

"There was a piano pool of German Steinways. We could choose from four. Then there was this new Russian piano, the 'Red August.' Right out of the factory. Very rough in sound. Thumbs down on that one."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Hellenic Chronicle
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 22,068
DEC 1 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Boston
BOSTON, Mass.
Monthly Circ. 6,000
DEC 1966

Orchestras

A Lincoln Portrait, by Aaron Copland, will be narrated by Senator Edward M. Kennedy at the annual Pension Fund Concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sunday, December 11, 8:30 p.m., at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492). Misha Dichter, pianist, and Stephen Kates, cellist, both winners in last year's Tchaikowsky competition in Moscow, will be soloists. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the Friday afternoon (2 p.m.) Saturday evening (8:30 p.m.) concerts of December 16-17 and also the Tuesday evening (7:30 p.m.) concert of December 20. Charles Munch will be guest conductor for the remaining concerts: December 2, 3, 6, 8, 9, 10, 13, 15, 27, 29, 30 and 31. There will be an open rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, December 1.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 432,648
NOV 27 1966

★

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund concert on Sunday, Dec. 11, in Symphony Hall will feature three artists, in addition to Erich Leinsdorf, music director, and members of the Boston Symphony.

Misha Dichter, pianist, and Stephen Kates, cellist (both of whom made a triumphant return to the U. S. this summer after winning prizes in Moscow at the famed Tchaikovsky Competition) will appear in the concert. And Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait".

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra members will contribute their services for the Pension concerts, which support some 95 retired members and widows annually.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
DEC 2 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789

[redacted]

Pension Concert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra is an institution which makes Boston—and all New England—a better place in which to live.

One reason why this orchestra is able to attract the best musicians and thus maintain its world-renowned rating is because it operates its own pension fund to care for the musicians in their retirement. Currently, this fund provides some $239,000 each year to 95 BSO pensioners.

On Sunday evening, Dec. 11, the orchestra will present a special Sunday evening concert for the benefit of its Pension Fund. Here is a symphony of cause and concert deserving of everyone's support.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795
DEC 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 19 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
South Boston Tribune
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,263
NOV 22 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 21,500
NOV 25 1966

SYMPHONY PENSION FUND CONCERT

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the Orchestra will present a special concert Sunday evening, Dec. 11, for the benefit of its Pension Fund. Three guest artists have been invited to participate: Stephen Kates, cellist; Misha Dichter, pianist; and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy. Mr. Kates will be soloist in Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, Op. 104. Mr. Dichter will be heard in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, and Sen. Kennedy will be narrator in the Orchesta's performance of A Lincion Portrait by Aaron Copland.

Mr. Kates and Mr. Dichter were two of the winners this Summer in the Third Tchaikovsky Music Competition in Moscow. Each will be heard for the first time with orchestra in Boston. Senator Kennedy was also narrator with the Orchestra in A Lincoln Portrait this Summer at Tanglewood in a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the members of the Orchestra will contribute their services to aid the Pension Fund, which currently provides approximately $239,000 each year to some 95 Boston Symphony Orchestra pensioners.

The public sale of tickets for the December 11th Pension Fund Concert will begin tomorrow morning (Monday, Nov. 21) at 10 a.m. at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

PENSION FUND CONCERT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293
DEC 6 1966

'Unusual 'First' In Decor Is Handiwork Of 16 Wives

Symphony Hall To Be Decked With Christmas Greenery

By PEGGY BROWN
Society Editor

Regular Friday Symphony-goers will have a special treat this week: Symphony Hall decked with holly — or at least Christmas greenery.

"This unusual "first" in decor for staid Symphony Hall (which has been blossoming out ever since the magnificent transformation at the Golden Trumpet Ball last year) is through the courtesy of Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., wife of the Orchestra's manager, and 15 wives of Symphony players who will create the holiday motif on Thursday.

Originally the decorating was to have been done Saturday for Sunday night's Pension Fund Concert and reception. Fortunately for Friday subscribers, the ladies found Saturday less convenient.

So their handiwork, which will see seasonal greens used throughout the foyers and gallery including around the base of the statue of Henry Lee Higginson (founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra), will be enjoyed by many more

Friday's concert, by the way, with Dr. Charles Munch as guest conductor, features Berlioz's "L'Enfance du Christ," which he is conducting for the first time in 10 years.

The special Pension Fund Concert on Sunday features three artists — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, pianist Misha Dichter and cellist Stephen Kates.

Sen. Kennedy will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The senator first appeared with the Boston Symphony last summer when he narrated the same work at a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center. Kates and Dichter, made triumphant returns to the U. S. this summer after winning prizes at the famed Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow.

All the participants, including the players, guest artists and music director, will contribute their services to this concert for the benefit of the Pension Fund. The fund pays out some $240,000 each year to help support over 95 retired orchestra members or their widows.

The Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, co-chairmanned by Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Wenham, has planned a reception for the guest artists following the concert. Mrs. Richard R. Higgins of Dedham is heading the reception committee.

Tickets for the concert are on sale at Symphony Hall Box Office, 266-1492.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 21,500
DEC 2 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY SPECIAL FUND CONCERT

The members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra take particular interest in the selection of artists for their Pension Fund Concerts. They know that the Boston Symphony Pension Fund supports some 95 retired members and widows annually—almost the equivalent of an entire second orchestra. The orchestra members and Music Director contribute their services for these concerts, and give warm welcome to the guest artists who help them add to the Fund, which pays out some $240,000 each year.

For their Pension Fund concert Sunday evening, December 11, Erich Leinsdorf and the Orchestra have invited no less than three artists to appear: Misha Dichter, pianist, Stephen Kates, cellist, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, narrator. The two young musicians made a triumphant return to the United States this summer after winning prizes in Moscow at the famed Tchaikovsky Competition. In September they performed at a special concert in the White House at which President and Mrs. Johnson honored the American winners of the contest. Mr. Kates will open the Symphony Hall concert with Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, Op. 104. Mr. Dichter will close the program with the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1.

Senator Kennedy has accepted the Orchestra's invitation to narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." The Senator first appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood last summer when he also was narrator in "A Lincoln Portrait" at a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald News (e)
FALL RIVER, Mass.
Circ. 40,258
NOV 30 1966

Kennedy to Read At Concert for Pension Fund

BOSTON (UPI) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., in the unusual role of dramatic reader, will share the stage with two young Moscow competition winners at a benefit concert Dec. 11.

Kennedy will be narrator in Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" during a Boston Symphony Orchestra pension fund concert.

The other featured soloists will be pianist Misha Dichter and cellist Stephen Kates, both winners in last summer's Tchaikovsky competition. They will perform concertos by Tchaikovsky and Dvorak in the program conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 5 1966

Senator Edward Kennedy and his Joan, just returning from the African trip Joan discussed in this column in October, will be top-spot in two parties this coming weekend, one here and one in Washington.

On Friday, the senator will be master of ceremonies with Gilbert Hahn Jr. in a byplay written by Art Buchwald especially for the Symphony Ball at Washington's Sheraton Park ballroom. Joan Kennedy is co-chairman of the ball with Mrs. Hahn, and their table of guests will include Italian Ambassador and Mrs. Fenoaltea and Vice President and Mrs. Humphrey. French Ambassador and Mme. Lucet, who were in Boston last weekend for the Legion of Honor reception at the French Consulate, will also join the diplomatic guests, and the Sargent Shrivers plan to join the Kennedys for this thousand-guest party.

On Sunday the senator and his wife will of course be in Boston, where he is repeating his impressive Tanglewood narration of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" with the BSO. There won't be a repetition of the memorable party that Mme. Serge Koussevitzky gave at her beautiful Lenox house, but the Council of Friends of the BSO will give a reception after the concert, which benefits the orchestra's Pension Fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 6 1966

Dichter Not a Contest Trotter

PIANIST MISHA DICHTER
... B.S.O. Pension Fund soloist

By MARGO MILLER
Globe Critic

Misha Dichter spent a month last Summer in Moscow and came home with a silver medal in the piano division of the Tchaikovsky Competition, some observations about Russian student life and the hope he wouldn't be tied to one concerto.

This was in reference to Van Cliburn and the Rachmaninoff Third, a combination which shot the Texan to the top Tchaikovsky prize and a non-stop concert career.

Dichter, who is 21 and Juilliard '68, says every performance date now means several weeks away from his work on building a repertoire.

Dichter and the cellist Stephen Kates, also a second prize winner in Moscow, will be soloists at Sunday's evening Boston Symphony Pension Fund concert.

Kates will open the program with the Dvorak Concerto and after intermission Dichter will play the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1. This work and Beethoven's "Emperor" were the concertos played by Dichter in Moscow.

"I'd like to learn some of the early Mozart concertos and more Schubert for recitals. I don't listen much to records, except Schnabel. There isn't a great deal of contemporary music that interests me. For the moment I'll leave that to the others."

Dichter was born in Shanghai. His parents were Poles who left war-torn Europe via Shanghai. They accompanied him to the Moscow competition and then took him to see their former home in "a beautiful little city on the Baltic near Danzig."

Dichter, brought up in Beverly Hills, considered majoring in English at U.C.L.A. When he decided on music, he transferred to Juilliard, where he is a student of Rosina Lhevinne.

Moscow, Dichter recalls, was all work and little sightseeing or socializing. For many Europeans and all Russians, competitions like the Tchaikovsky are the first step in an artist's career and something they work toward from the moment they are selected to enter the state conservatories.

"They (the Russians) don't understand that we are free to enter or not, that we aren't sent by some official selection committee. It puzzled them that so many Americans, who weren't up to competition standards, came to Moscow."

Dichter is not a competition trotter. Their chief value, he thinks, is the publicity which helps a prize winner come to the attention of concert managers.

"The top people at Moscow are all of such a high level technically that you don't speak of technique but of artistic sensitivity."

Besides performing set competition pieces in Moscow, contestants were also asked to give their opinions on the first Russian concert grand.

"There was a piano pool of German Steinways. We could choose from four. Then there was this new Russian piano, the 'Red August.' Right out of the factory. Very rough in sound. Thumbs down on that one."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Hellenic Chronicle
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 22,068
DEC 1 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Boston
BOSTON, Mass.
Monthly Circ. 6,000
DEC 1966

Orchestras

A Lincoln Portrait, by Aaron Copland, will be narrated by Senator Edward M. Kennedy at the annual Pension Fund Concert of Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sunday, December 11, 8:30 p.m., at Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492). Misha Dichter, pianist, and Stephen Kates, cellist, both winners in last year's Tchaikowsky competition in Moscow, will be soloists. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct.

Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct the Friday afternoon (2 p.m.) Saturday evening (8:30 p.m.) concerts of December 16-17 and also the Tuesday evening (7:30 p.m.) concert of December 20. Charles Munch will be guest conductor for the remaining concerts: December 2, 3, 6, 8, 9, 10, 13, 15, 27, 29, 30 and 31. There will be an open rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, December 1.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 432,648
NOV 27 1966

★

Boston Symphony Orchestra's Pension Fund concert on Sunday, Dec. 11, in Symphony Hall will feature three artists, in addition to Erich Leinsdorf, music director, and members of the Boston Symphony.

Misha Dichter, pianist, and Stephen Kates, cellist (both of whom made a triumphant return to the U. S. this summer after winning prizes in Moscow at the famed Tchaikovsky Competition) will appear in the concert. And Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait".

Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra members will contribute their services for the Pension concerts, which support some 95 retired members and widows annually.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
DEC 2 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
NOV 24 1966

Pension Concert

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra is an institution which makes Boston—and all New England—a better place in which to live.

One reason why this orchestra is able to attract the best musicians and thus maintain its world-renowned rating is because it operates its own pension fund to care for the musicians in their retirement. Currently, this fund provides some $239,000 each year to 95 BSO pensioners.

On Sunday evening, Dec. 11, the orchestra will present a special Sunday evening concert for the benefit of its Pension Fund. Here is a symphony of cause and concert deserving of everyone's support.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795
DEC 4 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
NOV 19 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
South Boston Tribune
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 7,263
NOV 22 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Post Gazette
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 21,500
NOV 25 1966

SYMPHONY PENSION FUND CONCERT

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that the Orchestra will present a special concert Sunday evening, Dec. 11, for the benefit of its Pension Fund. Three guest artists have been invited to participate: Stephen Kates, cellist; Misha Dichter, pianist; and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy. Mr. Kates will be soloist in Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor, Op. 104. Mr. Dichter will be heard in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, and Sen. Kennedy will be narrator in the Orchesta's performance of A Linclon Portrait by Aaron Copland.

Mr. Kates and Mr. Dichter were two of the winners this Summer in the Third Tchaikovsky Music Competition in Moscow. Each will be heard for the first time with orchestra in Boston. Senator Kennedy was also narrator with the Orchestra in A Lincoln Portrait this Summer at Tanglewood in a benefit concert for the Berkshire Music Center.

Mr. Leinsdorf and the members of the Orchestra will contribute their services to aid the Pension Fund, which currently provides approximately $239,000 each year to some 95 Bos-Symphony Orchestra pensioners.

The public sale of tickets for the December 11th Pension Fund Concert will begin tomorrow morning (Monday, Nov. 21) at 10 a.m. at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

87

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 12 1966
18

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
DEC 12 1966

From Senator to Artist, for 30 Minutes

By ALAN LUPO
Staff Reporter

The biggest Democrat in the state paid homage Sunday night to a Republican, and the audience called him back twice in appreciation.

But there was nothing political about the occasion. It was purely poetry and music and history.

For the second time this year, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was standing before the Boston Symphony Orchestra and narrating Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait."

Sen. Kennedy first narrated the piece last Summer at Tanglewood. On Sunday night, he performed at Symphony Hall, where he followed celloist Stephen Kates and preceded pianist Misha Dichter.

At 9:20 p.m. the senator walked out in front of the orchestra with stage presence and a shy smile.

He acknowledged the applause, bowed slightly, nodded to the conductor, sat down, pinned a small microphone around his neck, crossed his legs and waited.

For seven minutes, Erich Leinsdorf led his orchestra in Copland's melodic tribute to Abraham Lincoln. Then the senator, dressed in a black tuxedo, approached the red podium and began reading from a sheet of paper.

"'Fellow citizens, we cannot escape history.' That is what he said, that is what Abraham Lincoln said . . ."

Occasionally, the orchestra would drown out the senator, even though he would raise his voice at the proper places.

At first, the reading appeared just a little bit strained, but the senator overcame this quickly.

"He was born in Kentucky, raised in Indiana and lived in Illinois," Kennedy read in the broad Massachusetts dialect.

The senator rocked his body slightly from left to right.

"When standing erect he was six feet four inches tall. And this is what he said:

" 'It is the eternal struggle between two principals — right and wrong — throughout the world . . . No matter in what shape it comes, whether from the mouth of a king who seeks to bestride the people of his own nation and live by the fruit of their labor, or from one race of men as an apology for enslaving another race, it is the same tyrannical principle!' "

When Kennedy approached the end of his text, he was quoting Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, and the orchestra built up to a massive crescendo that was followed quickly with an equally massive round of applause.

Kennedy shook hands with the conductor, then with the first violinist and strode off the stage. He could not resist a short political wave of the right hand to an orchestra member.

Kennedy's wife, Joan, and his mother, Rose, were in the audience that called the senator back twice for bows.

But even in this atmosphere the senator was unable to completely shun his workday role.

When he had entered the hall earlier he was approached by eight Northeastern University College of Nursing students who pleaded that he help them in a current dispute with the school's administration.

The girls have contended that the University reneged on a promise to extend the three-year nursing course to a five-year course that would include a B.S. degree. The matter has been taken to court.

Kennedy listened for awhile, then went back stage to prepare for his appearance, but he consented to see one student spokesman, Victoria Alla, 21, of Wayland.

Miss Alla said the senator promised he would discuss the problem with Asa Knowles, Northeastern president.

A few moments later the senator went on stage and for a half hour that night he shed his political role for that of the artist.

SEN. KENNEDY READS: LEINSDORF CONDUCTS BOSTON SYMPHONY IN A LINCOLN MEMORIAL
(Bill Brett Photo)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Boston University News
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 9,500
DEC 7 1966

Benefit Concert

Half-price tickets to a special benefit concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are available to students at the Symphony Hall box office.

The concert, to be given at 8:30 pm Sunday, will feature two prize-winning soloists from the 1966 Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, performing works by Tchaikovsky and Dvorak, and Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," featuring narration by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

Proceeds will benefit the BSO pension fund.

The Pension Concert Stayed with Tradition

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA: Pension Fund Concert. Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director, playing Dvorak's Concerto for cello, in B minor, Op. 104, with Stephen Kates, cellist; Coplandt's Lincoln Portrait, with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, narrator; Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, in B-flat minor, Op. 23, with Misha Dichter, pianist. Sunday evening at Symphony Hall.

By JOHN TEMPLE
Contributing Critic

The grand tradition of the B.S.O. Pension Fund concerts is one of pleasing the crowd with sure-fire celebrities. At first thought, therefore, the introduction of new performers at these concerts would hardly seem logical.

Stephen Kates and Misha Dichter, however, as Tchaikovsky Competition prize-winners, have fast become celebrities, and Sen. Kennedy needs no introduction. Working in basically romantic repertory, then, they wound up pretty close to the tradition after all.

The Copland and Tchaikovsky performances were both presented at Tanglewood last Summer, so the main event of note was Stephen Kates' reading of the Dvorak Cello Concerto.

It is a difficult work to carry off well. The orchestra raises itself to impulsive climaxes against which the soloist seems practically defenseless. As a result, the dialogue of the participants continually threatens to become meaningless.

Much of the work's most effective writing is to be found in its softer, more lyrical sections.

In addition, the cellist must compete against some delightful woodwind writing in just these sections, and so here, too, the work resists use as a display vehicle.

Kates' approach to the work was grand and intense, but he seemed unable to produce a tone large enough to match it. In a sense, the problems in the piece itself were mirrored in his own playing, and it was the warmth of his second movement that stood out most successfully.

It was unfortunate that the orchestra's winds could not always speak in his intimate tones, and tended to obscure his subtler touches.

Perhaps Kates and Dichter, who made a great thing of the slow movement of the Tchaikovsky, should really be playing the Beethoven cello sonatas together. Let us hope they do.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
DEC 11 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY conductor Eric Leinsdorf and Sen. Edward Kennedy are shown at Symphony Hall rehearsal Saturday. They were preparing for the John F. Kennedy Memorial Program to be performed today. (Ollie Noonan Jr. Photo)

Music 12-10-66 Lowell Sun

Boston Symphony to Present Pension Concert

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—A special pension fund concert will be played tomorrow evening in Symphony hall, Boston, by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, music director.

Appearing as guest artists will be Misha Dichter, pianist; Stephen Kates, cellist, and Senator Edward M. Kennedy who will serve as narrator during a performance of "A Lincoln Portrait," which was composed by Aaron Copland.

To open the program the orchestra will perform the Dvorak "Cello Concerto in B minor" with Stephen Kates as soloist. Mr. Kates was a top prize winner last summer at the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. The Copland score will follow, and the program will close with the Tchaikovsky "Piano Concerto No. 1" with Misha Dichter in the role of soloist. The pianist was another American artist who was declared a prize winner in the competition in Moscow.

Erich Leinsdorf

DR. CHARLES MUNCH returns to the Boston Symphony as guest conductor for the concerts of Tuesday and Thursday of next week. In the Tuesday concert, the third in the "Cambridge" series, and again on Thursday, Dr. Munch and the Orchestra will present a complete performance of "L'Enfance du Christ" by Berlioz. The Orchestra will be assisted by John McCollum, tenor; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Theodor Uppman, baritone, and Donald Gramm, bass. The Harvard Glee Club Radcliff Choral society wil essay the ensemble passages.

For Friday and Saturday's concerts Erich Leinsdorf has invited violinist, Itzahak Perlman to appear as guest soloist. Mr. Perlman who is a musical product of both Israel and America will be heard in a performance of Prokofiev's "Violin Concerto No. 2 in G minor."

Itzahak Perlman was born in Tel-Aviv in 1945, the son of Polish Jews who emigrated to Israel in the mid 1930's. His musical studies were at Tel-Aviv Academy of Music, during which years he also gave concerts in the city and played frequently for the state broadcasting company. In early childhood he was stricken with polio, and as a result plays the violin in a seated position.

HIS FIRST APPEARANCE in the United States was at the age of 13 on the Sullivan TV show, along with Israeli musicians. He was immediately accepted for study at the Juilliard school, where he worked with Ivan Galamian and Dorothy DeLay. His New York debut took place in 1963 at Carnegie hall, and the following year he won the coveted Leventritt Award. Last season he made his first major concert tour. He has played with the orchestras of Cleveland, Indianapolis, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Montreal, Honolulu, St. Louis and Seattle, among others.

For the remaining parts of the Friday and Saturday concerts, Dr. Leinsdorf has listed the Beethoven Leonore Overture, No. 2; the Symphony No. 4, in B flat major, Op. 60, by the same composer, and the Weber-Berlioz Invitation to the Dance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
DEC 12 1966

Symphony Pension Concert

By DANIEL ROSEN

The annual pension fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra featured the two American silver medal (second place) winners of the Third Tchaikovsky Music Competition in Moscow, and Senator Edward M. Kennedy narrating the Lincoln Portrait.

Stephen Kates, a twenty-three year old New Yorker, gave an uneven account of the Dvorak concerto, being hampered by Leinsdorf's predilection for accelerating tempi. Kates is a gritty player whose tone has a tendency to become coarse, but never insipid. His major flaw though is an immature technique; the Dvorak was simply too difficult, passage work and double stops being rough and not sufficiently articulated. Kates is however, a gifted musician. His conception of the piece was a sound one and many times inspired, especially in the adagio.

LINCOLN PORTRAIT

Copland's Lincoln Portrait was played magnificently by the BSO in contrast to the shoddy playing, especially in the Winds, in the Dvorak. The performance was aided by Kennedy's narrating which, despite the irregular tempo, contained the certain magic that belongs to what one might call the "Kennedy sound."

The highlight of the concert though was Misha Dichter's impressive performance of the Tchaikovsky. Dichter's playing is on a grand scale. He has a big technique, a sparkling tone and a lyrical sensitivity far beyond what one would expect of a twenty-one year old musician.

His playing is remarkably similar to pianists like Cliburn and Browning who, like Dichter also studied with Rosina Lhevinne. Dichter though is at a more advanced stage than Cliburn was when he scored his resounding triumph in Moscow.

It is significant that Cliburn and many others have been victims of the star system indigenous to the great competitions. Before they are ready they are catapulted to fame and proclaimed as master musicians, which, in most cases, they are not. One hopes then, that Dichter and Kates do not become spoiled by success, for while they are promising performers of some accomplishment, they are not yet mature musicians ready to take on the likes of late Beethoven or Bach.

The Program:

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conductor, gave a concert at Symphony Hall last night for the Orchestra's Pension Fund. Misha Dichter pianist, Stephen Kates, cellist, and Senator Edward M. Kennedy, narrator, were the soloists.

Concerto for Cello in B minor, Op. 104 ..... Dvorak
Lincoln Portrait ..... Copland
Piano Concerto in B-flat minor, Op. 23 ..... Tchaikovsky

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
DEC 11 1966

Moscow Winners, Sen. Kennedy Soloists for B.S.O. Pension

The annual benefit concert for the Boston Symphony Pension Fund will take place in Symphony Hall Sunday evening, Dec. 11, at 8:30. Erich Leinsdorf, who will conduct, and the orchestra will donate their services to the fund which pays out about $240,000 a year to 95 retired players and widows.

Three artists will appear in the concert. Stephen Kates will open the program as soloist in the Dvorak Cello Concerto and Misha Dichter will close it with the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1. The two young men won prizes last Summer in Moscow's Tchaikovsky Competitive. After a Tanglewood concert in August, they performed in September at a special White House concert attended by President and Mrs. Johnson.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy will participate in the middle portion of the Pension Fund concert. He will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." Kennedy also narrated the work last Summer for the Berkshire Music Center.

Misha Dichter, born in Shanghai 21 years ago, was raised in California and began his musical education there. Prior to entering the Juilliard School of Music, he attended U.C.L.A. where he won two important honors from his music school, the Juilliard Beethoven Concerto Contest and the Joseph Lhevinne Scholarship, the most significant recognition the school has to offer.

This Autumn he made his recital debut in Boston at a critically acclaimed performance at the Morning Musicales. He continues his studies with Rosina Lhevinne at Juilliard.

Twenty - [illegible] old Stephen Ka[illegible] professional [illegible] studied at Juilliard [illegible] won numerous performance prizes including the Third Gregor Piatigorsky Biennial Artist Award and the San Francisco Symphony Foundation Award. Kates played solo cello with the American Symphony Orchestra and joined the Pittsburgh Symphony for its 1964 tour of the Middle East and Europe.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755
DEC 12 1966

Senator assists

'Lincoln Portrait'

By Richard J. Cattani

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy joined two of this year's Tchaikovsky Competition winners Sunday night to highlight the Boston Symphony's 140th Pension Fund Concert, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

The Senator repeated his Tanglewood performance as the narrator in Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait." He read with a wholly satisfying sense of cadence and a musical inflection. His patriotic aura (one young lady remarked during intermission that his smile was like "The Star Spangled Banner") was most fitting for the musical tribute to President Lincoln.

Tchaikovsky competition winners

There was an aptness to his reading of the opening words, "Fellow citizens, we cannot escape history." And he conveyed a simple conviction in Lincoln's democratic ground rule: "As I would not be a slave, so would I not be a master."

Cellist Stephen Kates was the first of the Tchaikovsky Competition winners to perform. He brought a high sense of drama to Dvořák's Concerto in B minor. He attacked the opening Allegro with passion and daring, then tempered his playing of the Adagio into a vibrant singing.

Mr. Kates often tended to press into vehemence, especially after entering difficult passages, of which there are many in this concerto. At times his playing seemed out of focus with the orchestra. Though the golden thread of inevitability of the performance was somewhat frayed, there were many moments, as in the Finale, when the music throbbed with genuine emotion.

Bravura artist

The other competition winner, Misha Dichter, performed Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor. One of Mr. Dichter's many virtues is his ability to keep his head in the midst of bravura passages. And he admirably, selflessly lifted his playing into the fabric of the orchestral performance as a whole. The dialogue between orchestra and piano was always balanced, clean.

Mr. Dichter showed himself to be a fine ensemble musician. He leaned toward a consistently firm yet poetic understatement, which heightened the effectiveness of the concerto's maestoso, fiery, or leaping passages. Vigorously applauded, he left no afterimage of mannerisms, just of the music.

It was interesting that the orchestra showed its giving nature as, in helping its pensioners, it used the occasion for a showcase for the deserving young performers. During the past few years the Boston Symphony Pension Institution has paid annually about a quarter of a million dollars to nearly 100 pensioners and their widows.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
DEC 12 1966

The Pension Concert Stayed with Tradition

By JOHN TEMPLE
Contributing Critic

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Pension Fund Concert. Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director, playing Dvorak's Concerto for cello, in B minor, Op. 104, with Stephen Kates, cellist; Copland's Lincoln Portrait, with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, narrator; Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1, in B-flat minor, Op. 23, with Misha Dichter, pianist. Sunday evening at Symphony Hall.

The grand tradition of the B.S.O. Pension Fund concerts is one of pleasing the crowd with sure-fire celebrities. At first thought, therefore, the introduction of new performers at these concerts would hardly seem logical.

Stephen Kates and Misha Dichter, however, as Tchaikovsky Competition prize-winners, have fast become celebrities, and Sen. Kennedy needs no introduction. Working in basically romantic repertory, then, they wound up pretty close to the tradition after all.

The Copland and Tchaikovsky performances were both presented at Tanglewood last Summer, so the main event of note was Stephen Kates' reading of the Dvorak Cello Concerto.

It is a difficult work to carry off well. The orchestra raises itself to impulsive climaxes against which the soloist seems practically defenseless. As a result, the dialogue of the participants continually threatens to become meaningless.

Much of the work's most effective writing is to be found in its softer, more lyrical sections.

In addition, the cellist must compete against some delightful woodwind writing in just these sections, and so here, too, the work resists use as a display vehicle.

Kates' approach to the work was grand and intense, but he seemed unable to produce a tone large enough to match it. In a sense, the problems in the piece itself were mirrored in his own playing, and it was the warmth of his second movement that stood out most successfully.

It was unfortunate that the orchestra's winds could not always speak in his intimate tones, and tended to obscure his subtler touches.

Perhaps Kates and Dichter, who made a great thing of the slow movement of the Tchaikovsky, should really be playing the Beethoven cello sonatas together. Let us hope they do.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 280,099
DEC 11 1966

Symphony This Week

Concert Tonight For Pension Fund

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is entering upon a week of considerable diversity. Tonight Erich Leinsdorf and the Orchestra will present a special Pension Fund Concert with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy as narrator, Misha Dichter as piano soloist and Stephen Kates as cello soloist.

All participants will contribute their services for the benefit of the Pension Fund.

Charles Munch will conclude his present visit as guest conductor this week at the Tuesday and Thursday evening concerts. Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the 21-year old Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman will make his first appearances with the orchestra, Mr. Leinsdorf conducting.

Tonight's Pension Fund Concert will begin with the Dvorak Cello Concerto in B minor, Op. 104, with soloist Stephen Kates, who was a prize-winner last summer at the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. Then Sen. Kennedy will join Mr. Leinsdorf and the Orchestra as narrator in "A Lincoln Portrait" by Aaron Copland. After intermission Misha Dichter, another American artist who was a prize winner in the Moscow competition, will perform the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1. Some tickets for the Pension Fund Concert are still available at the Symphony Hall box office.

TUESDAY NIGHT, the third of the "Cambridge" series, and Thursday night, the third of the Thursday "A" series, Dr. Munch will devote his program to a complete performance of "L'Enfance du Christ" by Berlioz, assisted by John McCollum, tenor; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Theodor Uppman, baritone; Donald Gramm, bass; and the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. The Tuesday "Cambridge" concert will be telecast and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Channel 2 and WGBH-FM.

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director, will return to the podium for the weekend concerts and introduce the young violinist Itzhak Perlman, who will play the Prokofiev Violin Concerto No. 2.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
DEC 5 1966

Social Chatter

Yule Greens to Decorate Symphony Hall for Concerts

FOR THE FIRST TIME, Symphony Hall will be decorated with Christmas greens, Sunday evening, Dec. 11, when the Pension Fund Concert is held there. Members of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who are unflagging in their interest to add special charm to the musical activities of Symphony, are responsible for this innovation.

After the Pension Fund concert, they will give a reception under the direction of Mrs. Richard R. Higgins of Dedham, for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, Misha Dichter and Stephen Kates. They will be guest artists with the orchestra in this special concert, the proceeds of which help support approximately 95 emeritus members of the Boston Symphony.

At the concert, Sen. Kennedy will be the narrator of Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," Misha Dichter will be the soloist with Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. I in B flat minor, and Stephen Kates will be the soloist with Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B minor.

Mrs. Thomas D. Perry, Jr., wife of the orchestra's manager, [illegible] occasion and [illegible] by a number of the players' wives in the [illegible] Symphony Hall.

Among those greeting Sen. Kennedy, Mr. Dichter and Mr. Kates at the reception will be trustees of the Boston Symphony, members of the orchestra and their wives, Mrs. Norman L. Cahners and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot, co-chairmen of the Council of Friends, members of the Council and invited guests.

89

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
DEC 13 1966

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

Mrs. Edward M. Kennedy sparkled for her husband in more ways than one Sunday evening at Symphony Hall. The occasion was the Pension Fund Concert at which Senator Kennedy, resplendent in white tie and tails, spoke the narration of Copland's "Lincoln Portrait."

Mrs. Kennedy and her mother-in-law, Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, were easily the most eye-catching of the guests, both at the concert and at the reception that followed. The senator's wife wore a short shift-style dress made entirely of shimmering silver sequins, that must have been a magnet for her husband's eyes as he stood at the podium speaking the great words from Lincoln's Gettysburg Address. Mrs. Joseph Kennedy wore an appropriately colored (considering her first name) rose brocade coat over a short white brocade dress with long diamond pendant earrings and diamond bracelets.

The concert was magnificent, and as one guest said "soul satisfying." In addition to Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," two young artists of great promise performed two familiar and beloved works. Tall, handsome Stephen Kates was the soloist in Dvorak's Concerto for Cello in B Minor, and young Misha Dichter brought the packed audience to its feet with his performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor.

It was an audience comprised mainly of young people, although there were many regular devotees of Symphony there. Among them were Dr. and Mrs. Norman Budde, with Mr. and Mrs. Alan Carr, all up from Hingham; Mrs. Joseph Wallace of Cambridge; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Bernat of Chestnut Hill, Mrs. Bernat's brown knit superbly cut; Augusta Hornblower of Chestnut Hill, a debutante of this season, looking pretty in a blue suit with brass buttons; Henry B. Cabot of Dover, president of the trustees of the B.S.O., sitting with Mrs. George L. Sargent of Dover, who had flown in from Detroit that day, and who does such a wonderful job as publicity chairman of the Council of Friends of the B.S.O.; Mrs. Nelson S. Bartlett of Wellesley; Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Meserve of Waltham, and many others.

After the concert, from which the audience were reluctant to let the performers leave, invited guests gathered at a reception in the Gallery of Symphony Hall to meet the three soloists of the evening.

Long tables, glittering with silver coffee services, and tall candelabra holding tapering red candles, filled either side of the big high-ceilinged room. Centerpieces of red carnations and Christmas greens were on each table, and a Christmas red fruit punch and petit fours were also served.

Members of the Council of Friends poured for the guests, among them Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Chestnut Hill and Cohasset; lovely Mrs. Alexander Ellis Jr. of Concord, in a black silk suit, a pale blue blouse the perfect complement under it, and Mrs. Ralph B. Williams of Chestnut Hill in sunny yellow.

Greeting the guests at the entrance to the gallery was Mrs. Richard R. Higgins of Dedham, chairman of the reception. She looked charming and Christmassy in a bright green suit, and another who chose to wear bright green was Mrs. B. Barton Loomis of Beacon Hill.

Two conductors' wives were chatting together. Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the founder of the Berkshire Music Center where Senator Kennedy first performed the Lincoln Portrait last summer, and dark haired Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf, wife of the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, wearing a gold lame suit, were "talking shop." Many of the musicians from the orchestra, outstanding in their white ties, were there with their wives.

Others at this reception, which gave the audience a chance to thank in person the musicians, the soloists, and their conductor, for the beauty and pleasure they had given them that evening, and the many other evenings throughout the year, were Mrs. Augustus Soule of Brookline, who was with Mrs. S. Abbott Smith of Marlboro Street; Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord and Mr. and Mrs. George A. Parson of Louisburg Square, who were all together; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dean of Wellesley; Mrs. Albert Titcomb of Boston, a red and black silk dress and matching jacket her choice; Miss Virginia Fay of Boston in palest green; Mrs. John L. Grandin of Chestnut Hill in bright pink, and Mrs. Frank Allen of Boston.

A magnificent evening of music and a delightful reception, the proceeds of which go directly to help the orchestra's much deserved pension fund.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ERICH LEINSDORF
Music Director

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Evening, December 11, 1966

140th Pension Fund Concert

BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director

Soloists

MISHA DICHTER, Piano

STEPHEN KATES, Cello

Narrator

SENATOR EDWARD M. KENNEDY

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

t the Symphony reception
ght, Mrs. Edward Kennedy
corative cut. Her dinner and
rs. Paul Rugo (right), Mrs.

Joseph Kennedy, diamonds sparkling with her pink coat, talks about the late President Kennedy's visit to Belgium with J. P. Van Bellinghen who escorted John F. Kennedy there. (Sam Hammat Photo)

ony Honors Sen. Kennedy

Reeds, the Robert Weisses, the Joseph Gargans and Mrs. Paul Rugo—came to the reception, Joan's sliver dress shining as though it were molten, illumined her face, which showed no sign of weariness, although their week-end schedule included a late-late Washington Ball for which both she and her husband were cochairmen, and a stopover at Hyannis to see ailling Joseph Kennedy at a Boston hospital!

Rose Kennedy explained graciously to the Symphony committee that she "couldn't stay long but did want to thank those wonderful soloists."

She also exchanged addresses with former Embassy Counselor in Brussels J. P. Bellinghen, who escorted President Kennedy when he was in Belgium. The Van Bellinghens are now in Cambridge, where he is at the Harvard Center for International Affairs. A most attractive girl, his wife "enjoys the music here almost best of all."

Mme. Serge Koussevitzky was warmly welcomed by the Kennedys, who spoke immediately of her beautiful party at Tanglewood this Summer after the senator's first appearance as narrator for the Copland "Lincoln."

A black lace dress and pale emeraled twist of chiffon setting off her fragile exquisite face, the widow of the famed conductor and founder of Tanglewood waved her slim hands.

"It was nothing; we are only waiting to have you come again," she said.

Still others there to share coffee and punch with the Kennedys and the members of the orchestra were the Robert M. P. Kennards, Mrs. Frank Allen, Mrs. Cahners, in slim chic black and pearls. Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr. in pale pink, Dr. and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins, the S. Abbbot Smiths and another score or two.

Rose Kennedy returned to Hyannis, and the senator and his wife will be back in Washington today.

What did she enjoy most about their trip? "Having all that time with my husband after so many busy weeks, and meeting so many friendly people."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
DEC 8 1966

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

Sunday will be a very special day at Symphony Hall. For at 8:30 p.m. the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert for the benefit of their own members, and a memorable one it promises to be.

Called the Pension Fund Concert, the current musicians of the orchestra have invited three notable personalities to perform with them. The proceeds from the evening will help support 95 emeritus members of the orchestra.

The program to be played is of the kind that Friday afternoon subscribers often wish the B. S. O. would perform all the time. It begins with Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B. Minor, with Stephen Kates as soloist. Following this, Senator Edward M. Kennedy will be the narrator in Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" — it will be of interest to the guests to see his rendition of this after Marian Anderson's performance of this same narration on television on Tuesday evening. Finally, Misha Dichter will be the soloist in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B. flat minor, Op. 23.

Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., wife of the orchestra's manager, and a number of the players' wives are decorating venerable old Symphony Hall with greens for the occasion. It will look very seasonal and gay for the reception following the concert that the Council of Friends of the B. S. O. have invited guests to attend. This will take place in the Gallery and will honor the three soloists. Mrs. Richard R. Higgins of Dedham is chairman of this reception.

Among those greeting Senator Kennedy, Mr. Dichter and Mr. Kates will be the trustees of the Boston Symphony, members of the orchestra and their wives, Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Wenham, co-chairmen of the Council of Friends, and others.

To fit candles onto the spikes some candlesticks have heat an ice pick and gently melt holes in the centers.

SLICK TRICK

Mort

nta Business Out of Hand

going to happen when he discovers we were not telling the truth, when he KNOWS that his parents have ALWAYS told him the truth. He has been brought up to know that he can always trust us. Perhaps he will be mature enough to accept this one lapse.

In our home, we also celebrate Advent, with the wreath and candles, and an Advent calendar. Our son looks forward to every day so that he can open the next door on his calendar.

You will probably receive quite a few letters against your stand, but be assured that there are a good many of us who feel as you do.

Thoughts of a Santa, believe, me, and will always exist in the minds of his believers.

Medico

89

Program

PENSION FUND CONCERT

Sunday Evening, December 11, 1966, at 8:30 o'clock

DVOŘÁK . . . . . *Concerto for Cello, in B minor, Op. 104

I. Allegro II. Adagio ma non troppo III. Finale: Allegro moderato

Soloist
STEPHEN KATES

COPLAND . . . . . Lincoln Portrait

SENATOR EDWARD M. KENNEDY, Narrator

INTERMISSION

TCHAIKOVSKY . . . . *Piano Concerto No. 1, in B-flat minor, Op. 23

I. Allegro non troppo e molto maestoso; Allegro con spirito
II. Andantino semplice; Allegro vivace assai
III. Allegro con fuoco

Soloist
MISHA DICHTER

MR. DICHTER PLAYS THE STEINWAY PIANO

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 12 1966

Joseph Kennedy, diamonds sparkling with her pink coat, talks about the late President Kennedy's visit to Belgium with J. P. Van Bellinghen who escorted John F. Kennedy there. (Sam Hammat Photo)

ony Honors Sen. Kennedy

t the Symphony reception
ht, Mrs. Edward Kennedy
corative cut. Her dinner and
rs. Paul Rugo (right). Mrs.

Reeds, the Robert Weisses, the Joseph Gargans and Mrs. Paul Rugo—came to the reception, Joan's sliver dress shining as though it were molten, illumined her face, which showed no sign of weariness, although their week-end schedule included a late-late Washington Ball for which both she and her husband were cochairmen, and a stopover at Hyannis to see ailling Joseph Kennedy at a Boston hospital!

Rose Kennedy explained graciously to the Symphony committee that she "couldn't stay long but did want to thank those wonderful soloists."

She also exchanged addresses with former Embassy Counselor in Brussels J. P. Bellinghen, who escorted President Kennedy when he was in Belgium. The Van Bellinghens are now in Cambridge, where he is at the Harvard Center for International Affairs. A most attractive girl, his wife "enjoys the music here almost best of all."

Mme. Serge Koussevitzky was warmly welcomed by the Kennedys, who spoke immediately of her beautiful party at Tanglewood this Summer after the senator's first appearance as narrator for the Copland "Lincoln."

A black lace dress and pale emeraled twist of chiffon setting off her fragile exquisite face, the widow of the famed conductor and founder of Tanglewood waved her slim hands.

"It was nothing; we are only waiting to have you come again," she said.

Still others there to share coffee and punch with the Kennedys and the members of the orchestra were the Robert M. P. Kennards, Mrs. Frank Allen, Mrs. Cahners, in slim chic black and pearls. Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr. in pale pink, Dr. and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins, the S. Abbbot Smiths and another score or two.

Rose Kennedy returned to Hyannis, and the senator and his wife will be back in Washington today.

What did she enjoy most about their trip? "Having all that time with my husband after so many busy weeks, and meeting so many friendly people."

Dichter brought the packed audience to its feet with his performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor.

It was an audience comprised mainly of young people, although there were many regular devotees of Symphony there. Among them were Dr. and Mrs. Norman Budde, with Mr. and Mrs. Alan Carr, all up from Hingham; Mrs. Joseph Wallace of Cambridge; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Bernat of Chestnut Hill, Mrs. Bernat's brown knit superbly cut; Augusta Hornblower of Chestnut Hill, a debutante of this season, looking pretty in a blue suit with brass buttons; Henry B. Cabot of Dover, president of the trustees of the B.S.O., sitting with Mrs. George L. Sargent of Dover, who had flown in from Detroit that day, and who does such a wonderful job as publicity chairman of the Council of Friends of the B.S.O.; Mrs. Nelson S. Bartlett of Wellesley; Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Meserve of Waltham, and many others.

After the concert, from which the audience were reluctant to let the performers leave, invited guests gathered at a reception in the Gallery of Symphony Hall to meet the three soloists of the evening.

Long tables, glittering with silver coffee services, and tall candelabra holding tapering red candles, filled either side of the big high-ceilinged room. Centerpieces of red carnations and Christmas greens were on each table, and a Christmas red fruit punch and petit fours were also served.

Members of the Council of Friends poured for the guests, among them Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Chestnut Hill and Cohasset; lovely Mrs. Alexander Ellis Jr. of Concord, in a black silk suit, a pale blue blouse the perfect complement under it, and Mrs. Ralph B. Williams of Chestnut Hill in sunny yellow.

Greeting the guests at the entrance to the gallery was Mrs. Richard R. Higgins of Dedham, chairman of the reception. She looked charming and Christmassy in a bright green suit, and another who chose to wear bright green was Mrs. B. Barton Loomis of Beacon Hill.

Two conductors' wives were chatting together. Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the founder of the Berkshire Music Center where Senator Kennedy first performed the Lincoln Portrait last summer, and dark haired Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf, wife of the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, wearing a gold lame suit, were "talking shop." Many of the musicians from the orchestra, outstanding in their white ties, were there with their wives.

Others at this reception, which gave the audience a chance to thank in person the musicians, the soloists, and their conductor, for the beauty and pleasure they had given them that evening, and the many other evenings throughout the year, were Mrs. Augustus Soule of Brookline, who was with Mrs. S. Abbott Smith of Marlboro Street; Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord and Mr. and Mrs. George A. Parson of Louisburg Square, who were all together; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dean of Wellesley; Mrs. Albert Titcomb of Boston, a red and black silk dress and matching jacket her choice; Miss Virginia Fay of Boston in palest green; Mrs. John L. Grandin of Chestnut Hill in bright pink, and Mrs. Frank Allen of Boston.

A magnificent evening of music and a delightful reception, the proceeds of which go directly to help the orchestra's much deserved pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
DEC 8 1966

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

Sunday will be a very special day at Symphony Hall. For at 8:30 p.m. the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert for the benefit of their own members, and a memorable one it promises to be.

Called the Pension Fund Concert, the current musicians of the orchestra have invited three notable personalities to perform with them. The proceeds from the evening will help support 95 emeritus members of the orchestra.

The program to be played is of the kind that Friday afternoon subscribers often wish the B. S. O. would perform all the time. It begins with Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B. Minor, with Stephen Kates as soloist. Following this, Senator Edward M. Kennedy will be the narrator in Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" — it will be of interest to the guests to see his rendition of this after Marian Anderson's performance of this same narration on television on Tuesday evening. Finally, Misha Dichter will be the soloist in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B. flat minor, Op. 23.

Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., wife of the orchestra's manager, and a number of the players' wives are decorating venerable old Symphony Hall with greens for the occasion. It will look very seasonal and gay for the reception following the concert that the Council of Friends of the B. S. O. have invited guests to attend. This will take place in the Gallery and will honor the three soloists: Mrs. Richard R. Higgins of Dedham is chairman of this reception.

Among those greeting Senator Kennedy, Mr. Dichter and Mr. Kates will be the trustees of the Boston Symphony, members of the orchestra and their wives, Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Wenham, co-chairmen of the Council of Friends, and others.

To fit candles onto the spikes some candlesticks have heat an ice pick and gently melt holes in the candle centers.

SLICK TRICK

Mort

nta Business
Out of Hand

going to happen when he discovers we were not telling the truth, when he KNOWS that his parents have ALWAYS told him the truth. He has been brought up to know that he can always trust us. Perhaps he will be mature enough to accept this one lapse.

n our home, we also celebrate Advent, with the wreath and candles, and an Advent calendar. Our son looks forward to every day so that he can open the next door on his calendar.

You will probably receive quite a few letters against your stand, but be assured that there are a good many of us who feel as you do.

Medico

The re is a Santa, believe, me, and he will always exist in the minds of his believers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 3078, Boston 02106 • 742-4300
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733

Joseph Kennedy, diamonds sparkling with her pink coat, talks about the late President Kennedy's visit to Belgium with J. P. Van Bellinghen who escorted John F. Kennedy there. (Sam Hammat Photo)

...ony Honors Sen. Kennedy

...t the Symphony reception ...ht, Mrs. Edward Kennedy ...corative cut. Her dinner and ...rs. Paul Ruggo (right), Mrs. Reeds, the Robert Weisses, the Joseph Gargans and Mrs. Paul Ruggo—came to the reception, Joan's silver dress shining as though it were molten, illumined her face, which showed no sign of weariness, although their week-end schedule included a late-late Washington Ball for which both she and her husband were cochairmen, and a stopover at Hyannis to see all-ling Joseph Kennedy at a Boston hospital.

Rose Kennedy explained graciously to the Symphony after the senator's first appearance as narrator for the Copland "Lincoln."

A black lace dress and pale emerald twist of chiffon setting off her fragile exquisite face, the widow of the famed conductor and founder of Tanglewood waved her slim hands.

"It was nothing; we are only waiting to have you come again," she said.

Still others there to share coffee and punch with the Kennedys and the members of the orchestra were the Robert M. P. Kennards, Mrs. Frank Allen, Mrs. Cabners, in slim chic black and pearls. Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr. in pale pink, Dr. and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins, the S. Abbbot Smiths and another score or two.

Rose Kennedy returned to Hyannis, and the senator and his wife will be back in Washington today.

What did she enjoy most about their trip? "Having all that time with my husband after so many busy weeks, and meeting so many friendly people."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 3078, Boston 02106 • 742-4300
Patriot-Ledger (●)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
DEC 13 1966

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

Mrs. Edward M. Kennedy sparkled for her husband in more ways than one Sunday evening at Symphony Hall. The occasion was the Pension Fund Concert at which Senator Kennedy, resplendent in white tie and tails, spoke the narration of Copland's "Lincoln Portrait."

Mrs. Kennedy and her mother-in-law, Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, were easily the most eye-catching of the guests, both at the concert and at the reception that followed. The senator's wife wore a short sheath-style dress made entirely of shimmering silver sequins, that must have been a magnet for her husband's eyes as he stood at the podium speaking the great words from Lincoln's Gettysburg Address. Mrs. Joseph Kennedy wore an appropriately colored (considering her first name) rose brocade coat over a short white brocade dress with long diamond pendant earrings and diamond bracelets.

The concert was magnificent, and as one guest said "soul satisfying." In addition to Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," two young artists of great promise performed two familiar and beloved works. Tall, handsome Stephen Kates was the soloist in Dvorak's Concerto for Cello in B Minor, and young Misha Dichter brought the packed audience to its feet with his performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor.

It was an audience comprised mainly of young people, although there were many regular devotees of Symphony there. Among them were Dr. and Mrs. Norman Budde, with Mr. and Mrs. Alan Carr, all up from Hingham; Mrs. Joseph Wallace of Cambridge; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Bennet of Chestnut Hill, Mrs. Bennet's brown knit superbly cut; Augusta Hornblower of Chestnut Hill, a debutante of this season, looking pretty in a blue suit with brass buttons; Henry B. Cabot of Dover, president of the trustees of the B.S.O.; sitting with Mrs. George L. Sargent of Dover, who had flown in from Detroit that day, and who does such a wonderful job as publicity chairman of the Council of Friends of the B.S.O.; Mrs. Nelson S. Bartlett of Wellesley; Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Meserve of Waltham, and many others.

After the concert, from which the audience were reluctant to let the performers leave, invited guests gathered at a reception in the Gallery of Symphony Hall to meet the three soloists of the evening.

Long tables, glittering with silver coffee services, and tall candelabra holding tapering red candles, filled either side of the big high-ceilinged room. Centerpieces of red carnations and Christmas greens were on each table, and a Christmas red fruit punch and petit fours were also served.

Members of the Council of Friends poured for the guests, among them Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Cheshire Hill and

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 3078, Boston 02106 • 742-4300
Patriot-Ledger (●)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
DEC 8 1966

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

SLICK TRICK

To fit candles onto the spikes some candlesticks have, heat an ice pick and gently melt holes in the candle centers.

quite a few letters against your stand, but be assured that there are a good many of us who feel as youd o.

Mort

At this evening's Pension Fund concert, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Music Director Erich Leinsdorf take particular pleasure in presenting for the first time with orchestra in Boston two of the winners of the Third Tchaikovsky Music Competition held in Moscow last June. Pianist Misha Dichter and cellist Stephen Kates each received second prizes in this very important music competition. The two young artists and Senator Edward M. Kennedy, who narrates Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" at this concert, performed with the Orchestra at Tanglewood last summer.

Misha Dichter, born in Shanghai twenty-one years ago, was raised in California where he began his musical studies. At the Juilliard School of Music, where he presently studies with Mme. Rosina Lhevinne, he holds the Joseph Lhevinne Scholarship, a most significant recognition.

Twenty-three-year-old Stephen Kates, whose father is a member of the New York Philharmonic, is the third generation musician in a family of professional musicians. He has studied at the Juilliard School with Leonard Rose and with Gregor Piatigorsky, winning numerous performance prizes including the Third Piatigorsky Biennial Artist Award and the San Francisco Symphony Foundation Award. Mr. Kates played solo cello in the American Symphony Orchestra and joined the Pittsburgh Symphony for its 1964 tour of the Middle East and Europe.

The participants in tonight's concert have most generously donated their services to the Pension Fund.

The Boston Symphony Pension Institution, established in 1903, is the oldest among American symphony orchestras and probably the most generous. During the past few years the Pension Institution has paid annually about a quarter of a million dollars to about one hundred Pensioners and their widows. Income for the Pension Institution is derived from Pension Fund concerts, Open Rehearsals in Symphony Hall and at Tanglewood, members' dues, matching contributions from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., and invested funds. The Institution is managed by a Board of Trustees drawn from members of the Orchestra and the Board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

89

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
DEC 13 1966

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

Mrs. Edward M. Kennedy sparkled for her husband in more ways than one Sunday evening at Symphony Hall. The occasion was the Pension Fund Concert at which Senator Kennedy, resplendent in white tie and tails, spoke the narration of Copland's "Lincoln Portrait."

Mrs. Kennedy and her mother-in-law, Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, were easily the most eye-catching of the guests, both at the concert and at the reception that followed. The senator's wife wore a short shift-style dress made entirely of shimmering silver sequins, that must have been a magnet for her husband's eyes as he stood at the podium speaking the great words from Lincoln's Gettysburg Address. Mrs. Joseph Kennedy wore an appropriately colored (considering her first name) rose brocade coat over a short white brocade dress with long diamond pendant earrings and diamond bracelets.

The concert was magnificent, and as one guest said "soul satisfying." In addition to Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," two young artists of great promise performed two familiar and beloved works. Tall, handsome Stephen Kates was the soloist in Dvorak's Concerto for Cello in B Minor, and young Misha Dichter brought the packed audience to its feet with his performance of Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor.

It was an audience comprised mainly of young people, although there were many regular devotees of Symphony there. Among them were Dr. and Mrs. Norman Budde, with Mr. and Mrs. Alan Carr, all up from Hingham; Mrs. Joseph Wallace of Cambridge; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Bernat of Chestnut Hill, Mrs. Bernat's brown knit superbly cut; Augusta Hornblower of Chestnut Hill, a debutante of this season, looking pretty in a blue suit with brass buttons; Henry B. Cabot of Dover, president of the trustees of the B.S.O., sitting with Mrs. George L. Sargent of Dover, who had flown in from Detroit that day, and who does such a wonderful job as publicity chairman of the Council of Friends of the B.S.O.; Mrs. Nelson S. Bartlett of Wellesley; Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Meserve of Waltham, and many others.

After the concert, from which the audience were reluctant to let the performers leave, invited guests gathered at a reception in the Gallery of Symphony Hall to meet the three soloists of the evening.

Long tables, glittering with silver coffee services, and tall candelabra holding tapering red candles, filled either side of the big high-ceilinged room. Centerpieces of red carnations and Christmas greens were on each table, and a Christmas red fruit punch and petit fours were also served.

Members of the Council of Friends poured for the guests, among them Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Chestnut Hill and Cohasset; lovely Mrs. Alexander Ellis Jr. of Concord, in a black silk suit, a pale blue blouse the perfect complement under it, and Mrs. Ralph B. Williams of Chestnut Hill in sunny yellow.

Greeting the guests at the entrance to the gallery was Mrs. Richard R. Higgins of Dedham, chairman of the reception. She looked charming and Christmassy in a bright green suit, and another who chose to wear bright green was Mrs. B. Barton Loomis of Beacon Hill.

Two conductors' wives were chatting together. Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, widow of the founder of the Berkshire Music Center where Senator Kennedy first performed the Lincoln Portrait last summer, and dark haired Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf, wife of the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, wearing a gold lame suit, were "talking shop." Many of the musicians from the orchestra, outstanding in their white ties, were there with their wives.

Others at this reception, which gave the audience a chance to thank in person the musicians, the soloists, and their conductor, for the beauty and pleasure they had given them that evening, and the many other evenings throughout the year, were Mrs. Augustus Soule of Brookline, who was with Mrs. S. Abbott Smith of Marlboro Street; Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord and Mr. and Mrs. George A. Parson of Louisburg Square, who were all together; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dean of Wellesley; Mrs. Albert Titcomb of Boston, a red and black silk dress and matching jacket her choice; Miss Virginia Fay of Boston in palest green; Mrs. John L. Grandin of Chestnut Hill in bright pink, and Mrs. Frank Allen of Boston.

A magnificent evening of music and a delightful reception, the proceeds of which go directly to help the orchestra's much deserved pension fund.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
ERICH LEINSDORF
Music Director

SYMPHONY HALL

Sunday Evening, December 11, 1966

140th Pension Fund Concert

BY THE

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director

Soloists

MISHA DICHTER, Piano

STEPHEN KATES, Cello

Narrator

SENATOR EDWARD M. KENNEDY

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
DEC 8 1966

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

Sunday will be a very special day at Symphony Hall. For at 8:30 p.m. the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a concert for the benefit of their own members, and a memorable one it promises to be.

Called the Pension Fund Concert, the current musicians of the orchestra have invited three notable personalities to perform with them. The proceeds from the evening will help support 95 emeritus members of the orchestra.

The program to be played is of the kind that Friday afternoon subscribers often wish the B. S. O. would perform all the time. It begins with Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B. Minor, with Stephen Kates as soloist. Following this, Senator Edward M. Kennedy will be the narrator in Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" — it will be of interest to the guests to see his rendition of this after Marian Anderson's performance of this same narration on television on Tuesday evening. Finally, Misha Dichter will be the soloist in Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B. flat minor, Op. 23.

Mrs. Thomas D. Perry Jr., wife of the orchestra's manager, and a number of the players' wives are decorating venerable old Symphony Hall with greens for the occasion. It will look very seasonal and gay for the reception following the concert that the Council of Friends of the B. S. O. have invited guests to attend. This will take place in the Gallery and will honor the three soloists. Mrs. Richard R. Higgins of Dedham is chairman of this reception.

Among those greeting Senator Kennedy, Mr. Dichter and Mr. Kates will be the trustees of the Boston Symphony, members of the orchestra and their wives, Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot of Wenham, co-chairmen of the Council of Friends, and others.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 234,733
DEC 12 1966

WARM GREETINGS at the Symphony reception for her husband last night, Mrs. Edward Kennedy wears a silver dress of decorative cut. Her dinner and concert guests included Mrs. Paul Rugo (right). Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, diamonds sparkling with her pink coat, talks about the late President Kennedy's visit to Belgium with J. P. Van Bellinghen who escorted John F. Kennedy there. (Sam Hammat Photo)

Symphony Honors Sen. Kennedy

By MARJORIE SHERMAN
Globe Society Editor

There was a fashionable invitation reception for Sen. Edward M. Kennedy after the 140th Pension Fund Concert at Symphony Hall Sunday night, but a reception committee, just as attractive and more determined to see the senator, was waiting outside when his car arrived.

He is their only hope, they feel, of getting their Bachelor of Science degree in nursing at Northeastern University.

They were promised three years ago, when the class of 30 enrolled, that, if they completed their three-year course, they would have the option to go on for a two-year degree course. Now that has been revoked and a separate five-year course set up in which they can take no part.

Kennedy is a trustee, and the girls felt that, "if he knew what it means to us, he would help." He intends to.

"He said so," Victoria Alla said simply. She is chairman of the committee that has appealed to the university since last May with no results.

"He's wonderful; he said nurses were pretty important people," Cochairman Deena Kaplan said.

The girls waited to see the senator and his wife and his mother leave the hall after the concert. Symphony Hall did its part and let the pretty girls wait inside, out of the brisk 40-degree breezes, and even found a spare seat or two in the big, crowded hall for those who wanted to hear the concert and the senator too.

After the first disquieting searching for unfamiliar seats in Symphony Hall, always a trying experience for the Friday regulars who have walked, unushered, to their places for all these many years everyone settled down to enjoy an unusual and especially rewarding evening.

Mrs. Joseph P. Kennedy arrived early, coming from the Ritz to take a seat until her daughter-in-law and a party of guests arrived for their center section seats. Mrs. Kennedy was especially pleased to have several people come up to tell her how much they enjoyed the senator in same program at Tanglewood this Summer and that they "couldn't wait to hear him again."

Two Kennedys by marriage looked handsome together—Rose with a lovely brilliant pink coat to set off her dark hair, diamonds sparkling at her ears and wrists, and Joan, her soft blonde hair almost to the shoulders of a gold ribbed silk coat.

Symphony Pres. Henry Cabot came in with trustee Philip Allen. Rep. Michael Dukakis and his attractive wife came in the stage door with her father, the Symphony's Harry Ellis Dickson.

Still others in the crowded and impressed house were Mrs. George Sargent, who flew back from Detroit especially for the concert, which she helped the Council of Friends of Symphony to hold in honor of the senator and his family, and Mrs. Harris Sahnestock, from Concord, joining Mr. and Mrs. George Parson and Paul Ceresole.

Still others who came to applaud the four young music competition winners from Moscow and made their way upstairs for the reception were Mrs. Louis Cabot and her council cochairman, Mrs. Norman Cahners. Conductor and Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf were also congratulating the senator as well as the soloists as were the Symphony's Thomas Perry and his wife.

The Kennedys and their guests—T. Jefferson Coolidge, the Paul Beattys, the Edward Reeds, the Robert Weisses, the Joseph Gargans and Mrs. Paul Rugo—came to the reception, Joan's sliver dress shining as though it were molten, illumined her face, which showed no sign of weariness, although their week-end schedule included a late-late Washington Ball for which both she and her husband were cochairmen, and a stopover at Hyannis to see ailing Joseph Kennedy at a Boston hospital.

Rose Kennedy explained graciously to the Symphony committee that she "couldn't stay long but did want to thank those wonderful soloists."

She also exchanged addresses with former Embassy Counselor in Brussels J. P. Bellinghen, who escorted President Kennedy when he was in Belgium. The Van Bellinghens are now in Cambridge, where he is at the Harvard Center for International Affairs. A most attractive girl, his wife "enjoys the music here almost best of all."

Mme. Serge Koussevitzky was warmly welcomed by the Kennedys, who spoke immediately of her beautiful party at Tanglewood this Summer after the senator's first appearance as narrator for the Copland "Lincoln."

A black lace dress and pale emeraled twist of chiffon setting off her fragile exquisite face, the widow of the famed conductor and founder of Tanglewood waved her slim hands.

"It was nothing; we are only waiting to have you come again," she said.

Still others there to share coffee and punch with the Kennedys and the members of the orchestra were the Robert M. P. Kennards, Mrs. Frank Allen, Mrs. Cahners, in slim chic black and pearls. Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr. in pale pink, Dr. and Mrs. Palfrey Perkins, the S. Abbbot Smiths and another score or two.

Rose Kennedy returned to Hyannis, and the senator and his wife will be back in Washington today.

What did she enjoy most about their trip? "Having all that time with my husband after so many busy weeks, and meeting so many friendly people."

PRE-TOUR

New York World-Telegram and The Sun
D. 373,819 SAT. 142,176
APR 18 1966

Boston Symphony Cuts Concerts

By LAWRENCE FARRANT
Of the World-Telegram Staff

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, rated by knowledgeable Brooklynites as "best" in the world, has cut its scheduled appearances at the Academy of Music in the 1966-67 season to three evenings nistead of the normal five-nights-in-Brooklyn, standard for the last 78 years.

William McKelvy Martin, director of the Academy of Music, said today that as substitute for the Boston Symphony there have been scheduled one evening of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra with Jean Martinon conducting on Nov. 16, and an evening with the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra with Karl Munchinger conducaing on March 8, 1967.

Elizabeth Menschik Gomory, 84 Joralemon St., Brooklyn Heights, who has been chairman of the Women's Committee for the Boston Symphony in Brooklyn for the past three years, said, "Boston under Erich Leinsdorf is the best in the world, not just in the United States. We told him so at his performance in the Academy last Thursday. He is getting too famous and is wanted everywhere."

'A Departure'

Martin said, "Yes, this is a departure from a 78-year tradition of only having the Boston Symphony. But we hope that by introducing the variety of another great American orchestra and a renowned European orchestra in our series, we will stimulate new attendance at our concert hall."

He rated the Chicago Symphony, under Martinon, with Boston as one of the five leading United States orchestras.

Mrs. Gomory valued the Vienna Philharmonic as second in the world, followed by Philadelphia under Ormandy and Cleveland under George Szell.

"But we got hundreds of renewals of subscriptions for next neason during intermission last Thursday," Mrs. Gomory noted. "The Academy of Music hall is acoustically perfect, best in the country, and the audience was pleased. We heard a full evening of Brahms, the same program that the Boston performed Friday night at Carnegie Hall."

ERICH LEINSDORF: Dropping two concerts.

Ticket Sale Lag

Neither Mrs. Gomory nor Martin could explain why the Boston Symphony schedule of five performances was not retained. Both said attendance had been satisfactory. But reports over the last two years indicated that tickets sales had lagged.

Mrs. Gomory commented, "Ticket sales anywhere don't go well these days because people are afraid to go out in the evening. The police ought to patrol more often around the Academy of Music."

Martin, on the other hand, declared that attendance had been well maintained. He said the Academy Opera House holds 2,207 persons, seating 939 in the orchestra, 638 in the mezzanine and 530 in the balcony. About 1,400 to 1,600 seats are reserved on subscription every year, he noted. Ticket sales at the box office will begin after Oct. 1.

'On Way Up'

Mrs. Gomory said, "I think the Academy is on the way up again. You know, the Opera Society of Brooklyn—my husband is president of it—used to sponsor the Salmaggi company, subsidizing any losses. Now the company is on its own and we are seeking ballet, outstanding lecturers, improved performances."

Quietly the women's group has changed its name to the Women's Committee of the Academy Orchestra Series, she noted. The group, comprised of 90 Brooklyn women, will hold its annual meeting in mid-May at the Gomory residence in Brooklyn Heights.

"We still love the Boston Symphony," she said. "But we are pleased to have Chicago and Stuttgart."

The schedule of the orchestra series follows:

- Oct. 13: Boston Symphony conducted by Lainsdorf.
- Nov. 16: Chicago Symphony conducted by Martinon.
- Jan. 26: Boston Symphony conducted by Rafael Kubelik of the Symphonie-Orchester des Bayrischen Rundfunks of Munich.
- March 8: Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra conducted by Munchinger.
- April 13: Boston Symphony conducted by Leinsdorf.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BAY NEWS
W. 14,500
JUL 9 1966

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,000
JULY 9 1966

Orchestra Series Announced For Next Season at Academy

The Brooklyn Academy of Music has announced the 1966-67 Academy Orchestra Series to be held in the Opera House. The five program series is a continuation of the 78 year Boston Symphony Orchestra Series; featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three of its five concerts.

The subscribers to this series have given this great orchestra the largest audience over the years of any other attraction in the Brooklyn Academy's 107 years history. But, as the Brooklyn audience has enjoyed its many evenings with this brilliant ensemble, so have other audiences clamored for it. The Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, faced with a truly fantastic increase in requests for appearances by the Orchestra, have decided to revise their long standing policy towards the communities the orchestra has visited annually. In a word, they feel they must offer their work to a larger and broader based audience.

The Academy of Music has engaged two outstanding orchestras to participate in its new series next year. The Chicago Symphony Orchestra will appear under the direction of Jean Martinon who is no stranger to Brooklyn, having directed the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its January concert in the Opera House this season. The Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, under the direction of Karl Munchinger, coming to the Opera House in March of 1967, is one of Europe's most elegant musical ensembles.

The concert schedule for next season is as follows:

Thurs. evening, October 13, - The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, Conducting;

Wed. evening, November 16 - The Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Jean Martinon, Conducting;

Thurs. evening, January 26, 1967 - The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Rafael Kubelick, Conducting;

Wed. evening, March 8, 1967 - The Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, Karl Munchinger, Conducting;

Thurs. evening, April 13, 1967 - The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, Conducting.

Tickets for this series will be offered on a subscription basis. The subscription tickets are priced at $25.00 and $20.00 in the Orchestra, $24.00, $20.00 and $18.00 in the Mezzanine, and $16.00 and $14.00 in the Balcony. Box seats are $26.00, $24.00, $16.00 and $12.00.

SIR ADRIAN BOULT, well known British conductor, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director, on Sun. afternoon, July 10. Sir Adrian Boult will conduct the Mozart Symphony No. 34, K. 338, the Mozart Symphony No. 39, K. 543 and the Mozart Piano Concerto in D major, K. 175, with Malcolm Frager as soloist.

Newsday
GARDEN CITY, N. Y.
D. 400,124
JUN 2 1966

Concert Series Is Set By Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in its own series at Carnegie Hall next season, consisting of four Saturday evenings, Oct. 15, Nov. 19, March 4 and April 15. In the past, the symphony has appeared as part of the International Festival of Visiting Orchestras. On March 4, the orchestra will offer a first New York performance of Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra" for chorus and orchestra. The other programs will feature Viennese composers.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
JUN 5 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
JUN 6 1966

BOSTONIANS PREPARE A CARNEGIE SERIES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a special four-concert series at Carnegie Hall next season. This will be in addition to its two appearances in the hall's Festival of Visiting Orchestras series and the regular 10 concerts booked next season at Philharmonic Hall.

The orchestra has not had a separate Carnegie Hall series since 1961-62, the season before Philharmonic Hall opened. Response to the four concerts last season in Carnegie Hall's Festival series was so good, it was said, that the new series was developed.

Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's conductor, will lead the four Saturday concerts. Music by Viennese composers will dominate the Carnegie Hall series.

The exception will be the local premiere of "Et Occidentem Illustra" for chorus and orchestra by Robert Moevs, the composer in residence at Rutgers University. This will be performed on March 4.

The other concerts will be held on Oct. 15, Nov. 19 and April 15.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 652,135
JUN 6 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NEW YORK PARK EAST
Thursday, June 9, 1966
047

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PARK EAST
W. CIRC. N. AVAIL.
JUN 9 1966

Boston Symphony Sets Saturday Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a special series of concerts at Carnegie Hall next season under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf. The first program will be given on Saturday evening, October 15, and others will follow on Saturday evenings, November 19, March 4 and April 15.

Works by Viennese composers will be featured at the concerts and soloists Beverly Sills, Shirley Verrett, Beverly Wolff, Placido Domingo, Ara Berberian, and pianists Evelyne Crochet and Claude Frank already have been engaged.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BROOKLYN BAY NEWS
Saturday, July 9, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BROOKLYN KINGS COURIER
Saturday, July 9, 1966

NEW YORK, N. Y.
ADVOCATE
W. 26,500
JUN 25 1966

BRROKLYN ACADEMY OF MUSIC... The Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have decided to revise their long standing policy toward the communities the orchestra has visited annually. In a word, they feel they must offer their work to a larger, and broader based audience. The Academy of Music has engaged two outstanding orchestras to participate in its new series next year.

SOUTH AMBOY, N. J.
CITIZEN
W. 2,000
JUN 30 1966

50TH CONCERT SEASON AT RUTGERS

The Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, the Moscow Chamber Orchestra, a French baritone and a Greek pianist will be among those who will help celebrate the fiftieth season of the Rutgers University Gymnasium Concert Series during the 1966-67 academic year.

The golden anniversary series will be part of an 11-event concert schedule, including a special concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Voorhees Chapel Series at Douglass College.

A performance by the Pittsburgh Symphony will open the Gymnasium Series on Oct. 31. The Robert Shaw Chorale and Orchestra, Robert Shaw conductor, will conclude the series next spring, May 8.

In between, the Moscow Chamber Orchestra, conducted by Rudolf Barshai, will play Nov. 30, French baritone Gerard Souzay will perform Feb. 14 and Gina Bachauer, Greek pianist, will play April 5.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Rutgers University Choir will appear in a special concert March 2. The program will be featured by a performance of "Et Occidentem Illustra," a work by Robert W. Moevs, Rutgers' associate professor of music, commissioned for the Rutgers Bicentennial. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony. The Rutgers Choir will be directed by F. Austin Walter.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
GARDEN CITY NEWSDAY
Thursday, June 2, 1966

DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S FULL NEWSPAPER
D. 2,097,578 SUN. 3,070,836
JUN 2 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 115,966
JUN 19 1966

4 Boston Concerts

Having proven its ability to draw more audiences than can be accommodated in its Philharmonic Hall subscription series, the Boston Symphony has decided to expand its New York activities with a four-concert series in Carnegie Hall.

91

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

AUG 1966

Musical Notes

by Walter F. Loeb

Theme and Variations

Rafael Druian, concertmaster of the Cleveland Orchestra, appeared at the Alaska Festival of Music in Anchorage during June. . . . Fernando Valenti, harpsichordist, has been appointed to the faculty of the Cleveland Institute of Music. . . . André Watts, 19-year-old American pianist, made his debut in London on June 12. He won raves. . . . Richard Tucker sang eight performances at the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires—Des Grieux in Puccini's "Manon Lescaut" and Enzo Grimaldi in Ponchielli's "La Gioconda." . . . Lorna Haywood, young English soprano and a graduate student of the Juilliard School of Music, made her debut on July 9 at Covent Garden. It was in a new production of "The Magic Flute." In September Miss Haywood will sing with the Chicago Lyric Opera.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate a new series of four Saturday evening concerts. The concerts will be on Oct. 15, Nov. 19, March 4 and April 15. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. . . . Rudolf Serkin and Pina Carmirelli will perform all the Beethoven piano-violin sonatas at Carnegie Hall in the Fall. The dates are Wednesday evenings Sept. 28, Oct. 5 and Oct. 13. . . . The Juilliard String Quartet is currently touring seven Pacific nations including New Zealand, Australia, The Philippines, Hong Kong, Formosa, Korea, and Japan. They are returning to the United States on Sept. 30.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN CANARSIE DIG
Saturday, September 10, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

FLATBUSH LIFE
Saturday, September 10, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

New York Courier
Saturday, September 10, 1966

THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 220,629 SAT. 173,407

SEP 23 1966

National Symphony

By MILTON BERLINER

The "cultural desert" which is Washington — according to pronouncement from the province of New York — is going to bloom with unprecedented brilliance this season.

In fact, it already got off to a fast start last Sunday when Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic stirred a Constitution Hall audience into ecstatic cheers.

The backbone of the season in any great city is, of course, the symphony orchestra.

Conductor Howard Mitchell has mapped out 19 pair for concerts by the National Symphony (plus Boston Symphony and Amsterdam Concertgebouw pairs), which, altho focusing strongly on the traditional, will also offer several things out of the ordinary.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN RECORD
Friday, September 30, 1966

MAN ABOUT BROOKLYN

By CHARLES RICHMAN

Brooklyn Academy of Music, cultural landmark of Long Island, with revamped internal structure and subtle changes in programming, will launch its greater 1966-67 season shortly.

Ideally situated in the heart of Brooklyn--all transit lines including the Long Island R.R. are at its doorstep. The Academy will be the borough's "fun" center as its many delightful features are discovered by the dating young set and the newly weds.

William McKelvy Martin, director of the Brooklyn Academy of Music for his tenth term, is enthusiastic about this season's greater attractions.

"While we have a rich inheritance of 107 seasons at the Academy, it it its present usefulness, providing events meaningful to our community for which we aim," said Martin.

As part of the community program, participation by the talented of the borough will be encouraged. In the past, Brooklyn has been the spring board of many stars and this exposure of the newcomer will be provided.

Director Martin noted a notable increase in the public's desire for series programs, in depth participation in the art form rather than the one touch and go exposure.

Result is that the Academy will provide several excellent series. The Orchestra Series will include the [illegible] year of the Boston Symphony in three concerts, the Chicago Symphony and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

World Journal Tribune (e)
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 27 1966

Academy Adds Two Orchestras

Something new has been added to the orchestral fare at Brooklyn Academy this season. Instead of the customary five-concert series by the Boston Symphony on Nov. 16 and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra on March 8.

The Boston Symphony concerts will be cut to three, Oct. 13, Jan. 26 and April 13. That orchestra will continue its 10-concert season at Philharmonic Hall, which begins Oct. 12, and a special four-concert series at Carnegie Hall, devoted to Viennese composers, beginning Oct. 15.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

FARMINGDALE OBSERVER
Thursday, September 8, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

MASSAPEQUA OBSERVER
Thursday, September 8, 1966

Brooklyn Academy Of Music Launches Membership Drive

The Brooklyn Academy of Music has announced the opening of its annual membership drive Thursday, Sept. 8. Wm. McKelvy Martin, Director of the institution, expects this season, the Academy's 108th, to be the most exciting one in many years.

pany, The Academy Opera Theater Company, an Orchestra Series including The Boston Symphony, the Chicago Symphony, and the Stutgart Chamber Orchestra.

People, Places & Politics

By Caroline Bunting Klesh

Taking your son to his freshman year at college is surely an eventful and memorable occasion. We had this experience this past week. We drove to Indiana University and were delighted with the experience.

The famed 'Marching Band of 100' began practise last Sunday morning, with afternoon and evening sessions even on Labor Day. The Indiana Memorial Union, which includes an Inn, in the finest tradition, houses visiting parents, guests and, even visiting Metropolitan Opera stars. The Indiana Daily Student, a new paper of standard size in its 100th year is so substantial we're still reading every word of one day's edition.

The String Trio of Isaac Stern, violin, Leonard Rose, cello and Eugene Istomin, piano will open the 27th annual auditorium series this fall. The Martha Graham Company, the American Ballet, the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Symphony will be a few of the offerings. In the 'pop' series, Dave Brubeck and Eydie Gorme will begin the concerts to be followed by Duke Ellington, Peter, Paul and Mary, John and others.

On the way out we noticed a very sobering safety reminder that the Indiana State Police provide. White crosses marking the exact spot where motorists have lost their lives.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 4,500

SEPT 29 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
Thursday, September 29, 1966

Academy To Feature 3 Orchestras

Three world famous symphony orchestras will be featured in the 79th annual concert series of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, it was announced today by Seth S. Faison, Chairman of the Academy's Governing Committee.

The so-called cultural explosion, Mr. Faison observes, has stimulated more and more communities to compete for the limited out-of-town performances of the established symphony orchestras. "Consequently," he adds, "we are particularly happy that we have been able to secure such an outstanding series."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present three concerts (October 13, January 26, and April 13). One concert each by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Jean Martinon conducting (November 16) and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, Karl Munchinger conducting (March 8) completes the series. "We are sure that the innovation of a series of three different orchestras — a departure from our 78-year tradition of presenting only the Boston Symphony Orchestra — will add excitement this season," Mr. Faison remarked. "Moreover," he declared, "not only are we offering a superb group of five concerts, but a saving of over 25 per cent on the series as a whole brings great performances by great orchestras within the reach of the entire community."

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 31,450

SEP 29 1966

3 Famed Symphony Orchestras For Academy Concerts

Three world famous symphony orchestras will be featured in the 79th annaul concert series of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, it was announced today by Seth S. Faison, Chairmon of the Academy's Governing Committee.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present three concerts (October 13, January 26, and April 13). One concert each by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Jean Martinon, conducting (November 16) and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, Karl Munchinger, conducting (March 8) completes the series. "We are sure that the innovation of a series of three different orchestras — will add excitement this season," Mr. Faison remarked. "Moreover," he declared, "not only are we offering a superb group of five concerts, but a saving of over 25 percent on the series a sa whol ebrings great performances by great orhestras within the reach of the entire community." Further information is available from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn 11217, 783-6700.

The Academy Orchestra Series opens on Thursday, October 13th at 8:30 p.m. in the Opera House of the Academy, as it has for the past 79 years, with the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Erich Leainsdorf, Music Director of the Bostonians, will conduct.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 4,500

SEPT 29 1966

On Nov. 10, and 11 the Metropolitan National Opera Co. will be presenting La Boheme and La Traviata. As a part of the Academy Orchestra series the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra will be appearing throughout the season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293

JAN 5 1967

ERICH LEINSDORF, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be off on a mid-winter leave of absence after tomorrow's Symphony. While he's away he'll be guest conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra in The Hague on Jan. 14 and in Amsterdam Jan. 15, 18 and 19.

Meanwhile he has invited Gunther Schuller, Rafael Kubik and Colin Davis to be guest conductors in his absence. Leinsdorf's first program after his return will be with the Orchestra's concert on Friday, Feb. 10.

91

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

AUG 1966

Musical Notes

by Walter F. Loeb

Theme and Variations

Rafael Druian, concertmaster of the Cleveland Orchestra, appeared at the Alaska Festival of Music in Anchorage during June. . . . Fernando Valenti, harpsichordist, has been appointed to the faculty of the Cleveland Institute of Music. . . . André Watts, 19-year-old American pianist, made his debut in London on June 12. He won raves. . . . Richard Tucker sang eight performances at the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires—Des Grieux in Puccini's "Manon Lescaut" and Enzo Grimaldi in Ponchielli's "La Gioconda." . . . Lorna Haywood, young English soprano and a graduate student of the Juilliard School of Music, made her debut on July 9 at Covent Garden. It was in a new production of "The Magic Flute." In September Miss Haywood will sing with the Chicago Lyric Opera.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will inaugurate a new series of four Saturday evening concerts. The concerts will be on Oct. 15, Nov. 19, March 4 and April 15. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. . . . Rudolf Serkin and Pina Carmirelli will perform all the Beethoven piano-violin sonatas at Carnegie Hall in the Fall. The dates are Wednesday evenings Sept. 28, Oct. 5 and Oct. 13. . . . The Juilliard String Quartet is currently touring seven Pacific nations including New Zealand, Australia, The Philippines, Hong Kong, Formosa, Korea, and Japan. They are returning to the United States on Sept. 30.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN CANARSIE DIGEST
Saturday, September 10, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

FLATBUSH LIFE
Saturday, September 10, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

New York Courier
Saturday, September 10, 1966

THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 220,629 SAT. 173,407

SEP 23 1966

National Symphony

By MILTON BERLINER

The "cultural desert" which is Washington — according to pronouncement from the province of New York — is going to bloom with unprecedented brilliance this season.

In fact, it already got off to a fast start last Sunday when Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic stirred a Constitution Hall audience into ecstatic cheers.

The backbone of the season in any great city is, of course, the symphony orchestra.

Conductor Howard Mitchell has mapped out 19 pair for concerts by the National Symphony (plus Boston Symphony and Amsterdam Concertgebouw pairs) which, altho focusing strongly on the traditional, will also offer several things out of the ordinary.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN RECORD
Friday, September 30, 1966

MAN ABOUT BROOKLYN

By CHARLES RICHMAN

Brooklyn Academy of Music, cultural landmark of Long Island, with revamped internal structure and subtle changes in programming, will launch its greater 1966-67 season shortly.

Ideally situated in the heart of Brooklyn--all transit lines including the Long Island R.R. are at its doorstep. The Academy will be the borough's "fun" center as its many delightful features are discovered by the dating young set and the newly weds.

William McKelvy Martin, director of the Brooklyn Academy of Music for his tenth term, is enthusiastic about this season's greater attractions.

"While we have a rich inheritance of 107 seasons at the Academy, it it its present usefulness, providing events meaningful to our community for which we aim," said Martin.

As part of the community program, participation by the talented of the borough will be encouraged. In the past, Brooklyn has been the spring board of many stars and this exposure of the newcomer will be provided.

Director Martin noted a notable increase in the public's desire for series programs, in depth participation in the art form rather than the one touch and go exposure.

Result is that the Academy will provide several excellent series. The Orchestra Series will include the 107 year of the Boston Symphony in three concerts, the Chicago Symphony and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

World Journal Tribune (e)
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 27 1966

Academy Adds Two Orchestras

Something new has been added to the orchestral fare at Brooklyn Academy this season. Instead of the customary five-concert series by the Boston Symphony on Nov. 16 and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra on March 8.

The Boston Symphony concerts will be cut to three, Oct. 13, Jan. 26 and April 13. That orchestra will continue its 10-concert season at Philharmonic Hall, which begins Oct. 12, and a special four-concert series at Carnegie Hall, devoted to Viennese composers, beginning Oct. 15.

Brooklyn Academy Of Music Launches Membership Drive

The Brooklyn Academy of Music has announced the opening of its annual membership drive Thursday, Sept. 8. Wm. McKelvy Martin, Director of the institution, expects this season, the Academy's 108th, to be the most exciting one in many years.

pany, The Academy Opera Theater Company, an Orchestra Series including The Boston Symphony, the Chicago Symphony, and the Stutgart Chamber Orchestra.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

FARMINGDALE OBSERVER
Thursday, September 8, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

MASSAPEQUA OBSERVER
Thursday, September 8, 1966

People, Places & Politics

By Caroline Bunting Klesh

Taking your son to his freshman year at college is surely an eventful and memorable occasion. We had this experience this past week. We drove to Indiana University and were delighted with the experience.

The famed 'Marching Band of 100' began practise last Sunday morning, with afternoon and evening sessions even on Labor Day. The Indiana Memorial Union, which includes an Inn, in the finest tradition, houses visiting parents, guests and, even visiting Metropolitan Opera stars. The Indiana Daily Student, a new paper of standard size in its 100th year is so substantial we're still reading every word of one day's edition.

The String Trio of Isaac Stern, violin, Leonard Rose, cello and Eugene Istomin, piano will open the 27th annual auditorium series this fall. The Martha Graham Company, the American Ballet, the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Symphony will be a few of the offerings. In the 'pop' series, Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme will begin the concerts to be followed by Duke Ellington, Peter, Paul and Mary, John and others.

On the way out we noticed a very sobering safety reminder that the Indiana State Police provide. White crosses marking the exact spot where motorists have lost their lives.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 4,500

SEPT 29 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
Thursday, September 29, 1966

Academy To Feature 3 Orchestras

Three world famous symphony orchestras will be featured in the 79th annual concert series of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, it was announced today by Seth S. Faison, Chairman of the Academy's Governing Committee.

The so-called cultural explosion, Mr. Faison observes, has stimulated more and more communities to compete for the limited out-of-town performances of the established symphony orchestras. "Consequently," he adds, "we are particularly happy that we have been able to secure such an outstanding series."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present three concerts (October 13, January 26, and April 13). One concert each by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Jean Martinon conducting (November 16) and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, Karl Munchinger conducting (March 8) completes the series. "We are sure that the innovation of a series of three different orchestras — a departure from our 78-year tradition of presenting only the Boston Symphony Orchestra — will add excitement this season," Mr. Faison remarked. "Moreover," he declared, "not only are we offering a superb group of five concerts, but a saving of over 25 per cent on the series as a whole brings great performances by great orchestras within the reach of the entire community."

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 31,450

SEP 29 1966

3 Famed Symphony Orchestras For Academy Concerts

Three world famous symphony orchestras will be featured in the 79th annaul concert series of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, it was announced today by Seth S. Faison, Chairmon of the Academy's Governing Committee.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present three concerts (October 13, January 26, and April 13). One concert each by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Jean Martinon, conducting (November 16) and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, Karl Munchinger, conducting (March 8) completes the series. "We are sure that the innovation of a series of three different orchestras — will add excitement this season," Mr. Faison remarked. "Moreover," he declared, "not only are we offering a superb group of five concerts, but a saving of over 25 percent on the series a sa whol ebrings great performances by great orhestras within the reach of the entire community." Further information is available from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn 11217, 783-6700.

The Academy Orchestra Series opens on Thursday, October 13th at 8:30 p.m. in the Opera House of the Academy, as it has for the past 79 years, with the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Erich Leainsdorf, Music Director of the Bostonians, will conduct.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 4,500

SEPT 29 1966

On Nov. 10, and 11 the Metropolitan National Opera Co. will be presenting La Boheme and La Traviata. As a part of the Academy Orchestra series the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra will be appearing throughout the season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 146,293

JAN 5 1967

ERICH LEINSDORF, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be off on a mid-winter leave of absence after tomorrow's Symphony. While he's away he'll be guest conductor of the Amsterdam Concertgebouw Orchestra in The Hague on Jan. 14 and in Amsterdam Jan. 15, 18 and 19.

Meanwhile he has invited Gunther Schuller, Rafael Kublik and Colin Davis to be guest conductors in his absence. Leinsdorf's first program after his return will be with the Orchestra's concert on Friday, Feb. 10.

PHILHARMONIC HALL #1 OCT. 12 + 14

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
OCT 13 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
OCT 14 1966

England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
OCT 14 1966

Music: An Old-Time-Boston Program

Leinsdorf Shows His Usual Objectivity

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

ERICH LEINSDORF and the Boston Symphony opened their Philharmonic Hall series last night with a program that was two-thirds old-time-Boston. Both the Sibelius Fifth Symphony and the Prokofiev "Scythian" Suite have been closely associated with the orchestra through the years. The third piece on the program was the Dvorak Violin Concerto, which is having something of a run the last few years. What will come next? The Goldmark? The Wieniawski D minor?

Mr. Leinsdorf's performances were typical in their clarity, smoothness, brilliance and objectivity. He approaches a score as a series of problems to be licked rather than a series of emotions to be conveyed. He also seems to work on the notion that the latter will automatically follow from the former. It doesn't; but at least one can be thankful for the sheer professionalism of Mr. Leinsdorf's work.

The Sibelius E flat Symphony last night had big sound, but not lush sound. It was a performance in which the elements were sharply contoured; in which the music sounded harder and stronger than it generally does. The dimensions were bigger, even if charm (and the slow movement does have considerable charm) was somewhat missing. The tempos sounded natural, and the phrase-shaping was orthodox enough, but the outlook of the conductor was detached. One was too conscious of the machine. Yet, withal, it was an impressive, accomplished piece of work.

Erich Leinsdorf

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, with Shmuel Ashkenasi, violinist. At Philharmonic Hall.
Symphony No. 5 ..... Sibelius
Violin Concerto ..... Dvorak
Scythian Suite ..... Prokofiev

Shmuel Ashkenasi, the soloist in the Dvorak Violin Concerto, is a young Israeli musician, 27 years old, but he plays in an old style. He uses a wide, rapid vibrato, he holds back on first notes in running phrases, he slides into notes and he can be quite sentimental when dragging into a slow theme.

All this does no harm to the Dvorak, which is an old-fashioned work, delightful though it may be. It is a romantic concerto designed to show off the violinist; and the solo writing is very difficult. It is, indeed, even harder than it sounds. The violinist-composers of the 19th century—Wieniawski, Vieuxtemps and the others—knew how to get sparkle in figurations that fall naturally on the fingerboard. Dvorak, a clumsy instrumentalist, threw all kinds of octaves and other passagework that does not sparkle idiomatically. The writing is hard, but not always grateful.

Ashkenasi Is Soloist in Dvorak Concerto

But the concerto is a lovely work, tinged with Dvorak's ever-present nationalism, richly orchestrated, full of the juicy modulations that he could handle so imaginatively. Mr. Askenasi played it with a great deal of dash and sparkle, growing stronger as he went along. He has aplomb, and the instincts of a virtuoso violinist. This kind of literature would appear to be his métier.

The "Scythian" Suite, the score in which Prokofiev threw down the gantlet—he was going to show the world what orchestral savagery was—started with a bang and continued so. Mr. Leinsdorf started breathlessly, at a tremendous clip, and piled sonority on sonority.

It was all very exciting, as it always is when a great orchestra tackles the score with confidence. Through the years the work has lost much of its impact, in that its once-jagged dissonances and yelps are now as exciting as a bunch of kids feeding peanuts to an elephant. But the score still "sounds," and it sounded last night.

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
OCT 13 1966

Words and Music

By Harriett Johnson

Boston Symphony Opens Season

Erich Leinsdorf may be short and Teutonic but he strode on-stage last night with the height and air of De Gaulle. He was the grand seigneur, totally convinced of his mission. If there was any question of infallibility or modesty, the music director of the Boston Symphony kept his secret.

Before opening the orchestra's season in Philharmonic Hall, he surveyed the scene for a moment, aloof and lordly. This was the way of the master conductor, with whom you may disagree, but who is dictator by an authority he has earned.

Leinsdorf, who is beginning his fifth season with the Bostonians, opened the program with the Fifth Symphony of Sibelius, (togther with his "Second,") the most popular of his works in the form.

During the "Fifth," he surrounds his naive themes by terse clashes of counterpoint. There is an economy of means not present in the "Second." Swept along by Sibelius' peculiar gift for conflict and resolution, dissonance vitalizes the work for the knowing musician while the layman hears music meaningful to him as "bardic and elemental."

Leinsdorf's rigidity and professional self-righteousness didn't admit the expansiveness of phrase and section that the texture of the music requires. There was an occasional embarrassing attempt at jocosity through a bouncing, nervous staccato. There were angles instead of grand arcs. The quality of sound, however, was superb. With aplomb and virtuosity, he dramatized the tensions. It was a magnificently virtuoso performance with which I strongly disagreed in interpretation.

Ashkenasi Has Temperament

Shmuel Ashkenasi, 25-year-old Israeli violinist, who won second prize in the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, was the soloist in Dvorak's Concerto in A Minor, Op. 53. Ashkenasi's performance demonstrated his strong temperament. He has an extraordinary feeling for color. He poured his heart into the "Adagio." It sang eloquently, evoking a variety of moods. But altogether in the Concerto there was stamina missing, a lack of rhythmic authority; a touch of provincialism. He has imagination and a big equipment, however, that shows a broad potential.

Prokofiev's mad, brilliant, precocious "Scythian Suite," composed when he was only 23, was the final number. This is extravagantly sophisticated music on a glamorously barbaric subject — sun-worshipping pagans. Its delirious ending with frenzied men chanting to their god was played deliriously as only a great orchestra could.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 900,000
OCT 13 1966

Praise, With Reservations

By MILES KASTENDIECK

WHAT JOY it was to hear a great orchestra like the Boston Symphony play once again in Philharmonic Hall last night. To Erich Leinsdorf's everlasting credit, he has achieved a clarity in performance that glorifies the players one and all. That he may not communicate all the essence of a work, however, sometimes becomes the story of a concert.

So it was at least with the Sibelius Fifth which opened a program of solid fare none of which was less than 50 years old. For all his penetration and the clear-cut exposition of the score, the music fell short of the emotional impact it can have. He did, however, conduct a superb virtuoso performance of Prokofieff's Scythian Suite, accentuating how handsomely this well-groomed orchestra plays.

A "sober, steadfast, and demure" Sibelius Fifth pays insufficient tribute to the romantic impulse that prompted it. In his somewhat literal interpretation, Mr. Leinsdorf distilled the urgency inherent in the music. It sounded dry. Furthermore the movements did not culminate: they just ended effectively.

Had not the orchestra played so well, certain stretches of the piece would have sounded duller than they did, partly for reasons of tempo. Hesitating too long between the chords at the end also brought an unwelcome anticlimax. Throughout the performance the woodwinds were exciting, but the brasses needed more decisive statement.

All these reservations disappeared during the Prokofieff, which wears well. Though a germinal piece stylistically, foreshadowing later developments, it stands up boldly to Stravinsky's "Sacre" with its primitive instincts and pagan colors. The famous sunrise however, dazzled more through brilliance than effulgence.

Dvorak's Violin Concerto with the young Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist pursued a lengthy course because neither the performance nor the violinist sustained interest. He started well, for he is technically accomplished and temperamentally alert. He can spin a fine tone and impart some warmth when he desires, but he tensed in his playing and lapsed into some matter-of-fact projection of notes. Had he relaxed, this performance would have been quite different and undoubtedly more ingratiating.

The orchestra became the star of the evening. Its conductor shone in reflected glory because of its disciplined playing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
OCT 9 1966

B.S.O. on Tour

The Boston Symphony will be out of town this week, presenting four concerts in the New York area. These programs mark the beginning of the orchestra's 80th consecutive season of concerts in New York.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct concerts Wednesday and Friday evenings in Philharmonic Hall with violinist Shmuel Ashkenasi as soloist; Thursday evening at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, with cellist Jules Eskin as soloist, and Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall, in the Mahler Third, assisted by Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Boy Choir.

The next Symphony Hall concert will be Tuesday evening, Oct. 18, the first program of the "Cambridge series.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
OCT 9 1966

WEDNESDAY

BOSTON SYMPHONY, Philharmonic Hall, 8:30 P.M. Conductor, Erich Leinsdorf; Shmuel Ashkenasi, violinist. Repeated Friday at 8:30 P.M.
Symphony No. 5 ..... Sibelius
Violin Concerto in A minor (Op. 53) Dvorak
Scythian Suite (Op. 20) ..... Prokofiev

93

BROOKLYN #1 OCT 13

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN KINGS COUR[redacted]
Saturday, October 8, 1966

Symphony Orchestra Greats Signed for Academy Series

Three world famous symphony orchestras will be featured in the 79th annual concert series of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, it was announced today by Seth S. Faison, Chairman of the Academy's Governing Committee.

The so-called cultural explosion, Mr. Faison observes, has stimulated more and more communities to compete for the limited out-of-town performances of the established symphony orchestras. "Consequently," he adds, "we are particularly happy that we have been able to secure such an outstanding series."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present three concerts (Oct. 13, Jan. 26 and April 13). One concert each by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Jean Martinon, conducting (Nov. 16) and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, Karl Munchinger, conducting (March 8) completes the series. "We are sure that the innovation of a series of three different orchestras -- a departure from our 78-year tradition of presenting only the Bson Symphony Orchestra -- will add excitement this season," Mr. Faison remarked. "Moreover," he declared, "not only are we offering a superb group of five concerts, but a saving of over 25% on the series as a whole brings great performances by great orchestras within the reach of the entire community." Further information is available from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn 11217, 783-6700.

The Academy Orchestra Series opens on Thurs., Oct. 13 at 8:30 p.m. in the Opera House of the Academy, as it has for the past 79 years, with the appearance [redacted] Boston Symphony Orchestra. Erich [redacted] Music Director of the Bostonians, will conduct.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK NEWS
Sunday, October 9, 1966

Leinsdorp to Conduct

In the special events category, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the opening concert of the 79th season Thursday at 8:30 P.M. Carlos Montoya and his flamenco guitar will be on hand Saturday.

On Wednesday and Oct. 19, Edward Jaffe will lead folk and square dances on the Opera House stage at 7:30 P.M. There will be a concert by the Little Orchestra Society today and "Merlin the Magician" will provide entertainment for children Saturday at 2:30 P.M.

LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y.
GREENPOINT STAR
W. 8,500

OCT 1 4 1966

Academy of Music Presents Top Talent

Three world famous symphony orchestras will be featured in the 79th annual concert series of the Brooklyn Academy of Music, it was announced today by Seth S. Faison, chairman of the academy's governing committee.

The so-called cultural explosion, Faison observes, has stimulated more and more communities to compete for the limited out-of-town performances of the established symphony orchestras. "Consequently," he adds, "we are particularly happy that we have been able to secure such an outstanding series."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present three concerts (October 13, January 26, and April 13). One concert each by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Jean Martinon, conducting (November 16) and the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, Karl Munchinger, conducting (March 8) completes the series. "We are sure that the innovation of a series of three different orchestras—a departure from our 78-year tradition of presenting only the Boston Symphony Orchestra—will add excitement this season," Mr. Faison remarked. "Moreover," he declared, "not only are we offering a superb group of five concerts, but a saving of over 25 per cent on the series as a whole brings great performances by great orchestras within the reach of the entire community." Further information is available from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn 11217, 783-6700.

The Academy Orchestra Series opened on Thursday, Oct. 13th at 8:30 P.M. in the Opera House of the Academy, as it has for the past 79 years, with the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Membership to the Academy, at $20, includes over 200 free events including concerts, lectures, feature films, dances, children's shows, and discounts to many of the Academy's special events. For the 1966-67 season brochure including detailed information about the programs, activities, special events and gifts, write The Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, Brooklyn 11217 or phone 783 - 6700.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
ADVOCATE
W. 26,500

OCT 1 5 1966

BROOKLYN ACADEMY OF MUSIC... The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present three concerts, October 13, January 26 and April 13. The innovation of a series of three different orchestras will add excitement this season. Further information is available from the Bklyn. Ac. of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., Bklyn. 11217, 783-6700. The Academy Series opens Thursday, Oct. 13 at 8:30 pm in the Opera House of the Academy, as it has for the past 79 years, with the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director of the Bostonians will conduct.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,500

OCT 1 5 1966

Brooklyn Academy of Music

BROOKLYN OPERA CO. — 10th fall season. $4.00 top price. Oct. 22 - "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci"; Nov. 5 - "Rigoletto"; Nov. 12 - "Carmen"; Dec. 10- "Madama Butterfly." Information: B'klyn Opera Co., 1860 B'way, N.Y.C. 10023, Performances in the Academy's Opera House.

FOUR CONCERTS of famous S. Hurok artists. Fri., Nov. 4- Leonid Kogan, violinist; Fri., Jan 6 - Emil Gilels, pianist; Fri., Jan 20 - Andres Segovia, classical guitarist; Tues., Feb. 7 - Artur Rubenstein, pianist. All performances at 8:30 p.m. Information: LO 4-6990.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, Conducting. Opening Concert of the 79th Season includes Janacek, "Vixen" Suite and Beethoven, Symphony No. 7 in A minor. Soloist - Jules Eskin. Thurs., Oct. 13, 8:30 p.m.

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 31,450

OCT 1 3 1966

Boston Symphony At Bklyn Academy

Jules Eskin, brilliant first cellist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be the fea[redacted] ist in the Schumann [redacted] certo when the Boston [redacted] Orchestra begins its 79th consecutive season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thursday, October 13th at 8:30 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf will also conduct the Beethoven Symphony No. 7 and Janacek's Suite from "The Cunning Little Vixen."

Leinsdorf, who has been music director of the Bostonians since 1963, came to the United States in tmhe late 30's to be a conductor of the Metrapolitan Opera Company. Not generally known is the fact that he had visa trouble. When his visa expired in 1938, Leinsdorf recalls, "It took the help of a freshman Congressman named Yyndon Johnson to prepare the necessary le[redacted] the [redacted] ly, [redacted] on-sulate for quick re-entry."

CARNEGIE HALL #1 OCT. 15

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
OCT 12 1966

Music Tonight...

Metropolitan Opera: Verdi's "La Traviata," cast includes Anna Moffo, Bruno Prevedi, Robert Merrill, Georges Pretre conducting, Lincoln Center, 8.

Boston Symphony Orches-

MERRILL PRETRE

tra: Erich Leinsdorf conducting, Shumel Ashkenasi, soloist in Dvorak's Violin Concerto, Philharmonic Hall, 8:30.

The Moscow Chamber Orchestra, Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

COLUMBUS, GA.
LEDGER-ENQUIRER
SUN. 57,500
OCT 23 1966

Miss Richardson Sings With Boston Symphony

MISS PATRICIA RICHARDSON, a freshman at the New England Conservatory, Boston, was one of a small group of students chosen from the conservatory's Mahler Chorus to sing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 15 at Carnegie Hall, New York. The group presented Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony. Miss Richardson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Richardson, is a student of Mme. Re Koster at the conservatory.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
OCT 15 1966

Also, "Turandot," Metropolitan Opera, 8 P.M.; "The Consul," New York City Opera, New York State Theater, 8:15; New York Philharmonic, Philharmonic Hall, 8:30; Boston Symphony, Carnegie Hall, 8:30; New Chamber Quintet, Carnegie Recital Hall, 8:30; Austin Reller, violinist, Rogers Auditorium, Metropolitan Museum, 8:30; Composers' Forum, Donnell Library, 20 West 53d Street, 8:30; Guiomar Novaes, pianist, Washington Irving High School, 8:30.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK NEWS
Sunday, October 9, 1966

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836
OCT 9 1966

Bostonians Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Erich Leinsdorf, will play the first of four concerts at Carnegie Hall next Saturday night. The program includes contralto Shirley Verrett, the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Boychoir.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
OCT 9 1966

Shirley Verrett, mezzo, soloist with the Boston Symphony in the Mahler Third at Carnegie Hall on Saturday evening.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

N. Y. AMSTERDAM NEWS
Saturday, October 15, 1966

NEW YORK
Amsterdam News
W. 67,662
OCT 15 1966

Miss Verrett With Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give a series of four concerts at Carnegie Hall to celebrate the 75th anniversary season of the famous auditorium on 57th St., and Seventh Avenue.

The concerts, all scheduled for Saturday evenings, are devoted to music of the "Viennese School," and with one exception will consist of works by composers identified with Vienna from the 18th century to the present. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the orchestra, will conduct all four concerts, the opening event scheduled for this Saturday evening, at 8:30.

The program this Saturday evening will be devoted entirely to the Third Symphony of Gustav Mahler, which calls for solo voice and chorus as well as a full orchestra. The soloist in this performance will be Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, and the chorus that of the New England Conservatory augmented by the Boston Boy Choir.

DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
D. 2,097,578 SUN. 3,070,836
OCT 12 1966

Musical Salute

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Erich Leinsdorf, will salute Carnegie Hall's 75th anniversary with a series of four concerts, the first of which will be given at the hall Saturday evening. The concerts will feature the music of the Viennese school, with the first one devoted entirely to the Third Symphony of Gustav Mahler. The vocal soloist will be mezzo-soprano Shirley Verrett. The chorus will be the New England Conservatory augmented by the Boston Boy Choir.

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
OCT 15 1966

Mahler's Third Played By Boston Symphony

There was a treat for Mahler fans on Saturday night when the Boston Sympathy Orchestra opened its 1966-67 series of Carnegie Hall concerts with Mahler's Symphony No. 3 in D minor. There was no time for anything else, of course, for this six-movement essay in musical rhetoric lasts almost two hours including time for an intermission between the first and second movements.

It is curious that a work so long-winded and repetitious and so cluttered with banalities should continue to fascinate conductors and listeners, but it does. Perhaps, it is because just about the time you think you can't stand anymore of it, something happens that is arresting. That something usually has a noble sound that arouses thoughts of magnanimity, redemption and other such things.

The performance conducted by Erich Leinsdorf seemed to do about as much as any could to make the event seem worth the effort. Mahler's superb orchestration projected clearly, and healthy tempos kept the music from bogging down in its own excesses.

Shirley Verrett sang the solo of the fourth movement beautifully. She was joined in the fifth movement by the Boston Boychoir (John Oliver, director) and the women of the New England Conservatory Chorus (Lorna Cooke deVaron, director). Both groups made admirable contributions.

ALLEN HUGHES.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 900,000
OCT 17 1966

Joyous Mahler With Leinsdorf

By WILLIAM BENDER

I have been to Carnegie Hall to hear Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra play Gustav Mahler's Third Symphony, and I am still jumping for joy.

What a symphony! What a performance! And what a pity that we have not heard more of a work that—while not Mahler's ultimate utterance—is certainly the purest essence of the mature, skilled and optimistic side of one of the greatest composers of modern times.

Joy is decidedly the word for the Third Symphony. A sloganeer might almost call it his "fun" symphony. How Mahler exults in his love of nature, his fondness for fellow-man, and his love of mystery. And how he delights and touches us with the directness of his musical statements and the theatrical brilliance of his symphonic shapes.

Super-symphonic might be a better term. The symphony consists of six movements and it runs a bit over 90 minutes. Saturday night, when the Bostonians began a four-concert series devoted largely to Viennese composers, the Mahler Third was an event of a full two hours, if you count a 23-minute intermission after the long first movement, and if you count the wildly enthusiastic ovation that concluded the evening.

Despite its length — and this is the astonishing thing —the symphony never wears out its welcome. Gone is the ego-heaviness of the First Symphony ("The Titan"). Gone is the metaphysics of the Second ("Resurrection"). Gone is the redundancy of both those works.

In place of all this is Mahler's confidence to be—well, Mahler. And this means, since Mahler was an incessant musical punster, that he isn't afraid to show his debt to Wagner now and then or to insert a little intentional schmaltz. But these are merely passing moments. Elsewhere there are the pulsating march rhythms, the drum rolls, the trumpet calls, the muted trills of the strings, the twinkling woodwinds, the direct melodic style—all combined into one irrevocable fusion of form and style.

Leinsdorf's performance hid nothing. It was radiantly extroverted, with less of the darkish qualities that Leonard Bernstein has found in the music. Shirley Verrett sang her "Nietzsche" solo from a high stand at stage rear with breathtaking power and delicacy. The "chiming" of the choirs in the last movement was a superb moment, as was Armando Ghitala's off-stage trumpet solo in the third movement.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

N. Y. AMSTERDAM NEWS
Saturday, October 15, 1966

Concerts This Week

FRIDAY, October 14 — Miriam Makeba, presented by Harold Leventhal, 8:30 p.m., Carnegie Hall.

SATURDAY, October 15 — Shirley Verrett, mezzo-soprano, appears with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, 8:30 p.m., Carnegie Hall.

CARNEGIE HALL

Gustav Mahler's Symphony No. 3 in D minor, in six movements; the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf; alto Shirley Verrett; the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon director, and the Boston Boychoir, John Oliver director.

95

PROVIDENCE #1 NOV. 3

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737
OCT 30 1966

SOPRANO Phyllis Bryn-Julson will be a soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, during their first concert of the season, Thursday at Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737
OCT 30 1966

PROV #1

MUSIC

THURSDAY

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra will present its first concert of the season at 8:30 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. Soloists for the evening will be soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson and pianist Claude Frank.

The program, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, follows:

Symphony in G minor, K. 550 . . Mozart
Suite from "Lulu," Opera in Three Acts . . . . . Berg
Phyllis Bryn-Julson, soprano
Piano Concerto No. 1, in C major, Op. 15
Claude Frank, pianist

WASHINGTON #1 NOV. 15

96

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 444,396 SUN. 553,012

NOV 16 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Circ. 422,145

NOV 17 1966

Postlude

New Kennedy Memorial Music Is Painful Failure

By Paul Hume

Three years ago next Tuesday John Fitzgerald Kennedy died in Dallas. The tragic violence of that death was recalled last night in Constitution Hall when Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a new work entitled "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy."

Hume

The score came into being as the result of a commission from Leinsdorf for a major work for narrator and orchestra. Its composer is William Sydeman, whose Study No. 2 for Orchestra was receiving its world première from this same conductor and orchestra at almost the very moment of Kennedy's death.

Sydeman tells, in program notes for his new work, how Leinsdorf, having finished the composer's new Study, left the stage and then returned to it to announce the tragic news to the Boston audience, after which he conducted the orchestra in the Funeral March from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony.

It is the theme of that Funeral March that provides Sydeman with the initial germ of his memorial piece. But, as he says, "the text is the basic element of the work." The selection of that text, he adds, was the most difficult but also the most rewarding aspect of the work. The exhaustive reading he did in making his selection led him to use passages from Allan Nevis' Introduction to Volume II of Kennedy Speeches, from the Bookof Ecclesiastes, from a poem by Stephen Spender, from the Kennedy biographies by Arthur Schlesinger, and Theodore Sorensen, and, inevitably, from the words of President Kennedy himself.

All of this testifies to Sydeman's sincerity and concern in attempting what proves to be, as it has in the past, almost without exception, an impossible task. In this case, the result is worse than usual. Aside from touchingly elegiac phrases for strings at the opening and closing of the work, the music, moving sententiously, continually gets in the way of the words, while the words, too, obscure the musical purposes.

Asked to consider various social, political and philosophical views of the six men upon whom Sydeman drew, we are then wrenched into a different arena by music whose relevance never becomes convincing. No one wants memorial music for John Kennedy to lack either a lofty character or some reflection of the incredible zest and human delight in humor that he possessed.

But we are already blessed with a host of great works that have something in common with his perceptive outlook and his singularly generous bearing. Despite the excellence with which E. G. Marshall read the text, the new Sydeman score must be rated a painful failure.

The evening opened with a reading of the Bach Third Orchestral Suite that suffered grievously from an inflated number of strings, which hopelessly obscured the oboes, bassoons and trumpets that make so rich a sound in this music. As for the harpsichord that was brought from Bosotn for the performance, it might as well have stayed in its native commonwealth, so smothered was it under that plethora of players. It is also probable that a more appropriate number in the orchestra, say half of the 46 or so Leinsdorf used, would have played with more precision and more spirit, though apparently there is a proscription in Boston against any ornaments.

From the way the first movement of the Schumann "Spring" Symphony went, it was going to be the high point of the evening, glowing, beautifully shaped, and a credit to conductor and orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Washington Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Circ. 276,836

NOV 13 1966

The Sunday Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
SUN. 351,015

NOV 13 1966

CONCERT PREVIEW

A Musical Memorial To John F. Kennedy

The Boston Symphony concert in Constitution Hall Tuesday night will include a new "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, a 38-year-old composer on the faculty of the Mannes College of Music in New York.

ERICH LEINSDORF

In a program note for the piece, Sydeman describes the personal, musical, and literary materials he has used. When the news of Kennedy's assassination came, Sydeman was in Symphony Hall, Boston, where the orchestra had just given the first performance of another of his works, "Study No. 2 for Orchestra." After making the announcement, Erich Leinsdorf conducted the funeral march from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. "It is impossible," Sydeman writes, "for me to think of the tragedy without recalling this movement. . . .

And so I have incorporated and developed at length fragments of two elements of the 'Eroica': the opening bar with its heavy dotted rhythms, and the initial phrases of the second theme . . ."

Sydeman has also incorporated a phrase from the national anthem—the music accompanying the words "and the rockets' red glare." This he has done to portray Kennedy's "heroic proportions."

Throughout most of the work, the orchestral writing forms a background to the narration of several texts. There are passages from Kennedy's speeches, eulogies by Allan Nevins, Theodore Sorensen and Arthur Schlesinger; a passage from Ecclesiastes; and a poem by Stephen Spender.

Sydeman has received several honors in recent years. They include an award from the National Institute of Arts and Letters and a commission from the Koussevitzky Foundation (not yet completed).

—JOHN VINTON.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Washington News
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Circ. 212,455

NOV 16 1966 THE WASH

Tribute to Kennedy Falls Flat

It's always a pleasure to hear Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra even when they perform such embarrasingly pretentious works as William Sydeman's In Memoriam John F. Kennedy.

This tribute to the late President had its Washington premiere at Constitution Hall last night in the first of two concerts the Boston Symphony is given here this season.

It consists of two movements — Adagio lamentoso which certainly conveyed the grief the nation felt, and some of the frantic bewilderment, over President Kennedy's death, and Allegro: Theme and Variations.

Woven into it is a narration, which actor E. G. Marshall delivered clearly and unsentimentally.

The text is a patchwork of quotations from the men close to President Kennedy, from a poem by Stephen Spender, from the Bible, from Kennedy speeches. Too much of it is pedestrian and too much of it is unrelated to the episodic — perhaps disjointed is a better word — that underscores the text.

I found the Bach Suite No. 3 in D. for Orchestra and the Schumann Symphony No. 1 ("Spring"), both of which found the Boston Symphony, in glorious form, a much more accurate reflection of the spirit of John F. Kennedy.

MILTON BERLINER

The Evening Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 300,667 SUN. 351,015

NOV 16 1966

NEWS OF MUSIC

Kennedy 'Memoriam' Over-Ostentatious

By IRVING LOWENS
Music Critic of The Star

Music Critic of The Star
Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Constitution Hall. Program: Suite No. 3 in D, Bach; In Memoriam John F. Kennedy (1st Washington performance), Sydeman; Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Op. 38 (Spring), Schumann.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra came to Constitution Hall last night, bringing with it a new work, "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," by the 38-year-old American composer, William Sydeman.

The composition was the result of a commission awarded by Erich Leinsdorf for a major work for narrator and orchestra. The idea of such a piece dedicated to the memory of John F. Kennedy was initiated by Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann of New York City, and the commission was made possible through her generosity.

Unfortunately, the idea turned out better in theory than in practice. About the only thing that "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" succeeded in doing was to demonstrate how difficult it is to mix art and politics.

For the text of the narration (delivered in solemn forensic style by E. G. Marshall, well known to television audiences for his portrayal of the senior attorney in "The Defenders"), Sydeman chose a melange of quotations from Allan Nevins, the Book of Ecclesiastes, Stephen Spender, Arthur Schlesinger, Theodore Sorenson and the late president himself.

These were recited against a background of pretentious and bombastic music of interminable length.

At the conclusion of the work, I am afraid there was not a wet eye in the sold-out house, although there were many in the audience who knew President Kennedy personally and who were quite prepared to be touched by the intended tribute.

It is an astonishing achievement when a piece of music can manage to transform some of President Kennedy's most eloquent words into something much like a campaign speech for the Democratic Party. Sydeman accomplished this with a rare degree of perfection.

When Marshal got to Sorenson's words, it suddenly occurred to me that the Sydeman tribute bore a depressing family resemblance to certain cantatas written in the Soviet Union in bygone days, when composers—and good ones, too, such as Prokofieff—used Stalin's speeches and the platform of the Communist party of the U.S.S.R. to create "heroic" masterpieces for the people. They are now forgotten, I would hope that, in due time, Sydeman's "In Memoriam" will be, too.

I do not think I was alone in my discomfort, from the intermission chatter. Indeed, it would be hard to think of any body who would have disliked such an ostentatious display more than Jack Kennedy himself.

Part of the trouble, I am sure, was the work's inordinate length. Stravinsky, in his "Elegy for J.F.K.," expressed his grief quietly and used about three minutes to do so. Sydeman goes on and on ten times as long.

The composer was on hand to acknowledge the audience's applause, as he had been at the world premier in Boston on Nov. 4.

"To everything, there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven," went the quotation from Ecclesiastes of which he made use. "A time to be born and a time to die, a time to laugh, a time to weep, a time to mourn, a time to speak."

There is also, according to Ecclesiastes, "a time to keep silence," but Sydeman did not use that phrase.

The remainder of the concert did not really give anybody too much to cheer about, although I must say that the joyous affirmation of the Schumann Spring Symphony after the Sydeman debacle came like a breath of fresh air. But it did not work the way it should—there was about it an odd combination of pedanticism and license. Leinsdorf dutifully repeated the exposition in the first and last movements, but the scherzo (marked "molto vivace") lumbered along in a slow lope, and the concluding "quasi presto" sounded more like "quasi adagio." There were many other liberties taken with the tempi, and most of them sounded quite arbitrary.

The D major Bach Suite (with the familiar "Air for the G String") which began the evening showed that it takes more than a harpsichord to guarantee authenticity of style. Leinsdorf used virtually the full complement of the Boston strings, and, glorious as their tone may be, they sounded much too heavy for Bach. Nor was there any evidence of double-dotting in the French overture with which the Suite opened. Nor could I hear anything approaching terrace dynamics.

All in all, I would characterize yesterday's affair as the most forgettable BSO appearance in Constitution Hall in a long , long time.

WASHINGTON #1 NOV. 15

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 444,396 SUN. 553,012

NOV 16 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Circ. 422,145

NOV 17 1966

Postlude

New Kennedy Memorial Music Is Painful Failure

By Paul Hume

Three years ago next Tuesday John Fitzgerald Kennedy died in Dallas. The tragic violence of that death was recalled last night in Constitution Hall when Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a new work entitled "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy."

Hume

The score came into being as the result of a commission from Leinsdorf for a major work for narrator and orchestra. Its composer is William Sydeman, whose Study No. 2 for Orchestra was receiving its world première from this same conductor and orchestra at almost the very moment of Kennedy's death.

Sydeman tells, in program notes for his new work, how Leinsdorf, having finished the composer's new Study, left the stage and then returned to it to announce the tragic news to the Boston audience, after which he conducted the orchestra in the Funeral March from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony.

It is the theme of that Funeral March that provides Sydeman with the initial germ of his memorial piece. But, as he says, "the text is the basic element of the work." The selection of that text, he adds, was the most difficult but also the most rewarding aspect of the work. The exhaustive reading he did in making his selection led him to use passages from Allan Nevis' Introduction to Volume II of Kennedy Speeches, from the Book of Ecclesiastes, from a poem by Stephen Spender, from the Kennedy biographies by Arthur Schlesinger, and Theodore Sorensen, and, inevitably, from the words of President Kennedy himself.

All of this testifies to Sydeman's sincerity and concern in attempting what proves to be, as it has in the past, almost without exception, an impossible task. In this case, the result is worse than usual. Aside from touchingly elegiac phrases for strings at the opening and closing of the work, the music, moving sententiously, continually gets in the way of the words, while the words, too, obscure the musical purposes.

Asked to consider various social, political and philosophical views of the six men upon whom Sydeman drew, we are then wrenched into a different arena by music whose relevance never becomes convincing. No one wants memorial music for John Kennedy to lack either a lofty character or some reflection of the incredible zest and human delight in humor that he possessed.

But we are already blessed with a host of great works that have something in common with his perceptive outlook and his singularly generous bearing. Despite the excellence with which E. G. Marshall read the text, the new Sydeman score must be rated a painful failure.

The evening opened with a reading of the Bach Third Orchestral Suite that suffered grievously from an inflated number of strings, which hopelessly obscured the oboes, bassoons and trumpets that make so rich a sound in this music. As for the harpsichord that was brought from Bosotn for the performance, it might as well have stayed in its native commonwealth, so smothered was it under that plethora of players. It is also probable that a more appropriate number in the orchestra, say half of the 46 or so Leinsdorf used, would have played with more precision and more spirit, though apparently there is a proscription in Boston against any ornaments.

From the way the first movement of the Schumann "Spring" Symphony went, it was going to be the high point of the evening, glowing, beautifully shaped, and a credit to conductor and orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Washington Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Circ. 276,836

NOV 13 1966

The Sunday Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
SUN. 351,015

NOV 13 1966

CONCERT PREVIEW

A Musical Memorial To John F. Kennedy

The Boston Symphony concert in Constitution Hall Tuesday night will include a new "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman, a 38-year-old composer on the faculty of the Mannes College of Music in New York.

ERICH LEINSDORF

In a program note for the piece, Sydeman describes the personal, musical, and literary materials he has used. When the news of Kennedy's assassination came, Sydeman was in Symphony Hall, Boston, where the orchestra had just given the first performance of another of his works, "Study No. 2 for Orchestra." After making the announcement, Erich Leinsdorf conducted the funeral march from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. "It is impossible," Sydeman writes, "for me to think of the tragedy without recalling this movement. . . .

And so I have incorporated and developed at length fragments of two elements of the 'Eroica': the opening bar with its heavy dotted rhythms, and the initial phrases of the second theme . . ."

Sydeman has also incorporated a phrase from the national anthem—the music accompanying the words "and the rockets' red glare." This he has done to portray Kennedy's "heroic proportions."

Throughout most of the work, the orchestral writing forms a background to the narration of several texts. There are passages from Kennedy's speeches, eulogies by Allan Nevins, Theodore Sorensen and Arthur Schlesinger; a passage from Ecclesiastes; and a poem by Stephen Spender.

Sydeman has received several honors in recent years. They include an award from the National Institute of Arts and Letters and a commission from the Koussevitzky Foundation (not yet completed).

—JOHN VINTON.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Washington News
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Circ. 212,455

NOV 16 1966
THE WASH

Tribute to Kennedy Falls Flat

It's always a pleasure to hear Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra even when they perform such embarrasingly pretentious works as William Sydeman's In Memoriam John F. Kennedy.

This tribute to the late President had its Washington premiere at Constitution Hall last night in the first of two concerts the Boston Symphony is given here this season.

It consists of two movements — Adagio lamentoso which certainly conveyed the grief the nation felt, and some of the frantic bewilderment, over President Kennedy's death, and Allegro: Theme and Variations.

Woven into it is a narration, which actor E. G. Marshall delivered clearly and unsentimentally.

The text is a patchwork of quotations from the men close to President Kennedy, from a poem by Stephen Spender, from the Bible, from Kennedy speeches. Too much of it is pedestrian and too much of it is unrelated to the episodic — perhaps disjointed is a better word — that underscores the text.

I found the Bach Suite No. 3 in D. for Orchestra and the Schumann Symphony No. 1 ("Spring"), both of which found the Boston Symphony, in glorious form, a much more accurate reflection of the spirit of John F. Kennedy.

MILTON BERLINER

The Evening Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 300,667 SUN. 351,015

NOV 16 1966

NEWS OF MUSIC

Kennedy 'Memoriam' Over-Ostentatious

By IRVING LOWENS
Music Critic of The Star

Music Critic of The Star
Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Constitution Hall. Program: Suite No. 3 in D, Bach; In Memoriam John F. Kennedy (1st Washington performance), Sydeman; Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Op. 38 (Spring), Schumann.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra came to Constitution Hall last night, bringing with it a new work, "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," by the 38-year-old American composer, William Sydeman.

The composition was the result of a commission awarded by Erich Leinsdorf for a major work for narrator and orchestra. The idea of such a piece dedicated to the memory of John F. Kennedy was initiated by Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann of New York City, and the commission was made possible through her generosity.

Unfortunately, the idea turned out better in theory than in practice. About the only thing that "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" succeeded in doing was to demonstrate how difficult it is to mix art and politics.

For the text of the narration (delivered in solemn forensic style by E. G. Marshall, well known to television audiences for his portrayal of the senior attorney in "The Defenders") Sydeman chose a melange of quotations from Allan Nevins, the Book of Ecclesiastes, Stephen Spender, Arthur Schlesinger, Theodore Sorenson and the late president himself.

These were recited against a background of pretentious and bombastic music of interminable length.

At the conclusion of the work, I am afraid there was not a wet eye in the sold-out house, although there were many in the audience who knew President Kennedy personally and who were quite prepared to be touched by the intended tribute.

It is an astonishing achievement when a piece of music can manage to transform some of President Kennedy's most eloquent words into something much like a campaign speech for the Democratic Party. Sydeman accomplished this with a rare degree of perfection.

When Marshal got to Sorenson's words, it suddenly occurred to me that the Sydeman tribute bore a depressing family resemblance to certain cantatas written in the Soviet Union in bygone days, when composers—and good ones, too, such as Prokofieff—used Stalin's speeches and the platform of the Communist party of the U.S.S.R. to create "heroic" masterpieces for the people. They are now forgotten, I would hope that, in due time, Sydeman's "In Memoriam" will be, too.

I do not think I was alone in my discomfort, from the intermission chatter. Indeed, it would be hard to think of any body who would have disliked such an ostentatious display more than Jack Kennedy himself.

Part of the trouble, I am sure, was the work's inordinate length. Stravinsky, in his "Elegy for J.F.K.," expressed his grief quietly and used about three minutes to do so. Sydeman goes on and on ten times as long.

The composer was on hand to acknowledge the audience's applause, as he had been at the world premier in Boston on Nov. 4.

"To everything, there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven," went the quotation from Ecclesiastes of which he made use. "A time to be born and a time to die, a time to laugh, a time to weep, a time to mourn, a time to speak."

There is also, according to Ecclesiastes, "a time to keep silence," but Sydeman did not use that phrase.

The remainder of the concert did not really give anybody too much to cheer about, although I must say that the joyous affirmation of the Schumann Spring Symphony after the Sydeman debacle came like a breath of fresh air. But it did not work the way it should—there was about it an odd combination of pedanticism and license. Leinsdorf dutifully repeated the exposition in the first and last movements, but the scherzo (marked "molto vivace") lumbered along in a slow lope, and the concluding "quasi presto" sounded more like "quasi adagio." There were many other liberties taken with the tempi, and most of them sounded quite arbitrary.

The D major Bach Suite (with the familiar "Air for the G String") which began the evening showed that it takes more than a harpsichord to guarantee authenticity of style. Leinsdorf used virtually the full complement of the Boston strings, and, glorious as their tone may be, they sounded much too heavy for Bach. Nor was there any evidence of double-dotting in the French overture with which the Suite opened. Nor could I hear anything approaching terrace dynamics.

All in all, I would characterize yesterday's affair as the most forgettable BSO appearance in Constitution Hall in a long , long time.

97

PHILHARMONIC HALL #2 NOV. 16 + 18

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
NOV 17 1966

Words and Music

By Harriett Johnson

Premiere—'In Memoriam Kennedy'

William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," given its local premiere last night by the Boston Symphony at Philharmonic Hall, is a work in the tradition of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." Copland used excerpts from Lincoln's letters and speeches with musical treatment, and Sydeman, (like Copland, a native N. Y. son) closes with speeches, preceded by quotations from Arthur Schlesinger, Theodore Sorensen, Allan Nevins; from Ecclesiastes and from a poem by Stephen Spender.

Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted the 26-minute piece, commissioned Sydeman to compose such a work after the idea had been initiated by Mrs. Ruth Kaufman, a New York City resident. She also gave the money to make the commission possible.

Sydeman proved to be a wise choice; he has succeeded in a moving musical tribute to our late President. His choice of material recalls the many facets of President Kennedy's personality and character and their ramifications in action: patriot, realist, visionary, practical man of affairs, idealist. And the quotations preceding the speeches, especially those from the Bible and Spender, stimulate us to think beyond what Kennedy said to a heightened awareness of his significance in long range perspective.

The music, which includes an orchestral introduction and several interludes, uses a complex technique with sensitivity and a skilled craftsman's insight. He knows when to expand and when to contract his ideas; how to accompany the narration, how to prepare us for the lines to come. There is musical shape, a tautness despite the sprawling length of text.

He develops a short musical phrase from our National Anthem and also phrases from Beethoven's funeral march from his "Eroica" Symphony. But these are so modified in the composer's treatment, they become absorbed into the fabric and to many, I'm sure, were unrecognizable, Sydeman has composed a poignant, arresting work, more narrative than tragic, but significant in the telling.

Leinsdorf led the work with mastery and imagination. E. G. Marshall, the narrator, spoke with great dignity and his professional manner, but his voice and inflections didn't project much color or imagination.

We could paraphrase the first line of the quotation from Spender as the key to the experience of listening to "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy:" We think constantly of him who was truly great.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
VILLAGE VOICE
W. 35,500
NOV 24 1966

THE BOSTONIANS

Alban Berg's Suite from his unfinished opera, "Lulu," was a special highlight of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's New York concerts last week. This 12-tone score remains one of the strongest existing arguments for this compositional system as a vocabulary for very dense expressivity and for the special kind of outgoing, theatrical emotion

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 900,000
NOV 17 1966

PHILHARMONIC

'In Memoriam JFK'

By WILLIAM BENDER

JOHN F. KENNEDY HAD THE GIFT of eloquence. So, to varying degrees, did many of the historians who wrote about him in the days that followed his assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. What better way to create a text for a musical tribute to the fallen leader than to tap both these sources of eloquence?

This is exactly what the American composer William Sydeman has done in his new work for narrator and orchestra "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy." Unfortunately, he has ordered his text in such a way that his audience is left with too much literary richness and too little artistic shape. And the music he has intertwined with the text does of its own that might have not have the kind of life of its own that might have compensated for the theatrical deficiencies of the text.

TASK SUCCESSFUL

The work was commissioned by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gave the world premiere in Boston Nov. 4 and which presented it to New York last night in Philharmonic Hall. The actor E. G. Marshall was narrator.

A work for narrator and orchestra is not an easy thing to bring off. But that was what Leinsdorf wanted, and that was what the composer agreed to provide. By his own account, the thing Sydeman wanted to do most was to achieve a full integration of narration and music, not the sort of work —Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," for example—in which the words can be "lifted" with virtually no harm to the music. In this, Sydeman has been successful.

KEPT IN BACKGROUND

The narrator's voice is introduced almost as if it were the solo instrument in a concerto. And when Kennedy's words are being uttered — or those of Allan Nevins, Arthur Schlesinger Jr., or Theodore Sorenson, or, additionally, a few lines from "Ecclesiastes" ("To everything, there is a season. . ."), or Stephen Spender's poem of a generation ago, "I think continually of those who were truly great" — the music is kept properly in the background, or is given an appropriate accompanying figure. But the text—highlighted as it is — does not have the drama or simple theatricality to involve the listener.

Nowhere is there an explicit enough indication that the work is in two parts—the first to convey the sense of loss, the second to convey what Kennedy the man stood for. To be sure, there is a subtle change in the musical style, but it is too internal. And the quotes from Kennedy's speeches that conclude the work, to the accompaniment of variations in the orchestra, tend to be anticlimactic.

The music itself is not confined to conventional tonality—or to serialism or a 12-tone row, either—and is pleasingly lyric in spots, the four-minute orchestral introduction especially, and strikingly dissonant elsewhere. But its reticence, no matter how intentional, is its ultimate weakness.

Marshall's narration was straightforward and without emotion. At the time it seemed the right way to do it, but now, in retrospect, one wonders if it might not have been more effective by being less subdued. There was nothing to fault in the work of the orchestra, however.

Leinsdorf framed the new work with two old favorites —the Bach Suite No. 3 and the Schumann "Spring" Symphony, both of which began well but ended ponderously.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 900,000
NOV 18 1966

Bostonians Play Bartok

By MILES KASTENDIECK

THANKS TO BARTOK'S CONCERTO for Two Pianos and Percussion the concert of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night had focus. This work provided some excitement because of its rhythmic pulse and its daring coloration. The remainder of the program created a status quo atmosphere.

Since Bartok plays up the percussion aspect of the pianos as well as the various instruments in that department, the concerto is quite unusual. Its orchestral dress exists primarily for other colors, but it also serves as an accomplishment. Fundamentally, the concerto is a stunning rhythmic workout.

As such it begins to vibrate as soon as the pianos and percussion have entered, and Bartok's energies find release. No matter what happens thereafter, some rhythmic element keeps breaking through. The music is constantly churning rhythmically.

Yet moments of impressionism interrupt the pulsing sounds most effectively especially in the second movement. As a color variant, the use of the xylophone in the third qualifies as a happy inspiration. Repeated hearings increase appreciation, depending on the performance.

MORE "HEP"

Erich Leinsdorf had the Israeli pianists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir as soloists. Their preoccupation was of necessity digital dexterity applied with plenty of verve. They acquitted themselves admirably. So did the various percussionists in their incidental solos. The orchestra sounded more hep to this music than the conductor revealed himself to be, for there is more barbaric splendor lurking in the score than he brought out.

The concert began with a tribute to former concertmaster Richard Burgin who has recently retired. Though billed as conductor and soloist in Bach's Violin Concerto in A Minor, Mr. Burgin played the violin but hardly conducted at all. His solid musicianship resulted in a satisfactory account of the music. In general, the performance plodded. A novel touch came when Mr. Leinsdorf sat down to play the harpsichord.

WORTH WATCHING

Beethoven's Seventh Symphony completed the program. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted with his customary meticulous procedure, somewhat deliberately in the first movement, somewhat affectedly with almost inaudible pianissimos in the second, and a certain boisterousness thereafter.

With his sweeping gestures and swaying body he may soon qualify for the choreographic sweepstakes among conductors worth watching. Last night, he left the impression that he found controlling the orchestra more significant than releasing the music. Could he know too well how the music should go yet not feel free to let it go?

The distinction of the Beethoven as well as of the whole evening lay in superb playing. What a great orchestra this is! And why were there so many empty seats in Carnegie?

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
DEC 3 1966

Leinsdorf & Boston in Blew-Par 1st Work

NEW YORK.—Whether playing baroque, romantic or contemporary music, the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf can be counted on to deliver an interesting program as was the case of Philharmonic Hall on Nov. 18. Unfortunately, not everything came off well.

The major disappointment was the newest work, William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," which received its initial New York performance two days earlier. The piece consists of excerpts from the late President's speeches, a Stephen Spender poem, a selection from Ecclesiastes, and quotations from Kennedy biographies, all read rather theatrically by E. G. Marshall. The music wavered between romantic and modern. The effect was of program music that didn't quite make it. Sometimes the music would obviously try to mirror the text as in the Ecclesiastes reference (a time to laugh, a time to weep, etc.), but at other times it was merely a weak background.

The program began with a straightforward, unbellished performance of Bach's "Suite No. 3 in D," which, despite reduced strings, sounded stringy. The final work was Schumann's "Symphony No. 1," which conductors delight in toying with. Leinsdorf's major innovation was to get progressively slower, so the Scerzo sounded like a stately court dance and the allegro animato e grazioso was more graceful than animated or ingratiating. However, the symphony was the most successful selection of the evening for the Boston, which records exclusively for RCA Victor.

FRED KIRBY

97

PHILHARMONIC HALL #2 NOV. 16 + 18

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
NOV 17 1966

Words and Music

By Harriett Johnson

Premiere–'In Memoriam Kennedy'

William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," given its local premiere last night by the Boston Symphony at Philharmonic Hall, is a work in the tradition of Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait." Copland used excerpts from Lincoln's letters and speeches with musical treatment, and Sydeman, (like Copland, a native N. Y. son) closes with speeches, preceded by quotations from Arthur Schlesinger, Theodore Sorensen, Allan Nevins; from Ecclesiastes and from a poem by Stephen Spender.

Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted the 26-minute piece, commissioned Sydeman to compose such a work after the idea had been initiated by Mrs. Ruth Kaufman, a New York City resident. She also gave the money to make the commission possible.

Sydeman proved to be a wise choice; he has succeeded in a moving musical tribute to our late President. His choice of material recalls the many facets of President Kennedy's personality and character and their ramifications in action: patriot, realist, visionary, practical man of affairs, idealist. And the quotations preceding the speeches, especially those from the Bible and Spender, stimulate us to think beyond what Kennedy said to a heightened awareness of his significance in long range perspective.

The music, which includes an orchestral introduction and several interludes, uses a complex technique with sensitivity and a skilled craftsman's insight. He knows when to expand and when to contract his ideas; how to accompany the narration, how to prepare us for the lines to come. There is musical shape, a tautness despite the sprawling length of text.

He develops a short musical phrase from our National Anthem and also phrases from Beethoven's funeral march from his "Eroica" Symphony. But these are so modified in the composer's treatment, they become absorbed into the fabric and to many, I'm sure, were unrecognizable. Sydeman has composed a poignant, arresting work, more narrative than tragic, but significant in the telling.

Leinsdorf led the work with mastery and imagination. E. G. Marshall, the narrator, spoke with great dignity and in professional manner, but his voice and inflections didn't project much color or imagination.

We could paraphrase the first line of the quotation from Spender as the key to the experience of listening to "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy:" We think constantly of him who was truly great.

NEW YORK, N. Y.
VILLAGE VOICE
W. 35,500
NOV 24 1966

THE BOSTONIANS

Alban Berg's Suite from his unfinished opera, "Lulu," was a special highlight of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's New York concerts last week. This 12-tone score remains one of the strongest existing arguments for this compositional system as a vocabulary for very dense expressivity and for the special kind of outgoing, theatrical emotion

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 900,000
NOV 17 1966

PHILHARMONIC

'In Memoriam JFK'

By WILLIAM BENDER

JOHN F. KENNEDY HAD THE GIFT of eloquence. So, to varying degrees, did many of the historians who wrote about him in the days that followed his assassination on Nov. 22, 1963. What better way to create a text for a musical tribute to the fallen leader than to tap both these sources of eloquence?

This is exactly what the American composer William Sydeman has done in his new work for narrator and orchestra "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy." Unfortunately, he has ordered his text in such a way that his audience is left with too much literary richness and too little artistic shape. And the music he has intertwined with the text does of its own that might have not have the kind of life of its own that might have compensated for the theatrical deficiencies of the text.

TASK SUCCESSFUL

The work was commissioned by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gave the world premiere in Boston Nov. 4 and which presented it to New York last night in Philharmonic Hall. The actor E. G. Marshall was narrator.

A work for narrator and orchestra is not an easy thing to bring off. But that was what Leinsdorf wanted, and that was what the composer agreed to provide. By his own account, the thing Sydeman wanted to do most was to achieve a full integration of narration and music, not the sort of work —Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," for example—in which the words can be "lifted" with virtually no harm to the music. In this, Sydeman has been successful.

KEPT IN BACKGROUND

The narrator's voice is introduced almost as if it were the solo instrument in a concerto. And when Kennedy's words are being uttered — or those of Allan Nevins, Arthur Schlesinger Jr., or Theodore Sorenson, or, additionally, a few lines from "Ecclesiastes" ("To everything, there is a season . . ."), or Stephen Spender's poem of a generation ago, "I think continually of those who were truly great" — the music is kept properly in the background, or is given an appropriate accompanying figure. But the text—highlighted as it is — does not have the drama or simple theatricality to involve the listener.

Nowhere is there an explicit enough indication that the work is in two parts—the first to convey the sense of loss, the second to convey what Kennedy the man stood for. To be sure, there is a subtle change in the musical style, but it is too internal. And the quotes from Kennedy's speeches that conclude the work, to the accompaniment of variations in the orchestra, tend to be anticlimactic.

The music itself is not confined to conventional tonality—or to serialism or a 12-tone row, either—and is pleasingly lyric in spots, the four-minute orchestral introduction especially, and strikingly dissonant elsewhere. But its reticence, no matter how intentional, is its ultimate weakness.

Marshall's narration was straightforward and without emotion. At the time it seemed the right way to do it, but now, in retrospect, one wonders if it might not have been more effective by being less subdued. There was nothing to fault in the work of the orchestra, however.

Leinsdorf framed the new work with two old favorites —the Bach Suite No. 3 and the Schumann "Spring" Symphony, both of which began well but ended ponderously.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 900,000
NOV 18 1966

Bostonians Play Bartok

By MILES KASTENDIECK

THANKS TO BARTOK'S CONCERTO for Two Pianos and Percussion the concert of the Boston Symphony in Carnegie Hall last night had focus. This work provided some excitement because of its rhythmic pulse and its daring coloration. The remainder of the program created a status quo atmosphere.

Since Bartok plays up the percussion aspect of the pianos as well as the various instruments in that department, the concerto is quite unusual. Its orchestral dress exists primarily for other colors, but it also serves as an accomplishment. Fundamentally, the concerto is a stunning rhythmic workout.

As such it begins to vibrate as soon as the pianos and percussion have entered, and Bartok's energies find release. No matter what happens thereafter, some rhythmic element keeps breaking through. The music is constantly churning rhythmically.

Yet moments of impressionism interrupt the pulsing sounds most effectively especially in the second movement. As a color variant, the use of the xylophone in the third qualifies as a happy inspiration. Repeated hearings increase appreciation, depending on the performance.

MORE "HEP"

Erich Leinsdorf had the Israeli pianists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir as soloists. Their preoccupation was of necessity digital dexterity applied with plenty of verve. They acquitted themselves admirably. So did the various percussionists in their incidental solos. The orchestra sounded more hep to this music than the conductor revealed himself to be, for there is more barbaric splendor lurking in the score than he brought out.

The concert began with a tribute to former concertmaster Richard Burgin who has recently retired. Though billed as conductor and soloist in Bach's Violin Concerto in A Minor, Mr. Burgin played the violin but hardly conducted at all. His solid musicianship resulted in a satisfactory account of the music. In general, the performance plodded. A novel touch came when Mr. Leinsdorf sat down to play the harpsichord.

WORTH WATCHING

Beethoven's Seventh Symphony completed the program. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted with his customary meticulous procedure, somewhat deliberately in the first movement, somewhat affectedly with almost inaudible pianissimos in the second, and a certain boisterousness thereafter.

With his sweeping gestures and swaying body he may soon qualify for the choreographic sweepstakes among conductors worth watching. Last night, he left the impression that he found controlling the orchestra more significant than releasing the music. Could he know too well how the music should go yet not feel free to let it go?

The distinction of the Beethoven as well as of the whole evening lay in superb playing. What a great orchestra this is! And why were there so many empty seats in Carnegie?

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
DEC 3 1966

Leinsdorf & Boston in Blew-Par 1st Work

NEW YORK—Whether playing baroque, romantic or contemporary music, the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf can be counted on to deliver an interesting program as was the case of Philharmonic Hall on Nov. 18. Unfortunately, not everything came off well.

The major disappointment was the newest work, William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," which received its initial New York performance two days earlier. The piece consists of excerpts from the late President's speeches, a Stephen Spender poem, a selection from Ecclesiastes, and quotations from Kennedy biographies, all read rather theatrically by E. G. Marshall. The music wavered between romantic and modern. The effect was of program music that didn't quite make it. Sometimes the music would obviously try to mirror the text as in the Ecclesiastes reference (a time to laugh, a time to weep, etc.), but at other times it was merely a weak background.

The program began with a straightforward, unbellished performance of Bach's "Suite No. 3 in D," which, despite reduced strings, sounded stringy. The final work was Schumann's "Symphony No. 1," which conductors delight in toying with. Leinsdorf's major innovation was to get progressively slower, so the Scerzo sounded like a stately court dance and the allegro animato e grazioso was more graceful than animated or ingratiating. However, the symphony was the most successful selection of the evening for the Boston, which records exclusively for RCA Victor.

FRED KIRBY

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
NOV 18 1966

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 442,500
NOV 26 1966

ON Wednesday evening of last week the Boston Symphony, under Erich Leinsdorf, appeared in Philharmonic Hall with a program that was not very different from Mr. Steinberg's. It closed, as Mr. Steinberg's did, with a tried-and-true Romantic symphony—in this case, Schumann's First in B-Flat Major—and Mr. Leinsdorf, who has a special touch in this sort of music, gave it a perceptive reading. The opening number was the Bach Suite No. 3 in D Major for Orchestra, which had been performed here a week before by the Philharmonic, under Lorin Maazel. Mr. Leinsdorf's performance was in every way superior. Then came the dose of unpleasant medicine. William Sydeman, a composer whose talent is undiscernible to me, had created a highly pretentious work called simply "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy." It had a narrator, who solemnly declaimed excerpts from books by Arthur Schlesinger and Theodore Sorensen, a poem by Stephen Spender, an often quoted passage from Ecclesiastes, a hunk out of a preface by Allan Nevins, and some of the late President's own oratory. The narrator was E. G. Marshall, who is well known on Broadway, and he spoke his lines with general success, though he left out three crucial words in the next-to-last quotation from President Kennedy's speeches. All this was accompanied by a completely atonal score, some of which suggested the sound effects in spook movies and spy television serials, and all of which achieved the total blankness of emotional content that is usual in atonal pieces. The most absorbing event in the composition occurred when Mr. Leinsdorf, presumably in an access of dedication, accidentally hurled his baton to the rear of the stage. (It was picked up and unobtrusively handed back by the musicians in the orchestra, but it was noticeably truncated.) The piece, which was tediously long, received a considerable amount of handclapping, I think because of its nobility of intent and the moving power of the words rather than because of anything Mr. Sydeman put into it. I was reminded of those old vaudeville acts in which the American flag got waved when interest faltered. The memory of President Kennedy deserved better.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
YONKERS HERALD STATESMAN
Friday, November 11, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
GREENBURGH INDEPENDENT
Thursday, November 10, 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
NOV 13 1966

Larry Fried

American composer, William Sydeman, whose "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" will be given here by the Boston Symphony on Wednesday and Friday.

The second program, in January, will feature composer William Sydeman of Hastings who will discuss and play tapes of his new symphony, a memorial to President John F. Kennedy. The symphony, which was commissioned by Erich Leinsdorf, will have its premier in Boston. It will be performed at Lincoln Center Nov. 16 and 18.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 298,100
DEC 3 1966

The best part of William Sydeman's In Memoriam John F. Kennedy, which was introduced by Erich Leinsdorf at the latest visit of the Boston Symphony to Philharmonic Hall, was the opening two minutes or so of orchestral prelude. Alerted by the program notes that it began with a reminiscence of the musical phrase identified with "the rockets' red glare," one was nevertheless surprised by the imaginative use to which Sydeman put it, the artful kind of tonal wash in which he immersed this quotation and the succeeding fragments from Beethoven's Eroica ("Funeral March").

However, once into the lengthy body of the work, in which excerpts from writings about Kennedy and his own words were woven into a musical texture, Sydeman's resources were less well marshalled. Perhaps the term is induced by the presence, as narrator, of the admired E. G. Marshall (of television repute) but it would apply regardless of whose voice poured from the hall's public address system against the sound of the orchestra. The effect was to convert eulogy into rhetoric and make a public harangue of what should be an intimate emotion. The imbalance was intensified by the position of prominence assigned by Sydeman to the words relative to his music. Though the general method was derived from Aaron Copland's Lincoln Portrait, Sydeman did not develop the kind of connective tissue that holds that work together. However, the memory of the opening minutes remain to Sydeman's credit, and may now be posted to his account. Marshall, incidentally, was hardly the happiest choice for this assignment, skillful actor though he is. He read the text like a Republican—a Goldwater Republican at that. Leinsdorf's evening began with the D-major Suite of Bach and ended with the First Symphony of Schumann.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 442,500
OCT 22 1966

MUSICAL EVENTS

Hertz and Avis

THE Boston Symphony came to town last Wednesday night with a program of considerable interest, performing in Philharmonic Hall under Erich Leinsdorf. The opening number was Sibelius's Fifth Symphony, which was done with great clarity, though I thought Mr. Leinsdorf might have got a little more Sturm und Drang into it. It is one of Sibelius's more joyful symphonies, and it served to remind me again of the incredible originality of this Finnish master. His music is instantly recognizable, and could not be taken for the work of any other. But one never feels that he strove consciously for the individuality that is such an obvious feature of it. The music is expressive, and yet the composer seems to belong to no established tradition. Old Sibelius (I have never thought of him as young) is conveying an intoxicated reverie about something, probably the Finnish landscape. Anyhow, the reverie is full of deep love. The second number, Dvořák's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, served to introduce a young Israeli violinist, Shmuel Ashkenasi, in the solo role. The concerto is not the most memorable of Dvořák's works, and it is so full of gypsy locutions that it is hard to tell from a performance just how the soloist would do in other types of music. Mr. Ashkenasi has, at any rate, a brilliant left hand, an expressive if rather small tone, and a bow arm that can give spirit to this kind of music. The program closed with Prokofieff's "Scythian Suite." I am an admirer of Prokofieff, but, rehearing the "Scythian Suite" after a number of years, I thought that it sounded like a period piece. The period was the time when Russian composers in Paris, under the influence of Diaghilev, were temporarily bemused by a mystique of primitivism. Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring" comes from this period, and it is much bolder than Prokofieff's opus, which it undoubtedly inspired. Both Prokofieff and Stravinsky were to go on to other and richer styles of composition. The "Scythian Suite" is an expertly written bit of atmosphere music, but it sounds today like dated avant-garde, and avant-garde music has a way of dating faster than the other kind. The performance, however, was flawless, with the sheen of the Boston orchestra's tone and the penetrating analytical mind of Mr. Leinsdorf showing in every phrase.

—WINTHROP SARGEANT

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
DEC 1966

Another of Carnegie Hall's laudable presentations this year is the series of four Saturday concerts by the Boston Symphony devoted to "the Viennese School." The second of these, Nov. 19, opened with one of the most impassioned classical performances one can recall by Music Director Erich Leinsdorf. It was grandly dramatic Beethoven "Coriolan" Overture, notable for unusual warmth in the lyrical theme and for imposing overall breadth. In Mozart's great G-minor Symphony more emphasis was laid on weighty dramatic elements than compensating ones of delicacy and charm. The color-rich and varied instrumentation of the Suite from Alban Berg's "Lulu" was delineated transparently, with its overpowering dramatic elements not stressed but allowed to emerge naturally to good effect; soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson negotiated the difficult range and intervals of the vocal excerpts with accuracy and a lovely texture, but lacked the requisite bigness of sound or impact. Pianist Claude Frank then brought his controlled, vigorous and imaginative pianism to the First Beethoven Concerto; his solid conception highlighted the lyrical and dramatic elements which set this work into its proper post-18th-century, Beethovian frame.—H.F.

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
NOV 18 1966

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 442,500
NOV 26 1966

ON Wednesday evening of last week, the Boston Symphony, under Erich Leinsdorf, appeared in Philharmonic Hall with a program that was not very different from Mr. Steinberg's. It closed, as Mr. Steinberg's did, with a tried-and-true Romantic symphony—in this case, Schumann's First in B-Flat Major—and Mr. Leinsdorf, who has a special touch in this sort of music, gave it a perceptive reading. The opening number was the Bach Suite No. 3 in D Major for Orchestra, which had been performed here a week before by the Philharmonic, under Lorin Maazel. Mr. Leinsdorf's performance was in every way superior. Then came the dose of unpleasant medicine. William Sydeman, a composer whose talent is undiscernible to me, had created a highly pretentious work called simply "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy." It had a narrator, who solemnly declaimed excerpts from books by Arthur Schlesinger and Theodore Sorensen, a poem by Stephen Spender, an often quoted passage from Ecclesiastes, a hunk out of a preface by Allan Nevins, and some of the late President's own oratory. The narrator was E. G. Marshall, who is well known on Broadway, and he spoke his lines with general success, though he left out three crucial words in the next-to-last quotation from President Kennedy's speeches. All this was accompanied by a completely atonal score, some of which suggested the sound effects in spook movies and spy television serials, and all of which achieved the total blankness of emotional content that is usual in atonal pieces. The most absorbing event in the composition occurred when Mr. Leinsdorf, presumably in an access of dedication, accidentally hurled his baton to the rear of the stage. (It was picked up and unobtrusively handed back by the musicians in the orchestra, but it was noticeably truncated.) The piece, which was tediously long, received a considerable amount of handclapping, I think because of its nobility of intent and the moving power of the words rather than because of anything Mr. Sydeman put into it. I was reminded of those old vaudeville acts in which the American flag got waved when interest faltered. The memory of President Kennedy deserved better.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
DEC 1966

Another of Carnegie Hall's laudable presentations this year is the series of four Saturday concerts by the Boston Symphony devoted to "the Viennese School." The second of these, Nov. 19, opened with one of the most impassioned classical performances one can recall by Music Director Erich Leinsdorf. It was grandly dramatic Beethoven "Coriolan" Overture, notable for unusual warmth in the lyrical theme and for imposing overall breadth. In Mozart's great G-minor Symphony more emphasis was laid on weighty dramatic elements than compensating ones of delicacy and charm. The color-rich and varied instrumentation of the Suite from Alban Berg's "Lulu" was delineated transparently, with its overpowering dramatic elements not stressed but allowed to emerge naturally to good effect; soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson negotiated the difficult range and intervals of the vocal excerpts with accuracy and a lovely texture, but lacked the requisite bigness of sound or impact. Pianist Claude Frank then brought his controlled, vigorous and imaginative pianism to the First Beethoven Concerto; his solid conception highlighted the lyrical and dramatic elements which set this work into its proper post-18th-century, Beethovian frame.—H.F.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
YONKERS HERALD STATESMAN
Friday, November 11, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
GREENSBURGH INDEPENDENT
Thursday, November 10, 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
NOV 13 1966

Larry Fried

American composer, William Sydeman, whose "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" will be given here by the Boston Symphony on Wednesday and Friday.

The second program, in January, will feature composer William Sydeman of Hastings who will discuss and play tapes of his new symphony, a memorial to President John F. Kennedy. The symphony, which was commissioned by Erich Leinsdorf, will have its premier in Boston. It will be performed at Lincoln Center Nov. 16 and 18.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 298,100
DEC 3 1966

The best part of William Sydeman's In Memoriam John F. Kennedy, which was introduced by Erich Leinsdorf at the latest visit of the Boston Symphony to Philharmonic Hall, was the opening two minutes or so of orchestral prelude. Alerted by the program notes that it began with a reminiscence of the musical phrase identified with "the rockets' red glare," one was nevertheless surprised by the imaginative use to which Sydeman put it, the artful kind of tonal wash in which he immersed this quotation and the succeeding fragments from Beethoven's Eroica ("Funeral March").

However, once into the lengthy body of the work, in which excerpts from writings about Kennedy and his own words were woven into a musical texture, Sydeman's resources were less well marshalled. Perhaps the term is induced by the presence, as narrator, of the admired E. G. Marshall (of television repute) but it would apply regardless of whose voice poured from the hall's public address system against the sound of the orchestra. The effect was to convert eulogy into rhetoric and make a public harangue of what should be an intimate emotion. The imbalance was intensified by the position of prominence assigned by Sydeman to the words relative to his music. Though the general method was derived from Aaron Copland's Lincoln Portrait, Sydeman did not develop the kind of connective tissue that holds that work together. However, the memory of the opening minutes remain to Sydeman's credit, and may now be posted to his account. Marshall, incidentally, was hardly the happiest choice for this assignment, skillful actor though he is. He read the text like a Republican—a Goldwater Republican at that. Leinsdorf's evening began with the D-major Suite of Bach and ended with the First Symphony of Schumann.

NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 442,500
OCT 22 1966

MUSICAL EVENTS

Hertz and Avis

THE Boston Symphony came to town last Wednesday night with a program of considerable interest, performing in Philharmonic Hall under Erich Leinsdorf. The opening number was Sibelius's Fifth Symphony, which was done with great clarity, though I thought Mr. Leinsdorf might have got a little more Sturm und Drang into it. It is one of Sibelius's more joyful symphonies, and it served to remind me again of the incredible originality of this Finnish master. His music is instantly recognizable, and could not be taken for the work of any other. But one never feels that he strove consciously for the individuality that is such an obvious feature of it. The music is expressive, and yet the composer seems to belong to no established tradition. Old Sibelius (I have never thought of him as young) is conveying an intoxicated reverie about something, probably the Finnish landscape. Anyhow, the reverie is full of deep love. The second number, Dvořák's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, served to introduce a young Israeli violinist, Shmuel Ashkenasi, in the solo role. The concerto is not the most memorable of Dvořák's works, and it is so full of gypsy locutions that it is hard to tell from a performance just how the soloist would do in other types of music. Mr. Ashkenasi has, at any rate, a brilliant left hand, an expressive if rather small tone, and a bow arm that can give spirit to this kind of music. The program closed with Prokofieff's "Scythian Suite." I am an admirer of Prokofieff, but, rehearing the "Scythian Suite" after a number of years, I thought that it sounded like a period piece. The period was the time when Russian composers in Paris, under the influence of Diaghilev, were temporarily bemused by a mystique of primitivism. Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring" comes from this period, and it is much bolder than Prokofieff's opus, which it undoubtedly inspired. Both Prokofieff and Stravinsky were to go on to other and richer styles of composition. The "Scythian Suite" is an expertly written bit of atmosphere music, but it sounds today like dated avant-garde, and avant-garde music has a way of dating faster than the other kind. The performance, however, was flawless, with the sheen of the Boston orchestra's tone and the penetrating analytical mind of Mr. Leinsdorf showing in every phrase.

—WINTHROP SARGEANT

CARNEGIE #2 NOV. 17 CARNEGIE #3 NOV. 19

Long Island Press
JAMAICA, N. Y.
D. 321,828 SUN. 377,402
NOV 13 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra: Erich Leinsdorf conducting, pianist Claude Frank soloist in Beethoven's Concerto No. 1, soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson, soloist in Berg's Suite from "Lulu," Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

Mieczyslaw Horszowski, pianist, all-Schubert program marking 138th anniversary of the composer, Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NEW YORK POST
Saturday, November 19, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
LONG ISLAND DAILY PRESS
Sunday, November 13, 1966

2 Concerts Scheduled At Carnegie

Carnegie Hall is presenting two performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday and Saturdays, both under Conductor and Music Director Erich Leinsdorf.

The Thursday concert, on the International Festival of Visiting Orchestras, Leinsdorf has invited Richard Burgin, retired Concertmaster and associate conductor, to share the conducting with him. Burgin will be heard as soloist and also conduct Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1 in A Minor.

The Israeli pianists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir will perform the Bartok Concerto for two Pianos, Percussion and Orchestra with Leinsdorf, and the concert will conclude with the Beethoven Symphony No. 7

The Saturday performance is the second in the Boston Symphony Series of Four Concerts devoted to "The Viennese School."

Soloists are Claude Frank, pianist, Phyllis Bryn-Julson, the twenty-one-year-old Soprano who will be heard in Alban Berg's Suite from "Lulu," his second and last opera.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NEW YORK NEWS
Tuesday, November 8, 1966

DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
D. 2,097,578 SUN. 3,070,836
NOV 8 1966

Two by Bostonians

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear at Carnegie Hall Nov. 17 and 19 with Erich Leinsdorf on the podium. Israeli pianists Brach Eden and Alexander Tamir will be featured at the Nov. 17 performance. The Nov. 19 concert will be the second of four devoted to the Viennese school.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
NOV 18 1966

Alban Berg's Suite from [illegible] unfinished opera, "Lulu," was [illegible] special highlight of the Bos[illegible] Symphony Orchestra's New Y[illegible] concerts last week. This 12-[illegible] score remains one of the str[illegible] est existing arguments for [illegible] compositional system as a [illegible] cabulary for very dense expr[illegible] tivity and for the special k[illegible] of outgoing, theatrical emot[illegible]

[illegible]ch opera has always [illegible]

Phyllis Bryn-Julson was the so[illegible] who sang on Saturday at Carnegie Hall the "Song of Lulu" [illegible] a few of the lesbian Countess [illegible]witz's more amorous lines. [illegible] managed Lulu's high-leaping [illegible]ratura quite well, but her [illegible] was a bit light for some of [illegible] music. Erich Leinsdorf led [illegible] orchestra in a meticulously [illegible]hed performance of the [illegible]'s most delicately intricate [illegible] and dug into the com[illegible]ed Mahlerisms for all their [illegible]-romantic worth.

[illegible]turday's concert also had [illegible] Frank in a brilliant read[illegible] of Beethoven's C Major Piano Concerto, especially brilliant in the most extended of the cadenzas the composer had written for the first movement.

Last Thursday at Carnegie, Mr. Leinsdorf sat at the harpsichord for Bach's Violin Concerto in A Minor, for which Richard Burgin was the very musicianly but not extraordinary soloist and the almost unnecessary conductor. Mr. Leinsdorf then took over the podium for Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos, Percussion, and Orchestra (an expanded version of the Two Piano-Percussion Sonata). Two Israelis, Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, didn't let their keyboard brilliance crowd out the sensitivity called for in much of this music, and the Boston percussion section was altogether fantastic. This concert ended with the Beethoven Seventh Symphony, in which Leinsdorf took the usually ignored repeat of the first-movement exposition and let the Titan have his full musical-architectural say.

—Leighton Kerner

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
NOV 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony under its Music Director, Erich Leinsdorf, opened a special four-concert Carnegie Hall series, devoted largely to Viennese composers, on Oct. 15. Mahler's Third Symphony was the only work on the program, and a fuller bill of fare could scarcely be desired. It is a grandiose panorama of Mahler, the symphonist, encompassing the full range of expression he poured into his music. Brooding tragedy is contrasted with childlike joy, deep lyricism with bitter irony; and it all is packaged in an orchestral mantle of unlimited color and variety. A special feature of this work is a boys' chorus, chanting a naive text of biblical imagery. The contrastingly mysterious contralto solo which immediately precedes this was sung with elegant simplicity by Shirley Verrett. The entire performance, in which the Boston Boychoir and the New England Conservatory Chorus also took part was marked by Mr. Leinsdorf's accustomed adherence to the dictates of the score. Thus it emerged as an objective, faithful setting forth of a masterpiece, rather than a personal expression of emotion; given the superior forces involved, this made for most rewarding listening.—H.F.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
NOV 19 1966

Also, Boston Symphony, Carnegie Hall, 8:30; Alban Berg Ensemble with Dorothy Byrne, pianist, Town Hall, 8:30; Balalaika and Domra Society, Carnegie Recital Hall, 8:30; Composers Forum, Donnell Library, 20 West 53d Street, 8:30; Musica Aeterna, Rogers Auditorium, Metropolitan Museum, 8:30; Mozart Orchestra of New York, Kaufmann Concert Hall, 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
NOV 19 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
NOV 18 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES A 2D CONCERT

The indefatigable Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing three distinct programs here in four days, gave the second of them last night in Carnegie Hall. Three B's were lined up in this program — Bach, Bartók and Beethoven — with a fourth thrown in, in the person of Richard Burgin as guest conductor and violin soloist in Bach's A minor Concerto. Erich Leinsdorf, modestly concealed behind a harpsichord for the Bach, emerged to conduct the other two works.

Mr. Burgin, the ensemble's former concertmaster and associate conductor, retired at the end of last season after 45 years of distinguished service. He now teaches at the Florida State University in Tallahassee. With some 20 instrumentalists, he gave a well-defined sturdy performance of the concerto, limiting his conducting to setting tempos at the outset of each movement. His playing in the Andante was notable for a warmth that eschewed sentimentality.

Bartók's Concerto for Two Pianos, Percussion and Orchestra had the Israeli duo-pianists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir as soloists. To their credit, they immersed themselves in a finely integrated performance led by Mr. Leinsdorf. Their strong sense of rhythm and delicate inflection of the lyrical slow movement were additional virtues.

Beethoven's Seventh Symphony ended the evening, with Mr. Leinsdorf pacing the work with bold, steady tempos.

RAYMOND ERICSON

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PARK EAST
W. CIRC. N. AVAIL.
NOV 17 1966

IN TOW[N]

OF INTEREST

Thursday, November 17

BALLET: NY City Ballet: Jeux, The Cage, Western Symphony. NY State Theater, Lincoln Center, 8:15 pm.
CONCERT: Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf, cond. Claude Frank, pianist. Carnegie Hall, 8:30 pm.

[redacted]

BALLET: [redacted] Son, Movements for [redacted] Monumentum Pro Gesualdo, [redacted] Walzer. NY State Theater, Lincoln Center, 8:15 pm.
CONCERT: Boston Symphony Orchestra, [redacted]

[redacted]

Harlequinade, 2:15 pm. [redacted] De Deux, Dim Lustre, The Cage, Symphony in C, 8:15 pm. NY State Theater, Lincoln Center.
CONCERT: The Little Orchestra Society, Thomas Scherman, cond. Philharmonic Hall, Lincoln Center, 11 am & 3 pm.
CONCERT: Mieczyslaw Horszowski, pianist. Carnegie Hall, 2:30 pm.
CONCERT: Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf, cond. Claude Frank, pianist. Carnegie Hall, 8:30 pm.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
NOV 18 1966

Music: Memorial to John F. Kennedy

Work by Sydeman Has New York Premiere

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

MOVED by the assassination of President Kennedy, and stimulated by Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," William Sydeman has composed a work for narrator and orchestra named "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy." It received its first New York performance Wednesday night in Philharmonic Hall. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony, and E. G. Marshall was the narrator.

•

Mr. Sydeman is a 38-year-old composer from New York. He had made a selection of written material that pertains to President Kennedy—excerpts from some of Mr. Kennedy's speeches, a Spender poem, an apposite selection from Ecclesiastes, remarks by Theodore Sorensen and Arthur Schlesinger. None of this material, fortunately, has been set to music. As in the Copland "Lincoln Portrait," it is directly narrated, with the music serving as a commentary.

There also are two musical allusions, the Funeral March from Beethoven's "Eroica" and a hint of the national anthem. In his program notes, Mr. Sydeman cites those allusions. But they are so well hidden that they passed unnoticed.

"In Memoriam" may be a sincere try and a genuine act of homage. Musically it does not come off. In an effort to compose a popular work, Mr. Sydeman apparently has decided to use a type of modernism that he hopes will be palatable. It ends up being neither strong avant-garde music nor easily assimilated conservatism. There are some post-Webern textures, some vague stretches of dissonance, some attempts at mood music. At best it is innocuous background music. At worst it is a score that goes along with little perceptible relation to the text.

In its way the score was as platitudinous as the Time-Life televisionese of the opening excerpt: "To tens of millions the skies seemed suddenly darkened at midday. . . ." Mr. Marshall read the lines in the manner of a great TV pundit — Walter Brinkley, say. His reading was full of little expressive hitches and rubatos. Thus: " . . . whose horizons are limited by the"—slight pause — "realities of yesteryear."

There also was music on the program. Mr. Leinsdorf opened with the Bach Suite No. 3 in D. This he conducted "straight"—no trills (or very few), no ornaments, very few dynamics, all extremely Bach-Gesellschaftian. He cut down some of his strings in today's typical gesture. He should have removed quite a few more.

•

After intermission came the Schumann B flat Symphony. Mr. Leinsdorf started off with vigor, and got progressively slower as the symphony went along. The scherzo was as slow as anybody has ever heard it, and the finale lumbered instead of dancing. It was a methodical performance distinguished by spotless execution, and everything was present but the spirit of Schumann.

William Sydeman
Composer

E. G. Marshall
Narrator

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, with E. G. Marshall, narrator. At Carnegie Hall.
Suite No. 3 for Orchestra . . . . . Bach
In Memoriam John F. Kennedy (First New York performance) William Sydeman
Symphony No. 1 . . . . . Schumann

CARNEGIE #2 NOV. 17

Long Island Press
JAMAICA, N. Y.
D. 321,828 SUN. 377,402
NOV 13 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra: Erich Leinsdorf conducting, pianist Claude Frank soloist in Beethoven's Concerto No. 1, soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson, soloist in Berg's Suite from "Lulu" Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

Mieczyslaw Horszowski, pianist, all-Schubert program marking 138th anniversary of the composer, Carnegie Hall, 2:30.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK POST
Saturday, November 19, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

LONG ISLAND DAILY PRESS
Sunday, November 13, 1966

2 Concerts Scheduled At Carnegie

Carnegie Hall is presenting two performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday and Saturdays, both under Conductor and Music Director Erich Leinsdorf.

For the Thursday concert, on the International Festival of Visiting Orchestras, Leinsdorf has invited Richard Burgin, retired Concertmaster and associate conductor, to share the conducting with him. Burgin will be heard as soloist and also conduct Bach's Violin Concerto No. 1 in A Minor.

The Israeli pianists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir will perform the Bartok Concerto for two Pianos, Percussion and Orchestra with Leinsdorf, and the concert will conclude with the Beethoven Symphony No. 7

The Saturday performance is the second in the Boston Symphony Series of Four Concerts devoted to "The Viennese School."

Soloists are Claude Frank, pianist, Phyllis Bryn-Julson, the twenty-one-year-old Soprano who will be heard in Alban Berg's Suite from "Lulu," his second and last opera.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK NEWS
Tuesday, November 8, 1966
DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
D. 2,097,578 SUN. 3,070,836
NOV 8 1966

Two by Bostonians

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear at Carnegie Hall Nov. 17 and 19 with Erich Leinsdorf on the podium. Israeli pianists Brach Eden and Alexander Tamir will be featured at the Nov. 17 performance. The Nov. 19 concert will be the second of four devoted to the Viennese School.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
NOV 18 1966

Alban Berg's Suite from his unfinished opera, "Lulu," was a special highlight of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's New York concerts last week. This 12-tone score remains one of the strongest existing arguments for the compositional system as a vocabulary for very dense expressivity and for the special kind of outgoing, theatrical emotion [illegible] which opera has always [illegible].

Phyllis Bryn-Julson was the soprano who sang on Saturday at Carnegie Hall the "Song of Lulu" and a few of the lesbian Countess Geschwitz's more amorous lines. She managed Lulu's high-leaping coloratura quite well, but her voice was a bit light for some of the music. Erich Leinsdorf led the orchestra in a meticulously polished performance of the score's most delicately intricate passages and dug into the compressed Mahlerisms for all their Viennese-romantic worth.

Saturday's concert also had Claude Frank in a brilliant reading of Beethoven's C Major Piano Concerto, especially brilliant in the most extended of the cadenzas the composer had written for the first movement.

Last Thursday at Carnegie, Mr. Leinsdorf sat at the harpsichord for Bach's Violin Concerto in A Minor, for which Richard Burgin was the very musicianly but not extraordinary soloist and the almost unnecessary conductor. Mr. Leinsdorf then took over the podium for Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos, Percussion, and Orchestra (an expanded version of the Two Piano-Percussion Sonata). Two Israelis, Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir, didn't let their keyboard brilliance crowd out the sensitivity called for in much of this music, and the Boston percussion section was altogether fantastic. This concert ended with the Beethoven Seventh Symphony, in which Leinsdorf took the usually ignored repeat of the first-movement exposition and let the Titan have his full musical-architectural say.

—Leighton Kerner

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
NOV 1966

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony under its Music Director, Erich Leinsdorf, opened a special four-concert Carnegie Hall series, devoted largely to Viennese composers, on Oct. 15. Mahler's Third Symphony was the only work on the program, and a fuller bill of fare could scarcely be desired. It is a grandiose panorama of Mahler, the symphonist, encompassing the full range of expression he poured into his music. Brooding tragedy is contrasted with childlike joy, deep lyricism with bitter irony; and it all is packaged in an orchestral mantle of unlimited color and variety. A special feature of this work is a boys' chorus, chanting a naive text of biblical imagery. The contrastingly mysterious contralto solo which immediately precedes this was sung with elegant simplicity by Shirley Verrett. The entire performance, in which the Boston Boychoir and the New England Conservatory Chorus also took part, was marked by Mr. Leinsdorf's accustomed adherence to the dictates of the score. Thus it emerged as an objective, faithful setting forth of a masterpiece, rather than a personal expression of emotion; given the superior forces involved, this made for most rewarding listening.—H.F.

CARNEGIE #3 NOV. 19

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
NOV 19 1966

Also, Boston Symphony, Carnegie Hall, 8:30; Melos Ensemble with Julian Bream, lutist, Town Hall, 8:30; Balalaika and Domra Society, Carnegie Recital Hall, 8:30; Composers Forum, Donnell Library, 20 West 53d Street, 8:30; Musica Aeterna, Rogers Auditorium, Metropolitan Museum, 8:30; Mozart Orchestra of New York, Kaufmann Concert Hall, 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
NOV 19 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
NOV 18 1966

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES A 2D CONCERT

The indefatigable Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing three distinct programs here in four days, gave the second of them last night in Carnegie Hall. Three B's were lined up in this program — Bach, Bartók and Beethoven — with a fourth thrown in, in the person of Richard Burgin as guest conductor and violin soloist in Bach's A minor Concerto. Erich Leinsdorf, modestly concealed behind a harpsichord for the Bach, emerged to conduct the other two works.

Mr. Burgin, the ensemble's former concertmaster and associate conductor, retired at the end of last season after 45 years of distinguished service. He now teaches at the Florida State University in Tallahassee. With some 20 instrumentalists, he gave a well-defined sturdy performance of the concerto, limiting his conducting to setting tempos at the outset of each movement. His playing in the Andante was notable for a warmth that eschewed sentimentality.

Bartók's Concerto for Two Pianos, Percussion and Orchestra had the Israeli duo-pianists Bracha Eden and Alexander Tamir as soloists. To their credit, they immersed themselves in a finely integrated performance led by Mr. Leinsdorf. Their strong sense of rhythm and delicate inflection of the lyrical slow movement were additional virtues.

Beethoven's Seventh Symphony ended the evening, with Mr. Leinsdorf pacing the work with bold, steady tempos.

RAYMOND ERICSON.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
NOV 18 1966

NEW YORK, N. Y.
PARK EAST
W. CIRC. N. AVAIL.
NOV 17 1966

IN TOW

OF INTEREST

Thursday, November 17

BALLET: NY City Ballet: Jeux, The Cage, Western Symphony. NY State Theater, Lincoln Center, 8:15 pm.
CONCERT: Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf, cond. Claude Latelmer, piano. Carnegie Hall, 8:30 pm.

Friday, November 18

BALLET: NY City Ballet: Bach Suite, Movements for Piano and Orchestra, Monumentum Pro Gesualdo, Liebeslieder Walzer. NY State Theater, Lincoln Center, 8:15 pm.
CONCERT: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lincoln Center, 8:30 pm.

Saturday, November 19

Harlequinade, 2:15 pm. Serenade, Pas De Deux, Dim Lustre, The Cage, Symphony in C, 8:15 pm. NY State Theater, Lincoln Center.
CONCERT: The Little Orchestra Society, Thomas Scherman, cond. Philharmonic Hall, Lincoln Center, 11 am & 3 pm.
CONCERT: Mieczyslaw Horszowski, pianist. Carnegie Hall, 2:30 pm.
CONCERT: Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf, cond. Claude Frank, pianist. Carnegie Hall, 8:30 pm.

Music: Memorial to John F. Kennedy

Work by Sydeman Has New York Premiere

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

MOVED by the assassination of President Kennedy, and stimulated by Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," William Sydeman has composed a work for narrator and orchestra named "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy." It received its first New York performance Wednesday night in Philharmonic Hall. Erich Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony, and E. G. Marshall was the narrator.

•

Mr. Sydeman is a 38-year-old composer from New York. He had made a selection of written material that pertains to President Kennedy—excerpts from some of Mr. Kennedy's speeches, a Spender poem, an apposite selection from Ecclesiastes, remarks by Theodore Sorensen and Arthur Schlesinger. None of this material, fortunately, has been set to music. As in the Copland "Lincoln Portrait," it is directly narrated, with the music serving as a commentary.

There also are two musical allusions, the Funeral March from Beethoven's "Eroica" and a hint of the national anthem. In his program notes, Mr. Sydeman cites those allusions. But they are so well hidden that they passed unnoticed.

"In Memoriam" may be a sincere try and a genuine act of homage. Musically it does not come off. In an effort to compose a popular work, Mr. Sydeman apparently has decided to use a type of modernism that he hopes will be palatable. It ends up being neither strong avant-garde music nor easily assimilated conservatism. There are some post-Webern textures, some vague stretches of dissonance, some attempts at mood music. At best it is innocuous background music. At worst it is a score that goes along with little perceptible relation to the text.

In its way the score was as platitudinous as the Time-Life televisionese of the opening excerpt: "To tens of millions the skies seemed suddenly darkened at midday. . . ." Mr. Marshall read the lines in the manner of a great TV pundit — Walter Brinkley, say. His reading was full of little expressive hitches and rubatos. Thus: " . . . whose horizons are limited by the"—slight pause — "realities of yesteryear."

There also was music on the program. Mr. Leinsdorf opened with the Bach Suite No. 3 in D. This he conducted "straight"—no trills (or very few), no ornaments, very few dynamics, all extremely Bach-Gesellschaftian. He cut down some of his strings in today's typical gesture. He should have removed quite a few more.

•

After intermission came the Schumann B flat Symphony. Mr. Leinsdorf started off with vigor, and got progressively slower as the symphony went along. The scherzo was as slow as anybody has ever heard it, and the finale lumbered instead of dancing. It was a methodical performance distinguished by spotless execution, and everything was present but the spirit of Schumann.

William Sydeman
Composer

E. G. Marshall
Narrator

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, with E. G. Marshall, narrator. At Carnegie Hall.
Suite No. 3 for Orchestra.....Bach
In Memoriam John F. Kennedy (First New York performance) William Sydeman
Symphony No. 1.....Schumann

PROVIDENCE #2 JAN. 5 PROVIDENCE #3 JAN. 19

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 66,826
JAN 6 1967

Music Last Night

Boston Symphony Performs Dvorak, Beethoven, Wagner

By RUTH TRIPP

Erich Leinsdorf conducted the second of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts here last evening at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. We heard a program of old favorites, Wagner's Overture to Tannhauser, Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 and Dvorak's Symphony No. 9, "From the New World." We heard them played with the utmost sensitivity and attention to detail and in such a manner of intensive interpretation that there was scarcely a sound in the audience, so closely were the listeners absorbed in the wonderful music.

Perhaps the Dvorak was the most exciting of the three works. So far ahead of his time in realizing that America had a wonderful heritage of folk music, Dvorak used themes and borrowed rhythms plentifully for his "New World" Symphony. He produced a masterpiece which is lasting well over the years. One of the reasons for its durability might well be an interpretation such as Leinsdorf gave last evening.

The whole work was vitally alive, deeply appealing in the nostalgia of the largo and wholesomely gay in the dance rhythms. The musicians made the largo the kind of music which gives you a lump in the throat and makes you glad the auditorium is dark. Being New England, well controlled emotions are the rule rather than the exception. The musicians communicated the lonesomeness which Dvorak felt for his Bohemian homeland, when he was writing here in Iowa.

The Beethoven Fourth is not one of the most frequently played of the nine, but it should be. There is great clarity of form in it and if any quality stood out more than another, it was the beauty of tone color and the delicacy of the pianissimo tone which made contrast after contrast in the unfolding of the patterns. The adagio was one of the most beautiful parts. Serenity and calmness flowed from every phrase. Yet there was genuine excitement in the brilliant finale.

The Wagnerian selection was a substitute for the announced Lenore Overture No. 2. It gave us a fine opportunity to hear the excellent brass choir. The soft tones were unbelievably soft and this made the fortissimo passages all the more effective by contrast.

The entire program seemed to be a statement in favor of lasting values, of consonant sounds, familiar rhythms and a sane assemblage of logical musical ideas. It takes great artistry to make familiar things as exciting as Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra did last evening. We should have more of it. It is refreshing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 38,836
JAN 6 1967

Music In Review

Boston Symphony Director, Orchestra Given Ovation

The musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra surpassed their accustomed excellence and attained the sublime in a concert of Wagner, Beethoven and Dvorak music Thursday night in Veterans Memorial Auditorium, Providence.

They gave Erich Leinsdorf, in my opinion, the most expressive conductor ever to direct the Boston Symphony, everything he asked for in phrasing, shading and dynamics, giving the large audience a full evening of tranquil joy through beautiful music wondrously expressed.

They received an ovation at the very outset of the program, the gloriously rich chords and melody of Wagner's "Tannhauser Overture" with its recurring "Evening Star" theme. Then followed the dancing, laughing allegro of Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4 in E-Flat Major" after a gentle adagio opening.

The second movement, adagio, revealed the composer's passionate love for the pastoral beauty of the countryside, and the sublimity of the melody and ornamentations held the audience breathless. Then followed the tantalizing merriment of the third movement climaxed by the bubbling joy of the finale, allegro, ma no troppo.

The closing work was an enchantment as shaped and formed and embellished by the eloquent commands of Leinsdorf. It was Dvorak's "Symphony No. 9 in E-minor, 'From the New World,'" a purely American symphony colored here and there with bits of melody of the hoedown, the husking bee and the country fair; short passages of Negro spirituals and camp meeting hymns, with massive chords and phrases painting the placidity of broad rivers, the expansiveness of boundless prairies and the rugged grandeur of the Rockies, all woven with the simple or roistering folksy music of the farm, the camp, the river boats and the wagon trains.

The beautiful largo movement had the familiar "Rolling Home" theme uttered and repeated in all the voices of the orchestra, while through it all was threaded the sweet alto of the English horn, played by Laurence Thorstenberg.

Leinsdorf was recalled three times by unceasing applause, and each time he called Thorstenberg to the podium to acknowledge the perfection of his solo.

C.H.L.

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 200,250
JAN 15 1967
New England Newsclip

MUSIC

THURSDAY

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY will present a concert at 8:30 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. The program, conducted by Rafael Kubelik, is as follows:

Haydn .....Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102
I. Largo; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegro; Trio
IV. Finale: Presto
Martinu ...Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani
I. Poco allegro
II. Largo; Adagio
III. Allegro
Piano Solo: Charles Wilson
Franck .....Symphony in D minor
I. Lento; Allegro non troppo
II. Allegretto
III. Allegro non troppo

TIMES (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
CIRC. 38,850
JAN 20 1967
New England Newsclip

Music In Review

Orchestra Pleases Despite Absence Of Leinsdorf

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, although it didn't look the same Thursday evening in Veterans Memorial without Erich Leinsdorf, on the podium and Joseph Silverstein absent from the concertmaster's chair, it was still the incomparable "Boston."

Under the baton of Rafael Kubelik, guest conductor, they gave their best, as they always do in Providence. Beginning with that old "war horse," Haydn's "Symphony in B-Flat Major, No. 102," with its comfortable familiarity, they gave the audience, and I presume the guest conductor, that "right at home" feeling.

Maestro Kubelick introduced the newly-appointed assistant conductor, Charles Wilson, by selecting him to be the piano soloist in a rarely heard work, Martinu's "Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Tympani." It was intended to express the emotions of "revolt, courage and unshakable faith" in protest and hope, so the composer's notes tell us. But it was more of persistent complaining with its three-note theme repeated and repeated throughout, and increasing in force with each reiteration. The melody line, which the composer informs us, "passionately proclaims the right to freedom," was lost in the monotonous repetitions and the outbursts of piano and tympani. This work was completed and first performed right after the invasion and occupation of Czechslovakia, Martinu's native land.

It was the final work, Cesar Franck's "Symphony In D-minor," that gave animation and fire to the program with its flaring brasses, its beautiful persuasive French horn passages, and the booming bombast of the tuba. It was grand music all the way, yet without Erich Leinsdorf, the subtle shading and coloring were lacking.

C.H.L.

JOURNAL (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 66,850
JAN 20 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Last Night

Kubelik Is Guest Conductor As Boston Symphony Plays

By RUTH TRIPP

Rafael Kubelik was the guest conductor for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's third concert of its Providence series last evening at Veterans Memorial Auditorium. To have heard the orchestra only two weeks after its second concert here was unusual but nonetheless delightful.

This program also gave us the opportunity to hear Bohuslav Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, with Charles Wilson as pianist. Mr. Wilson is the recently appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Two symphonies completed the program, Haydn's No. 102 in B flat and Cesar Franck's in D minor.

The opening Haydn was given a highly satisfactory interpretation. It was interesting to read in the program notes that this ninth symphony in Haydn's "London Series" was the only symphony on the first program by this orchestra, in October, 1881. It is still a vitally interesting piece of music and Kubelik gave us pure Haydn style with exactness of phrasing and beauty of line plus the sense of structure which is peculiarly Haydn's own. The beauty of the Adagio movement and the humor of the closing portion of the Presto were two high points.

For the Martinu, the piano was placed center stage with the soloits facing the conductor. The divided orchestra was arranged on each side and the balance of the ensemble was excellent. The intensity of the first and last movements made listening a moving experience. Great depth of expression and relentless driving rhythm for the themes exchanged by the two groups were welded by the strong line of the piano part and the emphatic punctation by the kettle-drum. There was a perfectly tremendous climax to be reckoned with, and no sooner had it subsided than the slow movement began. Here, the melodic line of the soloist's themes sounded like the prophet of doom. There was a brief moment toward the end of this section when everyone in the ensemble settled into a comforting major triad, but only for an instant. The driving rhythm began again in the last section with the pianist playing huge tone clusters at intervals. The explosive percussion added emphasis to the excitement and there was astonishing power in the final section of this well constructed work. To have conducted the difficult music without score was a feat of memory as well as a demonstration of musicianship of a high order.

Rich tones from the reeds and brass of this fine orchestra made the familiar Franck symphony grateful to the ear. The strings excelled in the slow movement and altogether, this closing number from the skilled baton of Rafael Kubelik made his guest appearance here one to remember. His conducting had an old world authority and a true musician's ease of delivery.

101

HARTFORD JAN 23

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM (e)
HOLYOKE, MASS.
CIRC. 27,000

JAN 27 1967

New England Newsclip

The Boston Symphony Orchestra warmed up for its season by appearing at Hartford Monday night, and the Hartford Courant music editor closed his column long report with this thought:

"The orchestra played like the sterling bunch of musicians that the Boston has always been, glittering with virtuosity from start to finish. It's now a somewhat tauter, more vitrine kind of musicmaking since Erich Leinsdorf took over, and not quite so mellow in sound and effect as before. This however is the tendency of the day, and you can't fight Symphony Hall, can you?"

TIMES (e)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 132,250

JAN 24 1967

New England Newsclip

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 182,632

DEC 18 1966

Kubelik to Direct Boston In Concert at Bushnell

Rafael Kubelik, former conductor of the Czech Philharmonic and Chicago Symphony, and music director of London's Royal Opera House, will direct the Boston Symphony Jan. 23 at 8:15 p.m. in the fourth concert of this season's Bushnell Symphony Series.

He will be guest conductor of the Bostonians on tour and in their own Symphony Hall during Erich Leinsdorf's midseason rest.

For his upcoming Hartford concert, Kubelik has selected a program including: Haydn's Symphony No. 102; Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani; Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

A limited number of tickets are available in the Bushnell box office.

Kubelik is the son of world-famous violinist Jan Kubelik. During his post - conservatory years he toured as accompanist for his father, but turned to the study of conducting. He has since become one of the world's most sought-after guest conductors. Among orchestras he has directed are the Berlin Philharmonic, Vienna Philharmonia, Amsterdam Concertgebouw, Israel Philharmonic, Philadelphia, Los Angeles and Pittsburgh Symphony.

Bostonians Heard Here

By GEORGE W. STOWE

Rafael Kubelik, one of the foremost European conductors today, was the guest director with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at the Bushnell.

Like Steinberg and Szell, he does not belong to the "glamor boy" school of conducting but it was obvious right from the start that Mr. Kubelik knows what he wants and that his primary concern was communicating with the orchestra. His beat was unmistakable and his cues were exact and accomplished without the aid of a score in front of him.

* * *

Haydn's Symphony No. 102, one of the composer's masterworks in this form, opened the evening's program and it was immediately apparent that Kubelik was going to get a different sound from the orchestra. The customary high sheen of the Bostonians under Leinsdorf was exchanged for something more vigorous and spontaneous.

For once the geniality and warmth of the music seemed to take precedence over everything else. This was perhaps most striking in the Menuetto and the Presto finale, which had wonderful bounce and vivacity. To be sure, I would have enjoyed a little more nuace and feeling in the slow movement.

Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani was happily not one of the formula - inspired modern pieces. There is a surging intensity and a brooding quality to this music that gripped this listener.

Written in the late Thirties when calamitous events were taking place in his homeland, this searing work by the Czech-born Martinu deserves a permanent place in the orchestral repertory, for it speaks in impassioned tones of revolt, courage, and unshakable faith, qualities that have a timeless importance.

* * *

The orchestra rose to the occasion and under Kubelik's ardent ministrations gave a performance that was full of warmth and glowing vigor. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the orchestra, was the pianist on this occasion.

After innumerable hearings, it is difficult to listen to Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony and recapture that pristine feeling about the work. However, Mr. Kubelik gave it a reading that was far from orthodox in its forward and headlong momentum. Even the second movement did not achieve the serenity that one normally associates with it.

The Bostonians sounded a great deal more involved than they usually do for the Franck and the concert came to a ringing conclusion in the tumultuous finale that Kubelik called forth from the players.

NEWS
W. HARTFORD, CONN.
WEEKLY CIRC. 5,300

JAN 19 1967

New England Newsclip

Rafael Kubelik, former conductor of the Czech Philharmonic and Chicago Symphony, and music director of London's Royal Opera House, will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony in that orchestra's upcoming Bushnell concert at 8:15 p.m. on January 23.

Son of the famous violinist Jan Kubelik, Rafael served as his father's accompanist on tour during his youthful years. He has since become one of the world's most-sought-after guest conductors.

He has been invited to take over the Boston Symphony during the mid-season when Erich Leinsdorf will be resting, and will conduct both on tour and in Boston.

For the Bushnell concert Mr. Kubelik has selected a program featuring: Haydn's "Symphony No. 102"; Martinu's "Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Tympani"; Franck's "Symphony in D Minor."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266

JAN 14 1967

Rafael Kubelik To Be Director At Concert Here

Rafael Kubelik, one of the world's celebrated conductors, will be on the podium at Bushnell Memorial Jan. 23 at 8:15 p.m. when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives the fourth of this season's Bushnell Symphony Series concerts.

Kubelik is replacing Erich Leinsdorf in directing a number of mid-season concerts both in Boston's Symphony Hall and on tour and the concert will mark Kubelik's first Hartford appearance.

For his program he has selected:

Haydn's Symphony No. 102; Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani; Franck's popular Symphony in D Minor. For the Martinu work, the piano solo work will be performed by the orchestra's new assistant conductor, Charles Wilson.

Kubelik, son of violinist Jan Kubelik, toured as piano accompanist for his father before his interest turned to conducting.

In his native Czechoslovakia, Kubelik conducted the Czech Philharmonic in its earlier years. From 1950 to 1953 he was music director of the Chicago Symphony, and for the next three years he conducted at the Royal Opera House in London. Since 1961, in addition to his guest-conducting work, he has been director of Munich's principal orchestra.

A limited number of tickets are still available for the Hartford concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 182,632

JAN 22 1967

Boston Symphony Playing Monday

A limited number of tickets remain for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's sole local concert this season, scheduled for 8:15 p.m. Monday.

Rafael Kubelik, one of Europe's most distinguished conductors, will direct the concert, for which the program will be:

Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani; Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Kubelik will be making his first Bushnell appearance when he conducts here.

COURANT (m)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 137,950

JAN 25 1967

New England Newsclip

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 137,936

JAN 24 1967

Kubelik And The Boston At Bushnell

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Rafael Kubelik as guest conductor, was presented in the Bushnell Symphony Series at the Memorial auditorium Monday night. The program:

Symphony No. 102 — Haydn
Double Concerto for String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani — Martinu
Symphony in D Minor — Franck

No one, of course, who had not heard the Boston Symphony before. But last night's occasion did introduce here its guest conductor Rafael Kubelik. He proved to be a genial person, tall with unruly, wavy hair that gave the appearance of a tonsure. His style of conducting was generally broad and easy, and curiously enough his gestures had something of the manner of the late, great Serge Koussevitsky.

But though Mr. Kubelik did not make fuss or feathers out of leading the orchestra, he could produce music of great tension. And nowhere more than in the Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Diaho and Timpani by Bohuslav Martinu. Mr. Kubelik was formerly conductor of the Czech Philharmonic and it was natural enough that he should program a work by a countryman.

Ceaseless Current of Tones

The Concerto was written in 1938, when the handwriting was on the wall for the Czechs. This of course was what Martinu meant when he said the work was composed "under terrible circumstances, but the emotions it voices are those of revolt, courage and unshakable faith." The result is a driving torrent of passions and music alike. The "current of tones never ceases," the writing is dense and steadily agitated, the mood is as one might expect basically dark however unshakable. The piano is as turbulent as the timpani. Yet there is a continual fascination and eloquence to the tragic spirit, a complexity of writing as well as emotions. The orchestral textures are particularly interesting in their subtle complication. Admittedly it did not engross everyone alike last night, and in reply to the customer who asked me to describe the work in the Czech language, I would reply that it had jeden, dva, tri movements.

The Quiet and the Fury

Interestingly, I thought that Mr Kubelik read the score rather gently, if none the less intently, for the amount of vehemence it obviously contains. So had he and Hayden Symphony that opened the program. But when he came to the Frank Symphony, where one might have expected a kind of restrained French elegance and temperateness, Mr. Kubelik turned the orchestra loose in full cry. He made the score into a monumental piece of sound. and not a little fury. The reading was heavy with wind instruments that knocked your hat right off, and when the whole orchestra reached those triple forte passages, Mr Kubelik wasn't fooling around, Boy. Well, maybe that's the way they used to do it back at the Czecg Philharmonic, and probably it pleased the patrons. But I could have stood a little less of the wallop Mr. Kubelik gave to Franck.

Glittering Playing

The orchestra played like the sterling bunch of musicians that the Boston has always been, glittering with virtuosity from start to finish. It's now a somewhat tauter, more vitrine kind of musicmaking since Erich Leinsdorf took over, and not quite so mellow in sound and effect as before. This however is the tendency of the day, and you can't fight Symphony Hall, can you?

— T.H.P.

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
CIRC. 52,200

JAN 22 1967

New England Newsclip

Things To Do Places To Go

KENT SCHOOL, Olcott Damon Gallery, Kent, exhibit of 35 original pages from Medieval manuscripts, Victoria and Albert Museum, London, providing a survey of the art illumination in Italy, Northern Europe, Jan. 12-Feb. 2. Admission is free.

"WALTZ OF THE TOREADORS", a play by Jean Anouihl, the Mark Twain Masquers, Avery Theater, Wadsworth Antheneum, Hartford, Thursday through Saturday, 8:30 p. m.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Rafael Kubelik, conductor, Woolsey Hall Concert Series, Yale University School of Music, New Haven, Tuesday.

NEW HAVEN JAN. 24

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 102,118
JAN 25 1967

At The Concert

Boston Symphony And Kubelik

Many people who grow up to love symphonic music have acquired this affection through close connection with a particular orchestra during their musically formative years. The thrill of hearing the orchestral compositions of Mozart, Beethoven, and Bartok for the first time can be an experience never forgotten no matter how much musical sophistication one picks up in later life. Particularly if this orchestra happens to be the Boston Symphony Orchestra — or on ethat shares the same standard of excellence (of which there are an ever growing number.)

I had heard "the Boston" a dozen or so times before ever hearing another orchestra with which to compare it, and a rather sentimental attachment still exists. The Boston is one of the oldest of American symphony orchestras, and has consistently been one of the finest. Permanent conductors within recent memory include Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch and presently, Erich Leinsdorf — certainly a partial who's who of conducting giants.

But, alas, even the venerable Boston Symphony ean give less than thrilling performances—as in the case of their program presented last evening as part of the Woolsey Hall Series. Rafael Kubelik who is filling in for the vacationing Leinsdorf, conducted Haydn's "Symphony in B flat, Op. 102"; Maritu's "Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Tympani"; and the "Symphony in D minor" by Cesar Franck.

* * *

One could expound at great length on the excellence of the first chair players and the strength within the sections. Still, last evening there were problems of intonation, ragged string work (the opening of the second movement in the Franck), and a general lack of sheen and polish. Some of the time the fine ensemble was there, but all to often it was missing.

One could not help but feel that there was a lack of response from the orchestra to Mr. Kubeliks ' gestures. In many of the climatic moments of the Franck the orchestra played freely and well. But the conductor had less than desirable control of transitory sections and balance, and—at least for my taste—an exaggeration of emphasis and a heavy handedness that came forth in parts of the Haydn and Franck. The second movement of the "D minor Symphony" in particular suffered from this appro ach. It must be admitted, however, that this reviewer hears precious little of value anywhere within the framework of this symphony. The cyclic idea of recurring motives throughout the work makes good sense in theory but, in this work, produces almost nothing in the way of real development.

* * *

Rafael Kubelik has a worldwide reputation which is well deserved. So does the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Still, the combination did not bear real fruit at Woolsey last evening. Some of the orchestra's performance was thrilling, and it was by no means a wasted effort. But it was not an inspired one either—at least in terms of the high capabilities of both orchestra and conductor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Journal-Courier (m)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 31,564
JAN 25 1967

Music In Review

Kubelik Wins Ovation By Woolsey Hall Fans

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gave an inspired performane in the fourth concert of the season Tuesday night in Woolsey Hall for music lovers who jammed the big auditorium to the last seats and gave a warm ovation to Rafael Kubelik, its distinguished guest conductor.

It will be a long time before anyone forgets the rapturous reading he gave to his compatriot Martinu's work, the Double Concerto for Tw o String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, or the final, thrilling symphony of the evening, Franck's Symphony in D minor. The tall, lank y artist smilingly responded to the long ovation but made it clear that it was all due to that magnificent organization, the gifted musicians of t he Boston.

While the Haydn Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102, one of the 12 Salomon symphonies, was a particular delight, especially the sprightly third menuetto; it remained for the Czech composer Martinu's work to bring a special thrill to the audience. Emotional and dramatic in each of its three movements, the work was given a vivid reading by Kubelik.

One of the favorites of all symphonies, the Franck D Minor, was performed with extraordinary bdilliance. From its majestic opening by the b asses to the delightful pizzicati for strings and harp against the sweet melody for the English horn, the work made delightful listening. Follo wing the spirited allegro the aurience shouted its approval as well as giving vent to its feelings by long and loud applause.

Florence Jhonson

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Yale Daily News
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Eve. Daily
JAN 5 1967

•CONCERTS-Frank Brieff will conduct the New Haven Symphony Orchestra and Artur Rubenstein will be the soloist in a concert at Woolsey Hall, January 10 at 8:30. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Rafael Kubelik, will give a concert at Woolsey Hall, January 24, at 8:30.

POST (e)
BRIDGEPORT CONN.
CIRC. 81,650
JAN 25 1967
New England Newsclip

All Stops Pulled As Kubelik Guest Conducts B. S. O.

Commendable enthusiasm together with some immoderation attended the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to New Haven's Woolsey Hall last evening.

On the podium was the Checkoslovakian conductor Rafael Kubelik who is taking leave from the Bavarian Radio Orchestra to fill guest stints with several leading North American ensembles.

Major work of the evening was the Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, regarded as the magnum opus of Mr. Kubelik's late countryman Bohuslav Martinu.

Written under an emotional cloud signaled by realization of the approach of World War II, this difficult work deflects in its storm and agitation; yes, and in its beauty, the heated state of Martinu's mind.

Eloquent, Tight Knit

It's an eloquent, tightly knit score, dissonant, recreative and Wagnerian in its broad lines and sweeping emotions. Scrutinizing, one finds that it meets the tests; the composer has accomplished his aims, the result is appealing and inspired. However, the public verdict has still to be rendered and on it depends the fate of this strong work, be it popularity or the oblivion of silence.

As for the execution; well! Charles Wilson, Boston Symphony pianist played the exacting, rather unrewarding solo work with elan and even managed to avoid becoming totally submerged in the vast fabric.

Mr. Kubelik and the orchestra surged through like an ocean greyhound, alive to the multitude of effects and appreciative of the music's worth, but a little too insistent on the pure noise element.

Franck's lovely D minor symphony, his sole effort in the form, was given so full-blown a reading that instruments showed signs of being at their limit. Mr. Kubelik might have saved something in reserve and delivered a bit more of the polish the Boston is known for.

Mozart's Symphony No. 102 in B flat major, during whose premier the chandelier parted company with the ceiling, a happening which should have won for it the nickname "Miracle" which mysteriously went to the 96th instead, rang up the curtain on the evening.

—RICHARD DAY

REGISTER (e)
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
CIRC. 102,100
JAN 24 1967
New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony To Play Tonight At Woolsey Hall

Making its only local appearance of the season, the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to Woolsey Hall tonight to give the fourth concert of the current Woolsey Hall Series. On the podium, in place of Erich Leinsdorf, will be the distinguished music director of the Bavarian Radio Orchestra, Rafael Kubelik, who is guest-conducting the concerts by the Bostonians this month while Leinsdorf is taking his mid-season vacation.

Tonight's program will consist of three works, opening with Haydn's Symphony in B-flat, No. 102, continuing with Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Tympani, and conclude with Franck's Symphony in D minor. The piano part of the Martinu piece will be played by Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the orchestra.

Son of violinist Jan Kubelik, the native of Czechoslavakia came to this country in 1949 to start three years as conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. He then returned to Europe to take up other important conductorial posts and then, in 1961, he took over his present Munich job, which he has relinquished for this season to meet guest conducting demands. He has already appeared in the Salzburg and Edinburgh Festivals this season.

103

PHILHARMONIC #3 JAN. 25+27

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SCARSDALE INQUIRER
Thursday, January 19, 1967

047

John Browning, American Pianist, To Be Philharmonic Concert Soloist

John Browning, American pianist, will be soloist in the third concert of the 1966 - 67 season of the Philharmonic Symphony of Westchester at Wood Auditorium, Mt. Vernon, on January 28.

John Barnett is musical director and conductor of the symphony.

Mr. Browning made his professional debut at the age of 10, playing Mozart's Coronation Concerto in a special concert with members of the Denver Symphony.

Ten years after he made his New York debut with the New York Philharmonic in February 1956 as winner of the coveted Leventritt award, he has become an international star, who appears yearly with major American orchestras.

In 1962, Mr. Browning had the distinction of creating the world premiere of Samuel Barber's pulitzer - prize winning First Piano Concerto as soloist with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, during the opening week of Lincoln Center, New York City.

His performance won an immediate success for the Concerto and later that year he gave its Belgian and English premieres with the Brussels Philharmonic and the Philharmonic Orchestra of London.

In the spring and early summer of 1965, Mr. Browning made an 11 - week tour of the Soviet Union and Western Europe as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra directed by George Szell. Sponsored by the U.S. State Department, the tour covered cities in the Soviet Union, Sweden, Poland, Germany, France, Czechoslovakia and England.

United Press International, in a report on the recital in Kiev, cabled, "The wildly enthusiastic audience of 2,000 did not stop applauding until officials closed his (Mr. Browning's) piano and began rolling it aside."

Mr. Browning's program with the Philharmonic will include Beethoven's Concerto No. 4 in G Major.

The orchestra will also be heard in Bach - Walton Suite from the ballet The Wise Virgins and Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat Major.

Information regarding the concert may be obtained through Mrs. Doris Roos at the symphony office, 8 East Prospect Avenue, Mount Vernon, or by telephoning MO 4-1353.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600
JAN 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Orchestra On 3d Tour

The Boston Symphony goes on its third one-week tour of the season this week. Rafael Kubelik, guest conductor here earlier this month, will direct the concerts Monday in Hartford, Tuesday in New Haven, Wednesday and Friday in Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center, Thursday at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, and Saturday in Carnegie Hall.

The next Symphony Hall concert by the orchestra will be on Jan. 31, when Kubelik concludes his guest engagement.

The London Symphony's Colin Davis will conduct on Feb. 3-4, and Erich Leinsdorf returns to prepare the program for Feb. 10-11.

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
JAN 18 1967

Rafael Kubelik to Conduct 4 Boston Symphony Concerts

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two concerts in Philharmonic Hall Jan. 25 and 27, Jan. 26 at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, and Jan. 28 in Carnegie Hall, all at 8:30.

The programs in Philharmonic Hall will include Mozart's Symphony No. 26 and Mahler's Symphony No. 9; those at the Brooklyn Academy and Carnegie Hall will include Haydn's Symphony No. 102, Franck's Symphony in D minor, and Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani (first New York performance) with Charles Wilson as piano soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Circ. 635,619
JAN 27 1967

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 835,000 SUN. 1,500,000
JAN 27 1967

BOSTONIANS EXCEL WITH KUBELIK'S LEAD

Rafael Kubelik led the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a commanding performance of Mahler's Ninth Symphony Wednesday night at Philharmonic Hall. Fortunately, in this instance "commanding" did not imply "overawing." It was a Ninth warmed from within and utterly secure in concept.

Mr. Kubelik had all his pacings well in hand and he kept the symphony's masses in motion. In the early moments there was sometimes a confused detail or two, but this cleared up later.

Best of all, Mr. Kubelik evoked from the Boston a beautiful burnished sound, so rich and so reliable that one basked in the knowledge that one was going to continue to get it to the very end.

And so one did, even through the work's extended ending that must have made the coughers in the audience—who were suffering an epidemic at the time—very nervous. Mr. Kubelik was not dazed. He kept the orchestra miraculously soft and light through the last lingering notes.

He also offered Mozart's tiny Symphony No. 26 in E flat (K.184). It was crisply accentuated, but because it was driven too hard it lost some of its savor.

T. M. S.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 635,619
JAN 26 1967

WORLD JOURNAL TRIBUNE e)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JAN 26 1967
New England Newsclip

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

New York World Journal Tribune
Thursday, January 26, 1967

The Changing Symphony...

By WILLIAM BENDER

ALWAYS SOMETHING new at the Boston Symphony. The first half of last night's concert in Philharmonic Hall ended after only six or seven minutes, depriving countless hundreds, no doubt, of the regular pre-intermission naps they were just settling into.

Egad, and all that. An inconsiderate thing to have been done by guest conductor Rafael Kubelik, to be sure, but he can be forgiven since it did help him to make a point about the history of the symphony as a musical form.

What's that? You'd rather nap? Hold on, music lover.

Kubelik's point was to show to what extent the symphony changed between the time of Mozart's youth, circa 1770, and the last days of Gustav Mahler, circa 1910-11.

CHANGED WITH TIMES

When Mozart wrote his little Symphony No. 26, the symphony was just getting started. Basically, it was nothing more than the three-movement Italian overture. By Mahler's time, it had become a huge panorama of personal expression and complex orchestral texture, largely through the efforts of Mahler himself and Anton Bruckner.

Make the point Kubelik did. He conducted both works from memory, and there was never a moment when he was not in complete control. That is saying a lot when you are leading an unfamiliar orchestra in a work it rarely plays, i. e., the 80-minute Mahler Ninth.

POPULARITY ON RISE

As for the Mahler Ninth, it demonstrated all by itself that our society's collective psyche can't be all bad when Mahler's music can mean so much to it.

Has anyone noticed how Mahler has crept up on Strauss and even Debussy in the popular affection? Ten years ago we were lucky to get the First and Fourth Symphonies. Now we get them all.

Obviously, the LP has widened our attention span. But it's got to be more than that in Mahler's case. There is a silent roar of spirituality in his music that seems to be peculiarly suited to the needs of our time. Perhaps music hasn't lost its soul after all.

As for "Kubelik's Ninth," it came as a decided contrast to ears accustomed to the aural world that a Bruno Walter, and even a Leonard Bernstein, can conjur up in Mahler's late works.

SOUND DRYISH

There was little of the repose, depth, and spaciousness that Walter brought to this music. Rather, Kubelik's lines were lean and taut, and his sound dryish. Individual voices that Walter defined precisely were often blended out by Kubelik.

The dryness and the blending could have been partly the fault of Philharmonic Hall. The auditorium is still not terribly resonant, and Kubelik, of course, is not terribly familiar with it.

But it really seemed more a case of Kubelik's preference for a Bavarian kind of sturdiness (Munich is now his home base), as opposed to the Viennese aural mysticism of which Walter was such a master.

The Walter gets the nod in this corner, but you can make a good case for the other approach.

BROOKLYN #2 JAN. 26

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN BAY NEWS
Saturday, January 21, 1967

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN CANARSIE
Saturday, January 21, 1967

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 31,450

JAN 17 1967

Rafael Kubelik to Conduct

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor when the Boston Symphony Orchestra appears for its second concert in its 79th season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Thurs., Jan. 26 at 8:30 p.m.

Kubelik was born in Czechoslovakia, in 1914. As a boy, he studied the violin with his father, the famous violinist, Jan Kubelik. In his teens, he studied piano, conducting, and composition, in addition to the violin at the Prague Conservatory, and during two years following his graduation, played the piano accompaniment for his father's recital tours in Europe and the United States.

In 1936, Kubelik was appointed Conductor and Music Director of the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra, remaining in this post until the coup d'etat of 1948. He has repeatedly appeared with the principal orchestras on the continent.

Since 1961 he has been Conductor and Music Director of Munich's Bayerische Rundfunk (Bavarian Radio) Orchestra, with which he has made extensive tours of European capitals.

In August 1962, at the International Music Festival at Lucerne, he conducted the first performance of his Requiem, a work for orchestra, chorus, and baritone, dedicated to the memory of his late wife. Kubelik has also written several operas and a variety of instrumental works.

For his Academy concert, Kubelik has selected a program including, Symphony No. 102 in B flat Major by Haydn; Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Tympani by Martinu; and Symphony in D Minor by Franck.

Further information is available from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave., ST 3-6700.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
HOME REPORTER AND SUNSET NEWS
W. 16,000

JAN 13 1967

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will return to the Brooklyn Academy of Music at 8:30 p.m. Jan. 26 in its second appearance this season in the Academy Orchestra Series. Rafael Kubelik will conduct an outstanding program, including works by Haydn, Martinu and Frank.

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836

JAN 22 1967

Kubelik Will Lead Boston Orchestra

Rafael Kubelik, a violinist like his famed father, Jan Kubelik, and who served as the elder Kubelik's accompanist for two years, will be the guest conductor when the Boston Symphony Orchestra presents its second concert of the season Thursday night in the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

The younger Kubelik, who also studied piano and composition, served from 1936 to 1948 as conductor and music director of the Czech philharmonic orchestra, has since 1961 held the same post with the Munich Bayerische Rundfunk (Bavarian radio) in Germany. His program for the Thursday night concert includes compositions by Haydn, Martinu and Franck.

Saturday night the Pennsylvania Ballet Company will perform at the Academy, with a native of Flatbush, Mrs. Barbara Weisberger, as its director. Brooklyn school children will have an advance look at the program by attending a rehearsal Friday afternoon. Another Brooklynite, Carol Luppescu, is the principal danseuse.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK POST
Saturday, December 31, 1966

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637

DEC 31 1966

Boston Symphony in Brooklyn

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its second appearance at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, Jan. 26 at 8:30 p.m.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000

JAN 26 1967

In Brooklyn: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Rafael Kubelik, conductor, with Charles Wilson, pianist, Brooklyn Academy, 8:30 P.M.

Choral singers from the ages of 17 through 21 are invited to join the University Chorale. Rehearsals are on Saturdays at 10 A.M. at 2 West 64th Street.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK NEWS
Sunday, January 8, 1967

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836

JAN 8 1967

Special Rate For Academy

The Brooklyn Academy of Music offered a special membership rate last week of $12 for the second half of its season starting this month. Members are entitled to attend a lecture series, travel films, concerts, movies, theatre performances and children's shows.

They are also given reduced rates on tickets to attractions such as the Vienna Choir Boys, concerts by Andres Segovia, Artur Rubinstein, Jose Greco and Theodore Bikel, and operas and ballets.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is returning to the Academy for its second appearance this season Jan. 26. Conducted by Rafael Kubelik, the orchestra will present Haydn's symphony 102 in B flat major; Frank's symphony in D minor and the double concerto for two string orchestras, piano and tympani by Martinu.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
BROOKLYN HEIGHTS PRESS
W. 4,500

JAN 19 1967

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 635,619

JAN 20 1967

Kubelik to Conduct

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor when the Boston Symphony Orchestra appears for its second concert in its 79th season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Thursday at 8:30 p.m.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000

JAN 27 1967

TIMES (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 635,600

JAN 28 1967

New England Newsclip

BOSTONIANS MAKE STOP IN BROOKLYN

Martinu Concerto Is Played at Academy of Music

Rafael Kubelik and the Boston Symphony Orchestra traveled to the Brooklyn Academy of Music Thursday night. Their major work was a rare performance of Bohuslav Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani. It was bracketed by Haydn's Symphony in B flat (No. 102) and the Franck D minor.

Martinu died in 1959 at the age of 68. The Czechoslovak composer had a certain vogue in the years after the war, spurred chiefly by the late Serge Koussevitsky, then the Boston's conductor.

The Double Concerto was written in 1938—a year of deprivation for the composer, who lived and wrote in two small attics in Paris. It was heard here only once before, in 1953 when Mr. Kurelik led a Chicago Symphony performance.

The 18-minute piece is anguished, full of dissonance and big declamatory themes. Tense, short motives are the building blocks of the music, with the two orchestras, the piano and timpani taking turns in the subsequent overlapping elaborations. But the motives fail to grow to satisfying statements. The work, begun in anguish, rarely lets up its nervous tearing and ends where it began.

There is little variety in the traditional string writing, and this lack of color contributes to the sameness of sound. It cannot be said that a really original or forceful mind is at work, although this is the work of a sincere and gifted musician.

Mr. Kubelik led it from memory with unflagging control and the kind of emotional commitment that kept the sense of anxiety always taut. The Boston string players and Charles Wilson, the pianist, dug into their parts with equal commitment.

The program will be repeated Saturday night at Carnegie Hall.

HOWARD KLEIN.

105

CARNEGIE #4 JAN. 28

HIGH FIDELITY
TRADE NEWS
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 6.400

JAN 1967

Boston Symphony; Leinsdorf

Mahler's Third Symphony is an enormous celebration of man and of the natural and supernatural worlds. It is laid out in two parts, the first consisting of one immense movement which erects slow sections and faster marchlike material into a single span lasting over half an hour, the second of four shorter movements (two of them vocal) and a long final Adagio of religious character. When the work is performed with due nobility and conviction, its lengths are not felt as longueurs. In the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance under Erich Leinsdorf at Carnegie Hall on October 15, these qualities were only fitfully in evidence, and therefore no occasional outbreaks of virtuoso high jinks from the mammoth orchestral apparatus involved could save the occasion from being essentially a failure.

Several of even the preliminary conditions for a satisfying performance were not fulfilled. The chorus was not brought on stage till after the intermission between the two parts of the symphony, and Shirley Verrett, who sang the contralto solos in the fourth and fifth movements, did not make her appearance till after the third movement. Quite apart from the question of interruption for applause at the soloist's entry, it seems to me that you cannot be properly part of a symphonic performance if you are not even on the platform while half the work is being played. A symphony is not an opera, and a "star entrance" half way through is inappropriate. The third movement of the symphony includes a long posthorn solo, played offstage, which evokes the shimmering heat of the Austrian summer in lazy, lingering phrases; on this occasion it was played on a trumpet, which lacks the wide, sentimental vibrato on which Mahler was reckoning, and which falsifies the exquisite coloristic effects when the offstage posthorn is interwoven with the sounds of the onstage horns. (In any case these latter were allowed to play much too loudly and to drown the distant solo.)

Many sections of the work were brought off with a fair degree of tension and drama, but in general Leinsdorf's tempos tended to be too fast, and the fourth movement in particular —marked Sehr langsam, misterioso— was rattled through at a companionable Allegretto which did not allow Miss Verrett's contribution to be fairly judged. The New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Boychoir encompassed the notes of the fifth movement without providing much in the way of expressive tone. The orchestra played better than I have heard them do for some time. However, the the brass section was allowed to produce a forced, squeezed quality of tone that confused largeness with mere loudness: the result was the reverse of that intended, since the rest of the orchestra was inaudible through this unmusical braying, and the total volume of sound was thus diminished instead of increased.

BERNARD JACOBSON

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836

JAN 22 1967

Bostonians Due

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Rafael Kubelik, will be heard in a Saturday night concert at Carnegie Hall.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK POST
Tuesday, June 14, 1966

Bostonians to Play Carnegie Series

The Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conductor, has been invited by the Carnegie Hall Corp., to appear in its own series of four Saturday night concerts at Carnegie Hall during the 1966-67 season. The dates are: Oct. 15, Nov. 19, March 4, April 15. With one exception the theme of the programs will be works by major Viennese composers, including Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert, Bruckner, Mahler, and Berg.

American composer Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra," for chorus and orchestra, will be the exception in its first N.Y. performance March 4. Moevs is composer-in-residence at Rutgers University.

Soloists for the series will include soprano Beverly Sills, mezzo-sopranos Shirley Verrett and Beverly Wolff, tenor Placido Domingo, bass Ara Berberian, as well as pianists Evelyne Crochet and Claude Frank.

Subscriptions are available at the Carnegie Hall box office.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

JAN 1967

PHOTO: ABRAHAMSEN

Pianist JACOB LATEINER is greeted backstage at Carnegie Hall by SYLVIA RABINOFF following the October Heifetz concert on which Mr. Lateiner performed the Beethoven Kreutzer Sonata with Heifetz. Forthcoming performances for Mr. Lateiner include the world premiere of the Elliott Carter Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony and a European tour in the spring which will include recitals and orchestra engagements in the Scandinavian countries, England and Hungary.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK NEWS
Sunday, January 22, 1967

Kubelik Will Lead Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Rafael Kubelik, the distinguished Czech conductor, will include the rarely-performed Martinu Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani in its Jan. 28 concert at Carnegie Hall. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony will be the piano soloist in the Martinu work, which the composer considered his "most important creation". The work was performed only once previously in New York, March 9, 1953.

The Jan. 28 concert is the second appearance this season of the Boston Symphony in the International Festival of Visiting Orchestras, given under the auspices of The Carnegie Hall Corporation. The concert will open with Haydn's Symphony No. 102, in B-flat Major—one of the six Franz Joseph Haydn composed for his second visit to London in 1794-95. The closing work on the program is Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

Rafael Kubelik, conductor of the Boston Symphony for this concert, is the son of the celebrated violin virtuoso of another era. He began his conducting career in Prague as director of the Czech Philharmonic and has been conductor of the Chicago Symphony, the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, in London, and the Munich Bavarian Radio Orchestra. In recent seasons he has also appeared as guest-conductor of the Pittsburgh, Los Angeles and Minneapolis Orchestras. In the 1965-66 season he was invited to conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra and this year, in addition to his work with the Boston Symphony, he has conducted in Chicago and Toronto.

Tickets are on sale at Carnegie box office: $6.50, $5.50, $3.50 and $2.50.

105

CARNEGIE #4 JAN. 28

HIGH FIDELITY
TRADE NEWS
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 6,400

JAN 1967

Boston Symphony: Leinsdorf

Mahler's Third Symphony is an enormous celebration of man and of the natural and supernatural worlds. It is laid out in two parts, the first consisting of one immense movement which erects slow sections and faster marchlike material into a single span lasting over half an hour, the second of four shorter movements (two of them vocal) and a long final Adagio of religious character. When the work is performed with due nobility and conviction, its lengths are not felt as longueurs. In the Boston Symphony Orchestra's performance under Erich Leinsdorf at Carnegie Hall on October 15, these qualities were only fitfully in evidence, and therefore no occasional outbreaks of virtuoso high jinks from the mammoth orchestral apparatus involved could save the occasion from being essentially a failure.

Several of even the preliminary conditions for a satisfying performance were not fulfilled. The chorus was not brought on stage till after the intermission between the two parts of the symphony, and Shirley Verrett, who sang the contralto solos in the fourth and fifth movements, did not make her appearance till after the third movement. Quite apart from the question of interruption for applause at the soloist's entry, it seems to me that you cannot be properly part of a symphonic performance if you are not even on the platform while half the work is being played. A symphony is not an opera, and a "star entrance" half way through is inappropriate. The third movement of the symphony includes a long posthorn solo, played offstage, which evokes the shimmering heat of the Austrian summer in lazy, lingering phrases; on this occasion it was played on a trumpet, which lacks the wide, sentimental vibrato on which Mahler was reckoning, and which falsifies the exquisite coloristic effects when the offstage posthorn is interwoven with the sounds of the onstage horns. (In any case these latter were allowed to play much too loudly and to drown the distant solo.)

Many sections of the work were brought off with a fair degree of tension and drama, but in general Leinsdorf's tempos tended to be too fast, and the fourth movement in particular —marked Sehr langsam, misterioso— was rattled through at a companionable Allegretto which did not allow Miss Verrett's contribution to be fairly judged. The New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Boychoir encompassed the notes of the fifth movement without providing much in the way of expressive tone. The orchestra played better than I have heard them do for some time. However, the the brass section was allowed to produce a forced, squeezed quality of tone that confused largeness with mere loudness: the result was the reverse of that intended, since the rest of the orchestra was inaudible through this unmusical braying, and the total volume of sound was thus diminished instead of increased.

BERNARD JACOBSON

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836

JAN 22 1967

Bostonians Due

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Rafael Kubelik, will be heard in a Saturday night concert at Carnegie Hall.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK POST
Tuesday, June 14, 1966

Bostonians to Play Carnegie Series

The Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conductor, has been invited by the Carnegie Hall Corp., to appear in its own series of four Saturday night concerts at Carnegie Hall during the 1966-67 season. The dates are: Oct. 15, Nov. 19, March 4, April 15. With one exception the theme of the programs will be works by major Viennese composers, including Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert, Bruckner, Mahler, and Berg.

American composer Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra," for chorus and orchestra, will be the exception in its first N.Y. performance March 4. Moevs is composer-in-residence at Rutgers University.

Soloists for the series will include soprano Beverly Sills, mezzo-sopranos Shirley Verrett and Beverly Wolff, tenor Placido Domingo, bass Ara Berberian, as well as pianists Evelyne Crochet and Claude Frank.

Subscriptions are available at the Carnegie Hall box office.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

JAN 1967

PHOTO: ABRAHAMSEN

Pianist JACOB LATEINER is greeted backstage at Carnegie Hall by SYLVIA RABINOFF following the October Heifetz concert on which Mr. Lateiner performed the Beethoven Kreutzer Sonata with Heifetz. Forthcoming performances for Mr. Lateiner include the world premiere of the Elliott Carter Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony and a European tour in the spring which will include recitals and orchestra engagements in the Scandinavian countries, England and Hungary.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK NEWS
Sunday, January 22, 1967

Kubelik Will Lead Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Rafael Kubelik, the distinguished Czech conductor, will include the rarely-performed Martinu Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani in its Jan. 28 concert at Carnegie Hall. Charles Wilson, assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony will be the piano soloist in the Martinu work, which the composer considered his "most important creation". The work was performed only once previously in New York, March 9, 1953.

The Jan. 28 concert is the second appearance this season of the Boston Symphony in the International Festival of Visiting Orchestras, given under the auspices of The Carnegie Hall Corporation. The concert will open with Haydn's Symphony No. 102, in B-flat Major—one of the six Franz Joseph Haydn composed for his second visit to London in 1794-95. The closing work on the program is Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

Rafael Kubelik, conductor of the Boston Symphony for this concert, is the son of the celebrated violin virtuoso of another era. He began his conducting career in Prague as director of the Czech Philharmonic and has been conductor of the Chicago Symphony, the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, in London, and the Munich Bavarian Radio Orchestra. In recent seasons he has also appeared as guest-conductor of the Pittsburgh, Los Angeles and Minneapolis Orchestras. In the 1965-66 season he was invited to conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra and this year, in addition to his work with the Boston Symphony, he has conducted in Chicago and Toronto.

Tickets are on sale at Carnegie box office: $6.50, $5.50, $3.50 and $2.50.

PROVIDENCE #4 FEB. 16

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 200,250

FEB 12 1967

New England Newsclip

GINA BACHAUER will play Rachmaninoff's 'Second Piano Concerto' during the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert on Thursday at 8:30 p.m. in Veterans' Memorial Auditorium. The orchestra, to be conducted by Richard Burgin, will also play Weber's Overture to 'Oberon' and Shostakovitch's 'Symphony No. 5'.

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 200,250

FEB 12 1967

New England Newsclip

THURSDAY

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA will give a concert at 8:30 p.m. at Veterans' Memorial Auditorium. The soloist will be Greek pianist Gina Bachauer who will play Rachmaninoff's "Second Concerto."

The orchestra will play Weber's Overture to Oberon and Shostakovitch's "Fifth Symphony."

107

WASHINGTON #2 FEB. 28

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

MAR 1 1967

New England Newsclip

LBJs Attend Concert By Boston Symphony

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Johnson turned up unexpectedly tonight to attend a concert by the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra at Constitution Hall.

The performance was conducted by a longtime friend, Erich Leinsdorf. Mrs. Johnson had announced earlier that she would attend the concert. But it was not on the President's announced schedule.

The Johnsons received a standing ovation from the capacity audience when they were recognized stepping into the presidential box in the 3000-seat concert hall.

The First Lady wore a red velvet coat over a short red brocade dress. The President appeared in a dark business suit.

The program included a suite from Prokofiev's ballet "Romeo and Juliet," Dvorak's "New World" symphony and Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The Johnsons have known Leinsdorf and his wife for many years. Mrs. Leinsdorf and Boston Symphony Orchestra manager Todd Perry were in the lobby to greet the Johnsons and the President gave Mrs. Leinsdorf a kiss when he arrived.

In the presidential box with the Johnsons were Mr. and Mrs. Roger Stevens. Stevens is chairman of the National Council on the Arts.

Mrs. Robert Kintner, wife of one of the President's advisers, and Mrs. Leinsdorf also were among the guests.

Linda Bird Johnson was supposed to have accompanied her mother, but she did not show up.

This was the second Washington appearance of the 1966-67 concert season for the Boston Symphony, appearing for subscribers of the Washington National Symphony.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

OGDENSBURG JOURNAL
Friday, March 3, 1967

CAPITAL FOOTNOTES

President Johnson was a surprise visitor to Tuesday night's concert by the Boston Symphony. Mrs. Johnson had announced plans to attend but the President's appearance was unscheduled.

The nomination of William B. Macomber Jr. of New York as an assistant secretary of state has been confirmed by the Senate.

Billie S. Farnum has been named a deputy chairman of the Democratic National Committee to oversee a nationwide party registration drive and coordinate relations with other national organizations. Farnum, 50, is a former Michigan congressman.

Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey will help the labor movement mark a milestone Thursday. He will lead ceremonies in recognition of the 25 millionth vote cast by American workers in elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

The Cincinnati Post
AND TIMES STAR
D. 243,587

MAR 1 1967

EVENING UNION LEADER
MANCHESTER, N. H.
COMB. CIRC. 45,750

MAR 1 1967

New England Newsclip

Ladybird Plans Boston Visit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson will attend the Boston Symphony concert with her daughter Lynda Bird at Constitution Hall Tuesday, the White House announced.

The President and Mrs. Johnson are long - time friends of symphony conductor Erich Leinsdorf whom they helped when he fled to the United States as a refugee from the Nazis.

The San Diego Union
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
D. 118,192 SUN. 219,776

MAR 1 1967

ALEXANDRIA, VA.
GAZETTE
D. 15,500

FEB 23 1967

Boston Symphony Makes Washington Appearance

The Boston Symphony Orchestra returns to Constitution Hall on Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. for its second Washington appearance of the 1966-67 concert season, playing for the Washington National Symphony's Tuesday subscribers. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct Prokofieff's Scenes from "Romeo and Juliet," Colgrass' "As Quiet As," and Dvorak's Ninth Symphony ("New World").

Under exclusive contract in Washington to the National Symphony, the Boston Symphony will mark this their fifteenth appearance under these auspices here. The sold-out performance Feb. 28 will be the orchestra's final one for the current season. They will again appear on the 1967-68 Tuesday-Wednesday series. Erich Leinsdorf has been conductor of the Boston Symphony since autumn of 1962, the orchestra's third in a span of 38 years and the eleventh in its history.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Wednesday, March 1, 1967

THE WASHINGTON DAILY NEWS
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 220,629 SAT. 173,407

MAR 1 1967

President Hears Leinsdorf and the Boston

First applause at Constitution Hall last night went not to Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony but to President and Mrs. Johnson on their surprise appearance in the presidential box a few minutes before the concert was to begin.

The program they heard covered a fairly wide musical range considering the fact that there were only three works on it.

It opened with Prokofieff's scenes from the ballet "Romeo and Juliet — a strongly melodic work with 20th century nuances.

Then came the first Washington performance of Micheal Colgrass' "As Quiet As — ", a delightful play of orchestral sounds that sometimes hovered on the fringes of electronic music.

Finally, there was the lushly romantic and familiar Dvorak Symphony No. ("From the New World").

Program notes told us that Mr. Colgrass, who is 34, was inspired by an article in the New York Times about a teacher who asked her pupils to complete the sentence, "Let's be as quiet as . . ."

Last night's remarkably fine performance suggests that one valid simile could be: "As quiet as 'As Quiet As.'" For Mr. Colgrass sustains a marvelous dreamy pianissimo thruout except for a limited crescendo towards the end. And this despite the fact the score calls for all sorts of percussion, extra woodwinds, horns, etc.

Mr. Colgrass has conveyed rather remarkably the imaginative world of children to whom he dedicated As Quiet As "with love and with hope."

The Prokofieff and the Dvorak (except for a momentary lapse in the first violins in the closing measures) found Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra in good form. They departed with the sustained cheers of the capacity audience ringing in their ears.

MILTON BERLINER

DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
D. 2,097,578 SUN. 3,070,836

MAR 1 1967

New York World Journal Tribune
Wednesday, March 1, 1967

Albany Knickerbocker News
Wednesday, March 1, 1967

EVENING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 415,850

MAR 1 1967

New England Newsclip

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD JOURNAL
Wednesday, March 1, 1967

Music Lovers. As Lady Bird shakes hands with Boston Symphony Orchestra manager Todd Perry, LBJ busses Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf, wife of the conductor. The president made a surprise appearance at the visiting symphony's concert at Constitution Hall in Washington last night. The Johnsons and the Leinsdorfs have been friends for many years. (Associated Press Wirefoto)

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Wednesday, March 1, 1967

TELEGRAM (m)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 61,100

MAR 1 1967

New England Newsclip

LBJ, Lady Bird Attend Concert By Hub Symphony

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson turned up unexpectedly Tuesday night to attend a concert by the visiting Boston Symphony Orchestra at Constitution Hall.

The performance was conducted by a longtime friend, Erich Leinsdorf. Mrs. Johnson had announced earlier Tuesday that she would attend the concert but it was not on the President's announced schedule.

The Johnsons received a standing ovation from the capacity audience when they were recognized stepping into the presidential box in the 3,000-seat concert hall.

The Johnsons have known Leinsdorf and his wife for many years. Mrs. Leinsdorf and Boston Symphony Orchestra manager Todd Perry were in the lobby to greet the Johnsons, and the President gave Mrs. Leinsdorf a kiss when he arrived.

HERALD NEWS (e)
FALL RIVER, MASS.
CIRC. 40,250

FEB 28 1967

New England Newsclip

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600

FEB 28 1967

New England Newsclip

Ladybird to Hear Boston Symphony

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson plans to attend tonight a guest performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by a longtime friend, Erich Leinsdorf.

Daughter Lynda will be there too with a presidential party expected to include Roger Stevens, director of the National Council on the Arts, presidential adviser Robert Kintner, and Mrs. Leinsdorf.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 635,619
MAR 1 1967

President Is Surprise Guest At Boston Symphony Concert

WASHINGTON, Mar. 1 (AP).—President Johnson turned up unexpectedly last night to attend a concert by the visiting Boston Symphony orchestra at Constitution Hall.

The performance was conducted by a longtime friend, Erich Leinsdorf. Mrs. Johnson had announced earlier that she would attend the concert. But it was not on the President's announced schedule.

The Johnsons received a standing ovation from the capacity audience when they were recognized stepping into the presidential box in the 3,000-seat concert hall.

The First Lady wore a red velvet coat over a short red brocade dress. The President appeared in a dark business suit.

The program included a suit from Prokofiev's ballet "Romeo and Juliet," Dvorak's "New World" Symphony, and Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The Johnson's have known Leinsdorf and his wife for many years. Mrs. Leinsdorf and Boston Symphony orchestra manager Todd Perry were in the lobby to greet the Johnsons. The President gave Mrs. Leinsdorf a kiss when he arrived.

In the presidential box with the Johnsons were Mr. and Mrs. Roger Stevens. Stevens is chairman of the National Council on the Arts.

Mrs. Robert Kintner, wife of one of the President's advisers, and Mrs. Leinsdorf also were among the guests.

The Evening Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 300,667 SUN. 351,015
MAR 1 1967

NEWS OF MUSIC

The Boston Symphony Is Host to President

By IRVING LOWENS
Music Critic of The Star

Music Critic of The Star
Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Constitution Hall. Program: Scenes from Romeo and Juliet, Op. 64, Prokofieff; As Quiet As (1st Washington performance), Colgrass; Symphony No. 9 in E minor (From the New World), Op. 95, Dvorak.

Last night in Constitution Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra played its concert for National Symphony Wednesday night subscribers, and those who were lucky enough to be in the auditorium doubtless will remember the affair for a long time to come.

For one thing, the Bostonians and Erich Leinsdorf were in the most superb form. For another, the program was an unusually excellent one, featuring the first local performance of an utterly delightful avant-garde work. That's correct—an utterly delightful avant-garde work. And for a third, there was the special aura of excitement that develops at an artistic event only when a president of the United States happens to be in the audience.

Back in the late 1930s when President Johnson was a member of the Congress, he was instrumental in helping a young Austrian musician to escape from the clutches of the Nazi's and to emigrate to this country. The name of that musician (who was gifted enough to become the assistant of Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini at the Salzburg Festival in 1934, when he was only 22 years old) was Erich Leinsdorf. A genuine affection grew up between artist and statesman, and Leinsdorf has been a frequent visitor to the White House during the present administration. The return visit—the President's and Mrs. Johnson's visit to the conductor's local base of operations—was a most gracious gesture.

In a certain sense, the accident of Johnson's presence at this particular concert made a little musical history—it was probably the first time any president has been on hand for the performance of so advanced a piece of music.

I cannot believe that Johnson found the experience altogether painful. Michael Colgrass' compositional techniques may have been sophisticated, what with all kinds of instrumental tricks, a second conductor to help Leinsdorf out, Ivesian quotations, quarter-tones, tone-rows, and what have you, but the end-result was as naive as Three Blind Mice. It should have been as easy to enjoy as a Mozart symphony.

The unusual title of the Colgrass work, As Quiet As, was inspired by the answers of fourth-grade children asked by their teacher to complete the sentence beginning "Let's be as quiet as . . ." One said "a leaf turning colors;" another "an ant walking"; a third "the first star coming out."

Each of the Colgrass' seven movements turned out to be a captivating exercise in musical impressionism, sometimes poetic, sometimes witty, and always quiet and delicate until the blaze of "the first star coming out" was reached in a single brief fortissimo passage.

I have a strong hunch that As Quiet As was modelled on the highly successful Seven Studies on Themes by Paul Klee by Gunther Schuller. Schuller, by the way, conducted the world premiere of the Colgrass at Tanglewood last August. This is not said in deprecation of Colgrass' achievement—the imitation is at least as ingenious as the original and is in some ways even more imaginative. I would predict for it a healthy number of performances, since advanced works that make friends this quickly are very rare commodities.

To begin the evening, the Bostonians offered a series of scenes from Prokofieff's wonderful ballet score for Romeo and Juliet, surely one of the Rusian composer's most ingratiating scores. It was performed with awesome grace and perfection—even the odd little section featuring a pair of mandolins against the brass.

After the intermission came the Dvorak "New World" Symphony in a reading that emphasized the silky sheen of the Boston strings, as well as that extraordinary clarity of texture Leinsdorf draws from his players when he is at his best.

The house was sold out, as indeed it deserved to be. Too bad the Bostonians don't come to town more frequently—twice a year is hardly enough.

Women's Wear Daily
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 56,500
MAR 1 1967

* * *

SYMPHONY GOERS: President Johnson made a surprise appearance at Constitution Hall in Washington Tuesday evening to hear his long-time friend, Erich Leinsdorf, conduct the Boston Symphony . . . the President's second symphony visit this season. In a dark business suit, he arrived at 8:35 p.m. with Lady Bird in her red velvet theatre coat for the soldout concert. Also in the audience, Sen. and Mrs. Claiborne Pell . . . blonde Nuala buttoned up in black with a nice winter's tan.

* * *

Women's Wear Daily
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 56,500
MAR 2 1967

President and Mrs. Johnson

TWO-TIMER: President Johnson made his second visit to the symphony, Tuesday night. This time it was a complete surprise . . . he came to hear his old friend Erich Leinsdorf conduct the Boston Symphony. Lady Bird was in the mood for red that night, and wore a red velvet theatre coat . . . the President his dark business suit. They arrived just in time, at 8:35 p.m. . . . and thoroughly enjoyed their "night out."

CALL (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
CIRC. 29,100
MAR 1 1967
New England Newsclip

Capital Footnotes

President Johnson was a surprise visitor to Tuesday night's concert by the Boston Symphony. Mrs. Johnson had announced plans to attend but the President's appearance was unscheduled.

The nomination of William B. Macomber Jr. of New York as an assistant secretary of state has been confirmed by the Senate.

Billie S. Farnum has been named a deputy chairman of the Democratic National Committee to oversee a nationwide party registration drive and coordinate relations with other national organizations. Farnum, 50, is a former Michigan congressman.

Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey will help the labor movement mark a milestone Thursday. He will lead ceremonies in recognition of the 25 millionth vote cast by American workers in elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 444,396 SUN. 553,012
MAR 1 1967

Postlude

Johnsons Hear Boston Symphony in Gala Concert

By Paul Hume

With every seat in the house sold and President and Mrs. Johnson in their box, last night's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in Constition Hall was an unusually gala affair.

Hume

Erich Leinsdorf conducted music of the present generation in the first half of the evening, giving the President an opportunity to enjoy a new work by 35-year-old Michael Colgrass, a Chicagoan whose "As Quiet As" delighted the audience. A glowing reading of Prokofieff's ballet score for "Romeo and Juliet" opened the program. After intermission, it was the familiar story of the Dvorak New World Symphony.

The Dvorak was an extraordinarily happy choice for the rare evening when the President could attend a concert. It happened that after intermission Mrs. Johnson had moved to the box next to the presidential box. When the famous english horn solo in the Largo of the Dvorak began, she turned toward her husband and they exchanged a nod of recognition.

Last night's was a reading of particular beauty, expressed in tone and plasticity of phrasing.

Leinsdorf has added certain passages of his own choosing to the "Romeo and Juliet" excerpts which Prokofieff arranged into orchestral suites. The music goes wonderfully as a concert work as in its original form. To supple movement in each episode Leinsdorf added the Bostonians' most sumptuous sound.

The Colgrass had its world premiere last summer at the Boston Symphony's Tanglewood concerts. It is a work of rare imagination in concept and realization. Several years ago Colgrass read of a fourth-grade teacher asking his young students to complete the sentence beginning "Let's be as quiet as . . ." These are the things children suggested were "as quiet as . . .:" A leaf Turning Colors; An Uninhabited Creek; An Ant Walking; Children Sleeping; Time Passing; A Soft Rainfall; The First Star Coming Out."

To the regular orchestral instruments, Colgrass has added harpsichord, both harps, piano, celeste, sleigh bells, glockenspiel, tam-tam, vibraphone, Indian drum, tubular chime, glass wind chimes, sizzle cymbal, crotale, and a few more.

All this is used with the greatest restraint, to produce a series of short, delicately veined sketches. Each averages about two minutes in length. Only one is there a forte and that most brief. It is easy to say that the method is post-Webern, the sound a protracted study in triple pianissimo. That doesn't tell you the fantastic things Colgrass gets each instrument to do. Or of the prismatic effects he achieves.

His flashing image of "Time Passing," is reminiscent of Ravel's technique at the opening of "L'Heure Espagnole," but far more softly sibilant. The one lapse from expert invention occurs in the latter part of this episode, when the composer puts a youthful fragment of Beethoven through a sequence of changes, in the styles of Haydn, Sibelius, Ravel, Stravinsky, and Count Basie. This verges too much on the merely cute.

Even here there is a nice, multi-rhythmed spot where the harpsichordist, acting as Haydn used to, conducted from the keyboard. He led one segment of the music while Leinsdorf kept the larger framework going around the musical subdivision. Highly ingenious, highly entertaining, and played with incredible expertise.

Altogether this was one of the Boston's memorable visits

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
MAR 1 1967
New England Newsclip

A pencil will do for some conducting

By Saville R. Davis
Staff correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Washington

Backstage, before the concert, violinist Lennie Moss said, "The President is coming. He's an old friend of Mr. Leinsdorf, you know." Inside, members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were tuning their instruments on the platform of Constitution Hall.

In a moment there was that tiny ripple of tension, invisible except to the experienced eye. A number of men appeared around the staircases across the hall, seemingly at ease but standing like coiled steel.

A party in evening dress swept in, a woman with thick, dark hair and a luminous vermilion coat and gown, a tall man leaning forward as he seated his wife and talked to friends.

The orchestra was in fine form, if I do say it. Apart from a Bostonian's local patriotism, I might be expected to know. It was 51 years ago that my grandmother Davis, a little hard of hearing, started me off right down in row E, center aisle, in her extra seat.

Magnificent!

The blastoff from the platform was magnificent. Grandmother Saville, sharp of hearing, took me on alternate Fridays back to her seats in row double C, where there was more music but less excitement.

I've heard them all, from Muck and Monteux and Koussevitzky on down, and Leinsdorf on this evening was in the tradition. He turned a wrist, moved a finger, nodded his head, and the vast orchestra moved intimately with him.

"Consensus!" I said to myself, a little sardonically as a reporter is supposed to do. "A president ought to be with it, like an orchestra conductor."

The music was for a ballet—Berlioz—full of imagination. Well, I am the President's age and just his height, and I could try. So suddenly there I was on the platform. But instead of my lifelong friends with their instruments, there were familiar faces of congressmen and politicians and, yes, there were the critics of the press playing on their pencils like piccolos, screaming away when there was nothing on the music in front of them.

A flick of the wrist

I flicked my wrist and the double bass snapped his strings and started pounding on the head of the cellist in front of him. I nodded my head and Rolland Tapley dropped his violin and began moaning on a b flat sax.

I flicked my finger and Voisin — that trumpet that I worship—started to cough and spit (trumpets do, but not in public and not Voisin). I fanned the air and the oboes threw Berlioz into the 12-tone scale.

I reached for rhythm and the tympani took off on their own like computers at a happening.

My ballet broke up in a wild jam session. I handed my pencil back to Leinsdorf. "Eric," I said with a feigned intimacy I would not have dared back home, "Eric, let this be a lesson to you. Stay out of politics." And I fled back to my seat.

Across the hall—it was Dvorak now, and the English horn began his solo in the largo of the New World Symphony—the woman in vermillion turned to look at her husband.

I remembered Grandmother Davis. She had seen interruptions like this in Symphony Hall before. There was that time, she used to tell me, when the Scriabin poem of ecstasy soared to an incredible climax with full orchestra and full organ and suddenly suspended. Utter silence.

And out through the hall in shrill fortissimo, said Grandma, went that high nasal housewifely voice, "and I cook mine in lard."

HERALD NEWS (e)
FALL RIVER, MASS.
CIRC. 40,250
MAR 1 1967
New England Newsclip

ARRIVING FOR CONCERT by Boston Symphony Orchestra at Constitution Hall in Washington last night, President Johnson has kiss for Mrs. Erich Leinsdorf, wife of the orchestra conductor. Mrs. Johnson is greeted by Todd Perry, manager of the symphony. The Leindorfs are longtime friends of the Johnsons. The President's attendance, however, was a surprise since it had been announced only Mrs. Johnson and daughter, Lynda, would attend. AP Wirephoto

109

PHILHARMONIC HALL #4 MAR. 1 + 3

Mar 3

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, MARCH 5, 1967

Colgrass Piece Played by Boston Symphony

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

MICHAEL COLGRASS is a musician from New York who first came into prominence as a percussion specialist. Then his music began to attract notice. He has been one of the group active at the Berkshire Music Center, under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation, which means that he is a member of the musical avant-garde. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, gave the first New York performance of his "As Quiet As" Wednesday night in Philharmonic Hall.

This composition received its world premiere last summer at Tanglewood. It was a Fromm Foundation commission, and after Gunther Schuller conducted the performance, there were a few repercussions. "As Quiet As" does use all kinds of avant-garde effects, but it also has large patches of tonality, has one montage section and is quite easily grasped. Whereupon part of the Tanglewood audience lustily booed it. The score was too commercial, or too reactionary, or something.

●

Nevertheless it is an attractive piece of work, slick as it might be, with delicate colors and real imagination—plus a rather literary program—behind its conception. The stream-of-consciousness episode, in which a Beethoven theme is passed through various filters, works well without being cutesy; and, indeed, it is one of the few avant-garde works to show a degree of humor and whimsey. There even is some nature painting. The score holds up very well, and could be a repertory piece. Mr. Colgrass was present to take several bows.

Mr. Leinsdorf was helped by Charles Wilson, the assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, in the Colgrass score. Mr. Wilson officiated at harpsichord and glockenspiel, and in one episode, where one section of the orchestra had one unit to play, against an entirely different one from the rest of the orchestra, he stood up and conducted.

The rest of the program was devoted to the Beethoven Second Symphony and Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concerto. Gina Bachauer was the soloist in the concerto, and she played beautifully. She always has been at her best in romantic music, and this was a romantic interpretation all the way through. Strongly in evidence was that curiously attractive nervous quality so characteristic of Miss Bachauer—not stage nerves, but the nerves of a thoroughbred ready to go, full of controlled tension and electricity.

She played the concerto with a taut line, with sweep and power, with subtlety of color and with her usual immense, fluent technique. The one reservation about the performance does not concern her. Mr. Leinsdorf should have reduced the number of strings. Miss Bachauer is a strong pianist, but she is not a cannon, and it needed heavy artillery to come through the enormous volume of sound whipped by the Boston Symphony strings in the fortissimos. Otherwise Mr. Leinsdorf collaborated beautifully, keeping an eye on the pianist, as she kept an eye on him.

●

In the Beethoven symphony, Mr. Leinsdorf gave us his brand of sheer literalism, including the repeat of the first-movement exposition. Everything was in place, everything was perfectly drilled, every note sounded, every indication was observed, the orchestra played beautifully—and the performance had as much life as those copies of classic statuary in Symphony Hall.

Steve Schapiro

Gina Bachauer
Piano soloist

The Program

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, with Gina Bachauer, pianist.
Symphony No. 2 ..... Beethoven
As Quiet As ..... Michael Colgrass (first N.Y. performance)
Piano Concerto No. 2 ..... Rachmaninoff

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER®
SUN. 3,070,836

FEB 26 1967

Bostonians Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Erich Leinsdorff, will appear at Philharmonic Hall Wednesday and Friday evenings.

TIMES (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 635,600

FEB 26 1967

New England Newsclip

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and his Boston Symphony come to New York to give three concerts

WEDNESDAY

CARMEN, presented by Ruffino Opera, Judson Hall, 2 P.M.
QUEENS COLLEGE ORCHESTRA, Colden Auditorium, Queens College, Flushing, 1 P.M.
BOSTON SYMPHONY, Philharmonic Hall, 8:30 P.M. Conductor, Erich Leinsdorf; Gina Bachauer, pianist. Program repeated Friday, 8:30.
Symphony No. 2 ..... Beethoven
As Quiet As (first N. Y. performance) ..... Michael Colgrass
Piano Concerto No. 2 in C minor (Op. 18) ..... Rachmaninoff
CLAUDIO ARRAU, pianist, Carnegie Hall, 8:30 P.M.
Beethoven Sonatas: F minor (Op. 2,

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637

MAR 1 1967

Boston Symphony Orchestra: Erich Leinsdorf conducting, pianist Gina Bachauer soloist in Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2, Philharmonic Hall, 8:30.

Claudio Arrau, pianist, all-Beethoven program, Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

World Journal Tribune, New York, Thursday, March 2, 1967

Musical Fantasy Almost Fun Piece

By MILES KASTENDIECK

OUT OF THE Fromm Music Foundation sponsorship of contemporary works at Tanglewood last summer there emerged a work which Erich Leinsdorf considered worthy of a first N.Y. performance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Philharmonic Hall last night.

Michael Colgrass, a 34-year-old composer, became inspired to conceive in tone a nature study based on some children's completions of a sentence beginning "Let's be as quiet as . . ." The result is an acoustical piece translating the essence of seven identifications: "A Leaf Turning Colors," "An uninhabited Creek," "An Ant Walking," "Children Sleeping," "Time Passing," "A Soft Rainfall," and "The First Star Coming Out."

It was an ingenious idea that worked. "As Quiet As" is fantasy instrumentation on a large scale employed in cameo-like impressions, making the intangible temporal in sound. In capturing childish delight it becomes almost a "fun piece." By avant-garde standards the "music" qualifies as conservative-something out of Webern but not too far beyond. Some of it is "cute," some entertaining, some just experimental. Imagination and skill have fashioned it perhaps more whimsically than substantially, but only time will tell.

Leinsdorf and his confederates with assistance from Charles Wilson, the assistant conductor, presented it attractively. There may be more magic in it, for it is the kind of music calling for the quintessence of necromancy. Whether the elaborate instrumentation will hinder widespread performance became no issue with forces like the BSO.

Placed between the worlds of Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 and Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2, the Colgrass was way out. Leinsdorf chose to be strictly classical about the Beethoven. The first movement had more brilliance than radiance, the Larghetto acquired suavity, the Scherzo and even the Finale asked for a lighter touch.

His conservative interpretation did not restrain him from rhetorical gestures suggesting that he may be more conscious of podium showmanship than a proper Bostonian should be. Ever since he took to stick waving he has broadened his arm movements.

Gina Bachauer played the Rachmaninoff with all the sweep and bravura of the grand manner. This generated its own brand of excitement and earned her a surge of cheers. Her powerful left hand punctuated the music effectively but the right did not always achieve quite the necessary treble brilliance. There is also more poetry in this romantic work, a fact that the violins and cellos stated lushly. Leinsdorf let the orchestra take over almost too strongly while she was playing, but it gave Rachmaninoff his due.

NEW BRUNSWICK MAR 2

The Home News
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
D. 49,539 SUN. 50,173

FEB 27 1967

Boston Symphony to Play Thursday at Rutgers Gym

The Rutgers University Choir will join with conductor Erich Leinsdorf, four soloists and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a special concert in the Gymnasium Thursday at 8:30 p.m.

The University Choir, under the direction of Dr. F. Austin Walter, will sing Haydn's "Mass in B-Flat Major" with soloists Beverly Sills, soprano, Beverly Wolff, contralto, Placido Domingo, tenor, and Ara Berberian, bass, and "Et Occidentem Illustra," the piece written by Robert W. Moevs of Belle Meade, associate professor of music, to commemorate Rutgers' 200th anniversary last year.

The first half of the program will consist of the Haydn work. Following intermission will be Moevs' Bicentennial composition and Richard Strauss' Opus 82 from the final scene of the opera "Daphne."

The gymnasium performance will be the fourth of five joint concerts in a span of 10 days by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Rutgers Choir. They will conclude the series Saturday (March 4) with a concert in New York City's Carnegie Hall. Previous joint performances were given in Boston last week.

The Rutgers Choir annually performs in concert with one of the major symphony orchestras. Last year it performed with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra and two years ago it appeared in concert with the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra and the London Symphony Orchestra.

The university choir has 200 voices recruited from Douglass College, the women's division of the university, and the men's colleges.

Although the event with the Boston Symphony will be held in the gymnasium, it is not part of the Rutgers Gymnasium subscription series.

Tickets must be purchased separately, and are available at the University Concert Office, 542 George St.

Featured in Golden Anniversary of Rutgers Concerts

From many parts of the world come the performers for the 50th Anniversary Rutgers Gymnasium Concert Series and other music events at the state university, including, left to right, top tier, The Drolc Quartet and Moscow Chamber Orchestra; second tier, Evelyn Crochet, young French pianist; Early Music Quartet. and Gerard Souzay, French baritone; third tier, Geravase De Peyer, of Melos Ensemble; Julian Bream, guitarist and lutenist; and Gina Bachauer, Greek pianist; and bottom tier, The Boston Symphony. and the Netherlands Chamber Choir. (Article on Page 22)

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

MAR 24 1967

New England Newsclip

A STUDY IN CONTRASTS

'Modern' Music Mostly a Trial

BY DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK—Erich Leinsdorf and his Boston Symphony recently confronted a Manhattan audience with a piece entitled "Et Occidentem Illustra." Leonard Bernstein and his New York Philharmonic confronted an audience with one called "Forma Ferritonans."

These are examples of the trials symphony audiences undergo these days in order to give the output of contemporary composers a chance to impress them—musically. The first title referred to Rutgers University. The second directed thoughts to a steel mill.

BY CONTRAST, that old revolutionary conductor, Leopold Stokowski, who was first to confront American audiences with much of the 20th century symphonic music which has endured, stands out like white against an orange background.

This now 84-year-old maestro startles audiences of his American Symphony by being what they don't expect of him, that is consistently conservative. For instance, he recently used the Boston Symphony's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein, as soloist. They performed a piece its composer, Johannes Brahms, entitled "Violin Concerto."

Leinsdorf's showpiece was the work of Rutgers' composer-in-residence, Robert Moevs. He took the title from the university's motto. In addition to full symphony he required the services of a big chorus. It was a very long and, at times, a very loud piece.

NOR WAS THE audience any less restive for Bernstein's showpiece with a title referring to steel-making. It resulted from a commission of a Swedish steelmaker to celebrate the opening of a new plant, and the audience was to hear in music the steps on the forming of steel.

The composer was Karl-Birger Blomdahl who is to be remembered as the creator of the first (and so far only) space opera which has been moribund since its premiere in Stockholm in 1959. Bernstein performed "Forma Ferritonans" as the 25th item of his continuing "Survey of Symphonic Forms of the 20th Century."

But all conductors are continually surveying 20th century music, hoping to pay proper respect while at the same time enhancing their holds on audiences. This last consideration causes most of them, particularly those lacking Bernstein's intense personal magnetism, to choose for performing with care and caution.

LEINSDORF found a winner in "As Quiet As" by Michael Colgress who until he did this piece was considered among the more "avant" of the avant-garde. "As Quiet As" is causing the avant-garde, which comprises very small percentage of any symphony audience, to wonder about his loyalty. A few more pieces like it and he could be expelled.

"As Quiet As" actually observes conventional tonality through several extended passages. It now and then startles with the unconventional and even the outlandish to conventionally conditioned musical ears, but it offers no listening problems, and so no one will hold a lasting grudge against the conductor who performs it—or against Colgress for composing it.

(United Press International)

Newark Evening News
NEWARK, N. J.
D. 275,716 SUN. 427,240

FEB 27 1967

Rutgers Concert

Boston Orchestra Is Featured

NEW BRUNSWICK—Haydn's "Mass in B-Flat Major will be presented by the Rutgers University Choir in a special concert in the university gymnasium Thursday at 8:30 p.m.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and four soloists from the Boston Symphony Orchestra will join with the choir.

Dr. F. Austin Walter will direct the Haydn portion with soloists Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Placido Domingo, tenor, and Ara Berberian, bass. They will sing also in "Et Occidentem Illustra," the piece written by Robert W. Moevs of Belle Mead, associate professor of music, to commemorate Rutgers' 200th anniversary.

The first half of the program will consist of the Haydn work. Following intermission, will be Moevs' bicentennial composition and Richard Strauss' Opus 82 from the final scene of the opera "Daphne."

Fourth Concert

The performance will be the fourth of five joint concerts in 10 days by the Boston Orchestra an dthe choir. They will conclude the series Saturday with a concert in Carnegie Hall, New York City.

Mar 2

NEW JERSEY MUSIC AND ARTS
CALDWELL, N. J.
CIR. N. AVAIL.

MAR 1967

Boston Symphony Heading Rutgers March Calendar

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, leads off this month's schedule of music and art events at Rutgers University on March 2. In a special concert with the Rutgers University Choir, the Boston Symphony's program will feature Haydn's "Creation" Mass and Moev's "Ex Occidentem Illustra" at 8:30 p.m. at the Rutgers Gymnasium.

NEW JERSEY MUSIC AND ARTS
CALDWELL, N. J.
CIR. N. AVAIL.

SEPT 1966

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Rutgers University Choir will appear in a special concert Mar. 2. The program will be featured by a performance of "Et Occidentem Illustra," a work by Robert W. Moevs, Rutgers' associate professor of music, commissioned for the Rutgers Bicentennial. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony. The Rutgers Choir will be directed by F. Austin

NEW BRUNSWICK MAR 2

The Home News
NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J.
D. 49,539 SUN. 50,173

FEB 27 1967

Boston Symphony to Play Thursday at Rutgers Gym

The Rutgers University Choir will join with conductor Erich Leinsdorf, four soloists and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a special concert in the Gymnasium Thursday at 8:30 p.m.

The University Choir, under the direction of Dr. F. Austin Walter, will sing Haydn's "Mass in B-Flat Major" with soloists Beverly Sills, soprano, Beverly Wolff, contralto, Placido Domingo, tenor, and Ara Berberian, bass, and "Et Occidentem Illustra," the piece written by Robert W. Moevs of Belle Meade, associate professor of music, to commemorate Rutgers' 200th anniversary last year.

The first half of the program will consist of the Haydn work. Following intermission will be Moevs' Bicentennial composition and Richard Strauss' Opus 82 from the final scene of the opera "Daphne."

The gymnasium performance will be the fourth of five joint concerts in a span of 10 days by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Rutgers Choir. They will conclude the series Saturday (March 4) with a concert in New York City's Carnegie Hall. Previous joint performances were given in Boston last week.

The Rutgers Choir annually performs in concert with one of the major symphony orchestras. Last year it performed with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra and two years ago it appeared in concert with the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra and the London Symphony Orchestra.

The university choir has 200 voices recruited from Douglass College, the women's division of the university, and the men's colleges.

Although the event with the Boston Symphony will be held in the gymnasium, it is not part of the Rutgers Gymnasium subscription series.

Tickets must be purchased separately, and are available at the University Concert Office, 542 George St.

Featured in Golden Anniversary of Rutgers Concerts

From many parts of the world come the performers for the 50th Anniversary Rutgers Gymnasium Concert Series and other music events at the state university, including, left to right, top tier, The Drolc Quartet and Moscow Chamber Orchestra; second tier, Evelyn Crochet, young French pianist; Early Music Quartet and Gerard Souzay, French baritone; third tier, Geravase De Peyer, of Melos Ensemble; Julian Bream, guitarist and lutenist; and Gina Bachauer, Greek pianist; and bottom tier, The Boston Symphony, and the Netherlands Chamber Choir. (Article on Page 22)

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

MAR 24 1967

New England Newsclip

A STUDY IN CONTRASTS

'Modern' Music Mostly a Trial

BY DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK—Erich Leinsdorf and his Boston Symphony recently confronted a Manhattan audience with a piece entitled "Et Occidentem Illustra." Leonard Bernstein and his New York Philharmonic confronted an audience with one called "Forma Ferritonans."

These are examples of the trials symphony audiences undergo these days in order to give the output of contemporary composers a chance to impress themmusically. The first title referred to Rutgers University. The second directed thoughts to a steel mill.

BY CONTRAST, that old revolutionary conductor, Leopold Stokowski, who was first to confront American audiences with much of the 20th century symphonic music which has endured, stands out like white against an orange background.

This now 84-year-old maestro startles audiences of his American Symphony by being what they don't expect of him, that is consistently conservative. For instance, he recently used the Boston Symphony's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein, as soloist. They performed a piece its composer, Johannes Brahms, entitled "Violin Concerto."

Leinsdorf's showpiece was the work of Rutgers' composer-in-residence, Robert Moevs. He took the title from the university's motto. In addition to full symphony he required the services of a big chorus. It was a very long and, at times, a very loud piece.

NOR WAS THE audience any less restive for Bernstein's showpiece with a title referring to steel-making. It resulted from a commission of a Swedish steelmaker to celebrate the opening of a new plant, and the audience was to hear in music the steps on the forming of steel.

The composer was Karl-Birger Blomdahl who is to be remembered as the creator of the first (and so far only) space opera which has been moribund since its premiere in Stockholm in 1959. Bernstein performed "Forma Ferritonans" as the 25th item of his continuing "Survey of Symphonic Forms of the 20th Century."

But all conductors are continually surveying 20th century music, hoping to pay proper respect while at the same time enhancing their holds on audiences. This last consideration causes most of them, particularly those lacking Bernstein's intense personal magnetism, to choose for performing with care and caution.

LEINSDORF found a winner in "As Quiet As" by Michael Colgress who until he did this piece was considered among the more "avant" of the avant-garde. "As Quiet As" is causing the avant-garde, which comprises very small percentage of any symphony audience, to wonder about his loyalty. A few more pieces like it and he could be expelled.

"As Quiet As" actually observes conventional tonality through several extended passages. It now and then startles with the unconventional and even the outlandish to conventionally conditioned musical ears, but it offers no listening problems, and so no one will hold a lasting grudge against the conductor who performs it—or against Colgress for composing it.

(United Press International)

Newark Evening News
NEWARK, N. J.
D. 275,716 SUN. 427,240

FEB 27 1967

Rutgers Concert

Boston Orchestra Is Featured

NEW BRUNSWICK—Haydn's "Mass in B-Flat Major will be presented by the Rutgers University Choir in a special concert in the university gymnasium Thursday at 8:30 p.m.

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and four soloists from the Boston Symphony Orchestra will join with the choir.

Dr. F. Austin Walter will direct the Haydn portion with soloists Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Placido Domingo, tenor, and Ara Berberian, bass. They will sing also in "Et Occidentem Illustra," the piece written by Robert W. Moevs of Belle Mead, associate professor of music, to commemorate Rutgers' 200th anniversary.

The first half of the program will consist of the Haydn work. Following intermission, will be Moevs' bicentennial composition and Richard Strauss' Opus 82 from the final scene of the opera "Daphne."

Fourth Concert

The performance will be the fourth of five joint concerts in 10 days by the Boston Orchestra an dthe choir. They will conclude the series Saturday with a concert in Carnegie Hall, New York City.

NEW JERSEY MUSIC AND ARTS
CALDWELL, N. J.
CIR. N. AVAIL.

MAR 1967

Boston Symphony Heading Rutgers March Calendar

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, leads off this month's schedule of music and art events at Rutgers University on March 2. In a special concert with the Rutgers University Choir, the Boston Symphony's program will feature Haydn's "Creation" Mass and Moev's "Ex Occidentem Illustra" at 8:30 p.m. at the Rutgers Gymnasium.

NEW JERSEY MUSIC AND ARTS
CALDWELL, N. J.
CIR. N. AVAIL.

SEPT 1966

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Rutgers University Choir will appear in a special concert Mar. 2. The program will be featured by a performance of "Et Occidentem Illustra," a work by Robert W. Moevs, Rutgers' associate professor of music, commissioned for the Rutgers Bicentennial. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony. The Rutgers Choir will be directed by F. Austin

111

CARNEGIE #5 MAR. 4

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
MAR 6 1967

HAYDN MASS SUNG AT CARNEGIE HALL

Rutgers Choir and Boston Symphony Are Heard

By ALLEN HUGHES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra kept itself and several guests quite busy at Carnegie Hall on Saturday night with a program that began with Haydn's "Creation" Mass, continued with the first New York performance of Robert Moevs's "Et Occidentem Illustra" and ended with the final scene from Richard Strauss's "Daphne." Or perhaps it was only a collection of pieces rather than a program. Either way, it made for fascinating listening.

The Rutgers University Choir—big, well-balanced and smartly trained by F. Austin Walter—was present to sing the Mass and the Moevs work, and there was a superb quartet of vocal soloists for the Mass—Beverly Sills, Beverly Wolff, Placido Domingo and Ara Berberian. Later, Miss Sills sang the "Daphne" scene.

The Mass was magnificent. It is essentially a happy work, and Erich Leinsdorf's conducting made the most of its vigor and optimism. The Credo and Agnus Dei of any musical setting must, of course, take brief turns toward solemnity, but Haydn makes them as painless as possible.

The writing for the solo quartet is fragmented, but it is effective, especially as sung in this performance. The voices were clear, well-matched as to timbre and volume, and blended beautifully when necessary.

It might be interesting to know exactly why the Boston Symphony performed the Moevs piece. The work is not so bad as some angry boos at the end of the performance suggested, but it scarcely seemed good enough, either, to merit the attention it got.

Score Pretentious

"Et Occidentem" was composed in 1964 on a commission by Rutgers to commemorate its 200th anniversary in 1966. The composer is a member of the Rutgers music faculty. Part of the text is about the exploration of knowledge and is by Dante. Part is from a salutation concerning the establishment of colleges that was given to Theodore Frelinghuysen in 1755.

Mr. Moevs's musical setting is contemporary with a vengeance. It begins with speaking chorus and percussion and moves through planned reciting chaos into sparse Webern-like music that contains some nice sound effects. The esoteric texts are rendered incomprehensible. There are no musical innovations here and no improvements, refinements or unusually expressive uses of part ones. In the end, the work seems more pretentious than anything else. The performance it got was worthy of a masterpiece.

The tessitura of the "Daphne" music, sung by Miss Sills, is high-flying and probably guaranteed to wreck the voice if climbed frequently. The soprano sang the scene bravely, sparing herself and her beautiful voice not at all. The results were exciting when loud, lovely when soft and somewhat alarming at all times. We should thank her for doing it once, and beg her not to do it again.

HIS WORK PRESENTED: Robert Moevs, composer, whose "Et Occidentem Illustra" was played by Boston Symphony Orchestra.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 635,619
MAR 6 1967

Inspiring 'Mass' By Leinsdorf

Vocal music in a variety of guises was the special attraction of the concert presented Saturday night in Carnegie Hall by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

First came a performance of Haydn's rarely heard Mass in B flat ("Creation Mass"), one of the products of the composer's last years that is skillful, appropriately festive, but without the inspiration that marked other works of the period.

FOUR SOLO PARTS

The Mass gets its name because there is a tune in it from Haydn's "Creation." There is no other similarity. Although it has four solo parts, it relies predominantly on the orchestra and chorus. In this, Leinsdorf had the assistance of the Rutgers University Choir, which, like a lot of college groups, is weak at the soprano and bass ends but otherwise splendid.

The soloists were soprano Beverly Sills, contralto Beverly Wolff, tenor Placido Domingo, and bass Ara Berberian, all of whom were fine in the limited work assigned them.

Miss Sills came back again to conclude the evening as soloist in the final scene of Richard Strauss' bucolic tragedy of 1938, "Daphne." This is a tender score, with beautiful orchestral touches and a ravishing vocal style that anticipates the "Four Last Songs."

Miss Sills has never sounded better. Effortless delivery, the roundest of tones, total characterization—she had it all. Leinsdorf's orchestral sounds were on the thick side, but Miss Sills came through them anyway.

In between the Haydn and the Strauss came the New York premiere of Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra," which is set to a portion of the "Divine Comedy" in which Ulysses urges his followers to continue their search for knowledge and virtue. The score is atonal and fierce with internal organization. But it does nothing for the text but disintegrate it, and its ideas (save for some clever percussion effects, and the novel use of the chorus for group-chattering) are not terribly compelling on their own.

—WILLIAM BENDER

Eric Leinsdorf — conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 167,000
MAR 4 1967

HIGHLIGHTS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—Sat. March 4—8:30—Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Soloists: Beverly Sills, Beverly Wolff, Placido Domingo, Ara Berberian. Rutgers University Choir. Program: Haydn, Mass in B flat major ("Creation"); Robert Moevs, "Et Occidentem Illustra" (first N. Y. performance); Strauss, "Daphne," final scene. Tickets: $2.50-$7.50.

MSTISLAV ROSTROPOVICH—March 5, 7, 9—8:30—The great Soviet cellist is soloist in a series with the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Gennadi Roshdestvensky. Sun. Program: Vivaldi, Concertos in C major, G minor; Lukas Foss, Concerto for Cello and Orchestra (world premiere); Boris Tchaikovsky, Partita (first perf. in the West); Shostakovich, Concerto No. 1 in E flat. Tues. Program: Haydn, Concerto in C; Brahms, Double Concerto; Tartini, Concerto in A major; Hindemith, Concerto. Thurs. Program: Lalo, Concerto in D minor; Tikhon Khrennikov, Concerto (first U. S. perf.); André Jolivet, Concerto (first U. S. perf.); Bloch, Schelomo. Tickets: $2-$7.50.

All concerts at Carnegie Hall, 154 W. 57th St. CI 7-7459.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
FEB 26 1967

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and his Boston Symphony come to New York to give three concerts in two halls this week.

SATURDAY

LITTLE ORCHESTRA SOCIETY, Young People's concert, Philharmonic Hall, 11 A.M. and 3 P.M. Conductor, Thomas Scherman.

ILANA VERED, pianist, and MARIA LUISA RANGEL, soprano, Town Hall, 5:15 P.M. Music of Obradors, Luna, Turina, Ponce, Cuauhtli, Nacho, Mata, Moreno, Chopin, Brahms.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Carnegie Hall, 8:30 P.M. Conductor, Leinsdorf; Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Placido Domingo, tenor; Ara Berberian, bass; Rutgers University Chorus.

Mass in B flat ..... Haydn
Et Occidentem Illustra ..... Moevs
Final Scene from Daphne (Op. 82) ..... Strauss

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
FEB 27 1967

Moevs' Work in Debut Mar. 4

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will present the New York premiere of Robert Moevs' "Et occidentem illustra" for orchestra and chorus Saturday at 8:30 in Carnegie Hall. Rutgers University commissioned the work, and the title is taken from the University's motto.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
N. Y. EAST SIDE NEWS
Friday, February 24, 1967

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will include the New York premiere of a work for orchestra and chorus by Robert Moevs, American composer, in Carnegie Hall on Saturday evening, March 4.

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
MAR 4 1967

Music and Dance Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra: Erich Leinsdorf conducting, Haydn's "Mass in B flat," Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra," and the final scene from Strauss' "Daphne," Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

111

CARNEGIE #5 MAR. 4

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
MAR 6 1967

HAYDN MASS SUNG AT CARNEGIE HALL

Rutgers Choir and Boston Symphony Are Heard

By ALLEN HUGHES

The Boston Symphony Orchestra kept itself and several guests quite busy at Carnegie Hall on Saturday night with a program that began with Haydn's "Creation" Mass, continued with the first New York performance of Robert Moevs's "Et Occidentem Illustra" and ended with the final scene from Richard Strauss's "Daphne." Or perhaps it was only a collection of pieces rather than a program. Either way, it made for fascinating listening.

The Rutgers University Choir—big, well-balanced and smartly trained by F. Austin Walter—was present to sing the Mass and the Moevs work, and there was a superb quartet of vocal soloists for the Mass—Beverly Sills, Beverly Wolff, Placido Domingo and Ara Berberian. Later, Miss Sills sang the "Daphne" scene.

The Mass was magnificent. It is essentially a happy work, and Erich Leinsdorf's conducting made the most of its vigor and optimism. The Credo and Agnus Dei of any musical setting must, of course, take brief turns toward solemnity, but Haydn makes them as painless as possible.

The writing for the solo quartet is fragmented, but it is effective, especially as sung in this performance. The voices were clear, well-matched as to timbre and volume, and blended beautifully when necessary.

It might be interesting to know exactly why the Boston Symphony performed the Moevs piece. The work is not so bad as some angry boos at the end of the performance suggested, but it scarcely seemed good enough, either, to merit the attention it got.

Scoro Pretentious

"Et Occidentem" was composed in 1964 on a commission by Rutgers to commemorate its 200th anniversary in 1966. The composer is a member of the Rutgers music faculty. Part of the text is about the exploration of knowledge and is by Dante. Part is from a salutation concerning the establishment of colleges that was given to Theodore Frelinghuysen in 1755.

Mr. Moevs's musical setting is contemporary with a vengeance. It begins with speaking chorus and percussion and moves through planned reciting chaos into sparse Webern-like music that contains some nice sound effects. The esoteric texts are rendered incomprehensible. There are no musical innovations here and no improvements, refinements or unusually expressive uses of part ones. In the end, the work seems more pretentious than anything else. The performance it got was worthy of a masterpiece.

The tessitura of the "Daphne" music, sung by Miss Sills, is high-flying and probably guaranteed to wreck the voice if climbed frequently. The soprano sang the scene bravely, sparing herself and her beautiful voice not at all. The results were exciting when loud, lovely when soft and somewhat alarming at all times. We should thank her for doing it once, and beg her not to do it again.

HIS WORK PRESENTED: Robert Moevs, composer, whose "Et Occidentem Illustra" was played by Boston Symphony Orchestra.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 635,619
MAR 6 1967

Inspiring 'Mass' By Leinsdorf

Vocal music in a variety of guises was the special attraction of the concert presented Saturday night in Carnegie Hall by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

First came a performance of Haydn's rarely heard Mass in B flat ("Creation Mass"), one of the products of the composer's last years that is skillful, appropriately festive, but without the inspiration that marked other works of the period.

FOUR SOLD PARTS

The Mass gets its name because there is a tune in it from Haydn's "Creation." There is no other similarity. Although it has four solo parts, it relies predominantly on the orchestra and chorus. In this, Leinsdorf had the assistance of the Rutgers University Choir, which, like a lot of college groups, is weak at the soprano and bass ends but otherwise splendid.

The soloists were soprano Beverly Sills, contralto Beverly Wolff, tenor Placido Domingo, and bass Ara Berberian, all of whom were fine in the limited work assigned them.

Miss Sills came back again to conclude the evening as soloist in the final scene of Richard Strauss' bucolic tragedy of 1938, "Daphne." This is a tender score, with beautiful orchestral touches and a ravishing vocal style that anticipates the "Four Last Songs."

Miss Sills has never sounded better. Effortless delivery, the roundest of tones, total characterization—she had it all. Leinsdorf's orchestral sounds were on the thick side, but Miss Sills came through them anyway.

In between the Haydn and the Strauss came the New York premiere of Robert Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra," which is set to a portion of the "Divine Comedy" in which Ulysses urges his followers to continue their search for knowledge and virtue. The score is atonal and fierce with internal organization. But it does nothing for the text but disintegrate it, and its ideas (save for some clever percussion effects, and the novel use of the chorus for group-chattering) are not terribly compelling on their own.

—WILLIAM BENDER

Eric Leinsdorf — conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 167,000
MAR 4 1967

HIGHLIGHTS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—Sat. March 4—8:30—Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Soloists: Beverly Sills, Beverly Wolff, Placido Domingo, Ara Berberian. Rutgers University Choir. Program: Haydn, Mass in B flat major (Creation); Robert Moevs, "Et Occidentem Illustra" (first N. Y. performance); Strauss, "Daphne," final scene. Tickets: $2.50-$7.50.

MSTISLAV ROSTROPOVICH—March 5, 7, 9—8:30—The great Soviet cellist is soloist in a series with the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Gennadi Rozhdestvensky. Sun. Program: Vivaldi, Concertos in C major, G minor; Lukas Foss, Concerto for Cello and Orchestra (world premiere); Boris Tchaikovsky, Partita (first perf. in the West); Shostakovich, Concerto No. 1 in E flat. Tues. Program: Haydn, Concerto in C; Brahms, Double Concerto; Tartini, Concerto in A major; Hindemith, Concerto. Thurs. Program: Lalo, Concerto in D minor; Tikhon Khrennikov, Concerto (first U. S. perf.); André Jolivet, Concerto (first U. S. perf.); Bloch, Schelomo. Tickets: $3-$7.50.

All concerts at Carnegie Hall, 154 W. 57th St. CI 7-7459.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
N. Y. EAST SIDE NEWS
Friday, February 24, 1967

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will include the New York premiere of a work for orchestra and chorus by Robert Moevs, American composer, in Carnegie Hall on Saturday evening, March 4.

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
FEB 27 1967

Moevs' Work in Debut Mar. 4

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will present the New York premiere of Robert Moevs' "Et occidentem illustra" for orchestra and chorus Saturday at 8:30 in Carnegie Hall. Rutgers University commissioned the work, and the title is taken from the University's motto.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
FEB 26 1967

Conductor Erich Leinsdorf and his Boston Symphony come to New York to give three concerts in two halls this week.

SATURDAY

LITTLE ORCHESTRA SOCIETY, Young People's concert, Philharmonic Hall, 11 A.M. and 3 P.M. Conductor, Thomas Scherman.

ILANA VERED, pianist, and MARIA LUISA RANGEL, soprano, Town Hall, 5:15 P.M.
Music of Obradors, Luna, Turina, Ponce, Cuauhtli, Nacho, Mata, Moreno, Chopin, Brahms.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Carnegie Hall, 8:30 P.M. Conductor, Leinsdorf; Beverly Sills, soprano; Beverly Wolff, contralto; Placido Domingo, tenor; Ara Berberian, bass; Rutgers University Chorus.
Mass in B flat ..... Haydn
Et Occidentem Illustra ..... Moevs
Final Scene from Daphne (Op. 82) ..... Strauss

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
MAR 4 1967

Music and Dance Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra: Erich Leinsdorf conducting, Haydn's "Mass in B flat," Moevs' "Et Occidentem Illustra," and the final scene from Strauss' "Daphne," Carnegie Hall, 8:30.

PROVIDENCE #5 MAR 16.

MAR 16
JOURNAL (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 66,850
MAR 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Music Last Night

Boston Symphony Plays Bruckner and Mozart

By EDWIN SAFFORD

If we must have D minor symphonies on our orchestra programs — let it be Bruckner. That is what the Boston Symphony ended with last night at Veterans Memorial Auditorium in an all-Austrian group, Mozart, Bruckner, and Leinsdorf, he recreating the first two. And the Bruckner stood as a monument to be venerated, I don't mind saying.

This last of his nine symphonies is the most accessible. Not merely because it is only three movements long as opposed to Bruckner's usual long four (the third chair violin looked at his watch at the beginning and I suppose he was not alone in doing so), but rather because of its transparency, its authentic nobility, which he attempted but did not always succeed in sustaining elsewhere, and, let's say so, its Gestalt. With all its complexities it really holds together as one piece.

Compare it with that other, most popular D minor, the Franck; well, it's a laugh to do so. You could practically reduce its size to principal players alone, to chamber proportions, and I bet it would still carry the effect, although not as massively so, still be as intense. And the things you hear in it. There are echoes of later music it comes so flirtatiously near breaking the tonic barrier at times, to atonality, even close to a 12-tone row in that gorgeous last movement line the BSO cellos sang so eloquently last night.

As you may intimate, I was somewhat taken by the performance as well. At one point only, in the trio of the scherzo when the violins sounded frazzled, was there an off-the-mark. Leinsdorf obviously has a deep affection for the work, and what he and his men produced made Strauss, who tried for the same kind of sustained nobility frequently, compare as a piker.

It is hardly revelation to observe Leinsdorf's affection for Mozart. With a smaller orchestra, praise be, there was the overture to "The Abduction From the Seraglio" and B-flat piano concerto (K 456), whose soloist was Evelyne Crochet. Unity here gave the work a sense of concerto for orchestra and piano, its central figure was so much part of the orchestral texture. It is pastoral in feeling, not a display piece, with one of those Mozartian bits of sentimentality for a second movement only he—and blessedly few others—can get away with. Miss Crochet's playing was feminine yet not prissy, a bit blurred here and there, but not distressingly so, and the unanimity between herself and the conductor was plainly evident.

This, with the "Seraglio" overture, was a joyous beginning. I must say, from my own standpoint, the whole affair was a pleasure.

MAR 16
TIMES (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
CIRC. 38,850
MAR 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Music In Review

Guest Pianist Features Boston Symphony Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Erich Leinsdorf conducting closed out its Providence series of concerts Thursday night with a brilliant performance of Bruckner's "Symphony in D-minor, No. 9 (Unfinished)" in Veterans Memorial Auditorium and presented an exciting, young guest soloist, Evelyne Crochet, pianist, playing Mozart's "Piano Concerto in B-Flat Major."

The orchestra opened the program with the enlivening "Overture to 'Die Entfuhrung aus dem Serail' (The Abduction from Seraglio,)" with its Turkish flavor and spicy and humorous modulations.

Miss Crochet's touch and interpretation of modes were such that they made the sparkle of Mozart's rich embellishments more delightful in the opening movement, allegro vivace. It was a work that gave the soloist the spotlight with the almost martial staccato rhythm, played separately by the orchestra and then the soloist, then together with the accompaniment pianissimo.

The second movement, andante un poco sostenuto, was so simple in theme as to sound trite in the beginning, but in the hands of this accomplished artist, and under the guidance of a conductor who never allowed the orchestra to override the soloist, it developed a pleasing sparkle.

The final movement returned to the allegro vivace pace and was heroic with a dash and glitter of scintillating musical decorations that, sometime with the orchestra playing a counterpoint against the piano, it seemed to swagger and strut. It was a delight to listen to, and seemingly, a joy to perform.

Bruckner's Ninth was never completed, but it needs no more than the three movements as played by the Boston Symphony to show the genius of Bruckner in matching and blending the many voices of the instruments. It is a marvelous example of the perfect symphonic form with its full sonorous chords in the brasses, the startling outbursts in the percussion, the singing trumpets, the crooning horns, the cavernous roars of the tubas and contrabass, the shouting trombones, and the whispering strings and woodwinds.

With an opening movement, misterioso, seemingly searching for communication with the gods, it has a quasi-mockery in the scherzo as though mocking the spirits. Yet you seem to sense the reverence underlying the frustration.

However, the closing movement, adagio, was more intense and on a higher level of reverence, as though he had arrived at communication, and the music take on a chanting in the lower tones, and the solemnness climbs with the higher-toned instruments until you feel that he has attained the grace he prayed for. It leaves the listener with a feeling of fulfillmnt.

C.H.L.

113

ROCHESTER APR. 3

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 138,813 SUN. 210,387

APR 2 1967

Leinsdorf . . . A Return to the Eastman Podium

By HARVEY SOUTHGATE
Democrat and Chronicle Music Editor

Erich Leinsdorf walked off the stage of the Eastman Theater after a final appearance with the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra on Feb. 19, 1959. Tomorrow night he will walk back on again as conductor of the Boston Symphony, considered by many the No. 1 conducting post of the world.

It will be a night of memories for the maestro who made musical history here in his eight years as conductor of the Philharmonic. Those years, he once said, were his "maturing period," in which his earlier ups and downs had been smoothed out into the long perspective and the upward look.

He has since conducted at least 500 concerts with the Boston Symphony, won national and international honors and a "Musician of the Year" award.

* * *

ALTHOUGH HIS MEMORY for music is conceded to be fabulous, Leinsdorf acknowledged the other day that he is not so good on dates. He guessed tentatively that it was "seven or eight years" since he relinquished his post as music director of the Rochester Philharmonic.

He gasped with unbelief when told it was more than 11 years.

He resigned his post here in December, 1955, to become director of the New York City Opera. He finished out the season here, however. The February 1959, concert was a special "guest" appearance. He took over the Boston post as successor to Charles Munch in September, 1962.

* * *

TO GO WAY BACK—IT WAS in November 1946, that Leinsdorf made his first appearance in Rochester as a guest conductor, and one year later succeeded Jose Iturbi, who had resigned three years before.

Between the time he left and the time he went to Boston, Leinsdorf explored a variety of roads. His contract with the New York City Opera was to date from January, 1956, and at his own request was to run for only one year.

In September, 1956 he opened the New York City Opera season with a production of Offenbach's "Orpheus in the Underworld," in English. The opera was criticized as vulgar, although Leinsdorf insisted that this impression was merely a misinterpretation of the French original.

The opera was a box office success.

But in January, 1957, he asked to be relieved of the post and entered a period of guest conducting and recording with prominent orchestras.

He also was engaged for a Wagnerian repertoire at the Metropolitan Opera, and was a member of the conducting staff there when offered the Boston post in the fall of 1961, to become effective the following year.

* * *

LEINSDORF MAY BE weak on specific dates, but he is sharp on details of his long experience in music. Counting up quickly in his head, he arrived, if we followed him right, at something like 150 concerts each year since he left Rochester, of which at least 500 were with the Boston Symphony at home or on tour.

One of his distinctions was to conduct the first orchestra concert in the new Philharmonic Hall in New York. He has conducted in all 20 concerts in Lincoln Center.

He agrees with others that the new Philharmonic Hall acoustics have been disappointing, but says improvements have been made and he believes in time it will be possible to bring about a near perfect acoustical quality.

Asked if his heavy schedule is not pretty tiring, he said that he made it a point to take a number of weeks off every year. He has filled engagements with leading orchestras in Europe and made "thirty or forty" records, including a new version of Verdi's "Ballo in Maschera."

The Rochester audience, he said, may note a generally younger look in the Boston orchestra personnel. When he took over, he explained, a number of older members were of retirement age and have been replaced. Among the present members is Stephen Geber, Eastman School student cellist who was taken on last year. Doriot Dwyer, also an Eastman student, is the first woman ever to hold the first flute position in the Boston orchestra.

* * *

Leinsdorf had already made headlines when he came to Rochester. Born in Vienna, he took up the piano, switched to conducting at the suggestion of Bruno Walter, worked with Toscanini at the Vienna Philharmonic, joined the Metropolitan Opera conducting staff when only 25.

He had his big chance when conductor Artur Bodansky fell ill and Leinsdorf was engaged to conduct the opera "Parsifal" on a 12-hour notice. He was made conductor of the Wagnerian wing of the company and in spite of some hassles with such stars as Kirsten Flagstad and Lauritz Melchior, made a brilliant reputation.

Later he was conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra until he left to join the United States Army as a private in World War II.

In Rochester Leinsdorf rebuilt the orchestra after the war, which had taken a number of regulars from the ranks, and made annual tours with it. He took it to Carnegie Hall a number of times, the last in March, 1954.

When he was last in Rochester he expressed regret that the tours had been abandoned. So fine an orchestra, he said, should be more widely heard.

* * *

ROCHESTER IS THE FIRST stop on the present tour, which will touch Chicago, Philadelphia, Brooklyn and other cities, and end in Carnegie Hall on April 15.

It is the first Boston Symphony visit here since October, 1961, during Munch's farewell tour.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER DEM. CHRONICLE
Sunday, April 2, 1967

What's Doing This Week—

The Boston Symphony, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, comes to the Eastman tomorrow for its first Rochester concert since 1916. The Rochester Philharmonic closes its 1966-67 season on Thursday.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER DEM. CHRONICLE
Sunday, April 9, 1967

MUSIC

We Applauded What Irked Old Boston Audiences

By HARVEY W. SOUTHGATE
Democrat and Chronicle Music Editor

As the audience at the Eastman last Monday ecstatically applauded the Boston Symphony, rising in a long, drawn-out tribute at the end, we found ourselves wondering again how the Boston audiences of the late '80s and '90s would have reacted to this particular program.

With the exception of the Mozart overture at the beginning, which everybody has always liked, everything on the program was music which in its early days had been roundly castigated by critics, and presumably by audiences.

Rochester Times-Union
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 138,754

JAN 24 1967

Leinsdorf, Boston to Play Here

Rochester's current music season is minus one of its visiting symphony orchestras today after Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra bowed out of its June 15 commitment.

The final offering of the 1966-67 Artist Series, the Philadelphia will be replaced by the Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf the night of April 3.

It will be the Boston's first appearance here since Leinsdorf, former musical director of the Rochester Philharmonic, took over its podium. Leinsdorf left the city after the 1956 season.

Rochester Times-Union
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 138,754

APR 4 1967

Music

The Boston Aglow In Eastman Event

By GEORGE H. KIMBALL
Times-Union Music Critic

The ecstatic reception accorded the Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductor Erich Leinsdorf last night by a capacity Eastman Theater crowd perhaps was partly a case of absence making the heart grow fonder.

The Boston, for many years an annual (and usually SRO) attraction, hadn't performed here since Leinsdorf took over its reins five years ago. And Leinsdorf, for nine seasons (until 1956) the Rochester Philharmonic maestro, hadn't been seen here since a guest conducting appearance in 1959.

Yet it wasn't just fond memories that brought about last night's standing ovation, but rather a compellingly glowing performance of Stravinsky's "Firebird" music, concluding an evening of interesting and often highly polished music-making.

There was nothing particularly unusual about the program Leinsdorf chose for this occasion, except inclusion of two seldom heard sections of the "Firebird." The evening opened with Mozart's overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" and included the Brahms First Symphony and Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel."

Erich Leinsdorf: Triumphant return.

The selections, together with their chronological arrangement, however, amounted to smart programming for the esthetic satisfaction generated.

• • •

EVIDENT, much as remembered from its previous performances here, was the Boston's solidly disciplined delivery, allowing Leinsdorf untrammeled exercise of his restrained yet precisely measured musical expression, even when some of the "polish" wore off in moments of "Till" and "Firebird."

The fragile "Seraglio" emerged a sparkling gem delivered with exquisite taste. The Brahms First was luminous and impressive, the Andante especially benefitting from rare subtleties in a kind of gentle, aural bass-relief.

"Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" rollicked along with extraordinary verve.

And Stravinsky's matchless musical imagery in the "Firebird" was illuminated for full effect. Here, too, one was especially grateful for performances of the "Supplications of the Firebird" and "Princesses Playing with Golden Apples," preceding the lyrical "Dance of the Princesses."

• • •

LEINSDORF appears to have developed a more active podium manner since he left here. Indeed, his gestures often seemed choreographic. Yet it's the musical results that matter, and last night these were of a high order, virtually of a purist nature reminiscent of Toscanini.

The Boston's appearance here came almost by accident. It was a replacement for a June concert of the Philadelphia Orchestra, which was canceled. That switch proved a boon to local concert-goers.

Rochester Times-Union
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 138,754

MAR 31 1967

Leinsdorf, The Boston Due Monday

The Boston Symphony with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, will play a concert as part of the Civic Music Association's Artists Series Monday, at 8:15 p.m. in the Eastman Theater.

The program will include Mozart's "Il Seraglio" Overture, Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Strauss' "Till Eulenspeigel" and Stravinsky's Suite from "The Firebird."

The Boston, originally booked as a CMA Special Event this season, is replacing the Philadelphia Orchestra on the Artists Series schedule. One of the results of the Philadelphia Orchestra's recently-signed contract with its players was a curtailment of its touring schedule, making it necessary for Rochester and other cities to be dropped from the orchestra's spring tour.

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 138,813 SUN. 210,387

APR 4 1967

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER DEM CHRONICLE
Monday, April 3, 1967
Democrat and Chronicle
Rochester, N. Y.
Tue., Apr. 4, 1967 7B

Ovation at Eastman

Symphony, Leinsdorf Hailed

By HARVEY SOUTHGATE

Last night was one of the real big ones of the musical season at the Eastman. The Boston Symphony, returning after a five year absence and for the first time under our old friend and former Philharmonic conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, lived up to its proud tradition in a program that had the packed audience standing and applauding for many minutes at the end.

The tribute was in part a tribute for Leinsdorf for his steady ascent to one of the world's most eminent conducting posts, and in part for the orchestra, which seemed able to do everything asked of it perfectly in a program that asked a great deal in many ways.

To this listener it seemed that Leinsdorf got more from the orchestra, with his familiar vigorous and volatile conducting style than we have heard in many of its previous appearances. Incidentally he conducted entirely without score.

He gave us nothing on the program that we have not heard many times before, but all was carefully picked for variety and interest. And all, both the old and the new, was of a sort that one likes to hear for sheer enjoyment.

Such, for example, as the Brahms Symphony No. 1, which may not be Brahms' greatest work but seems to have the greatest appeal for the largest number. It has tunes, for one thing, and it has emotion and it has the rich texture and irresistible impetus that shows off the virtuosity of an orchestra.

* * *

LEINSDORF GAVE IT plenty of breathing room, that is, at a moderate tempo and with a lingering appreciation of the lovely andante. And in the speedier moments the wonderful suppleness of the orchestra and the fine coordination of its various sections were there to be drawn upon as needed.

The "Till Eulenspiegel" of Richard Strauss was a complete change of mood. It was played, as the program put it, "After the old-fashioned roguish manner," which meant in this case that the wit and the satirical flourishes in this tone poem about an amusing gremlin, were given more than usual emphasis.

One needs a program to follow the "merry pranks" of the mischeivous Till, but the lilt and swing of it last night were very easy to enjoy. Too much of this accent on drollery might get out of hand, but Leinsdorf saw to it that it did not. And the charming folk tune that runs through it was treated with the respect due it.

It was the performance of the Stravinsky "Firebird" ballet suite that brought the audience to its feet. The seven contrasting movements were played as the great imaginative and tersely effective episodes they are. One could not be sure whether the orchestra is more blest with its brass and woodwinds or with the smooth, clock-like unison of its strings. It was an exciting performance.

For an opener Leinsdorf chose the overture to Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio," a sparkling start for an exceptional evening.

Rochester Times-Union
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 138,754

APR 3 1967

Returning

Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony tonight in Eastman Theater, returning there for the first time since resigning his post as Rochester Philharmonic conductor in 1956. The Artist Series concert replaces one scheduled in June by the Philadelphia Orchestra, which was canceled.

115

TOLEDO APR. 4

TOLEDO, OHIO
WEST TOLEDO HERALD
W. 31,500

MAR 29 1967

Boston Symphony To Perform Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will perform in the Peristyle of the Toledo Museum of Art on Tuesday, April 4, at 8:30. Now in its 86th season, it has thrilled audiences throughout North America, Europe, and Asia. Its annual festival at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in the Berkshire Mountains of Massachusetts, has become one of the major musical events in this country.

For its Peristyle appearance, the Boston Symphony will perform the following compositions: Symphony No. 2 by Beethoven; Till Eulenspiegel by Strauss; "As Quiet As. . ." by Colgrass; and Suite from "The Firebird" by Stravinsky.

The Toledo Times
TOLEDO, OHIO
D. 30,956

APR 5 1967

Boston Symphony Heard In Concert At Peristyle

By J. ROBERT CARROLL

And now the musicians from Boston,
The home of the bean and the cod.
Where the Brahmins speak mainly of music,
And art is but second to God.
—Anon

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under its music director, Erich Leinsdorf, opened its concert last night in the Peristyle with a Beethoven Second Symphony of varying quality, and this was a sign of things to come. The first and third movements were clean, well-paced, but dull in terms of what I would expect from that august group. The greatest contrast was between the scherzo and finale.

The scherzo was too restrained for my blood, and I was relieved to sense the temperature rise a bit when Mr. Leinsdorf tackled the finale. As the music progressed, the tension and drive increased, and the work was concluded on a marked upswing.

Tone Poem Pleases

The early tone poem of Strauss, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," was the most engaging offering of the evening. The control was excellent, and the solo instruments which play such prominent roles in this work sounded magnificent. The solo horn, on which so much depends, set the pace at the beginning, and the brass and woodwinds matched him all the way to the rousing climax. The solo phrases of the concertmaster were especially fine, sure in intonation and executed with technique to burn.

After intermission, Michael Colgrass's suite from his ballet "As Quiet As . . ." (yes, that's the title) was perpetrated by Mr. Leinsdorf and his accomplices. Cast on textures suggested by lines written by fourth graders to complete the title line, the work consists of short sections featuring one or two main ideas apiece. The opening, A Leaf Turning Colors, is an unpaced series of color patches; the second, An Uninhabited Creek, offered slow patches spiced with sliding pitches, woodwind wobbles, and harp sputterings. The third, An Ant Walking, was diddle-dee-boop scattered in fragments across the orchestra, giving an effect of movement, but not of pace.

Balance Is Superb

Children Sleeping began with slow breathing punctuated with soft yelps, moved to music box effects and slid smoothly into a celesta rendering of Beethoven's G Major Sonatina. This was the material for Time Passing, which required a second conductor for the dual scoring in which Beethoven was given a rather rough commentary, eventually passing through a jazz treatment into unpaced fragments. A Soft Rainfall offered a literal patter of drops in string pizzicatos, interrupted by vague thunder effects. The First Star Coming Out brought matters to a close.

The well-known Firebird Suite of Stravinsky closed the program with excellent ensemble playing and superb balance.

An enjoyable evening, malgre tout. The BSO is always masterful, often beautiful, and sometimes overwhelming in a suggestion of its grandeur of yore.

THE BLADE
TOLEDO, OHIO
D. 180,833 SUN. 186,074

MAR 31 1967

What's On? Who's Where?

Members of the Toledo Club attending the Tuesday night concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will start the evening at the club with dinner at 6 p.m. The group will journey together to the Toledo Museum of Art where the concert, part of the Peristyle series, is held and return again to the club aboard a chartered bus.

The Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, has established many firsts since its last Toledo appearance. It was the first western orchestra to tour Russia and the first to complete an around-the-world tour, performing on every continent.

TOLEDO, OHIO
CATHOLIC CHRONICLE
W. 49,583

MAR 31 1967

Boston's orchestra to perform Tuesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a concert at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Museum of Art Peristyle.

The orchestra, directed by Erich Leinsdorf, will perform works by Beethoven, Strauss, Colgrass and Stravinsky.

MONTPELIER, OHIO
LEADER ENTERPRISE
W. 3,828

MAR 30 1967

The Toledo Times
TOLEDO, OHIO
D. 30,956

APR 6 1967

Boston Symphony In Peristyle Performance

The renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, will perform in the Peristyle of the Toledo Museum of Art on Tuesday, April 4 at 8:30 p.m.

Considered by most music critics to be one of the greatest orchestras in the world, the Boston Symphony--now in its 86th season--has thrilled audiences throughout North America, Europe, and Asia. Its annual festival at Tanglewood--the orchestra's summer home in the Berkshire Mountains of Massachusetts, has become one of the major musical events in this country.

One unique characteristic of the Boston Symphony is its policy of selecting soloists. According to Mr. Leinsdorf, "the system here has been to engage soloists for works rather than select the works after the soloists have been engaged. The work is the determining factor."

For its Peristyle appearance, the Boston Symphony will perform the following compositions:

Beethoven, Symphony No. 2.

Strauss, Till Eulenspiegel.

Colgrass, "As Quiet As . ."

Stravinsky, Suite from "The Firebird".

The Toledo Times
TOLEDO, OHIO
D. 30,956

APR 4 1967

TOLEDO, OHIO
SUN
W. 20,000

MAR 30 1967

THE BLADE
TOLEDO, OHIO
D. 180,833 SUN. 186,074

APR 5 1967

17th Visit

Boston Symphony Returns Under New Music Director

Concert At Peristyle Is First Conducted By Erich Leinsdorf

Symphony No. 2 in D, opus 36 . . . . . Beethoven
Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, opus 28 . . . . . Richard Strauss
As Quiet As . . . / . . Michael Colgrass
Suite From Ballet "L'Oiseau de Feu" . . . . . Stravinsky
Erich Leinsdorf conducting

By BORIS NELSON
Blade Music Critic

Although the Boston Symphony has been in Toledo 16 times before, the concert last night at the Peristyle was the first under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf as its music director. Toledo was the second stop on this short two-week tour, the first for Mr. Leinsdorf and the Bostonians between Boston and Chicago.

I was eager to hear what had happened to the Boston Orchestra since the days of Koussevitzky and Muench, and it took little time to hear that the renown of the orchestra has achieved a new polish. Honed to utmost precision, it has an elegant aristocracy, and is a marvelously tuned instrument.

Clarity, Purity

Nothing could have shown it off to more perfection than the clarity and even purity of the Beethoven Symphony. It had, like all subsequent works, precision with meaning, power but never mere volume.

The second movement Larghetto was velvety, not mushy, and the ensuing scherzo was easily paced, sparkling, not the horse-race one often most heard. The final allegro molto stood out with Beethoven's own pulsation, for Leinsdorf belongs to the conductors who believe that to let the music speak for itself is enough.

If some of the tempi seemed slower than usually—as it did also in Till—they gave the advantage of making every part, every instrument, every note audible and thus added new insight and new pleasures to the music. The tempi were broad, Germanic—in short, they were altogether Beethoven and Strauss.

The flawless playing of the woodwinds in Till, not to forget the French horn's beautiful theme and the incisive sound of the strings made one aware of the ingredients of this orchestra, now in its 86th season. As to an over-all impression of Till, perhaps gorgeous might best describe the rendition.

Contemporary Work

The second half of the program brought forth a contemporary work by 35-year-old Michael Colgrass, which proved imaginative and thoroughly enjoyable. A professional percussionist, Mr. Colgrass is interested in sonorities, but not only of percussion instruments.

As Quiet As . . . has seven parts, all 10-year-old children's completions of the title, as for example, A Leaf Turning Color, An Uninhibited Uninhabited Creek, An Ant Walking, Children Sleeping, Time Passing, A Soft Rainfall, and The First Star Coming Out.

A Leaf, Time, and The First Star were perhaps the most elusive and subtle of the set, studies in pianissimi and much more than mere sound effects. An Ant Walking, as some of the others, had an improvisational cast to it, and could have been just as much a busy flea.

Children Sleeping almost reached a nursery tune, and The First Star after its burst upon the firmament ended into infinity with music that sounded like coming from a Javanese gamelan. The set is frankly programmatic, but most inventively done, with a fine sense of humor to boot. Let's have more such contemporary works!

The final composition, that astoundingly fresh work, born in 1910, gave the orchestra and Leinsdorf another opportunity to display its discipline and its virtuosity—and that within all the tidiness of its playing, it can sound lush and langourous with ideal proportions, and savage when need be, as was the case in this Stravinsky score.

It had added luster as it came at the end of a magnificent program, and all I can wish for is the earliest possible return of Leinsdorf and his Bostonians.

Into this festive occasion, however, there fall one unfortunate incident that needs comment. There was no reason whatsoever to have the lights of the Peristyle come up after the first movement of the Beethoven symphony to admit latecomers.

It is an unwarranted, interruptive, distracting and completely out of order habit. Let the latecomers wait until the completion of the entire work, or let them come on time. Let's grow up!

116

BLOOMINGTON APR. 5

Thursday, April 6, 1967 THE INDIANAPOLIS NEWS

Tonal Beauty And Precision Mark Boston Symphony's Concert

By CHARLES STAFF
Music Critic

SHOW TIME

BLOOMINGTON, Ind.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra is not an orchestra. It is an instrument that plays with unsurpassed tonal elegance and precision.

Leinsdorf

The "aristocrat of orchestras," a name it deserves, performed with conductor Erich Leinsdorf to a sold-out house last night at the Indiana University Auditorium.

The enthusiastic response probably equalled that called forth by soprano Joan Sutherland in her February appearance in the same hall. Two I.U. Music School composition students were so carried away throughout the program that their bobbing and head-tossing demonstrated they are well on their way to becoming conductors, in the modern sense of the word.

The selections made it evident that the first-chair members are virtuosos. To know this one had only to hear concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and oboist Ralph Gomberg in the second movement of Brahms' First Symphony; cellist Jules Eskin in the second movement of Haydn's Symphony No. 13 and trumpeter Armando Ghitalla; trombonist William Gibson and James Stagliano, French horn, and William Gibson, tuba, in Gunther Schuller's "Dyptich."

Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" capped the point that these men and their fellow instrumentalists are musicians of the highest order.

Except for the Schuller, Leinsdorf conducted without score and in the Haydn he directed from the harpsichord. In many respects, this early work was the highlight of the night, for it suited Leinsdorf's four-square temperament better than the expansive, romantic moods of Brahms and Strauss or the mysteries of Schuller's shimmering blur.

Despite the aural brilliance, "Till," at worst became dry, dullishly "classic," and, at best, music for Leinsdorf to dance to. In the Brahms, until the finale when the inherent drama of the composer got the best of the conductor, the notes marched out of the instruments with Prussian perfection all the while Leinsdorf indulged in an orgy of jumps, leaps and jerks.

He is another conductor who seems more aware of the audience than of the music, who pours his emotions into his actions and not the score. What he does and what happens has little relationship.

Perhaps it might be well for about 75 per cent of today's conductors to work hidden from view by a screen so that they might concentrate on the musical not the theatrical effect or, if they must cavort, so that the listener might not be disturbed by their antics.

Probably the same number of conductors feel that roughly 100 per cent of music commentators around the country should be walled up alive.

Lettermen Appearing

The Lettermen, popular vocal group, will appear at Marian College, 3200 Cold Spring Road, tomorrow night at 8. A limited number of tickets for the concert still is available and may be bought at the college.

BLOOMINGTON, IND.
HERALD-TELEPHONE
D. 16,500

APR 4 1967

Symphony To Be Here Wednesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be making its third appearance in the Indiana University Auditorium when it performs here Wednesday (April 5) at 8 p.m.

Erich Leinsdorf, current conductor of the Boston Symphony, also conducted the Metropolitan Opera when it came to the University in 1959 and again in 1960.

Now in its 86th year, the Orchestra has one of the most intensive schedules of any of the larger symphonies. Its concert schedule runs throughout the year, with a seven-month winter season in Symphony Hall, Boston, and on tour; two months of Pops Concerts under Arthur Fielder each spring; two weeks of free open-air concerts of the Charles River Esplanade, and the eight-week Berkshire Festival at the Orchestra's summer home, Tanglewood. Through tours at home and abroad, recordings, and radio and television broadcasts, the Boston Orchestra is one of the most widely heard orchestras in the world.

At Tanglewood, the Orchestra has maintained for 26 years the Berkshire Music Center, its summer educational academy for the advanced study of music. The Boston Symphony formed its first players into the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in 1964. During their first few seasons, the Chamber Players have given concerts of chamber music in several eastern cities, and last spring made their first transcontinental tour.

Wednesday evening's program will include Symphony in D major, No. 13, by Haydn; Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra by Schiller; Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner in Rondo form, Op. 28, by Strauss, and Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

Symphony [illegible] of old, new, and an oddity

By OLAV THOMMESSEN
Daily Student Arts Writer

The Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO), or the "Aristocrat of Orchestras" as its publicity managers want us to believe, offered a program of two familiar favorites, a new work, and an oddity last night in the I.U. Auditorium.

Although the feudal subtitle is meaningless and a little pretentious, the orchestra is definitely one of the world's best and most respected ensembles.

The BSO for the last five years has been directed by Erich Leinsdorf, who has had the task of converting one of the most lush and romantic-sounding instruments into his concept of what an orchestra should be — a lean and Germanic-sounding ensemble.

Haydn wrote at least 150 symphonies, of which only 104 are numbered. The BSO concert opened with Symphony No. 13, which is certaily a novelty, considering that only the later symphonies are familiar.

Dr. Leinsdorf conducted from the harpischord as Haydn himself would have done. The second movement contained a beautiful cello solo played by Jules Eskin, who utilizes the new curved end-pin invented by the Russian cellist, Rostropovitch. Mr. Eskin and two colleagues added a visual effect with their cellos extended.

The symphony displayed the typical ingenuity and spark that is uniquely Haydn. This early symphony proves that a wealth of beauty can be found in any of the 150 works that Haydn wrote in this form.

The "Diptych" by Gunther Schuller was the new work on the program. It contains attractive orchestral textures, punctuated by solo brass instruments, but the whole work is a naive mixture of jazz and contemporary trends. The solo brass quintet was composed of the orchestra's first-chair members.

The remainder of the program was devoted to familiar works. First was Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," which Dr. Leinsdorf seemed to enjoy conducting. Dr. Leinsdorf's method of conducting is one which employs a flexible waist, where arm movements are sometimes replaced with a bowing motion.

The result of this technique is a clarity and a preciseness of conducting that few conductors today have.

The orchestra seemed to be more involved in its performance last night than on previous occasions where the interpretations have been criticized for their mechanical — though flawlessness— qualities. However, last night certain justifications for these criticisms were apparent not so much in the Strauss as in the last number— Brahms' First Symphony.

Dr. Leinsdorf's approach to this masterpiece was, on the surface, a teutonic one — characterized by solidity and a massive drive. The clarity of lines was impressive, and the overall effect was grand, yet controlled.

Everything was as it should have been in dynamics, technique, and phrasing, and only occasionally did the tempo seem rushed and rigid, notably in the last movement. But, somehow the real satisfaction that this piece could achieve was lost — perhaps there was not enough of the human element present.

BLOOMINGTON, IND.
HERALD-TELEPHONE
D. 16,500

MAR 22 1967

Boston Symphony To Be At I.U. April 5

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will appear at Indiana University Wednesday, April 5, as the next attraction on the Indiana University Auditorium Series, is now in its 86th year.

Through its tours at home and abroad, recordings, and radio and television broadcasts, the Orchestra is one of the most widely heard in the world.

The Orchestra's regular conductors have included Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky, and Charles Munch. In 1962, Erich Leinsdorf became the 11th conductor of the Boston Symphony, and the third in 38 years.

The intensive concert schedule runs throughout the year, with a seven-month season in Symphony Hall, Boston, and on tour; two months of Pops Concerts under Arthur Fiedler each spring; two weeks of free, open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, and the eight-week Berkshire Festival at the Orchestra's summer home, Tanglewood.

At Tanglewood, the Orchestra has maintained for 26 years the Berkshire Music Center, its summer educational academy for the advanced study of music. The Boston Symphony formed its first players into the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in 1964. During their first few seasons, the Players have given concerts of chamber music in several eastern cities, and last spring made their first transcontinental tour.

When the Orchestra appears at Indiana University April 5, it will open its program with Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 13, to be followed by Schuller's Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra, and Strauss' Till Eulenspiergel's Merry Pranks, after the Old-Fashioned, Roguish Manner — in Rondo Form, Op. 28. The first performance in America of the Strauss composition was by the Boston Symphony in 1896.

The second part of the program will be given over to a performance of Brahm's Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68.

The Indianapolis Star
D. 223,408 SUN. 352,391

MAR 30 1967

COLUMBUS, IND.
REPUBLIC
D. 15,500

MAR 31 1967

Boston Symphony To Play

BLOOMINGTON (Special) — When the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, appears at 8 p.m. Wednesday on the Indiana university Auditorium Series, the program will open with Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 13. Written when Haydn was 31 years of age, the symphony is unusual for its extensive use of wind instruments.

"Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra" by the contemporary American composer, Gunther Schuller, will be next on the program. This is the orchestral version of a similarly titled piece originally written for brass quintet and band. In its original form, it was commissioned by the New sponsorship of the Cornell university music department.

Closing the first part of the program will be "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old - Fashioned, Roguish Manner," in rondo form, Op. 28. Premiered in Cologne in 1895, the first performance in America was in 1896 by the Boston Symphony. A tone poem, the inspiration for this composition was a famous old German legend about an incorrigible rogue.

Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, will make up the second part of the April 5 program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755

OCT 22 1966

Two BSO world premières

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present two world premières in the first two weeks of November. "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," for orchestra and narrator, by William Sydeman will be performed at Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Nov. 4. Elliott Carter's first Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, will receive its first performance on Nov. 11.

The Indianapolis Star
D. 223,408 SUN. 352,391

MAR 20 1967

Hard To Get

A FEW TICKETS in the $4.50 and $2.50 range will go on sale tomorrow at the Indiana University Auditorium boxoffice for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert there April 5. The house was largely pre-sold for the event, which is on the auditorium series. Eric Leinsdorf will conduct the Bostonians in the Brahms Symphony No. 1, among other things.

BLOOMINGTON APR. 5

116

Thursday, April 6, 1967 THE INDIANAPOLIS NEWS

Tonal Beauty And Precision Mark Boston Symphony's Concert

By CHARLES STAFF
Music Critic

SHOW TIME

BLOOMINGTON, Ind.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra is not an orchestra. It is an instrument that plays with unsurpassed tonal elegance and precision.

Leinsdorf

The "aristocrat of orchestras," a name it deserves, performed with conductor Erich Leinsdorf to a sold-out house last night at the Indiana University Auditorium.

The enthusiastic response probably equalled that called forth by soprano Joan Sutherland in her February appearance in the same hall. Two I.U. Music School composition students were so carried away throughout the program that their bobbing and head-tossing demonstrated they are well on their way to becoming conductors, in the modern sense of the word.

The selections made it evident that the first-chair members are virtuosos. To know this one had only to hear concertmaster Joseph Silverstein and oboist Ralph Gomberg in the second movement of Brahms' First Symphony; cellist Jules Eskin in the second movement of Haydn's Symphony No. 13 and trumpeter Armando Ghitalla; trombonist William Gibson and James Stagliano, French horn, and William Gibson, tuba, in Gunther Schuller's "Dyptich."

Richard Strauss' "Till Eluenspiegel" capped the point that these men and their fellow instrumentalists are musicians of the highest order.

Except for the Schuller, Leinsdorf conducted without score and in the Haydn he directed from the harpsichord. In many respects, this early work was the highlight of the night, for it suited Leinsdorf's four-square temperament better than the expansive, romantic moods of Brahms and Strauss or the mysteries of Schuller's shimmering blur.

Despite the aural brilliance, "Till," at worst became dry, dullishly "classic," and, at best, music for Leinsdorf to dance to. In the Brahms, until the finale when the inherent drama of the composer got the best of the conductor, the notes marched out of the instruments with Prussian perfection all the while Leinsdorf indulged in an orgy of jumps, leaps and jerks.

He is another conductor who seems more aware of the audience than of the music, who pours his emotions into his actions and not the score. What he does and what happens has little relationship.

Perhaps it might be well for about 75 per cent of today's conductors to work hidden from view by a screen so that they might concentrate on the musical not the theatrical effect or, if they must cavort, so that the listener might not be disturbed by their antics.

Probably the same number of conductors feel that roughly 100 per cent of music commentators around the country should be walled up alive.

Lettermen Appearing

The Lettermen, popular vocal group, will appear at Marian College, 3200 Cold Spring Road, tomorrow night at 8. A limited number of tickets for the concert still is available and may be bought at the college.

BLOOMINGTON, IND.
HERALD-TELEPHONE
D. 16,500

APR 4 1967

Symphony To Be Here Wednesday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be making its third appearance in the Indiana University Auditorium when it performs here Wednesday (April 5) at 8 p.m.

Erich Leinsdorf, current conductor of the Boston Symphony, also conducted the Metropolitan Opera when it came to the University in 1959 and again in 1960.

Now in its 86th year, the Orchestra has one of the most intensive schedules of any of the larger symphonies. Its concert schedule runs throughout the year, with a seven-month winter season in Symphony Hall, Boston, and on tour; two months of Pops Concerts under Arthur Fielder each spring; two weeks of free open-air concerts of the Charles River Esplanade, and the eight-week Berkshire Festival at the Orchestra's summer home, Tanglewood. Through tours at home and abroad, recordings, and radio and television broadcasts, the Boston Orchestra is one of the most widely heard orchestras in the world.

At Tanglewood, the Orchestra has maintained for 26 years the Berkshire Music Center, its summer educational academy for the advanced study of music. The Boston Symphony formed its first players into the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in 1964. During their first few seasons, the Chamber Players have given concerts of chamber music in several eastern cities, and last spring made their first transcontinental tour.

Wednesday evening's program will include Symphony in D major, No. 13, by Haydn; Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra by Schiller; Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old-fashioned, Roguish Manner in Rondo form, Op. 28, by Strauss, and Symphony No. 1, in C minor, Op. 68, by Brahms.

BLOOMINGTON, IND.
HERALD-TELEPHONE
D. 16,500

MAR 22 1967

Boston Symphony To Be At I.U. April 5

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will appear at Indiana University Wednesday, April 5, as the next attraction on the Indiana University Auditorium Series, is now in its 86th year.

Through its tours at home and abroad, recordings, and radio and television broadcasts, the Orchestra is one of the most widely heard in the world.

The Orchestra's regular conductors have included Wilhelm Gericke, Arthur Nikisch, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky, and Charles Munch. In 1962, Erich Leinsdorf became the 11th conductor of the Boston Symphony, and the third in 38 years.

The intensive concert schedule runs throughout the year, with a seven-month season in Symphony Hall, Boston, and on tour; two months of Pops Concerts under Arthur Fiedler each spring; two weeks of free, open-air concerts on the Charles River Esplanade, and the eight-week Berkshire Festival at the Orchestra's summer home, Tanglewood.

At Tanglewood, the Orchestra has maintained for 26 years the Berkshire Music Center, its summer educational academy for the advanced study of music. The Boston Symphony formed its first players into the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in 1964. During their first few seasons, the Players have given concerts of chamber music in several eastern cities, and last spring made their first transcontinental tour.

When the Orchestra appears at Indiana University April 5, it will open its program with Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 13, to be followed by Schuller's Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra, and Strauss' Till Eulenspiergel's Merry Pranks, after the Old-Fashioned, Roguish Manner — in Rondo Form, Op. 28. The first performance in America of the Strauss composition was by the Boston Symphony in 1896.

The second part of the program will be given over to a performance of Brahm's Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68.

Symphony [illegible] of old, new, and an oddity

By OLAV THOMMESSEN
Daily Student Arts Writer

The Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO), or the "Aristocrat of Orchestras" as its publicity managers want us to believe, offered a program of two familiar favorites, a new work, and an oddity last night in the I.U. Auditorium.

Although the feudal subtitle is meaningless and a little pretentious, the orchestra is definitely one of the world's best and most respected ensembles.

The BSO for the last five years has been directed by Erich Leinsdorf, who has had the task of converting one of the most lush and romantic-sounding instruments into his concept of what an orchestra should be — a lean and Germanic-sounding ensemble.

Haydn wrote at least 150 symphonies, of which only 104 are numbered. The BSO concert opened with Symphony No. 13, which is certaily a novelty, considering that only the later symphonies are familiar.

Dr. Leinsdorf conducted from the harpischord as Haydn himself would have done. The second movement contained a beautiful cello solo played by Jules Eskin, who utilizes the new curved end-pin invented by the Russian cellist, Rostropovitch. Mr. Eskin and two colleagues added a visual effect with their cellos extended.

The symphony displayed the typical ingenuity and spark that is uniquely Haydn. This early symphony proves that a wealth of beauty can be found in any of the 150 works that Haydn wrote in this form.

The "Diptych" by Gunther Schuller was the new work on the program. It contains attractive orchestral textures, punctuated by solo brass instruments, but the whole work is a naive mixture of jazz and contemporary trends. The solo brass quintet was composed of the orchestra's first-chair members.

The remainder of the program was devoted to familiar works. First was Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," which Dr. Leinsdorf seemed to enjoy conducting. Dr. Leinsdorf's method of conducting is one which employs a flexible waist, where arm movements are sometimes replaced with a bowing motion.

The result of this technique is a clarity and a preciseness of conducting that few conductors today have.

The orchestra seemed to be more involved in its performance last night than on previous occasions where the interpretations have been criticized for their mechanical — though flawluess— qualities. However, last night certain justifications for these criticisms were apparent not so much in the Strauss as in the last number— Brahms' First Symphony.

Dr. Leinsdorf's approach to this masterpiece was, on the surface, a teutonic one — characterized by solidity and a massive drive. The clarity of lines was impressive, and the overall effect was grand, yet controlled.

Everything was as it should have been in dynamics, technique, and phrasing, and only occasionally did the tempo seem rushed and rigid, notably in the last movement. But, somehow the real satisfaction that this piece could achieve was lost — perhaps there was not enough of the human element present.

The Indianapolis Star
D. 223,408 SUN. 352,391

MAR 30 1967

COLUMBUS, IND.
REPUBLIC
D. 15,500

MAR 31 1967

Boston Symphony To Play

BLOOMINGTON (Special) — When the Boston Symphony orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, appears at 8 p.m. Wednesday on the Indiana university Auditorium Series, the program will open with Haydn's Symphony in D major, No. 13. Written when Haydn was 31 years of age, the symphony is unusual for its extensive use of wind instruments.

"Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra" by the contemporary American composer, Gunther Schuller, will be next on the program. This is the orchestral version of a similarly titled piece originally written for brass quintet and band. In its original form, it was commissioned by the New sponsorship of the Cornell university music department.

Closing the first part of the program will be "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, After the Old - Fashioned, Roguish Manner," in rondo form, Op. 28. Premiered in Cologne in 1895, the first performance in America was in 1896 by the Boston Symphony. A tone poem, the inspiration for this composition was a famous old German legend about an incorrigible rogue.

Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor, Op. 68, will make up the second part of the April 5 program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,755

OCT 22 1966

Two BSO world premières

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present two world premières in the first two weeks of November. "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," for orchestra and narrator, by William Sydeman will be performed at Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Nov. 4. Elliott Carter's first Piano Concerto, with Jacob Lateiner as soloist, will receive its first performance on Nov. 11.

The Indianapolis Star
D. 223,408 SUN. 352,391

MAR 20 1967

Hard To Get

A FEW TICKETS in the $4.50 and $2.50 range will go on sale tomorrow at the Indiana University Auditorium boxoffice for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert there April 5. The house was largely pre-sold for the event, which is on the auditorium series. Eric Leinsdorf will conduct the Bostonians in the Brahms Symphony No. 1, among other things.

117

CHICAGO APR. 6 + 7

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS
D. 466,392 SAT. 473,272

APR 7 1967

Satin Sounds from Boston

By Donal J. Henahan

Four years ago this month, when the Boston Symphony last played in Chicago, Erich Leinsdorf was closing out his first season as musical director. On Thursday night he brought his famous band back to Orchestra Hall for the first of two concerts this week, deputizing for the Chicago Symphony, which is away on tour.

Some things do not change in this world, evidently, and the high polish that the Bostonians under Leinsdorf can put on music is one of those constants. This was an all-German program — Haydn, Webern and Bruckner — in which one had to sit rapt in admiration at the golden glow of the brass, the dark walnut luster of the strings, and the well-bred purity of the woodwinds. Maestro Leinsdorf plainly knows how to keep a great orchestra in a fine state of repair.

Erich Leinsdorf

WHY, THEN, did one leave Orchestra Hall unsatisfied, all things considered? Haydn's early-Esterhazy Symphony No. 13 in D Major did not live up to its promise, in spite of a languorously lovely cello solo in the Adagio Cantabile by Jules Eskin (whose instrument rode high on one of those Rostropovichy anchoring pins).

Leinsdorf presided from a harpsichord, as Haydn himself must have done, but played so little of the time that his position there, back to the audience, began to be irritating after a while. The string tone, moreover, was much too weighty and ripe to allow the harpsichord to be heard in proper perspective, so why all the pretense of period authenticity, anyway?

An interesting, and on paper totally effective, juxtaposition found Webern's aphoristic Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, cheek-by-jowl with the rambling, elegiac Bruckner Ninth Symphony. The Bruckner, given an opulent but rather dull reading, let one listen appreciatively to the Bostonians' massed horns, among other instrumental felicities, but lacked compelling interpretative ideas and rhythmic propulsion.

TO MAKE Bruckner's long-winded repetitions work, a conductor must find things to express and structures to erect with all those too-similar building blocks. If nothing else, there is a crude vitality to Bruckner's symphonies that commands attention, and crude vitality was what Leinsdorf did not want from Bruckner this time. The celebrated final Adagio wended its way with self-conscious beauty to the end, and left one more bored than transported to Elysium.

The Webern pieces, which consume just over eight minutes in all, were heard in the 1909 original version for large orchestra, not the 1928 reduction. The Boston performance could hardly have been more precise, but here too there was little of the exciting tension that makes this music worth playing.

One's objections to the evening might be put this way: there is a fine sybaritic beauty about avocado colored, contour bedsheets, but avocado colored, contour, satin bedsheets might be a bit much. Leinsdorf likes his orchestral music satiny, and his interpretations often suffer from a similar gloss.

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS, FRIDAY, APRIL 7, 1967

Boston Symphony: Beautiful Balance

By Robert C. Marsh

The way to build a strong subscription audience is to guarantee a high standard of quality from week to week, both in the choice and realization of unfamiliar music and in the staples of the repertory.

It is no mystery this is a large part of the success of the Boston Symphony, which has a deep-rooted tradition of excellence. Friday, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, it played its second Orchestra Hall program in the Chicago Symphony subscription series.

There was a splendidly imaginative new work, "As Quiet As . . ." by Michael Colgrass. (It was a pleasure to note it was a commission from the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.) Colgrass here presents music that is strongly evocative in its appeal to the ear and the mind and beautifully scored.

Leindorf used the work to balance the suite he has prepared from Stravinsky's "Firebird" ballet. The contrast of styles was attractive, and the addition of new material (plus the original orchestration) gave the "Firebird" music a freshness it needs today.

There were no surprises in either the Second Beethoven symphony or Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" at the start of the program, but there was the satisfaction of hearing performances that revealed the highest level of orchestral control combined with the polish and musicianship that are Boston hallmarks.

Leinsdorf's "Till Eulenspiegel" is one of his finest interpretive achievements, and the wit and drama of this short tone poem were superbly achieved.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NORTHCENTER NEWS
W. 8,400

MAR 29 1967

• The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by its music director, Erich Leinsdorf, will present two concerts in Orchestra Hall Thursday evening, Apr. 6, at 8:15, and Friday afternoon, Apr. 7, at 2 p.m., as part of the Chicago Symphony's regular subscription series. Jean Martinon and the Chicago Symphony will be on a two-week spring tour at that time through the Midwest.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515

MAR 18 1967

Music Note

Programs to be performed by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Thursday-Friday subscription concerts April 6 and 7 have been announced. Thursday at 8:15: Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D major, Opus 36; Richard Strauss' Rondo "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks;" Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Suite; and a recent composition by Michael Colgrass, "As Quiet As" [1965-1966]. Friday at 2: Haydn's Symphony No. 13 in D major, Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Opus 6, and Bruckner's Symphony No. 9 in D minor [unfinished].

Boston Music Suffers Decline

MUSIC CRITICS WHO LIVE in glass cities, to bend the axiom, perhaps have no business throwing stones, and Lord knows our symphonic community is, by major-league measure, currently one of the country's three glassiest. How otherwise, tho, to express dismay, and distress, at the Boston Symphony's decline in five seasons under the arched eyebrows of Erich Leinsdorf?

The same orchestra that played momentous Mahler in Orchestra hall the first season of Leinsdorf's tenure returned last evening for the first of two programs in the absence, and under auspices, of our own beleaguered band —on tour until April 20. Their opening concert gave the promise, on paper, of eloquent expression as well as intellectual substance, and accordingly a large audience of the local faithful gathered to be regaled.

By prior Boston standards, however, works of Haydn, Webern, and Bruckner were conducted in greater part dispassionately, played with only modest discipline, and without the sonority that was Koussevitzky's signature until his retirement 18 seasons ago.

EVEN UNDER the volatile Munch, Koussevitzky's B-S-O "sound" prevailed, albeit sporadically in a hectic, Gallicized context. But replacements have been numerous in key chairs during Leinsdorf's administration, and his strings are the principal sufferers, especially since Richard Burgin's retirement as concertmaster.

Violins, in particular the firsts, have a steelier, thinner sound than remembered, and incline toward arpeggiated attack [releasing at will, not to say whim, on the basis of Thursday's scattered returns]. Bass strings of today favor a slow, throbbing vibrato, and have been instructed—as Chicago's celli and bass also have been, by Martinon—to lay on with a long bow.

Winds have fought the good fight to sustain whilom standards, altho flutes and reeds have a basic intonational problem if we keep in mind that this is, after all, the Boston and not Buffalo's orchestra. Brass have retained the lung-power of yore, and much of their vaunted luster, but attacks in the Ninth Symphony of Bruckner—a reading by Leinsdorf almost casual in its lack of commitment, and repeatedly in violation of the composer's tempo and dynamic indications—were divisive.

LEINSDORF led off, conducting from a two-manual, scarcely audible harpsichord aimed in at his players, with Haydn's scampering 13th Symphony, in D, for the first time in Chicago. It failed, however, in spite of prevailing precision, to skip or to sing — as the content required—and in fact plodded a good deal. When, that is to say, it didn't perish of inertia in the slow movement, afflicted with a palpitant, 19th century-style cello solo.

Leinsdorf needed four of Anton Webern's pointillistic Six Pieces, Op. 6, in the original version for large orchestra of 1909, to realize that he wasn't conducting Alban Berg instead [Fritz Reiner led their first local performance within a fortnight of the Pittsburgh premiere in America]. Playing was never, for as much as a moment, soft enough—even when the conductor refrained from correction of the composers' dynamic and tempo marking.

The concluding Bruckner, not played here since the season of 1949-50, was plainly—and to be sure sadly —an instance of interpretation without intuition, or even remarkable sympathy. Leinsdorf couldn't recall the original scherzo tempo when it returned, and elsewhere seemed to relish only the lyrical second themes in Bruckner's Brobdignagian sonata-schemes.

His manner, as well as appearance, too often reminded one of a maitre'd, in circumstances clearly requiring a maestro. And the orchestra was a consequent reflection of their leader's recreative casuistry.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515

APR 2 1967

Concerts a

THE Boston Symphony orchestra will play its first concerts here in four years Thursday evening and Friday afternoon, when it replaces the touring Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the regular Orchestra hall subscription concerts.

Under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, there will be different programs for each concert. Thursday at 8:15, Bruckner's unfinished Ninth Symphony, Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, and Haydn's Symphony No. 13, in D major are offered. The Friday matinee holds Beethoven's Second Symphony, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Suite, and "As Quiet As," a 1966 composition by Michael Colgrass, commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation.

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
D. 538,393 SUN. 693,178

APR 7 1967

Glorious Performance By Boston Symphony

By Robert C. Marsh

When Erich Leinsdorf became music director of the Boston Symphony in 1962 he commented that with the expanding seasons of our major orchestras there was a need for an expanding orchestral repertory as well. This has led to his careful exploration of instrumental literature and the addition to the concert schedule of a number of excellent scores that have been heard far too infrequently in the past.

Thursday night at Orchestra Hall, as guests in the Chicago Symphony subscription series, Leinsdorf and the Bostonians played three such compositions, the Symphony No. 13 of Haydn, the Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, of Webern, and the Ninth Bruckner symphony.

In every case the performance was of the type that emphasized the importance of the material, and the music was of the stature to sustain interest through many rehearings. Audience building is too often preoccupied with the appeal of the familiar, neglecting the pleasure of discovery.

Yet what a pleasure it was to hear this early Haydn symphony in its belated subscription premiere! Leinsdorf conducted in the manner of the 18th Century, seated at the harpsichord, and filling the texture with harmonies when he was not directing the orchestra with one hand or the other.

But I doubt if any orchestra of Haydn's day possessed the refinement of the Boston Symphony of this century.

The Webern has been heard twice in the symphony subscription, from Fritz Reiner in 1957 and from Hans Rosbaud in 1961. The Leinsdorf performance was of a third type from the previous two, warmer and more romantic with the contours softened and the links to post-Wagnerian chromaticism made plain.

As such, it was an excellent foil to the Bruckner, an expansive work, full of echos of "Parsifal," and in many ways the summation of the composer's musical thought.

The performance was a fine one, tightly reasoned in its musical logic and gloriously played. What strings this orchestra has! Their tone filled the hall with the radiance of liquid gold.

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
D. 538,393 SUN. 693,178

MAR 27 1967

THIS BELONGS in the constructive criticism department. Several readers complained to me that the two programs the Boston Symphony will play in the Chicago Symphony subscription series, April 6 and 7, were in the wrong order.

The Thursday night audience was to hear a group of symphonic staples, while the Friday matinee was to feature the Webern Op. 6 and the Bruckner Ninth.

Word was relayed to conductor Erich Leinsdorf who reconsidered the situation. Result, the Webern and Bruckner move to the Thursday night series, and the Friday subscribers get Beethoven, Strauss, and Stravinsky. It pays to speak up.

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS
D. 466,392 SAT. 473,272

MAR 17 1967

MUSIC

The Boston Symphony will play two different programs at its concerts on this season's Chicago Symphony subscription series. Thursday, April 6: Symphony No. 2, by Beethoven; "Till Eulenspiegel," by R. Strauss; "As Quiet as," by Michael Colgrass; "Firebird Suite," by Stravinsky. Friday, April 7: Symphony No. 13 in D Major, by Haydn; Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, by Webern; Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, by Bruckner. Erich Leinsdorf conducts both programs, which will be given in Orchestra Hall while the Chicago Symphony is away on tour.

117

CHICAGO APR. 6 + 7

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS
D. 466,392 SAT. 473,272
APR 7 1967

Satin Sounds from Boston

By Donal J. Henahan

Four years ago this month, when the Boston Symphony last played in Chicago, Erich Leinsdorf was closing out his first season as musical director. On Thursday night he brought his famous band back to Orchestra Hall for the first of two concerts this week, deputizing for the Chicago Symphony, which is away on tour.

Some things do not change in this world, evidently, and the high polish that the Bostonians under Leinsdorf can put on music is one of those constants. This was an all-German program — Haydn, Webern and Bruckner — in which one had to sit rapt in admiration at the golden glow of the brass, the dark walnut luster of the strings, and the well-bred purity of the woodwinds. Maestro Leinsdorf plainly knows how to keep a great orchestra in a fine state of repair.

Erich Leinsdorf

WHY, THEN, did one leave Orchestra Hall unsatisfied, all things considered? Haydn's early-Esterhazy Symphony No. 13 in D Major did not live up to its promise, in spite of a languorously lovely cello solo in the Adagio Cantabile by Jules Eskin (whose instrument rode high on one of those Rostropovichy anchoring pins).

Leinsdorf presided from a harpsichord, as Haydn himself must have done, but played so little of the time that his position there, back to the audience, began to be irritating after a while. The string tone, moreover, was much too weighty and ripe to allow the harpsichord to be heard in proper perspective, so why all the pretense of period authenticity, anyway?

An interesting, and on paper totally effective, juxtaposition found Webern's aphoristic Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, cheek-by-jowl with the rambling, elegiac Bruckner Ninth Symphony. The Bruckner, given an opulent but rather dull reading, let one listen appreciatively to the Bostonians' massed horns, among other instrumental felicities, but lacked compelling interpretative ideas and rhythmic propulsion.

TO MAKE Bruckner's long-winded repetitions work, a conductor must find things to express and structures to erect with all those too-similar building blocks. If nothing else, there is a crude vitality to Bruckner's symphonies that commands attention, and crude vitality was what Leinsdorf did not want from Bruckner this time. The celebrated final Adagio wended its way with self-conscious beauty to the end, and left one more bored than transported to Elysium.

The Webern pieces, which consume just over eight minutes in all, were heard in the 1909 original version for large orchestra, not the 1928 reduction. The Boston performance could hardly have been more precise, but here too there was little of the exciting tension that makes this music worth playing.

One's objections to the evening might be put this way: there is a fine sybaritic beauty about avocado colored, contour bedsheets, but avocado colored, contour, satin bedsheets might be a bit much. Leinsdorf likes his orchestral music satiny, and his interpretations often suffer from a similar gloss.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515
APR 2 1967

Concerts a

THE Boston Symphony orchestra will play its first concerts here in four years Thursday evening and Friday afternoon, when it replaces the touring Chicago Symphony Orchestra at the regular Orchestra hall subscription concerts.

Under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, there will be different programs for each concert. Thursday at 8:15, Bruckner's unfinished Ninth Symphony, Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, and Haydn's Symphony No. 13, in D major are offered. The Friday matinee holds Beethoven's Second Symphony, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Suite, and "As Quiet As," a 1966 composition by Michael Colgrass, commissioned by the Fromm Music Foundation.

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
D. 538,393 SUN. 693,178
APR 7 1967

Glorious Performance By Boston Symphony

By Robert C. Marsh

When Erich Leinsdorf became music director of the Boston Symphony in 1962 he commented that with the expanding seasons of our major orchestras there was a need for an expanding orchestral repertory as well. This has led to his careful exploration of instrumental literature and the addition to the concert schedule of a number of excellent scores that have been heard far too infrequently in the past.

Thursday night at Orchestra Hall, as guests in the Chicago Symphony subscription series, Leinsdorf and the Bostonians played three such compositions, the Symphony No. 13 of Haydn, the Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, of Webern, and the Ninth Bruckner symphony.

In every case the performance was of the type that emphasized the importance of the material, and the music was of the stature to sustain interest through many rehearings. Audience building is too often preoccupied with the appeal of the familiar, neglecting the pleasure of discovery.

Yet what a pleasure it was to hear this early Haydn symphony in its belated subscription premiere! Leinsdorf conducted in the manner of the 18th Century, seated at the harpsichord, and filling the texture with harmonies when he was not directing the orchestra with one hand or the other.

But I doubt if any orchestra of Haydn's day possessed the refinement of the Boston Symphony of this century.

The Webern has been heard twice in the symphony subscription, from Fritz Reiner in 1957 and from Hans Rosbaud in 1961. The Leinsdorf performance was of a third type from the previous two, warmer and more romantic with the contours softened and the links to post-Wagnerian chromaticism made plain.

As such, it was an excellent foil to the Bruckner, an expansive work, full of echos of "Parsifal," and in many ways the summation of the composer's musical thought.

The performance was a fine one, tightly reasoned in its musical logic and gloriously played. What strings this orchestra has! Their tone filled the hall with the radiance of liquid gold.

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS, Friday, April 7, 1967

Boston Symphony: Beautiful Balance

By Robert C. Marsh

The way to build a strong subscription audience is to guarantee a high standard of quality from week to week, both in the choice and realization of unfamiliar music and in the staples of the repertory.

It is no mystery this is a large part of the success of the Boston Symphony, which has a deep-rooted tradition of excellence. Friday, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, it played its second Orchestra Hall program in the Chicago Symphony subscription series.

There was a splendidly imaginative new work, "As Quiet As . . ." by Michael Colgrass. (It was a pleasure to note it was a commission from the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.) Colgrass here presents music that is strongly evocative in its appeal to the ear and the mind and beautifully scored.

Leindorf used the work to balance the suite he has prepared from Stravinsky's "Firebird" ballet. The contrast of styles was attractive, and the addition of new material (plus the original orchestration) gave the "Firebird" music a freshness it needs today.

There were no surprises in either the Second Beethoven symphony or Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" at the start of the program, but there was the satisfaction of hearing performances that revealed the highest level of orchestral control combined with the polish and musicianship that are Boston hallmarks.

Leinsdorf's "Till Eulenspiegel" is one of his finest interpretive achievements, and the wit and drama of this short tone poem were superbly achieved.

CHICAGO, ILL.
NORTHCENTER NEWS
W 8 400
MAR 29 1967

• The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by its music director, Erich Leinsdorf, will present two concerts in Orchestra Hall Thursday evening, Apr. 6, at 8:15, and Friday afternoon, Apr. 7, at 2 p.m., as part of the Chicago Symphony's regular subscription series. Jean Martinon and the Chicago Symphony will be on a two-week spring tour at that time through the Midwest.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515
MAR 18 1967

Music Note

Programs to be performed by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony orchestra at the Thursday-Friday subscription concerts April 6 and 7 have been announced. Thursday at 8:15: Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D major, Opus 36; Richard Strauss' Rondo "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks;" Stravinsky's "Fire Bird" Suite; and a recent composition by Michael Colgrass, "As Quiet As" [1965-1966]. Friday at 2: Haydn's Symphony No. 13 in D major, Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Opus 6, and Bruckner's Symphony No. 9 in D minor [unfinished].

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
D. 538,393 SUN. 693,178
MAR 27 1967

THIS BELONGS in the constructive criticism department. Several readers complained to me that the two programs the Boston Symphony will play in the Chicago Symphony subscription series, April 6 and 7, were in the wrong order.

The Thursday night audience was to hear a group of symphonic staples, while the Friday matinee was to feature the Webern Op. 6 and the Bruckner Ninth.

Word was relayed to conductor Erich Leinsdorf who reconsidered the situation. Result, the Webern and Bruckner move to the Thursday night series, and the Friday subscribers get Beethoven, Strauss, and Stravinsky. It pays to speak up.

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS
D. 466,392 SAT. 473,272
MAR 17 1967

MUSIC

The Boston Symphony will play two different programs at its concerts on this season's Chicago Symphony subscription series. Thursday, April 6: Symphony No. 2, by Beethoven; "Till Eulenspiegel," by R. Strauss; "As Quiet as," by Michael Colgrass; "Firebird Suite," by Stravinsky. Friday, April 7: Symphony No. 13 in D Major, by Haydn; Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, by Webern; Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, by Bruckner. Erich Leinsdorf conducts both programs, which will be given in Orchestra Hall while the Chicago Symphony is away on tour.

1967 S AMERICAN, FRIDAY, APRIL 7, 1967

Boston Music Suffers Decline

MUSIC CRITICS WHO LIVE in glass cities, to bend the axiom, perhaps have no business throwing stones, and Lord knows our symphonic community is, by major-league measure, currently one of the country's three glassiest. How otherwise, tho, to express dismay, and distress, at the Boston Symphony's decline in five seasons under the arched eyebrows of Erich Leinsdorf?

The same orchestra that played momentous Mahler in Orchestra hall the first season of Leinsdorf's tenure returned last evening for the first of two programs in the absence, and under auspices, of our own beleaguered band —on tour until April 20. Their opening concert gave the promise, on paper, of eloquent expression as well as intellectual substance, and accordingly a large audience of the local faithful gathered to be regaled.

By prior Boston standards, however, works of Haydn, Webern, and Bruckner were conducted in greater part dispassionately, played with only modest discipline, and without the sonority that was Koussevitzky's signature until his retirement 18 seasons ago.

EVEN UNDER the volatile Munch, Koussevitzky's B-S-O "sound" prevailed, albeit sporadically in a hectic, Gallicized context. But replacements have been numerous in key chairs during Leinsdorf's administration, and his strings are the principal sufferers, especially since Richard Burgin's retirement as concertmaster.

Violins, in particular the firsts, have a steelier, thinner sound than remembered, and incline toward arpeggiated attack [releasing at will, not to say whim, on the basis of Thursday's scattered returns]. Bass strings of today favor a slow, throbbing vibrato, and have been instructed—as Chicago's celli and bass also have been, by Martinon—to lay on with a long bow.

Winds have fought the good fight to sustain whilom standards, altho flutes and reeds have a basic intonational problem if we keep in mind that this is, after all, the Boston and not Buffalo's orchestra. Brass have retained the lung-power of yore, and much of their vaunted luster, but attacks in the Ninth Symphony of Bruckner—a reading by Leinsdorf almost casual in its lack of commitment, and repeatedly in violation of the composer's tempo and dynamic indications—were divisive.

LEINSDORF led off, conducting from a two-manual, scarcely audible harpsichord aimed in at his players, with Haydn's scampering 13th Symphony, in D, for the first time in Chicago. It failed, however, in spite of prevailing precision, to skip or to sing — as the content required—and in fact plodded a good deal. When, that is to say, it didn't perish of inertia in the slow movement, afflicted with a palpitant, 19th century-style cello solo.

Leinsdorf needed four of Anton Webern's pointillistic Six Pieces, Op. 6, in the original version for large orchestra of 1909, to realize that he wasn't conducting Alban Berg instead [Fritz Reiner led their first local performance within a fortnight of the Pittsburgh premiere in America].

Playing was never, for as much as a moment, soft enough—even when the conductor refrained from correction of the composers' dynamic and tempo marking.

The concluding Bruckner, not played here since the season of 1949-50, was plainly—and to be sure sadly —an instance of interpretation without intuition, or even remarkable sympathy. Leinsdorf couldn't recall the original scherzo tempo when it returned, and elsewhere seemed to relish only the lyrical second themes in Bruckner's Brobdignagian sonata-schemes.

His manner, as well as appearance, too often reminded one of a maitre'd, in circumstances clearly requiring a maestro. And the orchestra was a consequent reflection of their leader's recreative casuistry.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE, FRIDAY, APRIL 7, 1967

The Boston Symphony Comes to Orchestra Hall

BY THOMAS WILLIS

Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Presented in Orchestra hall Thursday, April 6, 1967. The program:
Symphony No. 33 in D major ... Haydn
Six Pieces for Orchestra, Opus 6 Webern
Symphony No. 9 in D minor [Unfinished] ..... Bruckner

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra is taking the touring Chicago Symphony Orchestra's place at the regular subscription concerts this week. It is only the second time in Chicago Symphony history that a visiting ensemble has replaced the natives on the Orchestra hall stage. The other occasion was during the 1940-41 50th anniversary season, when Sir John Barbirolli and the New York Philharmonic traded a performance pair with Frederick Stock and our men.

It is an interesting change to observe. The same familiar faces are in the audience. The same printed programs are used. The same general configuration of performers fills the stage. Even the sound has more than a superficial similarity, for the major ensembles in the musical world share a common standard of technical excellence.

Differences there are, however. Some may be the results of touring exigencies, but others are basic. Several times last night, uneven attacks and releases jarred the ear a bit. There was lack of synchronization in the violins. And even before the multiplied horns of Bruckner's Ninth Symphony burst forth, there were imbalances to remind us of our still difficult acoustic situation. All this, of course, could result from several days on the road and an unfamiliar hall.

• • •

In other areas, the Boston's personality under Erich Leinsdorf is essentially different from ours under Jean Martinon. Mr. Leinsdorf is an exceptional technician with an exact, albeit rather flamboyant beat. The performers know where they are to the split second. Interpretatively, the Leinsdorf manner is objective and straightforward. He does not regulate balances with the hair's-breadth control heard here regularly; the strings sing directly, but without glossiness. Everything is in place, but each performer still has room to move around. The resulting sound commands respect for the individual producers even when it does not collectively move us much.

• • •

Mr. Leinsdorf is presenting two programs this trip. Last night's was as up-to-date as it is possible to get—Haydn, Bruckner, and Webern. Today's matinee holds a new Michael Colgrass work, Beethoven's Second Symphony, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," and Stravinsky's "Fire-Bird."

• • •

The Webern was as expected the high spot of the evening. These six wonderful pieces, totaling around 100 measures, can cast a spell over almost any audience. The evocative tolling bells and delicately striated instrumentation are mesmeric proof of the super-chromatic pudding. Every member of the ensemble was free of the difficult parts and aware of his function in the structure. If the total effect was not as deep as that remembered from Hans Rosbaud's performances here six years ago, it is possible the hall is partly to blame.

The Bruckner Ninth is his unfinished final symphony. Its three movements hold much of the fervency and massed brass brilliance of the more familiar works. The performance was lean, briskly paced, and sometimes exciting, when the melodic lines soared into the musical skies during the Third movement. With a full scale Mahler-Bruckner revival in progress, it was good to hear the work in performance — it has not been done here since 1949.

• • •

The program opened with a sprightly performance of Haydn's 1761 Symphony No. 13. It is a fine example of the early, baroque-based Haydn, with a slow movement for solo cello which Jules Eskin played beautifully. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted from a harpsichord, which demonstrated his stylistic awareness, altho he played very little.

CHICAGO'S AMERICAN, SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1967 5

'AS QUIET AS'

Boston Symphony in Orchestra Hall

BY KENNETH SANSON

MICHAEL COLGRASS' "AS QUIET AS" raised yesterday afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra above the world of monotony, tho the degree of elevation was microscopic. A Fromm Foundation commission, the work, according to Colgrass, was "inspired by the answers of fourth grade children asked by their teacher to complete the sentence beginning 'Let's be as quiet as. . . . ' " Seven responses out of 21 were chosen which "seemed to make a nature study as might be perceived by a child."

The strength of the composition lies in the pictures painted and moods expressed as opposed to any formal musical qualities. Slowly ascending tone clusters, minus specific pitches, accurately describes "A Leaf Turning Colors." Plucked strings, also in random note patterns, sound exactly like "A Soft Rainfall."

A dream sequence—"Children Sleeping" and "Time Passing" — combines many extraneous items in pure Charles Ives fashion: Haydn. jazz, a pulsating heart beat, and even a child's toy chiming a quiet lullaby. A delightful musical kaleidoscope, excellently played by the orchestra.

CONDUCTOR Erich Leinsdorf's stringent controls put out all fires under the entire rest of the program. Staruss' "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" became a little boy's innocent adventures rather than the misadventures of a complete rascal. Somehow, the moralistic tone of Till disguised as a priest permeated thruout. Even the final joke on Till at the end was completely straight faced and not a bit amusing.

The same acts of nonexcitement transformed Igor Stravinsky's wild "Fire-Bird" into a time canary. Leinsdorf's own version, which is drawn from the original ballet score, adds two sections to the customary five—"Pleadings of the Fire-Bird" and "The Princesses' Game with the Golden Apples." These scenes merely lengthened the performance time without adding any appreciable substance.

As in the Strauss, dynamic levels hovered far too long in the mezzo-forte range, slower tempi imparted dignity where none was intended, and long dramatic pauses between ideas allowed momentum to die altogether.

THE ORCHESTRA hall musicale opened with a sober and highly correct performance of Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D major, Op. 36. Completely lacking energy, it needed a lot more pepper and much less poi.

Hearing the 1967 model of the Boston Symphony for the second time varified impressions made at last night's concert. The once famous homogeneous string section only appeared in slow passages; in ''Scherzo,'' or faster, technical insecurities loomed out with utmost clarity. Also, Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, altho a superb solo performer, weakened ensemble blend by playing louder than any other player.

When the organization performs in its own Symphony hall, probably this country's best concert hall because of high reverberation, all sounds, whether good or bad, are beautifully fused. Not so in our dry-sounding Orchestra hall. O. H. amplified all blemishes.

One final swipe: Leinsdorf's podium ritual, in whichhe cued-in practically every instrument at the most obvious places, not only served to question the orchestra's ability in reading parts, but further qualified him as the master of baton affectation.

Chicago Tribune
SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1967

Boston Symphony Offers Orchestra Hall Concert

BY THOMAS WILLIS

[Reprinted from yesterday's late editions]

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra is taking the touring Chicago Symphony Orchestra's place at the regular subscription concerts this week. It is only the second time in Chicago Symphony history that a visiting ensemble has replaced the natives on the Orchestra hall stage. The other occasion was during the 1940-41 50th anniversary season, when Sir

Concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Presented in Orchestra hall Thursday, April 6, 1967. The program:
Symphony No. 13 in D major ....Haydn
Six Pieces for Orchestra, Opus 6 .Webern
Symphony No. 9 in D minor [Unfinished] .....Bruckner

John Barbirolli and the New York Philharmonic traded a performance pair with Frederick Stock and our men.

It is an interesting change to observe. The same familiar faces are in the audience. The same printed programs are used. The same general configuration of performers fills the stage. Even the sound has more than a superficial similarity, for the major ensembles in the musical world share a common standard of technical excellence.

• • •

Differences there are, however. Some may be the results of touring exigencies, but others are basic. Several times Thursday night, uneven attacks and releases jarred the ear a bit. There was lack of synchronization in the violins and even before the multiplied horns of Bruckner's Ninth Symphony burst forth, there were imbalances to remind us of our still difficult acoustic situation. All this, of course, could result from several days on the road and an unfamiliar hall.

In other areas, the Boston's personality under Erich Leinsdorf is essentially different from ours under Jean Martinon. Mr. Leinsdorf is an exceptional technician with an exact, albeit rather flamboyant beat. The performers know where they are to the split second. Interpretatively, the Leinsdorf manner is objective and straightforward. He does not regulate balances with the hair's-breadth control heard here regularly; the strings sing directly, but without glossiness. Everything is in place, but each performer still has room to move around. The resulting sound commands respect for the individual producers even when it does not collectively move us much.

Erich Leinsdorf

• • •

Mr. Leinsdorf is presenting two programs this trip. Thursday night's was as up-to-date as it is possible to get—baroque, Bruckner, and Webern. Yesterday's matinee holds a new Michael Colgrass work, Beethoven's Second Symphony, Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel," and Stravinsky's "Fire-Bird."

• • •

The Webern was as expected the high spot of the evening. These six wonderful pieces, totaling around 100 measures, can cast a spell over almost any audience. The evocative tolling bells and delicately striated instrumentation are mesmeric proof of the super-chromatic pudding. Every member of the ensemble was free of the difficult parts and aware of his function in the structure. If the total effect was not as deep as that remembered from Hans Rosbaud's performances here six years ago, it is possible the hall is partly to blame.

The Bruckner Ninth is his unfinished final symphony. Its three movements hold much of the fervency and massed brass brilliance of the more familiar works. The performance was lean, briskly paced, and sometimes exciting, when the melodic lines soared into the musical skies during the Third movement. With a full scale Mahler-Bruckner revival in progress, it was good to hear the work in performance — it has not been done here since 1949.

• • •

The program opened with a sprightly performance of Haydn's 1761 Symphony No. 13. It is a fine example of the early, baroque-based Haydn, with a slow movement for solo cello which Jules Eskin played beautifully. Mr. Leinsdorf conducted from a harpsichord, which demonstrated his stylistic awareness, altho he played very little.

119

YPSILANTI, MICH.
PRESS
D. 11,500

APR 8 1967

Erich Leinsdorf

Boston Symphony Orchestra will close U-M series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will give the last concert in the 1966-67 Choral Union Series at the University of Michigan's Hill Auditorium at 8:30 tonight.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will conclude the Chamber Arts Series at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow in Rackham Lecture Hall.

Both concerts are sponsored by the University Musical Society.

Tonight's program will include the overture to "Il Seraglio" by Mozart, Beethoven's "Symphony No. 7," "Diptych" by Schuller, and "Firebird Suite" by Stravinsky.

Leinsdorf has directed the orchestra since 1962. He is the 11th director to lead it in its 86 years and only the third in the last four decades.

He became director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after a period as conductor of the Metropolitan Opera.

Before that time he directed the Cleveland Orchestra and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra.

Leinsdorf studied under Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini, who suggested him to the Metropolitan. In 1939 Leinsdorf was named the Met's chief conductor of German operas.

Sunday's program by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will include "Nonet, Op. 31," by Spohr; "Fantasia for String Trio" (1957) by Irving Fine, and Beethoven's "Septet in E-flat for Violin, Viola, Horn, Clarinet, Bassoon, Cello, and Bass, Op. 20."

A few seats for the orchestra's concert and standing-room tickets for the chamber players' performance are available at the University Musical Society's office in Burton Memorial Tower.

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
D. 538,393 SUN. 693,178

APR 8 1967

Boston Symphony: Beautiful Balance

By Robert C. Marsh

The way to build a strong subscription audience is to guarantee a high standard of quality from week to week, both in the choice and realization of unfamiliar music and in the staples of the repertory.

It is no mystery this is a large part of the success of the Boston Symphony, which has a deep-rooted tradition of excellence. Friday, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, it played its second Orchestra Hall program in the Chicago Symphony subscription series.

There was a splendidly imaginative new work, "As Quiet As . . ." by Michael Colgrass. (It was a pleasure to note it was a commission from the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago.) Colgrass here presents music that is strongly evocative in its appeal to the ear and the mind and beautifully scored.

Leindorf used the work to balance the suite he has prepared from Stravinsky's "Firebird" ballet. The contrast of styles was attractive, and the addition of new material (plus the original orchestration) gave the "Firebird" music a freshness it needs today.

There were no surprises in either the Second Beethoven symphony or Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" at the start of the program, but there was the satisfaction of hearing performances that revealed the highest level of orchestral control combined with the polish and musicianship that are Boston hallmarks.

Leinsdorf's "Till Eulenspiegel" is one of his finest interpretive achievements, and the wit and drama of this short tone poem were superbly achieved.

MIDWEST NEWSCLIP, INC.
Box 1359, Chicago 90, Tel.: 263-4065

Tribune
Chicago, Ill.
Morning
Circ. 833,610

APR 8 1967

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515

APR 8 1967

Boston Symphony Scores with New Work

BY THOMAS WILLIS

Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As" takes its title from a 4th grade teacher's directions to her English class, and its seven parts complete the simile with evocative music to fit the children's answers.

"A Leaf Turning Colors" could have been a continuation of the Webern heard Thursday, as the points of instrumental color softly take their places in the dissonant web of seconds and quarter tones. "An Uninhabited Creek" is full of unlikely glissandos from horns and flutes as well as the strings. "An Ant Walking" skitters in desiccated ripples across percussion and strings. "Children Sleeping" starts with what could be heartbeats, soft breaths, and a suggestion of a whimper but quickly proceeds to a dreamy charm of bell lullabies. "Time Passing" takes a jazzy, two-conductor twist at clock keys. "Soft Rainfall" bounces spiccato from divided violins, and "The First Star Coming Out" does so triumphantly.

Presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra yesterday afternoon at Orchestra hall the new work demonstrated both the composer's orchestral skill and his willingness to free his listeners' imaginations. In addition to Webern, Ives, Messiaen, and the Gunther Schuller of the Seven Studies must be numbered as his progenitors. "As Quiet As" is difficult and advanced in its techniques, but so direct in its appeal that an audience here, hearing it for the first time, cheered.

The remainder of the concert came from the standard repertory, altho Erich Leinsdorf had selected different music from the "Fire-Bird" than Stravinsky chose for his orchestral suites. The orchestral playing had improved measurably and Thursday's ragged edges were hemmed. Mr. Leinsdorf's readings of the Beethoven and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" were precisely presented, but aroused little audience involvement.

Concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. Presented in Orchestra hall Friday afternoon, April 7, 1967. The program:
Symphony No. 2, in D major Beethoven
Rondo, "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" ..... Strauss
"As Quiet As" ..... Colgrass
Suite from "The Fire-Bird" ..Stravinsky

ANN HARBOR APR. 8

120

The Ann Arbor News
ANN ARBOR, MICH.
D. 33,162

APR 10 1967

Boston Symphony Chamber Unit Delights Locally

By Louise Cuyler

A delightful coda to the Boston Symphony concert came on Sunday afternoon, in Rackham auditorium, when nine members of the orchestra — all but one first chair men in their respective sections — played a concert of music for small ensembles, as the seventh program of the Chamber Arts Series.

The full roster of the musicians, who call themselves the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, includes Lois Schaefer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; James Stagliano, horn; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Joseph Silverstein, violin and concertmaster; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; and Henry Portnoi, string bass.

Each member of the group is a fine artist in his own right, as their important positions in the Boston Orchestra attest. Special tribute must be paid, however, to Mr. Silverstein, whose violin sound is as elegant and lovely as any to be heard today. He plays with the same exquisite taste, ease and restraint, whether the part is a simple air or an elaborate cadenza. The Boston Orchestra is fortunate indeed in possessing so fine a concertmaster.

Ludwig Spohr's Nonet, Op. 31, which required the entire ensemble, opened the program. This warm, genial, unpretentious music is as much a joy to hear as to play. Today, Spohr is an almost forgotten composer, although aspirant fiddlers are still wont to revive one or two of his concertos. His misfortune (if being forgotten is, indeed, a misfortune) lies in two circumstances. The first may be summarized in a single name: Beethoven. The second is that unpretentious music went out of favor as the 19th century progressed. The first two movements of the Nonet — Allegro, and Scherzo: allegro — are typical of much of the best in ensemble music from the Haydn-Beethoven period. The third movement — Adagio — is a little gem indeed, with a lyricism that foreshadows the Lieder of Schumann and Brahms.

Irving Fine's Fantasia for String Trio (1957), a composition which has already received considerable acclaim, completed the first portion of Sunday's program. This is a strong, finely crafted work that is full of lovely sound. Its suave, linear structure disguises the basic tone row, and makes it supple, furnishing audible proof that dodecaphonic music need not be brusque, cacaphonous or formidable. Perhaps we should have more string players who are composers.

After intermission, Beethoven's famous Septet in E-flat, Op. 20, filled the remainder of the program. The ensemble was that of the opening number, minus only the flute and oboe. This work, a divertimento of eight movements in alternating slow and fast tempo, is modelled on the many similar compositions originating in the later 18th century. It was to serve as a design for future ensemble works by Schubert and Brahms, among others.

The Septet has many episodes of beauty and attractiveness, but it is discursive and overly long, with the result that the listener's attention is likely to wander. Even the performers seemed to develop a certain satiety after the first five or six movements, as evidenced by a few inadvertencies of intonation and ensemble.

Such small faults did little to diminish the joy of a superb performance, however, and the Boston Chamber Players were applauded long and warmly at the close of the program.

Full Orchestra Joy To Hear

This season's Choral Union Series came to a close Saturday night with a concert in Hill Auditorium by the Boston Symphony, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. This orchestra has been a frequent visitor here through the years, as the audience was reminded in a program note stating that this is the group's 43rd Ann Arbor concert. The Boston, which continues to be one of our country's great orchestras, has been fortunate in avoiding—perhaps in ignoring — many of the circumstances that have caused quality to vacillate for other major ensembles.

There is, for example, the matter of change in conductors. Erich Leinsdorf has now been in Boston for a long enough time to make his own mark on the orchestra and it is, undeniably, a vastly different group from that of yesteryear. Gone is the mystique of the Karl Muck and Koussevitzky years, along with the more genial opulence of Munch's time. Rather, Leinsdorf has molded an ensemble in the current ideal — that of highest technical competence, plasticity, but detachment. hTe result is sound that is still a joy to hear, but that has lost some of the excitement and involvement of other regimes.

As for Leinsdorf himself, he is surely one of the most diverting of present day conductors to watch, at the same time that he is a highly competent leader. His stance on the podium ranges all the way from an elegant inertia that permits the ensemble to be self-propelling, to indulgence in an amazing series of gyrations and gymnastics. From time to time he appears to pull, poke, unscrew, or flip unexpected sounds from the depths of his group. Occasionally these diversionary tactics prove annoying. At other times — in some of the rather dreary episodes of the Beethoven Seventh, for example — they were more interesting than the music.

The program commenced with Mozart's Overture to "Die Entfuhrung aus dem Serail." Mozart, whose music is an ideal beginning (or ending, for that matter) for any concert, has filled this little curtain-raiser to his "Harem" opera with all manner of gay tunes and quasi-Turkish effects. Music of this enchantment needs only to be played, and that the Boston Orchestra did with gusto.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, in A major filled the remainder of the pre-intermission portion of the program. For this reviewer, the performance was a pedestrian one, with only a few bright moments before the final movement. There was, first of all, the matter of temning "Poco sostenuto," the "Vivace" of the main portion of the first movement, and the "Allegretto" of the second movement variation all meandered at about the same moderate pace. This symphony lacks, furthermore, the built-in dynamic excitement of the "Eroica" and the Fifth —a circumstance which tests the intuition and imagination of the conductor. I found only occasional evidence of those qualities in Saturday night's reading. On the brighter side, there was the marvellously vital Pianissimo from the low strings at the start of the Allegretto, and a very colorful Allegro con brio at the close.

A gesture toward contemporary music came after intermission, in the playing of Gunther Schuller's "Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra." If any in the audience have felt a lack of rapport with music of our day, this composition probably did little to dispel their attitude. Even the quintet of solo brass, a group that is capable of magnificent and arresting effect, was relegated to thrsuting some desultory grunts and squeals into a conglomerate background of sound.

To close the concert, Mr. Leinsdorf chose a Suite of seven episodes drawn from Stravinsky's Ballet, "The Firebird." This music is almost 60 years old now, but it still sounds fresh, vital and enchanting. Through the years, no group has brought the vitality and understanding to the performance of Russian (and French) music that the Boston Orchestra has continued to provide.

Saturday's "Firebird" continued in the best Boston tradition and the audience responded witn enthuiastic applause.

The Ann Arbor News
ANN ARBOR, MICH.
D. 33,162

APR 5 1967

Boston Symphony Here On Weekend

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will give the last concert in the Choral Union Series at 8:30 p.m. Saturday in Hill Auditorium.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players will conclude the Chamber Arts Series at 2:30 p.m. Sunday in Rackham Lecture Hall.

Saturday evening's program will be the overture to "Il Seraglio" by Mozart, Beethoven's Symphony No. 7, "Diptych" by Schuller, and "Firebird Suite" by Stravinsky.

Leinsdorf, music director of the orchestra since 1962, is the 11th to lead it in its 86 years and only the third in the last four decades. He went to Boston after being conductor of the Metropolitan Opera and director of the Cleveland Orchestra and Rochester Philharmonic.

Sunday's program by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players will include "Nonet, Opus 31," by Spohr; "Fantasia for String Trio" (1957) by Irving Fine, and Beethoven's "Septet in E-flat for Violin, Viola, Horn, Clarinet, Bassoon, Cello, and Bass, Opus 20."

Through performances and master classes, the Chamber Players are extending the Boston Symphony's services in further directions.

Both concerts are sponsored by the University Musical Society. A few seats for the orchestra's concert and standing room tickets for the Chamber Players' performance are available at the society's office in Burton Memorial Tower.

8

ANN ARBOR, MICH.
MICHIGAN DAILY
D. 6,500

APR 9 1967

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Sparkles In Matchless Performance

By CLARENCE FANTO

It is always a welcome event when the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes to town.

Last night at Hill Auditorium was no exception as the BSO blazed its way through two standard works and a brief new composition.

The Boston, among the nation's top three or four orchestras, is a superbly fashioned instrument to sonic virtuosity. Carefully nurtured by the late Serge Koussevitsky, Charles Munch and now Eric Leinsdorf, the orchestra's pure string tone is matched only by the triumphant sonority of its brass section and its clear-as-a-reed wind section.

These various components of the great orchestra were demonstrated to their best advantage in Beethoven's Seventh Symphony and Stravinsky's Firebird Suite.

The Beethoven performance was a model of carefully controlled, disciplined energy, with every orchestral detail shining forth with complete clarity.

Some conductors (notably Toscanini) have favored interpretations which pull out all the stops and allow the music to spring forth unhampered. But Leinsdorf chose a more deliberate approach, seeking to combine well-controlled intensity with a concern for phrasing, detail and melody.

The result was a memorable performance, characterized by virtuosity at every turn. Doriot Anthony-Dwyer's superb flute solos throughout the work, and especially in the first movement, deserve special mention. The rhythmic propulsion of the fourth movement's coda was given added brilliance by the sure-footed work of the brass and tympani.

An unusual aspect of the performance was Leinsdorf's decision to observe all the repeats. The exposition of the first and last movements and the third movement trio are rarely repeated, but the practice is one which should be more widespread. The symphony took on new characteristics with the adherence to Beethoven's original score.

The brief, modern work on the program, Gunther Schuller's Dyptch for Brass Quintet and Orchestral is an intriguing work, but not much more. It was well-performed, but the brief composition lacks depth, being merely a well-constructed orchestral showpiece. Schuller, a leading composer who has successfully combined the orchestra made with jazz idioms (in a far more sophisticated fashion than Gershwin), has created far more enduring works.

Stravinsky's Firebird Suite was given an incandescent performance. The work could almost have been written with the Boston Symphony in mind, since the orchestra's overall coloring and the strength of its brass and percussion sections lent new brilliance to the familiar score.

8

The Detroit Free Press
D. 509,410 SUN. 555,779

APR 2 1967

And, one of the most important of recent concerts in the Detroit-area, the appearance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will be presented.

Saturday at Hill Auditorium in Ann Arbor.

121

NEW LONDON APR 10

DAY (e)
NEW LONDON, CONN.
CIRC. 34,050

APR 11 1967 New England Newsclip

—Last Night's Concert—

The Chaste Showmanship Of Erich Leinsdorf

By ARCH L. CROSSLEY

Like that half-legendary yard of metal in the National Bureau of Standards, the Boston Symphony continues to be the measure by which the others are calibrated. Unlike the metal bar, however, the orchestra is not, thank heaven, shut up in an air conditioned sarcophagus. Last night its splendor was on annual display in Palmer Auditorium, shoe-horned into the last square centimeter of stage area, and if there was an empty seat in the hall I didn't see it.

The program started off a few minutes after 8:30 when Erich Leinsdorf came on stage, sat down at a harpsichord, and began to conduct Haydn's Symphony No. 13 in D. You heard me; he sat down at a harpsichord. Seems that Papa Haydn used to do this, back in the early days at Esterhazy when this symphony was composed. He would strum chords with one hand and conduct with the other. There were probably some differences. For one thing it is doubtful that Haydn had 70-odd musicians with him, so that the harpsichord could be heard. Last night it was barely audible beyond the first two rows. Of course the symphony is usually conducted conventionally from a podium, but Mr. Leinsdorf is not above a little chaste showmanship.

A Brand New Suite

After the Haydn (c. 1793), we leaped all the way to 1966 and Michael Colgrass' As Quiet As, a suite which had its premiere at Tanglewood last August. The title, the composer explains, "was inspired by the answers of fourth-grade children asked by their teacher to complete the sentence 'Let's be as quiet as . . .' " There are seven, of which the first, A Leaf Turning Colors, occupies approximately the same tonal area as the background music for The Twilight Zone. The next, An Uninhabited Creek (quite a word for a fourth grader), simply demonstrates that Mr. Colgrass departs from the notion that there's no such thing as sound if no one's around to hear it. An Ant Walking, which suggests a bowl of Rice Krispies out of control, is strongly reminiscent of one of Gunther Schuller's Paul Klee Sketches called The Twittering Machine, also played at Tanglewood last summer, and I suspect Messrs. Colgrass and Schuller had their heads together more than once, because Mr. Colgrass' next item, Children Sleeping, contains a jazz sequence recalling another of the Klee Sketches called Little Blue Devil. Among other innovations the score calls for two conductors, and Assistant Conductor Charles Wilson rose from the harpsichord (now faced the other way), and managed to keep his segment of the ensemble going without working at cross purposes to his chief, who by now had mounted a proper podium. The First Star Coming Out, which closes the suite, contains a stupefying crescendo whose relationship to quietude is obscure.

Beethoven's Seventh

Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 in A was no doubt intended to give us a rousing send-off to the parking lot, but somehow this often obliging old horse failed to stir much dust last night. The performance was glitteringly competent but couldn't be called warm or exciting. Carbon dioxide concentration, perhaps.

Mr. Leinsdorf's "ballet" image which I mentioned a year ago has shifted a little. Last night he kept his feet on the floor, for the most part, now and again hunching his shoulders menacingly in a posture which, with the swallow-tailed coat, suggested some hilarious crow from an Uncle Remus drawing.

Messrs. Konosuke Ono, viola and Soichi Katsuta, 'cello, of the Japan Philharmonic Symphony, are playing with the Boston Symphony this season in exchange for Boston players Robert Karol and Richard Kapuscinski. The Japanese young men performed with the orchestra last night.

Arch L. Crossley, a former professional musician, is familiar with symphonic music in general and the Boston symphony in particular, having been a regular subscriber at Symphony Hall some 15 years.

COURANT (m)
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 137,950

APR 10 1967 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony To Appear In Concert Series

NEW LONDON (Special) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Erich Leinsdorf, will appear in New London today at the final program of the 1966-67 Connecticut College Concert Series.

The concert will be at Palmer Auditorium at 8:30 p.m.

Leinsdorf, orchestra director since 1962, will conduct a program which will include Haydn's Symphony No. 13 in D Major and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 in A Major.

The Boston Symphony has been a part of every series here except the first season, 1939-40, and the season of 1948-49.

SUN (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
CIRC. 9,350

APR 7 1967 New England Newsclip

The Boston Symphony Orchestra ~~will make its 26th~~ appearance in New London at the final program of the 1966-67 Connecticut College Concert Series at 8:30 p.m. Monday, Aprli 10, at Palmer Auditorium.

DAY (e)
NEW LONDON, CONN.
CIRC. 31,050

APR 7 1967 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony To Play Monday

NEW LONDON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its 226th appearance in New London at the final program of the 1966-67 Connecticut College Concert Series at 8:30 p.m. Monday at Palmer Auditorium.

Erich Leinsdorf, director of the orchestra since 1962, will conduct a program which will include Haydn's Symphony No. 13 in D major, As Quiet As (Colgrass), and Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 in A major.

A perennial favorite of the local audience, the Boston has been a part of every series except the first season, 1939-40, and that of 1948-49.

PHILADELPHIA APR 11

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206
APR 9 1967

Leinsdorf leads Bostonians here; Ormandy lists Orff

By DANIEL WEBSTER
Of The Inquirer Staff

Stately, lithe Erich Leinsdorf glided into the room upstairs in Boston's Symphony Hall, shook hands with the press during a series of steps and bows that looked choreographed and sat down to sketch a new era with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

That was five years ago. Many of the questions raised by his appointment to succeed Charles Munch have been answered; many of the answers Leinsdorf has provided have been questioned, but there is no doubt that he has put a firm imprint on that august musical institution.

His orchestra will play here Tuesday at the Academy of Music for the first time in three years.

SHIFTED EMPHASIS

With his fifth season closing, Leinsdorf was willing to take stock and to look ahead, but not, he points out, to the next five years. "I won't offer a five-year plan; I'll end up sounding like a Stalinist," he joked during a talk last week.

Looking back, he recalled a promise to reinstate Mozart and Haydn in repertory which had developed a distinctly French accent during Munch's regime.

"I have shifted the emphasis from the shorter pieces of the 19th century and the early 20th century to the short symphonies of the 18th century. I have done this quite deliberately. Haydn is the most unplayed composer we have. I think I can still do 78 of his symphonies for the first time in Boston.

PLAYS HUNCHES

"He is a vastly unknown composer; with him I am never in embarrassment for an opening number.

"Of Mozart, I have played a good deal, but I am planning many of the Divertimenti and I am going to explore all the Piano Concerti, many of

Continued on Page 6, Column 7

Erich Leinsdorf conducts Boston Symphony Tuesday evening at the Academy.

Leinsdorf leads Bostonians

Continued from First Page

which have not been done in Boston.

"Making programs is the most difficult part of conducting, and I don't think that three days go by without my making a change or adding something new to my plans. I do it mostly on hunches.

"I find that the more I go on and the more the public writes to me, the more complex it becomes trying to reconcile every demand of varying lines of taste. The most outspoken people are those who subscribe to short series. For some, Berg is too old fashioned and for others Bonancini too recent. I can't please everybody, but I use the letters as guides and then . . . one applies one's hunches.

ROUSE CONTROVERSY

"In Philadelphia, we are doing Michael Colgrass' 'As Quiet As.' I find it a very fine piece—a not too frequent reaction to a lot of recent music—and I find it has an instant appeal which I don't mind at all. I can't say I mind having a happy audience.

"We played Robert Moev's piece in New York and got a controversial response. He was upset, but I said it was music designed to rouse controversy and anyway, any thing is better than indifference.

"Next year, I am playing some Webern and doing the Schoenberg Piano Concerto. There is no dearth of important pieces to play.

OPERA INTERESTS

"The problem is keeping familiar works fresh for the audience and the orchestra. The point is not to do the Brahms, the Beethoven and the Tchaikovsky too frequently so the audience doesn't take them for granted. I conduct 100 concerts during the winter season and I have to be very careful to keep the old works in reserve so that when they arrive it is as if they were new and sometimes they arouse great emotions when they are rediscovered. These standbys can become a ritual and like some religious ritual, lose the meaning," he said.

Leinsdorf left an expanding operatic career to take the BSO podium, and his contract barred him from the pit for two years. But he has kept his hand in opera by producing one each season at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in the Berkshires, and through recordings in Rome, now that the ban is off.

COMPOSER'S INTENT

Original versions have caught his attention, and the uncut "Lohengrin" he premiered in 1965 has paved the way to this summer's American premiere of the original "Fidelio" at Tanglewood.

"I like to go into problem works. One might as well see what a composer had in mind when he first wrote a work, before he felt the need to revise or before his friends convinced him to do it.

"This ur-'Fidelio' was difficult to plan. We located it in some out of the way publication, found the publisher had sold it to somebody else in Franconia or Swabia, and discovered the parts were missing and so on. Before we signed the singers we stressed to them that they would all have to relearn the music," he said.

REWARDING WORK

Looking ahead, he said, "In the long view, there are big works I'd like to do. Our Schumann 'Faust' was a rewarding work and I am thinking now of the 'Guerrelieder' and some more original operas.

"I'll give you a puzzle. Next year, we may do a very, very popular opera which has never been performed in its original form, not even at its premiere. It's not 'Faust.' You think about it," he chuckled.

Answers, anyone?

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
JEWISH EXPONENT
W. 45,000
APR 21 1967

NOTES ON Music

By MONROE LEVIN

Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra paid one of their infrequent visits to the Academy of Music last Tuesday. There was no soloist, yet this was an All-Star event in every sense, with the All-Star audience in full attendance.

Beethoven's Symphony No. 2 in D opened the program.

Leinsdorf's beat was clear and right on top of the music, giving the fast movements a bit of spaciousness and the lovely slow one momentum. Many people, assuming his very methodical, naval flag-signal gestures to be the whole story, judge Leinsdorf to be a cold scientist of a conductor.

They forget the importance of the face in this profession. What he can do with a raised eyebrow or a pursed lip—well, what he can do is make a familiar Beethoven theme sound fresh, an expected modulation unexpected, a potentially four-square performance alive and exciting.

BALANCE OF CHOIRS

Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks followed, not the most graphically or choreographically dramatic reading I've heard, but intelligible, absorbing and above all balanced. If there is one word to describe the Boston's advantage over the Philadelphia Orchestra, it is this perfect balance of the choirs — strings never overshadowing woodwinds, brass always blending well—that makes beautiful musical prose into poetry. Of course the Philadelphia's advantages, mostly in the string sections, are another story.

The contemporary work on the program, As Quiet As by Michael Colgrass (composer and composition new to Philadelphia), made special use of this integrated Boston tone. It was conceived as a tour de force in subdued orchestral sound. Seven different completions of the title phrase written by children A Leaf Turning Colors, Time Passing, etc.) are allowed to inspire Colgrass' mildly expressionistic muse.

The result might sound more original if Gunther Schuller's Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee hadn't come first. Perhaps the seven-part division, the twittering music, the jazz and other similarities are coincidental, but I found myself comparing Colgrass to Schuller with a generally bad effect on Colgrass.

DIFFERENT EXPERIENCE

I also found myself marvelling again at the quality of the sound, as lean and lithe in this piece as an erect dancer, as earthworms in newly-turned topsoil, as—where are those children?

Stravinsky's Firebird ballet music closed the evening triumphantly. This was not the conventional set of excerpts but one Leinsdorf made himself in order to give lesser-known gems like the Golden Apples Dance a hearing.

It was a different kind of orchestral experience from those we normally have at the Academy, a different approach to music we know, the expression of a different ideal of orchestral sound.

And vive all those differences!

The Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 522,941 SUN. 956,206
APR 12 1967

At the Academy

Boston Symphony Brings New Work to Phila.

By DANIEL WEBSTER
Of The Inquirer Staff

The Boston Symphony Orchestra brought a fresh, new work when it played Tuesday at the Academy of Music, its first concert here in three seasons.

Erich Leinsdorf conducted a program of Beethoven, Strauss, Stravinsky and Michael Colgrass. The Orchestra played with its trademarks showing: The excellent winds and vivid brasses, the strings, lighter than is the Philadelphia custom. Leinsdorf enforced a firm precision on the ensemble, sometimes at the expense of vitality.

The Colgrass work, new this year, is entitled "As Quiet As" and seeks to match in sound the word game in which metaphors are suggested to express complete stillness.

Its seven sections, each completing the metaphor, are "A Leaf Turning Colors," "An Uninhabited Creek," "An Ant Walking," "Children Sleeping," "Time Passing," "A Soft Rainfall" and "The First Star Coming Out."

His work is tone painting, and well carried off. In six of the sections, Colgrass never raises his voice above a murmur, but maintains interest through the tensions of his harmonic structure, the piquancy of his orchestra and the tightness of his ideas.

He contrasts motionless sections, in which sound is piled on sound until it has an electronic whine, with wispy active moments. It is tightly confined in the small dynamic range and nearly succeeds in carrying off the whole idea. There are moments, however, when inspiration flags, especially in "A Child Sleeping," when some of the cliches of background music emerge as the composer tries styles from Beethoven to jazz. It falls from naivete to banality.

The section on time was more ambitious, and part of it required two conductors. Assistant Charles Wilson stood to direct the violins in one tempo while Leinsdorf moved the rest of the orchestra in a broader tempo.

The climax of the work developed in the final section in which a long crescendo produced the only loud moment, which gave way to wind bells and a final wisp of string sound.

The work is immediately enjoyable, slight, but full of craftmanship.

Elsewhere in the program, Leinsdorf led a performance which rarely had wings, although its precision and lucidity were admirable. His own suite from Stravinsky's "The Firebird," stressed the lyrical passages while the composer's own suites make a sharper, more brilliant display.

While the suite had the interest of novelty, its performance was only fitfully engaging, and even the crash at the opening of the infernal dance was less than explosive.

The Beethoven Symphony No. 2 and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" both showed the Orchestra winds (is there a better flutist anywhere?) and brass to full advantage.

The Sunday Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
SUN. 717,559
APR 9 1967

Boston Symphony Returns

THE Boston Symphony returns to the Academy of Music, with its conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, on the podium for a performance this Tuesday evening. The Bostonians were last heard here at the Academy three years ago in the spring of 1964.

Leinsdorf, who has been at the helm in Boston since 1962, will offer the first local performance of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

The piece was inspired by the answers of fourth-grade children asked by their teacher to complete the sentence "Let's be as quiet as . . ." From many answers published in a New York newspaper in 1961, Colgrass chose seven that seemed to make a nature study as a child might perceive it. Music was written to suggest the moods of the answers.

Colgrass dedicated the work "to children, with love and with hope." It was premiered at Tanglewood last summer.

Leinsdorf completes his program on Tuesday night with Beethoven's Second Symphony, Stravinsky's "Firebird" Suite, and Richard Strauss' tone-poem, "Till Eulenspiegel."

The Boston Symphony, appearing here as an All Star-Forum event, was founded in 1881 by a Boston banker, Henry Lee Higginson. Its conductors have included Serge Koussevitsky, Pierre Monteux and Charles Munch.

Erich Leinsdorf is the orchestra's 11th conductor, the third in 38 years.

COURIER-POST
CAMDEN, N. J.
D. 99,700 SUN. 99,295
APR 10 1967

ERICH LEINSDORF

Boston Orchestra In Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA—The Boston Symphony returns to the Academy of Music tomorrow after more than a three-year absence, for a concert on the All-Star Forum Series.

Beginning at 8:30 p.m., the Symphony will present the first performance locally of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As," which was inspired by fourth grade children asked to complete the sentence "Let's be as quiet as . . .".

Under Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra will also perform Beethoven's Second Symphony, Stravinsky's "Firebird" Suite and Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel."

MERCHANTVILLE, N. J.
COMMUNITY NEWS
W. 3,500
MAR 30 1967

Academy Lists Symphony

The Boston Symphony, in its Academy of Music concert April 11, will present the first performance locally of Michael Colgrass' "As Quiet As."

Under Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra will also perform Beethoven's Second Symphony, Stravinsky's "Firebird" Suite and Richard Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel." The Boston Symphony is returning to Philadelphia after a three-year absence, appearing on the All Star-Forum Series.

123

PHILHARMONIC #5 APR. 12 + 14

14

music

BSO ON WEBERN

The performance of Anton Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Friday night at Philharmonic Hall was cool; clear, and shimmeringly accomplished. Leinsdorf's notorious propensity for slavishly following the printed notes at the expense of all the essential "extras" that the performing artist must bring to music here worked with great success. For Webern, perhaps more than any other major composer, scored the dynamics and balances of the performance right onto the page, leaving very little if any margin for error or "interpretation."

And so, given a conductor of Leinsdorf's meticulous literalness and an orchestra with the polish, technical level, and performance taste of the Bostonians, it was not surprising that the Six Pieces were heard plain and beautiful. The textures at the beginning were soft and luminous, with the solo instrumentalists bringing off miracles of touch and breath control. Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein's solos were violin playing at its most ravishing. And the fourth piece, with its almost inaudible bells growing and mutating into a tremendous roar of percussion, gave proof once again that Webern, for all his concision and fantastic manipulation of single tone colors, was far from being just a miniaturist.

Friday's program also included a big-sounding, extroverted (for Mr. Leinsdorf) performance of Gunther Schuller's "Diptych" for brass quintet and orchestra, a reorchestration of its first version for wind quintet and band. The first of the two sections was nicely poised in its balance of contrasting textures (sort of a not unattractive Kodachrome of Webern). The second half was a jaunty, jazzy ride into a brash, bright brick wall of a clustered chord.

A prosaically Leinsdorfian "Firebird" Suite and "Till Eulenspiegel" and a sunny, chamber-sized Haydn Symphony No. 13 completed the concert.

On Saturday, the conductor and his orchestra moved to Carnegie Hall for a mightily full-blooded p[illegible] writing in the first movement [illegible] the more absorbing for its allusion to "Parsifal," the fierce, chugging principal rhythmic motif of the Scherzo, and the soaring, spacious Adagio were powerful stuff.

The program began with a marvelous, jingle-bells performance of the Overture to Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio" and continued with a rather limp and sometimes sloppy glide-through by Evelyne Crochet of Mozart's K. 456 Piano Concerto.

—Leighton Kerner

12

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
APR 13 1967 Buffalo

12

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
APR 14 1967 Buffalo

TIMES (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 635,600
APR 14 1967 New England Newsclip

BOSTONIANS PLAY OLD AND THE NEW

Haydn's No. 13, Schuller's 'Diptych' on Program

By THEODORE STRONGIN

As far as familiarity is concerned, Stravinsky and Richard Strauss were the "old masters" on the Boston Symphony program Wednesday night at Philharmonic Hall. Haydn, along with Gunther Schuller and Anton Webern, fell into the "rarely heard" bracket.

All of which made for a fresh and unhackneyed evening. Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted, began with Haydn's Symphony No. 13 in D, an early work and a zestful one. Controlling his orchestra while seated at the harpsichord, Mr. Leinsdorf led a relaxed performance. A glowing and refined cello solo by Jules Eskin graced the second movement. The others glinted with typical Haydnesque high spirts.

The symphony has a larger-than-usual complement of winds and horns. They added color and breadth to the orchestral sound.

Schuller's "Diptych" for Brass Quintet was originally written for quintet and band, and as such was heard here on March 11, 1965. It works equally well for orchestra, with distinct, sharp-edged masses of dissonant sound rubbing against each other in the first movement; and with jazzlike motor propulsion in the second.

The expert soloists were Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin, trumpeters, James Stagliano, French horn player, William Gibson, trombonist and Chester Schmitz, tuba player. The audience found Mr. Schmitz amusing while he inserted and removed an oversized mute from the gargantuan maw of his instrument.

Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel" was given in orderly fashion, with inner parts easy to hear. The big Boston sound was a comfort. Mr. Leinsdorf was even more orderly and careful in Webern's abbreviated and magical Six Pieces for Orchestra (Op.6).

Stravinsky's Suite from "The Firebird" was treated like the other music of the evening. Mr. Leinsdorf did not make it overly exciting or electric, but, conducting with patience, he allowed its intrinsic values to come to the surface. The orchestra sounded splendid.

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 31,450
MAR 31 1967 Buffalo

Boston Symphony At Carnegie Hall Fri., April 15

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf will play its concluding concert this season at Carnegie Hall Saturday evening, April 15 at 8:30 o'clock. The soloist will be Evelyne Crochet, the French pianist who will be making her orchestral debut in New York, having been heard here previously only in recital.

The program, on April 15 will open with Overture from Mozart's "Abduction from the Sera- Piano Concerto in B-flat Major, K. 456. The concert will conclude with the monumental Bruckner Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, of which only three movements were finished by the composer.

Erich Leinsdorf, the Music Director and Conductor of the Boston Symphony is now finishing his fifth season with the Orchestra.

Remaining tickets for the Boston Symphony's concluding concert, priced from $7.50 to $2.50 can be bought at the Carnegie Hall box office.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 635,619
APR 14 1967 Buffalo

RUTH G. DAVIS

Saying Thanks With Flowers

MEMBERS OF THE WOMEN'S Committee for the Academy Orchestra Series handed out flowers last night at the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music. The flowers were given to those who renewed subscriptions for next year or took out new subscriptions. Mrs. Andrew L. Gomory, chairman of the committee, wearing an evening gown of wine red French brocade, expressed the appreciation of the committee when she presented Eric Leinsdorf, the conductor, with a bouquet of red roses.

12

WORLD JOURNAL TRIBUNE e)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 13 1967 New England Newsclip

World Journal Tribune, New York, Thursday, April 13, 1967

Six Little Works by Webern Provide a Great Experience

By ALAN RICH

ANTON WEBERN'S Six Pieces for Orchestra, which the Boston Symphony played in Philharmonic Hall last night, is still one of the great experiences in the music of this century. I say "still," because the set is now 58 years old, four years the senior of Stravinsky's "Sacre" and every bit as astounding.

Even though these tiny pieces—all six take up fewer than 100 bars—predate the maturation of the 12-tone manner, they are like nothing else in music.

Here is expressiveness stripped down to the most basic essential: the material that other composers might consider the mere letters of the musical alphabet, but somehow standing as pure and total thinking on their own as Webern fashioned them.

NO LESS CHILLING

The fourth of them, for example, is a Funeral March. Over a sustained mutter in the drums, a few solo winds and then the full wind band sketch bits and pieces of melody, mostly one or two notes by themselves.

But just these fragments seem to suggest the full essence of grief and solemnity; what Beethoven achieved in 15 minutes in his "Eroica," Webern achieves in a manner no less chilling, no less communicative, in about three.

This was the high point in what was otherwise a pretty ordinary program. There was another novelty, a Diptych by Gunther Schuller for brass quintet and orchestra, but this is rather below the best Schuller style.

It works up a nice sense of mystery in the first part, and moves toward a bright, jazzy outburst near the end, but on the whole it stands as a fairly academic and unsubtle piece. This was probably dictated by the circumstances, since it was originally written for a college band.

HAYDN FOR OPENER

Erich Leinsdorf began the program with another of the unusual early Haydn symphonies he has been bringing out from time to time. But, aside from the fact that the finale uses the same motive that Mozart used in his "Jupiter," Haydn's Symphony No. 13 is cut from the standard cloth of the rococo manner.

Leinsdorf might have helped its sound somewhat by using fewer strings. He conducted from the harpsichord, although he struck chords on the instrument no more than about 10 times in all.

Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and a suite from Stravinsky's "Firebird" filled out the program, both performed with neatness, good orchestral balance, remarkable virtuosity from solo winds and horn, and an almost total lack of wit and color.

TIMES (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 635,600
APR 17 1967 New England Newsclip

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director, Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MUSIC CLUBS MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
5 TI. A YR. 5,500
APR 19 1967 Buffalo

Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf, Conductor, will give a concert at Philharmonic Hall Friday evening.

Mozart and Bruckner Close the Boston Symphony's Season Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its local season Saturday night at Carnegie Hall with its fourth concert of music from "The Viennese School," this time the composers were opposite extremes with two works by Mozart and one by Bruckner.

The Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" raised the curtain on the Mozart half. The bright, bubbling music was neatly played, with Erich Leinsdorf placing emphasis on clarity and rhythmic precision. The tinkling triangles and jangling sleigh bells added sparkle.

Evelyne Crochet, a pianist born in Paris and now in residence at Rutgers University, was soloist in the mighty Concerto in B flat (K. 456).

The performance was lightweight, however—pretty rather than profound. The G minor slow movement can stand intellectual probing and solid tone. Miss Crochet's tone was smooth, fluent and attractive but her articulation was generally too soft to act as a strong foil to the orchestra. The phrasings were romantically genteel and tended to become inaudible at endings. Mr. Leinsdorf gave considerate support. If this performance lacked the specific gravity needed, however, it was at least quite charming and musical.

Bruckner's unfinished Symphony No. 9 in D minor found Mr. Leinsdorf in home territory. He revels in this kind of massive music, conducting without score with great authority. The orchestra responded with intense playing, especially that long violin melody on the G string which opens the third and last movement.

The big-scaled performance was impressive. One almost forgave Bruckner his four-measure-phrase-mongering and borrowings from Beethoven's Ninth, the Sword movement from Wagner's "Siegfried" and the Dresden Amen (Mendelssohn's "Reformation Symphony" and Wagner's "Parsifal").

HOWARD KLEIN.

123

PHILHARMONIC #5 APR. 12 + 14

14

BSO ON WEBERN

The performance of Anton Webern's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Friday night at Philharmonic Hall was cool, clear, and shimmeringly accomplished. Leinsdorf's notorious propensity for slavishly following the printed notes at the expense of all the essential "extras" that the performing artist must bring to music here worked with great success. For Webern, perhaps more than any other major composer, scored the dynamics and balances of the performance right onto the page, leaving very little if any margin for error or "interpretation."

And so, given a conductor of Leinsdorf's meticulous literalness and an orchestra with the polish, technical level, and performance taste of the Bostonians, it was not surprising that the Six Pieces were heard plain and beautiful. The textures at the beginning were soft and luminous, with the solo instrumentalists bringing off miracles of touch and breath control. Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein's solos were violin playing at its most ravishing. And the fourth piece, with its almost inaudible bells growing and mutating into a tremendous roar of percussion, gave proof once again that Webern, for all his concision and fantastic manipulation of single tone colors, was far from being just a miniaturist.

Friday's program also included a big-sounding, extroverted (for Mr. Leinsdorf) performance of Gunther Schuller's "Diptych" for brass quintet and orchestra, a reorchestration of its first version for wind quintet and band. The first of the two sections was nicely poised in its balance of contrasting textures (sort of a not unattractive Kodachrome of Webern). The second half was a jaunty, jazzy ride into a brash, bright brick wall of a clustered chord.

A prosaically Leinsdorfian "Firebird" Suite and "Till Eulenspiegel" and a sunny, chamber-sized Haydn Symphony No. 13 completed the concert.

On Saturday, the conductor and his orchestra moved to Carnegie Hall for a mightily full-blooded pi[illegible] writing in the first movement as the more absorbing for its allusion to "Parsifal," the fierce, chugging principal rhythmic motif of the Scherzo, and the soaring, spacious Adagio were powerful stuff.

The program began with a marvelous, jingle-bells performance of the Overture to Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio" and continued with a rather limp and sometimes sloppy glide-through by Evelyne Crochet of Mozart's K. 456 Piano Concerto.

—Leighton Kerner

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
APR 13 1967

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
APR 14 1967

TIMES (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 635,600
APR 14 1967
New England Newsclip

BOSTONIANS PLAY OLD AND THE NEW

Haydn's No. 13, Schuller's 'Diptych' on Program

By THEODORE STRONGIN

As far as familiarity is concerned, Stravinsky and Richard Strauss were the "old masters" on the Boston Symphony program Wednesday night at Philharmonic Hall. Haydn, along with Gunther Schuller and Anton Webern, fell into the "rarely heard" bracket.

All of which made for a fresh and unhackneyed evening. Erich Leinsdorf, who conducted, began with Haydn's Symphony No. 13 in D, an early work and a zestful one. Controlling his orchestra while seated at the harpsichord, Mr. Leinsdorf led a relaxed performance. A glowing and refined cello solo by Jules Eskin graced the second movement. The others glinted with typical Haydnesque high spirts.

The symphony has a larger-than-usual complement of winds and horns. They added color and breadth to the orchestral sound.

Schuller's "Diptych" for Brass Quintet was originally written for quintet and band, and as such was heard here on March 11, 1965. It works equally well for orchestra, with distinct, sharp-edged masses of dissonant sound rubbing against each other in the first movement; and with jazzlike motor propulsion in the second.

The expert soloists were Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin, trumpeters, James Stagliano, French horn player, William Gibson, trombonist and Chester Schmitz, tuba player. The audience found Mr. Schmitz amusing while he inserted and removed an oversized mute from the gargantuan maw of his instrument.

Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel" was given in orderly fashion, with inner parts easy to hear. The big Boston sound was a comfort. Mr. Leinsdorf was even more orderly and careful in Webern's abbreviated and magical Six Pieces for Orchestra (Op.6).

Stravinsky's Suite from "The Firebird" was treated like the other music of the evening. Mr. Leinsdorf did not make it overly exciting or electric, but, conducting with patience, he allowed its intrinsic values to come to the surface. The orchestra sounded splendid.

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 31,450
MAR 31 1967

Boston Symphony At Carnegie Hall Fri., April 15

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf will play its concluding concert this season at Carnegie Hall Saturday evening, April 15 at 8:30 o'clock. The soloist will be Evelyne Crochet, the French pianist who will be making her orchestral debut in New York, having been heard here previously only in recital.

The program, on April 15 will open with Overture from Mozart's "Abduction from the Sera- Piano Concerto in B-flat Major, K. 456. The concert will conclude with the monumental Bruckner Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, of which only three movements were finished by the composer.

Erich Leinsdorf, the Music Director and Conductor of the Boston Symphony is now finishing this fifth season with the Orchestra.

Remaining tickets for the Boston Symphony's concluding concert, priced from $7.50 to $2.50 can be bought at the Carnegie Hall box office.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 635,619
APR 14 1967

RUTH G. DAVIS

Saying Thanks With Flowers

MEMBERS OF THE WOMEN'S Committee for the Academy Orchestra Series handed out flowers last night at the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music. The flowers were given to those who renewed subscriptions for next year or took out new subscriptions. Mrs. Andrew L. Gomory, chairman of the committee, wearing an evening gown of wine red French brocade, expressed the appreciation of the committee when she presented Eric Leinsdorf, the conductor, with a bouquet of red roses.

MUSIC CLUBS MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
5 TI. A YR. 5,500
APR 1967

Erich Leinsdorf, Music Director, Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf, Conductor, will give a concert at Philharmonic Hall Friday evening.

WORLD JOURNAL TRIBUNE e)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
APR 13 1967
New England Newsclip

World Journal Tribune, New York, Thursday, April 13, 1967

Six Little Works by Webern Provide a Great Experience

By ALAN RICH

ANTON WEBERN'S Six Pieces for Orchestra, which the Boston Symphony played in Philharmonic Hall last night, is still one of the great experiences in the music of this century. I say "still," because the set is now 58 years old, four years the senior of Stravinsky's "Sacre" and every bit as astounding.

Even though these tiny pieces—all six take up fewer than 100 bars—predate the maturation of the 12-tone manner, they are like nothing else in music.

Here is expressiveness stripped down to the most basic essential: the material that other composers might consider the mere letters of the musical alphabet, but somehow standing as pure and total thinking on their own as Webern fashioned them.

NO LESS CHILLING

The fourth of them, for example, is a Funeral March. Over a sustained mutter in the drums, a few solo winds and then the full wind band sketch bits and pieces of melody, mostly one or two notes by themselves.

But just these fragments seem to suggest the full essence of grief and solemnity; what Beethoven achieved in 15 minutes in his "Eroica," Webern achieves in a manner no less chilling, no less communicative, in about three.

This was the high point in what was otherwise a pretty ordinary program. There was another novelty, a Diptych by Gunther Schuller for brass quintet and orchestra, but this is rather below the best Schuller style.

It works up a nice sense of mystery in the first part, and moves toward a bright, jazzy outburst near the end, but on the whole it stands as a fairly academic and unsubtle piece. This was probably dictated by the circumstances, since it was originally written for a college band.

HAYDN FOR OPENER

Erich Leinsdorf began the program with another of the unusual early Haydn symphonies he has been bringing out from time to time. But, aside from the fact that the finale uses the same motive that Mozart used in his "Jupiter," Haydn's Symphony No. 13 is cut from the standard cloth of the rococo manner.

Leinsdorf might have helped its sound somewhat by using fewer strings. He conducted from the harpsichord, although he struck chords on the instrument no more than about 10 times in all.

Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" and a suite from Stravinsky's "Firebird" filled out the program, both performed with neatness, good orchestral balance, remarkable virtuosity from solo winds and horn, and an almost total lack of wit and color.

TIMES (m)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 635,600
APR 17 1967
New England Newsclip

Mozart and Bruckner Close the Boston Symphony's Season Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its local season Saturday night at Carnegie Hall with its fourth concert of music from "The Viennese School." This time the composers were opposite extremes with two works by Mozart and one by Bruckner.

The Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" raised the curtain on the Mozart half. The bright, bubbling music was neatly played, with Erich Leinsdorf placing emphasis on clarity and rhythmic precision. The tinkling triangles and jangling sleigh bells added sparkle.

Evelyne Crochet, a pianist born in Paris and now in residence at Rutgers University, was soloist in the mighty Concerto in B flat (K. 456).

The performance was lightweight, however—pretty rather than profound. The G minor slow movement can stand intellectual probing and solid tone. Miss Crochet's tone was smooth, fluent and attractive but her articulation was generally too soft to act as a strong foil to the orchestra. The phrasings were romantically genteel and tended to become inaudible at endings. Mr. Leinsdorf gave considerate support. If this performance lacked the specific gravity needed, however, it was at least quite charming and musical.

Bruckner's unfinished Symphony No. 9 in D minor found Mr. Leinsdorf in home territory. He revels in this kind of massive music, conducting without score with great authority. The orchestra responded with intense playing, especially that long violin melody on the G string which opens the third and last movement.

The big-scaled performance was impressive. One almost forgave Bruckner his four-measure-phrase-mongering and borrowings from Beethoven's Ninth, the Sword movement from Wagner's "Siegfried" and the Dresden Amen (Mendelssohn's "Reformation Symphony" and Wagner's "Parsifal").

HOWARD KLEIN.

BROOKLYN #3 APR. 13

NEW YORK, N. Y.
VILLAGE VOICE
W. 35,500

APR 6 1967

Boston Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf will perform Gunther Schuller's "Diptych," Brahms's "Symphony No. 1," and Mozart's "Piano Concerto in B major," with pianist Evelyn Crochet on Thursday April 13, at 8 p. m. at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Tickets are $3 to $7.

DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
D. 2,097,578 SUN. 3,070,836

APR 3 1967

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at 8:30 P.M. April 13 in a program that includes Schuller's "Diptych," Brahms' "Symphony No. One" and Mozart's "Piano Concerto in B Major," with Evelyn Crochet as soloist.

Violinist Nadia Koutzen, a Leventritt Foundation winner, will perform April 14 and Theodore Bikel will be the attraction the following night.

NEW YORK
AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 31,450

MAR 22 1967

Boston Symphony To Perform New Work By Gunther Schuller

Gunther Schuller, whose opera, The Visitation, will be performed in New York this summer by the Hamburg Opera Company which commissioned it, has just re-written for symphony orchestra his Diptych for Brass Quintet and Band. Entitled, Diptych, it will be performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on April 13th at 8:30 P.M.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be the first to perform the newly prepared version for brass quintet and symphony orchestra. Also featured on the program will be the Mozart Piano Concerto in B major, with Evelyn Crochet as soloist, and the Brahms Symphony No. 1.

Under a recently inaugurated policy, telephone reservations will be accepted. Further information is available from the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Avenue, 11217, ST 3-6700.

Long Island Press
JAMAICA, N. Y.
D. 321,828 SUN. 377,402

APR 11 1967

Boston Concert In Brooklyn

The distinguished American composer, Gunther Schuller, and the French pianist, Evelyne Crochet, will be featured in the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday at 8:30 p.m. at the concert of the Bostonians' 79th consecutive season in Brooklyn.

Miss Crochet will be the soloist in the Mozart Piano Concerto in B-flat Major.

New York will be the first to hear Gunther Schuller's new Diptych for Brass Quintet and Symphony Orchestra when it is performed by the Bostonians. The Quintet—two trumpets, a horn, a trombone and a tuba—will be supported by the remaining 101 instrumentalists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this jazz-influenced composition.

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

APR 14 1967
New England Newsclip

Leinsdorf Hurt, Wilson Conducts

NEW YORK, N. Y. — Charles Wilson, 29-year-old assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, was called in to conduct the orchestra on an hour-and-a-quarter notice at Brooklyn Academy tonight when Erich Leinsdorf, the orchestra's music director, suffered an eye injury.

While getting into his car outside the Carlyle Hotel to make the trip to Brooklyn, Leinsdorf struck his head on a door jamb and suffered a cut in the corner of his eye.

Wilson, who had the night off, was visiting friends in Manhattan. Thomas Perry, Boston's manager, reached him by phone at 7:15, and he rushed to the Academy. He presided over the first half of the concert, Gunther Schuller's "Diptych" for brass quintet and orchestra, and the Mozart Piano Concerto in B Flat (K456) with Evelyne Crochet as soloist.

Leinsdorf's physician patched up the eye. No stitches were necessary and the conductor arrived at the Academy during intermission and took over the second half of the program: Brahm's First Symphony.

(C) New York Times News Service.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN CANARSIE DIGEST
Saturday, April 22, 1967

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 15,500

APR 22 1967

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CANARSIE DIGEST
W. 15,500

APR 21 1967

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,000

APR 22 1967

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

APR 22 1967
New England Newsclip

Underlites

by CHARLES REICHENTHAL

The Boston Symphony Orchestra came to the Brooklyn Academy of Music last Sat. night, and the evening had its share of suspense and surprises. There is, of course, no surprise in the fact that what is possibly the finest orchestra in the country turned in a towering performance. But the night read as if it were a movie script.

A brief announcement was made prior to the opening number that conductor, Erich Leinsdorf, had hurt his head on a car door while en route to the Academy. Consequently, assistant conductor, Charles Wilson, would take the podium.

There were audible sighs in the audience. No one disputes the greatness of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but everyone, of course, wanted to watch the Leinsdorf conducting magic in action.

To open the program, the orchestra performed Gunther Schuller's "Diptych for Brass Quintet and Orchestra," first performed in 1965 at the New York State Theatre at Lincoln Center. The work is made up of two contrasting movements. The program notes describe it: "The first of these, an adagio, explores large-surfaced textures in the orchestra, pitting these occasionally against the solo brass quintet. In the lively second part, an initial statement by the brass quintet is recapitulated two further times in almost refrain-like fashion."

The notes were helpful, because the playful-sounds of the Schuller avant-garde work often seemed confusing. Although it was quite different, one remembered the Cage music used for the recent Merce Cunningham Ballet Co. performance.

But the "Diptych" rendering was short and expert. What followed, however, overshadowed it by leaps and bounds.

With Evelyne Crochet as soloist, the orchestra moved into Mozart's Piano Concert in B flat Major, K. 456. Miss Crochet seems far too lovely a lady to be a accomplished pianist, but an accomplished pianist she is! She performed the beautiful work with both precision and exquisitely controlled emotion. The ovation was huge. Miss Crochet had conquered Brooklyn.

The remarkable pianist had almost made the audience forget that Leinsdorf was not on hand. But the movie script was not over. After the intermission, the Orchestra returned. And, to almost everyone's happy surprise, Leinsdorf bounded onto the stage. No announcement was needed. He was recognized by everyone, and the moment of electric love between audience and conductor was never more vividly shown.

Ever the trouper, Leinsdorf mounted the podium, raised the baton, and led the Boston Symphony Orchestra into Symphony No. 1, Opus 668 by Johannes Brahms. What happened next was magic. It may have been the feelings of the audience, or the love of the musicians for their valiant conductor, or the genius of Leinsdorf himself. Whatever it was, the Boston Symphony Orchestra moved into the Symphony with splendor of performance seldom matched in its history.

The thrill of seeing a great symphonic performance is a never-to-be-forgotten experience for any lover of music. None at the Academy would ever forget that Brahms performance. Applause was deafening at the conclusion. Leinsdorf, injured or uninjured, is our foremost conductor. Bravo.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

FLATBUSH LIFE
Saturday, April 1, 1967

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN KINGS COURIER
April 1, 1967

DAILY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
D. 2,097,578 SUN. 3,070,836

APR 13 1967

Boston Symphony Here

French pianist Evelyne Crochet and U.S. composer Gunther Schuller will be featured in the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert tonight at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette St. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN CANARSIE DIGEST
Saturday, April 1, 1967

Brooklyn Academy of Music

"WITNESS FOR THE PROSECUTION"—production of The American Academy of Dramatic Arts' Players on Tour Co. Agatha Christie's famed play of murder and suspense. Fri., Mar. 31, 8 p.m., Adm.-$2.00.

MERCE CUNNINGHAM AND DANCE CO. Sat., Apr. 1, 8:30 p.m. Orch.-$3.50, $4.00, $4.50. Mezz.-$2.50, $3.50, $4.00. Balcony-$1.50, $2.50. Boxes-$2.50, $4.00, $4.50.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. Thurs., Apr. 13, 8:30 p.m. Program includes: Gunther Schuller's "Diptych for Grass Quintet and Band"; works by Mozart and Brahms. Telephone reservations accepted. Call: ST 3-6700.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

FLATBUSH LIFE
Saturday, April 8, 1967

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BROOKLYN KINGS COURIER
Saturday, April 8, 1967

Brooklyn Academy of Music

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Erich Leinsdorf, conducting. Schuller, "Diptych"; Brahms, Symphony No. 1; Mozart, Piano Concerto in B major, with Evelyn Crochet, soloist. Thurs., Apr. 13, 8:30 p.m. Tickets range from $3.00-$7.00. Call ST 3-6700.

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836

MAR 19 1967

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836

MAR 12 1967

The Boston Symphony will be the first to perform the newly prepared version of "Diptych" for brass quintet and symphony orchestra. Also on the program will be the "Mozart Piano Concerto in B Major," with Evelyn Crochet as soloist, and the "Brahms Symphony No. 1."

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,000

APR 8 1967

Another giant event is coming up at the Academy on Thurs., Apr. 13, 8:30 p.m., when the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf. The program will include Gunther Schuller's "Diptych for Brass Quintet and Band." It should not be missed. Call ST 3-6700, and make those reservations now. Telephone reservations will be accepted.

125

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NEW YORK NEWS
Saturday, April 15, 1967

Brooklyn Honors the Maestro

(NEWS foto by Dan Sforza)

As a tribute to his artistry, Erich Leinsdorf, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, received a bouquet of roses after his last per director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of Music. Mrs. Andrew L. Gomory, chairman of the Brooklyn Women's Committee, for the Baton Symphony, presents the roses as Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, looks on.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 635,619
APR 12 1967

Schuller to Lead Symphony Here

American composer Gunther Schuller and French pianist, Evelyne Crochet, will be featured in the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow at 8:30 p. m. at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct this final concert of the Bostonians' 79th consecutive season in Brooklyn.

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 31,450
APR 11 1967

The distinguished American composer, Gunther Schuller, and the French pianist, Evelyne Crochet (above), will be featured in the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Thursday, April 13th, at 8:30 P.M. at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct this final concert of the Bostonians' 79th consecutive season in Brooklyn. Miss Crochet will be the soloist in the Mozart "Piano Concerto in B-flat Major."

CARNEGIE #6 APR. 15

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 635,619
APR 17 1967

Evelyne Crochet—piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night

Lewis in Debut At Carnegie Hall

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Two orchestral concerts over the weekend juxtaposed a seasoned and an unseasoned conductor. The former, Erich Leinsdorf, led the Boston Symphony in the final program of its Viennese School series in Carnegie Hall Saturday night. The latter, Henry Lewis, made a debut as guest conductor with the American Symphony in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon.

The Mozart-Bruckner program of the Bostonians featured Bruckner's Ninth Symphony. Leinsdorf's effective presentation again substantiated the increasing recognition of Bruckner's stature through the clarity and tonal splendor of the performance. The consequent grandeur reflected both the notable discipline of the orchestral playing and the intellectual control of the conductor.

That this music could express more heart defines an emotional restraint often attributed to Leinsdorf and present in spite of an impressive interpretation. The highlight of the performance came in the Scherzo where all the fine qualities of Leinsdorf's conducting fused into stunning impact, the secret of which was rhythmic eclat. The final Adagio, which probes the soul, called for more spiritual communication to move the listener deeply.

Whatever the limitations attributed to Bruckner: when the music receives discerning treatment, they diminish in importance. Such was the verdict on this occasion, even though the brasses in general sounded too bright. The dramatic power of this late Romanticist projects its own contribution to our day, a fact of which Leinsdorf seems quite aware.

In playing Mozart's Piano Concerto K.456, the young French pianist Evelyne Crochet proved herself facile both technically and musically. Her straight-forward, non-elegant, somewhat dry-toned performance grew progressively more interesting movement by movement. This experience was pleasant rather than outstanding.

NEAT, PRECISE

Leinsdorf opened the concert with Mozart's Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio." Characteristically, he reduced the orchestra and pursued his meticulous way to insure neat, precise, alive performance.

With Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 for standard repertory, Lewis put himself on the spot during the American Symphony program. In spite of obvious musical talent, emotional drive, and a keen rhythmic sense, he needs more directive to hold performances together.

The Beethoven, for instance, sounded like an inflated rhythmic piece as he shifted into overdrive and leaned heavily on bigness. The Sibelius suffered from accentuation of beat without any intensity growing from it. The tendency to rush climaxes depleted the natural intensity of the music; thus only surface values came through.

The first New York performance of William Kraft's Concerto for Four Percussion Players and Orchestra drew these members of the orchestra into the limelight.

Thus Elayne Jones, Paul Price, Neal Boyar, and Alan Silverman made much of their opportunities; but the composer let his dwindle into sound effects.

Featuring the glockenspiel and the drums, the piece ranges through the whole orchestra almost as much as highlighting the xylophone and vibraphone. A penchant for syncopation made comparisons with popular combos inevitable, chiefly to their advantage. Here again talent veered in search of further discipline.

The concert began with Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture led conscientiously in lively fashion. Lewis expresses himself as much in twisting his body and swinging his arms as he does in beating time.

Perhaps more straight-forward conducting would knit performances better. The American Symphony players showed some uncertainty in following him though they handled themselves admirably. In general the concert did not quite jell.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
APR 17 1967

Mozart and Bruckner Close the Boston Symphony's Season Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its local season Saturday night at Carnegie Hall with its fourth concert of music from "The Viennese School." This time the composers were opposite extremes with two works by Mozart and one by Bruckner.

The Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" raised the curtain on the Mozart half. The bright, bubbling music was neatly played, with Erich Leinsdorf placing emphasis on clarity and rhythmic precision. The tinkling triangles and jangling sleigh bells added sparkle.

Evelyne Crochet, a pianist born in Paris and now in residence at Rutgers University, was soloist in the mighty Concerto in B flat (K. 456).

The performance was lightweight, however—pretty rather than profound. The G minor slow movement can stand intellectual probing and solid tone. Miss Crochet's tone was smooth, fluent and attractive but her articulation was generally too soft to act as a strong foil to the orchestra. The phrasings were romantically genteel and tended to become inaudible at endings. Mr. Leinsdorf gave considerate support. If this performance lacked the specific gravity needed, however, it was at least quite charming and musical.

Bruckner's unfinished Symphony No. 9 in D minor found Mr. Leinsdorf in home territory. He revels in this kind of massive music, conducting without score with great authority. The orchestra responded with intense playing, especially that long violin melody on the G string which opens the third and last movement.

The big-scaled performance was impressive. One almost forgave Bruckner his four-measure-phrase-mongering and borrowings from Beethoven's Ninth, the Sword movement from Wagner's "Siegfried" and the Dresden Amen (Mendelssohn's "Reformation Symphony" and Wagner's "Parsifal").

HOWARD KLEIN.

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836
APR 9 1967

Boston Windup

Erich Leinsdorf will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its final concert at Carnegie Hall Saturday evening. Soloist will be French pianist Evelyne Crochet, making her orchestral debut in New York.

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
APR 7 1967

Crochet to Play April 15

French pianist Evelyne Crochet will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the group's closing concert of the season April 15 at 8:30 in Carnegie Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the program which will include works by Bruckner, Mozart's Piano Concerto in B-flat major, K 456 and the Overture to "Abduction from the Seraglio."

NEWS (e)
NAUGATUCK, CONN.
CIRC. 5,100
APR 1 1967
New England Newsclip

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100
APR 1967

Boston Symphony Orchestra: Kubelik

It was cheering to discover, at Carnegie Hall on January 28, that the Boston Symphony Orchestra can still on occasion produce playing worthy of its tradition. Rafael Kubelik's reading of the opening work on the program, Haydn's superb, Beethovenish Symphony No. 102 in B flat major, was a trifle staid, but the ensemble was crisp, the textures were clean and, with the phenomenal Ghitalla playing first trumpet, the brass tone was free of the unnerving vibrato that has ruined some of the Orchestra's recent performances. This tonal firmness was even more salutary in Franck's Symphony. Here Kubelik's powerfully conceived interpretation, aided by whiplash attacks and sumptuous sonorities, went far toward reconciling me to the tedious ineptitudes of this jerry-built work.

Between the two symphonies, Bohuslav Martinu's Double Concerto for two string orchestras, piano, and timpani, completed in 1939, received what seems to have been only its second New York performance. Its neglect is regrettable: this is perhaps Martinu's finest work. The hectic figurations of the outer Allegros never degenerate into note-spinning, and their somber war shadows are intensified in a central slow movement of original sonority and compelling eloquence. This middle movement could with advantage have been taken a fraction slower, but the performance as a whole had just the right quality of tiptoed intensity, and the Orchestra's assistant conductor, Charles Wilson, dealt powerfully with the important piano part.

BERNARD JACOBSON

BRONXVILLE, N. Y.
REVIEW PRESS-REPORTER
W. 3,500
APR 13 1967

Newark Sunday News
NEWARK, N. J.
SUN. 427,240
APR 2 1967

Boston Symphony Features French Pianist At Carnegie Hall

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will play its concluding concert this season at Carnegie Hall, Saturday evening, April 15 at 8:30 p.m. The soloist will be Evelyne Crochet, the French pianist who will be making her orchestral debut in New York, having been heard here previously only in recital.

The program on April 15 will open with the Overture from Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio" and will continue with Piano Concerto in B-flat Major, K. 456. The concert will conclude with the monumental Bruckner Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, of which only three movements were finished by the composer.

Erich Leinsdorf, the Music Director and Conductor of the Boston Symphony is now finishing his fifth season with the Orchestra.

A native of Paris, Evelyne Crochet, the concert's soloist, won the coveted First Prize at the Conservatoire in 1954. After studies with Edwin Fischer, she came to the United States to work with Rudolf Serkin, who had invited her to America for that purpose. She has concertized in the U.S. with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and other major orchestras as well as in recital throughout Europe and North and South America. She is also presently artist-in-residence at Rutgers University.

Remaining tickets for the Boston Symphony's concluding concert, priced from $7.50 to $2.50 can be bought at the Carnegie Hall box office.

NEW YORK
AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 31,450
APR 6 1967

Boston Symphony At Carnegie Hall Sat., April 15

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will play its concluding concert this season at Carnegie Hall, Saturday evening, April 15 at 8:30 o'clock. The soloist will be Evelyne Crochet, the French pianist who will be making her orchestral debut in New York, having been heard here previously only in recital.

The program on April 15 will open with the Overture from Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio" and will continue with Piano Concerto in B-flat Major, K. 456. The concert will conclude with the monumental Bruckner Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, of which only three movements were finished by the composer.

CARNEGIE #6 APR. 15

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 635,619
APR 17 1967

Evelyne Crochet—piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night

Lewis in Debut At Carnegie Hall

By MILES KASTENDIECK

Two orchestral concerts over the weekend juxtaposed a seasoned and an unseasoned conductor. The former, Erich Leinsdorf, led the Boston Symphony in the final program of its Viennese School series in Carnegie Hall Saturday night. The latter, Henry Lewis, made a debut as guest conductor with the American Symphony in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon.

The Mozart-Bruckner program of the Bostonians featured Bruckner's Ninth Symphony. Leinsdorf's effective presentation again substantiated the increasing recognition of Bruckner's stature through the clarity and tonal splendor of the performance. The consequent grandeur reflected both the notable discipline of the orchestral playing and the intellectual control of the conductor.

That this music could express more heart defines an emotional restraint often attributed to Leinsdorf and present in spite of an impressive interpretation. The highlight of the performance came in the Scherzo where all the fine qualities of Leinsdorf's conducting fused into stunning impact, the secret of which was rhythmic eclat. The final Adagio, which probes the soul, called for more spiritual communication to move the listener deeply.

Whatever the limitations attributed to Bruckner: when the music receives discerning treatment, they diminish in importance. Such was the verdict on this occasion, even though the brasses in general sounded too bright. The dramatic power of this late Romanticist projects its own contribution to our day, a fact of which Leinsdorf seems quite aware.

In playing Mozart's Piano Concerto K.456, the young French pianist Evelyne Crochet proved herself facile both technically and musically. Her straight-forward, non-elegant, somewhat dry-toned performance grew progressively more interesting movement by movement. This experience was pleasant rather than outstanding.

NEAT, PRECISE

Leinsdorf opened the concert with Mozart's Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio." Characteristically, he reduced the orchestra and pursued his meticulous way to insure neat, precise, alive performance.

With Beethoven's Symphony No. 1 and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2 for standard repertory, Lewis put himself on the spot during the American Symphony program. In spite of obvious musical talent, emotional drive, and a keen rhythmic sense, he needs more directive to hold performances together.

The Beethoven, for instance, sounded like an inflated rhythmic piece as he shifted into overdrive and leaned heavily on bigness. The Sibelius suffered from accentuation of beat without any intensity growing from it. The tendency to rush climaxes depleted the natural intensity of the music; thus only surface values came through.

The first New York performance of William Kraft's Concerto for Four Percussion Players and Orchestra drew these members of the orchestra into the limelight.

Thus Elayne Jones, Paul Price, Neal Boyar, and Alan Silverman made much of their opportunities; but the composer let his dwindle into sound effects.

Featuring the glockenspiel and the drums, the piece ranges through the whole orchestra almost as much as highlighting the xylophone and vibraphone. A penchant for syncopation made comparisons with popular combos inevitable, chiefly to their advantage. Here again talent veered in search of further discipline.

The concert began with Cherubini's "Anacreon" Overture led conscientiously in lively fashion. Lewis expresses himself as much in twisting his body and swinging his arms as he does in beating time.

Perhaps more straight-forward conducting would knit performances better. The American Symphony players showed some uncertainty in following him though they handled themselves admirably. In general the concert did not quite jell.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000
APR 17 1967

Mozart and Bruckner Close the Boston Symphony's Season Here

The Boston Symphony Orchestra closed its local season Saturday night at Carnegie Hall with its fourth concert of music from "The Viennese School." This time the composers were opposite extremes with two works by Mozart and one by Bruckner.

The Overture to "The Abduction from the Seraglio" raised the curtain on the Mozart half. The bright, bubbling music was neatly played, with Erich Leinsdorf placing emphasis on clarity and rhythmic precision. The tinkling triangles and jangling sleigh bells added sparkle.

Evelyne Crochet, a pianist born in Paris and now in residence at Rutgers University, was soloist in the mighty Concerto in B flat (K. 456).

The performance was lightweight, however—pretty rather than profound. The G minor slow movement can stand intellectual probing and solid tone. Miss Crochet's tone was smooth, fluent and attractive but her articulation was generally too soft to act as a strong foil to the orchestra. The phrasings were romantically genteel and tended to become inaudible at endings. Mr. Leinsdorf gave considerate support. If this performance lacked the specific gravity needed, however, it was at least quite charming and musical.

Bruckner's unfinished Symphony No. 9 in D minor found Mr. Leinsdorf in home territory. He revels in this kind of massive music, conducting without score with great authority. The orchestra responded with intense playing, especially that long violin melody on the G string which opens the third and last movement.

The big-scaled performance was impressive. One almost forgave Bruckner his four-measure-phrase-mongering and borrowings from Beethoven's Ninth, the Sword movement from Wagner's "Siegfried" and the Dresden Amen (Mendelssohn's "Reformation Symphony" and Wagner's "Parsifal").

HOWARD KLEIN.

SUNDAY NEWS
NEW YORK'S PICTURE NEWSPAPER
SUN. 3,070,836
APR 9 1967

Boston Windup

Erich Leinsdorf will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its final concert at Carnegie Hall Saturday evening. Soloist will be French pianist Evelyne Crochet, making her orchestral debut in New York.

New York Post
D. 324,256 SUN. 243,637
APR 7 1967

Crochet to Play April 15

French pianist Evelyne Crochet will be the soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the group's closing concert of the season April 15 at 8:30 in Carnegie Hall. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the program which will include works by Bruckner, Mozart's Piano Concerto in B-flat major, K 456 and the Overture to "Abduction from the Seraglio."

NEWS (e)
NAUGATUCK, CONN.
CIRC. 5,100
APR 1 1967
New England Newsclip

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100
APR 1967

Boston Symphony Orchestra: Kubelik

It was cheering to discover, at Carnegie Hall on January 28, that the Boston Symphony Orchestra can still on occasion produce playing worthy of its tradition. Rafael Kubelik's reading of the opening work on the program, Haydn's superb, Beethovenish Symphony No. 102 in B flat major, was a trifle staid, but the ensemble was crisp, the textures were clean and, with the phenomenal Ghitalla playing first trumpet, the brass tone was free of the unnerving vibrato that has ruined some of the Orchestra's recent performances. This tonal firmness was even more salutary in Franck's Symphony. Here Kubelik's powerfully conceived interpretation, aided by whiplash attacks and sumptuous sonorities, went far toward reconciling me to the tedious ineptitudes of this jerry-built work.

Between the two symphonies, Bohuslav Martinu's Double Concerto for two string orchestras, piano, and timpani, completed in 1939, received what seems to have been only its second New York performance. Its neglect is regrettable: this is perhaps Martinu's finest work. The hectic figurations of the outer Allegros never degenerate into note-spinning, and their somber war shadows are intensified in a central slow movement of original sonority and compelling eloquence. This middle movement could with advantage have been taken a fraction slower, but the performance as a whole had just the right quality of tiptoed intensity, and the Orchestra's assistant conductor, Charles Wilson, dealt powerfully with the important piano part.

BERNARD JACOBSON

BRONXVILLE, N. Y.
REVIEW PRESS-REPORTER
W. 3,500
APR 13 1967

Newark Sunday News
NEWARK, N. J.
SUN. 427,240
APR 2 1967

Boston Symphony Features French Pianist At Carnegie Hall

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will play its concluding concert this season at Carnegie Hall, Saturday evening, April 15 at 8:30 p.m. The soloist will be Evelyne Crochet, the French pianist who will be making her orchestral debut in New York, having been heard here previously only in recital.

The program on April 15 will open with the Overture from Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio" and will continue with Piano Concerto in B-flat Major, K. 456. The concert will conclude with the monumental Bruckner Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, of which only three movements were finished by the composer.

Erich Leinsdorf, the Music Director and Conductor of the Boston Symphony is now finishing his fifth season with the Orchestra.

A native of Paris, Evelyne Crochet, the concert's soloist, won the coveted First Prize at the Conservatoire in 1954. After studies with Edwin Fischer, she came to the United States to work with Rudolf Serkin, who had invited her to America for that purpose. She has concertized in the U.S. with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and other major orchestras as well as in recital throughout Europe and North and South America. She is also presently artist-in-residence at Rutgers University.

Remaining tickets for the Boston Symphony's concluding concert, priced from $7.50 to $2.50 can be bought at the Carnegie Hall box office.

NEW YORK
AND BROOKLYN DAILY
D. 31,450
APR 6 1967

Boston Symphony At Carnegie Hall Sat., April 15

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will play its concluding concert this season at Carnegie Hall, Saturday evening, April 15 at 8:30 o'clock. The soloist will be Evelyne Crochet, the French pianist who will be making her orchestral debut in New York, having been heard here previously only in recital.

The program on April 15 will open with the Overture from Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio" and will continue with Piano Concerto in B-flat Major, K. 456. The concert will conclude with the monumental Bruckner Symphony No. 9 in D Minor, of which only three movements were finished by the composer.

127

JOHN BROWNING

Chattanooga Daily Times
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
D. 52,372 SUN. 86,562
JAN 8 1967

John Browning to Play Sewanee Recital

Special to The Chattanooga Times

SEWANEE, Tenn.—American pianist John Browning will give a recital Friday at 8:15 p.m., CST (9:15 EST), in Guerry Hall at the University of the South, Sewanee. His program consists of five Scarlatti sonatas, Chopin's Third Sonata, Copland's Piano Variations, and Ravel's Gaspard de la Nuit.

The admiration Browning commands was dramatically underscored at the gala opening week of Lincoln Center in New York in 1962, when he created the world premier of Samuel Barber's First Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

To have been chosen to give the premiere of so eagerly awaited an addition to the piano concerto literature, and in circumstances that commanded the attention of the entire international music world, is testimony to the position Browning occupies in it.

By the end of the 1965-66 season, he had played the Barber work no less than 60 times in 44 cities, in a total of 15 countries, and had recorded it with the Cleveland Orchestra under the direction of George Szell. The fact that Barber received the 1963 Pulitzer Prize for Music for the work at a time when Browning alone had played it, gives added significance to the critical values attached to his interpretation.

Today, when recording companies put very few artists under contract, RCA-Victor has signed him to an exclusive contract. His first recording on that label, the Beethoven Diabelli Variations, 33 variations on a waltz by Diabelli, released in April, 1966, was hailed by the New York Times as "scholarly and sensitive." His recording of the Prokofiev Piano Concertos One and Two with Erick Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony, was released in the fall.

In the spring and early summer of 1965, Browning made an 11-week tour of the Soviet Union and western Europe as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra and its conductor, George Szell. Sponsored by the Cultural Presentations Program of the U.S. State Department, it covered key cities in the Soviet Union, Sweden, Poland, Germany, France, Czechoslovakia and England, as well as the festivals of Helsinki, Bergen, Vienna and Amsterdam.

Browning not only performed three concerti of sharply contrasting character—the Brahms D Minor, the Gershwin Concerto in F, and the Barber—but gave solo recitals in each city as well. United Press International in a report on his recital in Kiev, cabled: "The wildly enthusiastic audience of 2,000 did not stop applauding until officials closed his piano and began rolling it aside."

Of his Moscow performance of the Barber concerto, Izvestia, official Soviet newspaper, declared: "It was brilliantly performed by John Browning, who captivated the public with the temperament and virtuoso scope of his performance."

Browning made his orchestral debut at the age of 10 in his native Denver, playing Mozart's Coronation Concerto at a special concert with members of the Denver Symphony. Astonished interest at the success he scored spread through the U.S. music world, but instead of exploiting the opportunities that followed, Browning's parents decided he should be allowed to study and mature away from the limelight.

JOHN BROWNING

Shortly after that early Denver debut Browning's parents moved to Los Angeles, where he grew up and continued his piano studies with Lee Pattison, while attending public schools, and later, Occidental College. Eventually he went to New York to attend the Juilliard School of Music on scholarship, studying with Madame Rosina Lhevinne. In 1954 he won the Steinway Centennial Award, sponsored by the National Federation of Music Clubs, and in 1956, as winner of the coveted Edgar M. Leventritt Award the previous year, made a brilliant debut with the New York Philharmonic.

That same year he was heard for the first time in Europe, when he won the Gold Medal Award of the Concours International Musical, in Brussels—the famous competition founded by the late Queen Elizabeth of Belgium.

Winning the Brussels competition launched Browning as an international celebrity. Annual tours have followed which have taken him to other European countries, the Near East and Mexico, and wherever he has played there have been the same enthusiastic receptions. Said La Libre Belgique of one of his many Brussels recitals: "John Browning's musicality is exquisite, his technique simply prodigious. He plays with extraordinary virtuosity, sensitivity and penetrating intelligence. This performance places him among the very few truly great pianists."

When he went to Holland, De Tidji in Amsterdam offered another rave, heading his review, "Phenomenal Playing — A magnificent mind," and so wrote other papers whether in France, Italy, Mexico or the Near East. He is truly, as Life noted in its story on him, "A golden boy in a golden age of pianists."

From the vantage point of such a career, Browning has concluded that United States concert audiences love piano and it has always amazed him that it supports as many pianists in its music life as it does.

"Where 30 or 40 years ago only a few people really knew the difference between good and bad playing, now people everywhere know," he says. He thinks the change can be credited to records, radio and television, explaining, "They give the person outside the big cities a basis of comparision."

Single tickets to the recital will be available at the door.

Ledger-Star
NORFOLK, VIRGINIA
D. 105,148
JAN 10 1967

Music

Orchestra backs Browning like one great instrument

NORFOLK — John Browning was the guest soloist with the Norfolk Symphony Orchestra last night at the Center Theatre.

Browning is a young artist who has a mature and commanding style at the piano. This was not his first appearance with the Norfolk Symphony. Two seasons ago he played the Brahms D Minor Concerto here. This was the first time we have heard him in contemporary concerti by Barber and Ravel.

To begin the concert the orchestra played Beethoven's concise 8th Symphony in F Major, Opus 93. In this classical work Russel Stanger's conducting was meticulous. Under his baton the orchestra is beginning to sound like a great instrument, capable of many dynamic and color variants.

The tempi of the second and third movements of the Beethoven seemed to lack contrast, but through the years there have been many interpretations of Beethoven's Allegretto Scherzando and Tempo di menuetto, which still are not settled.

Samuel Barber's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, Opus 38, was premiered by John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of the opening of New York's Philharmonic Hall in 1962. Browning has played it numerous times since and it has become part of him. The concerto is aggressive in its two allegro movements which surround a beautiful lyric slow movement.

It is a showy piece which demands both a virtuoso pianist and a virtuoso orchestra. One expected end received such a performance from Browning, but the surprise was in the fine support he received from the orchestra. Together they made a very exciting performance that was enthusiastically received by the audience.

After intermission, Browning returned to play Maurice Ravel's Concerto in D for the Left Hand. To my way of thinking this was a more satisfactory musical experience, despite the novelty of employing only the left hand. (The concerto was commissioned by Paul Wittgenstein, who lost his right arm in World War I.) The Ravel concerto was sensitively played by all. Naturally it is a tour de force for the soloist, but in its entirety it has tremendous emotional appeal.

The concert concluded with Ravel's, "La Valse." It is in three continuous parts suggesting the "Birth of the Waltz," "The Waltz," and "The Apotheosis of the Waltz." Ravel was a master orchestrator and his use of the instruments in "La Valse" is impressionistic. The whole spirit of the piece is mercurial, which very element seemed to disturb some of the musicians in the rhythmical complexities that conclude "La Valse."

All in all, last night was the most successful concert of the season, both in the freshness of the program and the performance.

—GROVER J. OBERLE

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, December 18, 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
MT. KISCO PATENT TRADER
Thursday, January 19, 1967

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
MT. KISCO PATENT TRADER
Thursday, January 19, 1967

John Browning To Play At Philharmonic Concert

MT. VERNON — John Browning, pianist, will be soloist in the third concert of the season by the Philharmonic Symphony of Westchester at Wood Auditorium Saturday, January 28, at 8:30 p.m. John Barnett is musical director and conductor of the symphony.

Mr. Browning will be featured in Beethoven's Concerto No. 4 in G Major. The orchestra will also be heard in Bach-Walton Suite from the ballet, "The Wise Virgins," and Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat Major.

Mr. Browning made his professional debut at the age of 10, playing Mozart's Coronation Concerto in a special concert with members of the Denver Symphony. In the 10 years since he made his New York debut with the New York Philharmonic, in February, 1956, as winner of the Leventritt Award, he has become an international star, who appears yearly with the major American orchestras.

In 1962 he had the distinction of creating the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Pulitzer Prize winning First Piano Concerto as soloist with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, at Lincoln Center.

Later that year he gave it its Belgian and English premieres as well as playing it with the Brussels Philharmonic and the Philharmonic Orchestra of London.

In the spring and early summer of 1965, he made an 11-week tour of the Soviet Union and Western Europe as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra, directed by George Szell. Sponsored by the U.S. State Department, the tour covered key cities in the Soviet Union, Sweden, Poland, Germany, France, Czechoslovakia and England.

Information regarding the concert may be obtained through Mrs. Doris Roos at the symphony office, 8 East Prospect Avenue, Mt. Vernon.

The Daily Argus
MOUNT VERNON, N. Y.
D. 19,460
JAN 11 1967

JOHN BROWNING

Philharmonic Concert To Feature Browning

John Browning, pianist, will be soloist in the third concert of the 1966-1967 season of the Philharmonic Symphony of Westchester at Wood Auditorium on Saturday, Jan. 28. John Barnett is musical director and conductor of the symphony.

Mr. Browning will be featured in Beethoven's Concerto No. 4 in G Major. The orchestra will also be heard in Bach—Walton Suite from the Ballet "The Wise Virgins" and Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat Major.

Mr. Browning made his professional debut at the age of 10, playing Mozart's Coronation Concerto in a special concert with members of the Denver Symphony. In the 10 years since he made his New York debut with the New York Philharmonic, in February 1956, as winner of the Leventritt Award, he has become an international star, who appears yearly with the major American orchestras.

In 1962 he had the distinction of creating the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Pulitzer Prize Winning First Piano Concerto as soloist with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, during the gala opening week of Lincoln Center.

His performance at the world premiere won for the Concerto an immediate success and later that year he gave it its Belgian and English premieres as well playing it with the Brussels Philharmonic and the Philharmonic Orchestra of London.

In the spring and early summer of 1965, he made an 11-week tour of the Soviet Union and Western Europe as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra, directed by George Szell. Sponsored by the U.S. State Department, the tour covered key cities in the Soviet Union, Sweden, Poland, Germany, France Czechoslovakia and England.

Information regarding the concert may be obtained through Mrs. Doris Roos at the Symphony office, 8 E. Prospect Ave.

127

JOHN BROWNING

Chattanooga Daily Times
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
D 52,372 SUN. 86,562

JAN 8 1967

the Village VOICE, April 20, 1967

John Browning to Play Sewanee Recital

Special to The Chattanooga Times

SEWANEE, Tenn.—American pianist John Browning will give a recital Friday at 8:15 p.m., CST (9:15 EST), in Guerry Hall at the University of the South, Sewanee. His program consists of five Scarlatti sonatas, Chopin's Third Sonata, Copland's Piano Variations, and Ravel's Gaspard de la Nuit.

The admiration Browning commands was dramatically underscored at the gala opening week of Lincoln Center in New York in 1962, when he created the world premier of Samuel Barber's First Piano Concerto with the Boston Symphony, under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf.

To have been chosen to give the premiere of so eagerly awaited an addition to the piano concerto literature, and in circumstances that commanded the attention of the entire international music world, is testimony to the position Browning occupies in it.

By the end of the 1965-66 season, he had played the Barber work no less than 60 times in 44 cities, in a total of 15 countries, and had recorded it with the Cleveland Orchestra under the direction of George Szell. The fact that Barber received the 1963 Pulitzer Prize for Music for the work at a time when Browning alone had played it, gives added significance to the critical values attached to his interpretation.

Today, when recording companies put very few artists under contract, RCA-Victor has signed him to an exclusive contract. His first recording on that label, the Beethoven Diabelli Variations, 33 variations on a waltz by Diabelli, released in April, 1966, was hailed by the New York Times as "scholarly and sensitive." His recording of the Prokofiev Piano Concertos One and Two with Erick Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony, was released in the fall.

In the spring and early summer of 1965, Browning made an 11-week tour of the Soviet Union and western Europe as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra and its conductor, George Szell. Sponsored by the Cultural Presentations Program of the U.S. State Department, it covered key cities in the Soviet Union, Sweden, Poland, Germany, France, Czechoslovakia and England, as well as the festivals of Helsinki, Bergen, Vienna and Amsterdam.

Browning not only performed three concerti of sharply contrasting character —the Brahms D Minor, the Gershwin Concerto in F, and the Barber—but gave solo recitals in each city as well. United Press International in a report on his recital in Kiev, cabled: "The wildly enthusiastic audience of 2,000 did not stop applauding until officials closed his piano and began rolling it aside."

Of his Moscow performance of the Barber concerto, Izvestia, official Soviet newspaper, declared: "It was brilliantly performed by John Browning, who captivated the public with the temperament and virtuoso scope of his performance."

Browning made his orchestral debut at the age of 10 in his native Denver, playing Mozart's Coronation Concerto at a special concert with members of the Denver Symphony. Astonished interest at the success he scored spread through the U.S. music world, but instead of exploiting the opportunities that followed, Browning's parents decided he should be allowed to study and mature away from the limelight.

JOHN BROWNING

Shortly after that early Denver debut Browning's parents moved to Los Angeles, where he grew up and continued his piano studies with Lee Pattison, while attending public schools, and later, Occidental College. Eventually he went to New York to attend the Juilliard School of Music on scholarship, studying with Madame Rosina Lhevinne. In 1954 he won the Steinway Centennial Award, sponsored by the National Federation of Music Clubs, and in 1956, as winner of the coveted Edgar M. Leventritt Award the previous year, made a brilliant debut with the New York Philharmonic.

That same year he was heard for the first time in Europe, when he won the Gold Medal Award of the Concours International Musical, in Brussels—the famous competition founded by the late Queen Elizabeth of Belgium.

Winning the Brussels competition launched Browning as an international celebrity. Annual tours have followed which have taken him to other European countries, the Near East and Mexico, and wherever he has played there have been the same enthusiastic receptions. Said La Libre Belgique of one of his many Brussels recitals: "John Browning's musicality is exquisite, his technique simply prodigious. He plays with extraordinary virtuosity, sensitivity and penetrating intelligence. This performance places him among the very few truly great pianists."

When he went to Holland, De Tidji in Amsterdam offered another rave, heading his review, "Phenomenal Playing — A magnificent mind." and so wrote other papers whether in France, Italy, Mexico or the Near East. He is truly, as Life noted in its story on him, "A golden boy in a golden age of pianists."

From the vantage point of such a career, Browning has concluded that United States concert audiences love piano and it has always amazed him that it supports as many pianists in its music life as it does.

"Where 30 or 40 years ago only a few people really knew the difference between good and bad playing, now people everywhere know," he says. He thinks the change can be credited to records, radio and television, explaining, "They give the person outside the big cities a basis of comparision."

Single tickets to the recital will be available at the door.

Ledger-Star
NORFOLK, VIRGINIA
D. 105,148

JAN 10 1967

Music

Orchestra backs Browning like one great instrument

NORFOLK — John Browning was the guest soloist with the Norfolk Symphony Orchestra last night at the Center Theatre.

Browning is a young artist who has a mature and commanding style at the piano. This was not his first appearance with the Norfolk Symphony. Two seasons ago he played the Brahms D Minor Concerto here. This was the first time we have heard him in contemporary concerti by Barber and Ravel.

To begin the concert the orchestra played Beethoven's concise 8th Symphony in F Major, Opus 93. In this classical work Russel Stanger's conducting was meticulous. Under his baton the orchestra is beginning to sound like a great instrument, capable of many dynamic and color variants.

The tempi of the second and third movements of the Beethoven seemed to lack contrast, but through the years there have been many interpretations of Beethoven's Allegretto Scherzando and Tempo di menuetto, which still are not settled.

Samuel Barber's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, Opus 38, was premiered by John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the occasion of the opening of New York's Philharmonic Hall in 1962. Browning has played it numerous times since and it has become part of him. The concerto is aggressive in its two allegro movements which surround a beautiful lyric slow movement.

It is a showy piece which demands both a virtuoso pianist and a virtuoso orchestra. One expected end received such a performance from Browning, but the surprise was in the fine support he received from the orchestra. Together they made a very exciting performance that was enthusiastically received by the audience.

After intermission, Browning returned to play Maurice Ravel's Concerto in D for the Left Hand. To my way of thinking this was a more satisfactory musical experience, despite the novelty of employing only the left hand. (The concerto was commissioned by Paul Wittgenstein, who lost his right arm in World War I.) The Ravel concerto was sensitively played by all. Naturally it is a tour de force for the soloist, but in its entirety it has tremendous emotional appeal.

The concert concluded with Ravel's, "La Valse." It is in three continuous parts suggesting the "Birth of the Waltz," "The Waltz," and "The Apotheosis of the Waltz.' Ravel was a master orchestrator and his use of the instruments in "La Valse" is impressionistic. The whole spirit of the piece is mercurial, which very element seemed to disturb some of the musicians in the rhythmical complexities that conclude "La Valse."

All in all, last night was the most successful concert of the season, both in the freshness of the program and the performance.

—GROVER J. OBERLE

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, December 18, 1966

The Daily Argus
MOUNT VERNON, N. Y.
D. 19,460

JAN 11 1967

Philharmonic Concert To Feature Browning

JOHN BROWNING

John Browning, pianist, will be soloist in the third concert of the 1966-1967 season of the Philharmonic Symphony of Westchester at Wood Auditorium on Saturday, Jan. 28. John Barnett is musical director and conductor of the symphony.

Mr. Browning will be featured in Beethoven's Concerto No. 4 in G Major. The orchestra will also be heard in Bach—Walton Suite from the Ballet "The Wise Virgins" and Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat Major.

Mr. Browning made his professional debut at the age of 10, playing Mozart's Coronation Concerto in a special concert with members of the Denver Symphony. In the 10 years since he made his New York debut with the New York Philharmonic, in February 1956, as winner of the Leventritt Award, he has become an international star, who appears yearly with the major American orchestras.

In 1962 he had the distinction of creating the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Pulitzer Prize Winning First Piano Concerto as soloist with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, during the gala opening week of Lincoln Center.

His performance at the world premiere won for the Concerto an immediate success and later that year he gave it its Belgian and English premieres as well playing it with the Brussels Philharmonic and the Philharmonic Orchestra of London.

In the spring and early summer of 1965, he made an 11-week tour of the Soviet Union and Western Europe as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra, directed by George Szell. Sponsored by the U.S. State Department, the tour covered key cities in the Soviet Union, Sweden, Poland, Germany, France Czechoslovakia and England.

Information regarding the concert may be obtained through Mrs. Doris Roos at the Symphony office, 8 E. Prospect Ave.

Yonkers Herald Statesman TRADER
Thursday, January 19, 1967

John Browning To Play At Philharmonic Concert

MT. VERNON — John Browning, pianist, will be soloist in the third concert of the season by the Philharmonic Symphony of Westchester at Wood Auditorium Saturday, January 28, at 8:30 p.m. John Barnett is musical director and conductor of the symphony.

Mr. Browning will be featured in Beethoven's Concerto No. 4 in G Major. The orchestra will also be heard in Bach-Walton Suite from the ballet, "The Wise Virgins," and Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B Flat Major.

Mr. Browning made his professional debut at the age of 10, playing Mozart's Coronation Concerto in a special concert with members of the Denver Symphony. In the 10 years since he made his New York debut with the New York Philharmonic, in February, 1956, as winner of the Leventritt Award, he has become an international star, who appears yearly with the major American orchestras.

In 1962 he had the distinction of creating the world premiere of Samuel Barber's Pulitzer Prize winning First Piano Concerto as soloist with the Boston Symphony under the direction of Erich Leinsdorf, at Lincoln Center.

Later that year he gave it its Belgian and English premieres as well as playing it with the Brussels Philharmonic and the Philharmonic Orchestra of London.

In the spring and early summer of 1965, he made an 11-week tour of the Soviet Union and Western Europe as soloist with the Cleveland Orchestra, directed by George Szell, sponsored by the U.S. State Department, the tour covered key cities in the Soviet Union, Sweden, Poland, Germany, France, Czechoslovakia and England.

Information regarding the concert may be obtained through Mrs. Doris Roos at the Symphony office, 8 East Prospect Avenue, Mt. Vernon.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Saturday, October 8, 1966

Browning Plays Prokofieff

By NELL LAWSON

American pianist John Browning, young as he is, belongs to that small company of artists who are not so much performers as communicators.

All the technical requirements are his to command, certainly, but much more important he gets to the heart of the music's essential meaning and does so with accuracy, taste and variety.

His new RCA Victor album of Prokofieff's Piano Concertos No. 1 and No. 2 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf is yet another step up in his burgeoning career, and a sterling example of his sensitive and growing art.

The recording has a great element of excitement, the compositions calling for unusual technical skill and verve by soloist and orchestra.

The Second Concerto's extended and taxing cadenza in the first movement has not been better done on records, and keyboard technique throughout is reminiscent of the late composer's, heard on prized vintage recordings. Stereo, mono LSC/LM-2897.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 132,266
OCT 8 1966

PROKOFIEFF: Piano Concerti No. 1 and 2, with John Browning and the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf (Victor LM or LSC-2897). The composer's first two piano concerti are full of his characteristic chordal effects and wide intervallic leaps and are particularly adapted to the steely fingers and extroverted approach of Browning, who finds a sympathetic collaborator in Leinsdorf. If these two works lack the stature of Prokofieff's Third Concerto, the present performances are almost beyond criticism.

* * *

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 167,000
OCT 22 1966

RECORDS PURCHASE CHART

. . . ►Pianist John Browning is in his own [illegible] knuckling element with Prokofiev's keyboard Concerti Nos. 1 and 2, and his "crew" consists of nothing less than the Boston Symphony with Captain Erich Leinsdorf, an ardent Prokofievian (RCA Victor S-2897, M-same). No. 1 was begun in the composer's student days, but forecasts maturity; No. 2 has passages to challenge the favorite No. 3; and neither before has been so well caught in stereo or stereo-pairing. . . . ►The contemporary French composer Pierre Boulez continues to rise to the conducting level of such as Mr. Leinsdorf. Not long back, Nonesuch presented Boulez' warmly applauded version of Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du printemps." Currently, he leaps from a vigorous, complete "Water Music" by Handel (Nonesuch S-71127, M-1127) with the Hague Philharmonic to the Paris L'Opéra Orchestra, Chorus, and soloists with Stravinsky's "Les Noces" and a selection of rarely heard songs (Nonesuch S-71133, M-1133). The Handel "makes waves"; the Stravinsky is twice-worthy for the vocal works, the majority of which I'd never heard. . . .

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
D. 538,393 SUN. 693,178
OCT 31 1966

[redacted] to concert-goers, so it is nice to [redacted] in a recording by John Browning with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Victor LSC [redacted]

[redacted]ing makes the First tingle with the excitement of a [redacted] passages [redacted]

[redacted]ht and [redacted]eary, the Second feels long by the time of the somber [redacted]zo. However, Browning seems well suited to Prokofiev's [redacted]ampering scherzo music, and the fireworks at the end [redacted] the whole.

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 158,172 SUN. 299,377
OCT 30 1966

Classical

PIANO CONCERTOS No. 1 and No. 2; JOHN BROWNING, pianist, with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA conducted by ERICH LEINSDORF—RCA VICTOR LSC/LM-2897.

From his early youth, Prokofieff used his favorite instrument, the piano, as the sounding board to reveal his creative personality. From a deep background of study and experimentation, he became able to use the piano to deliever on the one hand thunderous musical orations such as those found on this disc, and on the other to convey sentiments of tender lyricism of a type familiar in his sonatas.

One does not have to listen long into the program of concertos chosen by Erich Leinsdorf and John Browning for this illuminating record to realize that Prokofieff did not intend the piano to be anything less than an equal partner with the orchestra. The determination is fully realized in the first concerto and bears even more emphatic fruit in No. 2 where the paino is clearly dominant.

Brisk, youthful but sensitive readings are given both concertos by Browning whose tremendous technical ability is never seriously challenged by the demands of the score. At no point does phrasing or rhythmic structures falter. There are no round corners—each note is executed with clean precision.

LEINSDORF LEADS the orchestra admirably through the blustery give-and-take virtuostic duel with the piano in the first concerto and manages a firm, yet never imposing hand over the orchestral forces in their subordinate roles in the second composition.

This is a superb addition to the RCA Victor-Leinsdorf project of recording a Prokofieff cycle, leading one to hope that the third, fourth and fifth concertos will soon be forthcoming.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100
NOV 1966

PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 16; Piano Concerto No. 1 in D flat, Op. 10; John Browning (piano); Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor LM-2897, $4.79, or Stereo LSC-2897, $5.79. (31, 16 mins.)

No. 2:
H.-Schweitzer, Munch, Boston (29½') RCA ®VIC-1071
Baloghová, Ančerl, Czech Ph. (33').....Art. ®707
No. 1:
Richter, Ančerl, Prague Sym. (13¾').....Art. 123
Katz, Boult, L.P.O. (15¼').....Van. Ev. ®185SD

®ON this record the first three movements of Concerto No. 2 occupy the first side; on side two the Finale of No. 2 is followed by the single-movement Concerto No. 1. If pianism is your chief concern in these brilliant and startling student works it is easy to recommend this release, for John Browning's playing is exemplary. He brings special clarity to the texture of the immensely complex so-called cadenza (a truly inadequate term here) that comprises about two-fifths of the opening movement of No. 2. Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, whom I like very much in most respects, makes cuts in this long but unitary and exciting "cadenza" which clips the composer's wings a trifle. In the third version at hand, Dagmar Baloghová's instrument is not of the very finest quality. So Browning clearly has it much of the way.

Taking the larger view, a recommendation is not so simple. Munch conducts No. 2 with more fire and conviction than either Leinsdorf or, for that matter, Ančerl. The bizarre opening of the third (Intermezzo) movement affords an especially striking illustration of this point. And the recording of that older (and now bargain-priced) version with the same Boston Symphony is actually somewhat better balanced than the expensive new one, in which the piano sounds too prominent and the orchestra too much subordinated. But then, RCA Victrola crowds the 30-minute Munch performance of this very dynamic work onto one side; and this, not surprisingly, produces pre-echo. And in neither version can we hear aught of one of the most magical bits in the score—the lovely muted-string tremolo against which the first movement's piano theme dies away after the smashing climax—as we very clearly can in the Artia recording. Obviously No. 2 needs to be further explored.

In Concerto No. 1, RCA Victor's piano-orchestra balance again shows up badly in comparison to both the Artia (mono) and the Everyman recordings. Cf. the ravishing Andante assai section, in which the delicious clarinet, muted trumpet, and horn solos in turn are virtually lost. On Artia, however, Sviatoslav Richter is himself quite disenchanting in his refusal to perform anything much below forte. Thus the easily preferred version is that of Mindru Katz, with Sir Adrian Boult and the London Philharmonic—which is very nice in its own right, with fine stereo spread and much depth. —J.D.

The Courier-Journal
LOUISVILLE, KY.
D. 229,925 SUN. 338,841
OCT 16 1966

Insolence and Sparkle

PROKOFIEFF: Pianos Concertos Nos. 1 and 2; John Browning, pianist, with the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. (Victor LSC-2897). These works sparkle with the kind of thumb-to-the-nose insolence that was characteristic of the youthful Prokofieff's attitude [redacted] groves of academe. Both [redacted] genius, and [redacted] plays [redacted] with wit with [redacted] understanding and with a surface glitter that is entirely appropriate.

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 273,288 SUN. 315,098
NOV 1 1966

Record Changer

John Browning Does Well by [redacted]

BY GEORGE NEW
Chronicle Reporter

A happy pairing of artists [redacted] Prokofiev's first and second [redacted] ano concerto top the class[redacted] albums released this month.

John Browning, one of the [redacted] pianists in the romantic tr[redacted]tion, joins with Erich Le[redacted]dorf and the Boston Symphony [redacted] excellent versions of the R[redacted]sian's composer's first pia[redacted] works.

It is particularly good to h[redacted] Prokofiev's seldom perform[redacted] single-movement first piano c[redacted]certo. The composer him[redacted] called it his "first more [redacted] less mature composition" [redacted] does contain the seeds of th[redacted] to come.

These seeds blossom be[redacted]fully in the second concer[redacted] (RCA Victor, Stereo LSC-2897, Mono LM-2897.)

JOHN BROWNING
New Recording

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Saturday, October 8, 1966

Browning Plays Prokofieff

By NELL LAWSON

American pianist John Browning, young as he is, belongs to that small company of artists who are not so much performers as communicators.

All the technical requirements are his to command, certainly, but much more important he gets to the heart of the music's essential meaning and does so with accuracy, taste and variety.

His new RCA Victor album of Prokofieff's Piano Concertos No. 1 and No. 2 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf is yet another step up in his burgeoning career, and a sterling example of his sensitive and growing art.

The recording has a great element of excitement, the compositions calling for unusual technical skill and verve by soloist and orchestra.

The Second Concerto's extended and taxing cadenza in the first movement has not been better done on records, and keyboard technique throughout is reminiscent of the late composer's, heard on prized vintage recordings. Stereo, mono LSC/LM-2897.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 132,266
OCT 8 1966

PROKOFIEFF: Piano Concerti No. 1 and 2, with John Browning and the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf (Victor LM or LSC-2897). The composer's first two piano concerti are full of his characteristic chordal effects and wide intervallic leaps and are particularly adapted to the steely fingers and extroverted approach of Browning, who finds a sympathetic collaborator in Leinsdorf. If these two works lack the stature of Prokofieff's Third Concerto, the present performances are almost beyond criticism.

* * *

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 167,000
OCT 22 1966

RECORDS TAPES ART

. . . ▶Pianist John Browning is in his own swashbuckling element with Prokofiev's keyboard Concerti Nos. 1 and 2, and his "crew" consists of nothing less than the Boston Symphony with Captain Erich Leinsdorf, an ardent Prokofievian (RCA Victor S-2897, M-same). No. 1 was begun in the composer's student days, but forecasts maturity; No. 2 has passages to challenge the favorite No. 3; and neither before has been so well caught in stereo or stereo-pairing. . . . ▶The contemporary French composer Pierre Boulez continues to rise to the conducting level of such as Mr. Leinsdorf. Not long back, Nonesuch presented Boulez' warmly applauded version of Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du printemps." Currently, he leaps from a vigorous, complete "Water Music" by Handel (Nonesuch S-71127, M-1127) with the Hague Philharmonic to the Paris L'Opéra Orchestra, Chorus, and soloists with Stravinsky's "Les Noces" and a selection of rarely heard songs (Nonesuch S-71133, M-1133). The Handel "makes waves"; the Stravinsky is twice-worthy for the vocal works, the majority of which I'd never heard. . . .

ch benign, others

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
D. 538,393 SUN. 693,178
OCT 31 1966

[redacted] to concert-goers, so it is nice to have [redacted] in a recording by John Browning with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Victor LSC [redacted]

[redacted]ing makes the First tingle with the excitement of a [redacted] passages [redacted] right and [redacted]eary, the Second feels long by the time of the somber [redacted]zzo. However, Browning seems well suited to Prokofiev's [redacted]ampering scherzo music, and the fireworks at the end [redacted] the whole.

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 158,172 SUN. 299,377
OCT 30 1966

Classical

PROKOFIEFF: PIANO CONCERTOS No. 1 and No. 2; JOHN BROWNING, pianist, with the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA conducted by ERICH LEINSDORF—RCA VICTOR LSC/LM-2897.

From his early youth, Prokofieff used his favorite instrument, the piano, as the sounding board to reveal his creative personality. From a deep background of study and experimentation, he became able to use the piano to deliever on the one hand thunderous musical orations such as those found on this disc, and on the other to convey sentiments of tender lyricism of a type familiar in his sonatas.

One does not have to listen long into the program of concertos chosen by Erich Leinsdorf and John Browning for this illuminating record to realize that Prokofieff did not intend the piano to be anything less than an equal partner with the orchestra. The determination is fully realized in the first concerto and bears even more emphatic fruit in No. 2 where the paino is clearly dominant.

Brisk, youthful but sensitive readings are given both concertos by Browning whose tremendous technical ability is never seriously challenged by the demands of the score. At no point does phrasing or rhythmic structures falter. There are no round corners—each note is executed with clean precision.

LEINSDORF LEADS the orchestra admirably through the blustery give-and-take virtuostic duel with the piano in the first concerto and manages a firm, yet never imposing hand over the orchestral forces in their subordinate roles in the second composition.

This is a superb addition to the RCA Victor-Leinsdorf project of recording a Prokofieff cycle, leading one to hope that the third, fourth and fifth concertos will soon be forthcoming.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100
NOV 1966

PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto No. 2 in G minor, Op. 16; Piano Concerto No. 1 in D flat, Op. 10; John Browning (piano); Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor LM-2897, $4.79, or Stereo LSC-2897, $5.79. (31, 16 mins.)

No. 2:
H.-Schweitzer, Munch, Boston (29½') RCA ®VIC-1071
Baloghová, Ančerl, Czech Ph. (33')....Art. ®707
No. 1:
Richter, Ančerl, Prague Sym. (13¾')..... Art. 123
Katz, Boult, L.P.O. (15¼').....Van. Ev. ®185SD

®ON this record the first three movements of Concerto No. 2 occupy the first side; on side two the Finale of No. 2 is followed by the single-movement Concerto No. 1. If pianism is your chief concern in these brilliant and startling student works it is easy to recommend this release, for John Browning's playing is exemplary. He brings special clarity to the texture of the immensely complex so-called cadenza (a truly inadequate term here) that comprises about two-fifths of the opening movement of No. 2. Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, whom I like very much in most respects, makes cuts in this long but unitary and exciting "cadenza" which clips the composer's wings a trifle. In the third version at hand, Dagmar Balogh-ová's instrument is not of the very finest quality. So Browning clearly has it much of the way.

Taking the larger view, a recommendation is not so simple. Munch conducts No. 2 with more fire and conviction than either Leinsdorf or, for that matter, Ančerl. The bizarre opening of the third (Intermezzo) movement affords an especially striking illustration of this point. And the recording of that older (and now bargain-priced) version with the same Boston Symphony is actually somewhat better balanced than the expensive new one, in which the piano sounds too prominent and the orchestra too much subordinated. But then, RCA Victrola crowds the 30-minute Munch performance of this very dynamic work onto one side; and this, not surprisingly, produces pre-echo. And in neither version can we hear aught of one of the most magical bits in the score—the lovely muted-string tremolo against which the first movement's piano theme dies away after the smashing climax—as we very clearly can in the Artia recording. Obviously No. 2 needs to be further explored.

In Concerto No. 1, RCA Victor's piano-orchestra balance again shows up badly in comparison to both the Artia (mono) and the Everyman recordings. Cf. the ravishing Andante assai section, in which the delicious clarinet, muted trumpet, and horn solos in turn are virtually lost. On Artia, however, Sviatoslav Richter is himself quite disenchanting in his refusal to perform anything much below forte. Thus the easily preferred version is that of Mindru Katz, with Sir Adrian Boult and the London Philharmonic—which is very nice in its own right, with fine stereo spread and much depth. —J.D.

The Courier-Journal
LOUISVILLE, KY.
D. 229,925 SUN. 338,841
OCT 16 1966

Insolence and Sparkle

PROKOFIEFF: Pianos Concertos Nos. 1 and 2; John Browning, pianist, with the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. (Victor LSC-2897). These works sparkle with the kind of thumb-to-the-nose insolence that was characteristic of the youthful Prokofieff's attitude toward the groves of academe. Both shine with the [illegible] of genius, and make [illegible] listening. Browning plays them flawlessly—with wit, with musical understanding, and with a surface gling that is entirely appropriate.

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 273,288 SUN. 315,098
NOV 1 1966

Record Changer

John Browning Does Well by Prokofiev

BY GEORGE NEW
Chronicle Reporter

A happy pairing of artists a[illegible] Prokofiev's first and second p[illegible]ano concerto top the classi[illegible] albums released this month.

John Browning, one of the b[illegible] pianists in the romantic tra[illegible]tion, joins with Erich Le[illegible]dorf and the Boston Symphony [illegible] excellent versions of the R[illegible]sian's composer's first pia[illegible] works.

It is particularly good to h[illegible] Prokofiev's seldom perform[illegible] single-movement first piano c[illegible]certo. The composer him[illegible] called it his "first more [illegible] less mature composition" [illegible] does contain the seeds of th[illegible] to come.

These seeds blossom be[illegible]fully in the second concerto. (RCA Victor, Stereo LSC-2897, Mono LM-2897.)

JOHN BROWNING
New Recording

FADED TEXT

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
OCT 16 1966

RECORDS:

PETER SERKIN

JOHN BROWNING

Different Genre

In a markedly different musical genre—but equally notable as the Serkin recording—is the work of John Browning who offers Prokofiev's Piano Concertos Nos. 1 and 2 accompanied by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf (L 2397, mono or stereo).

Browning has the astonishing ability of making the extremely difficult Russian composer's works seem effortless in the performance. He approaches the early Concerto No. 1 (written in 1914-12 when Prokofiev was new to the published music world) with a verve and directness that brings to the somewhat dull work a discernable sparkle.

The composer came in for no little criticism of his first concerto, especially for its acrobatic demands on the performer and its sometimes overly wrought [illegible] concerts. Such criticism, Prokofiev [illegible] and [illegible] led me to strive for greater depth in the Second." Strive he did, I have, for in his Second Concerto, by far the more popular of the two, there is a brilliance in conception and content that fairly leaps at the listener when the piece is essayed by competent hands.

To this later work Browning brings again the highly individualistic style and interpretation which distinguishes his version of the First Concerto. His attack, particularly in the lengthy cadenza of the first movement, is beyond reproach in all respects.

Naturally, Browning's efforts are greatly enhanced by the Boston Symphony under Maestro Leinsdorf—and technical aspects of the recording are excellent as are the detailed program notes by Igor Buketoff.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
DEC 15 1966

Discs in Disc

Symphonies

By PAUL D. HILBRICH

"Four Great Violin Concertos." By BEETHOVEN, TCHAIKOVSKY, SIBELIUS and PROKOFIEV (No. 2). Henryk Szeryng, the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by Hans Schmidt-Isserstedt, An- [redacted]

PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerti Nos. 1 & 2. John Browning, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor LSC 2897.

These works do not enjoy the same popularity among concert goers as do the Piano Concerto No. 3 and the two Violin Concerti, but they do have their brilliant moments and we welcome this pairing presented by the Boston Symphony. Both are young works, but they exhibit the long melodies and rhythmic drive associated with the mature Prokofiev. This is expressive music and none of it is lost in this performance, but Browning and Leinsdorf keep it from being tawdry.

Lyricism, chromaticism and dynamic subleties are not ignored, but these elements are not allowed to interfere with the rhythmic propulsion which is so important to these works. Browning's playing is very musical; especially noteworthy in the Scherzo of No. 2 where virtuosity takes over in the toccata-like solo. Leinsdorf keeps the orchestra under firm control, but at the same time allows a free exchange of interest between the orchestra and soloist. A fine performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 102,118
NOV 22 1966

PIANO CONCERTOS NOS. 1 and 2: Prokofieff. John Browning, pianist; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. (RCA)

Although Prokofieff's Third Concerto in C is his first real masterpiece in the form, the first two concertos are not without musical interest. The collaboration between pianist John Browning and Conductor Leinsdorf produces a performance of beautiful proportions. The toccata-like drive that was to become one of Prokofieff's compositional trademarks is evident in much of the music, and is performed with extreme clarity and intensity by Mr. Browning. He is already one of the truly great pianists now concertizing, and his local appearance with the New Haven Symphony are always eagerly awaited. His performance of the Prokofieff Third Concerto in New Haven was a high point of the season, and he demonstrates again here a real affinity for Prokofieff's music.

RCA's stereo treatment is effective, and the spectrum of sound is beautifully reproduced.

Gordon Emerson

The Dallas Morning News
DALLAS, TEXAS
D. 237,192 SUN. 262,441
NOV 7 1966

Two by Prokofiev

From RCA Victor comes a new disk devoted to the first two piano concertos of Prokofiev (LSC 2897) as played by pianist John Browning with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under conductor Erich Leinsdorf. Though neither work has attained the popularity of the composer's Third Piano Concerto, the first is one of his most infectuous works.

Written when Prokofiev was barely out of his teens, the First Concerto (only some 15 minutes long) is brimming with life and vitality. The Second Concerto is a sort of musical white elephant with its outsized first movement, really an extended piano solo with incidental orchestral accompaniment.

Browning plays both with great incision and clarity and with marvelous, sure fingers. Leinsdorf's contributions, however, seemed terribly rigid and tight. It might be argued that this is the nature of the music, but a somewhat broader base for both pieces still seems in order.

The Oregonian
PORTLAND, OREGON
D. 240,562 SUN. 384,694
NOV 13 1966

IN THE GROOVE

hilmar grondahl | william hilliard

Prokofieff Concertos: If you enjoyed the playing of Nelson Freire and the Portland Symphony Orchestra in the Prokofieff Second Piano Concerto, you may now hear how that music sounds as played by John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On the new RCA-Victor disc there is also the First Piano Concerto played by the same forces. The Second is a big step up, musically; both are exciting.

GREEN BAY, WIS.
PRESS-GAZETTE
D. 42,000 S. 48,500
NOV 13 1966

PROKOFIEV

Piano Concertos Nos. 1 and 2. John Browning, pianist, with Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. RCA-Victor LSC 2897 (Mono LM 2897).

Here is a pair of virtuoso pieces played to the hilt by one of America's top pianists. Browning takes all the fireworks full tilt but is too fine an artist to hog it all. Both are thoughtful, strong and spacious, played with sure touch, crystalline tone and warm sound. The orchestra backs the soloist completely, and presence is outstanding. A splendid recording.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
OCT 22 1966

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

PROKOFIEFF: PIANO CONCERTOS Nos. 1 & 2

John Browning/Boston Symphony Orch. (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 2897 (M); LSC 2897 (S)

Browning shows rhythmic drive, a relentless concentration especially in the No. 2's first movement. Leinsdorf batons the Boston through a superb accompaniment.

129

FADED TEXT

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607

OCT 16 1966

RECORDS:

PETER SERKIN

JOHN BROWNING

Different Genre

In a markedly different musical genre—but equally notable as the Serkin recording—is the work of John Browning who offers Prokofiev's Piano Concertos Nos. 1 and 2 accompanied by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf (L 2897, mono or stereo).

Browning has the astonishing ability of making the extremely difficult Russian composer's works seem effortless in the performance. He approaches the early Concerto No. 1 (written in 1911-12 when Prokofiev was new to the published music world) with a verve and directness that brings to the somewhat dull work a discernable sparkle.

The composer came in for no little criticism of his first concerto, especially for its acrobatic demands on the performer and its sometimes, overly wrought [illegible] contents. Such criticism [illegible] led me to [illegible] the Second." Strive he did [illegible] Second Concerto, by far the [illegible] of the two, there is a brilliance [illegible] and content that fairly leaps at the listener when the piece is essayed by [illegible] hands.

To this latter work Browning brings again the highly individualistic style and interpretation which distinguishes his version of the First Concerto. His attack [illegible] the lengthy cadenza of the first movement, is beyond reproach in all respects.

Naturally, Browning's efforts are greatly enhanced by the Boston Symphony under Maestro Leinsdorf—and technical aspects of the recording are excellent as are the detailed program notes by Igor Buketoff.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

DEC 15 1966

Discs in Disc

Symphonies

By PAUL D. HILBRICH

"Four Great Violin Concertos." By BEETHOVEN, TCHAIKOVSKY, SIBELIUS and PROKOFIEV (No. 2). Henryk Szeryng, the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by Hans Schmidt-Isserstedt, Anfal Doratt and Gennadi Rozhdestvensky. S Mercury SR90407.

PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerti Nos. 1 & 2. John Browning, the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor LSC 2897.

These works do not enjoy the same popularity among concert goers as do the Piano Concerto No. 3 and the two Violin Concerti, but they do have their brilliant moments and we welcome this pairing presented by the Boston Symphony. Both are young works, but they exhibit the long melodies and rhythmic drive associated with the mature Prokofiev. This is expressive music and none of it is lost in this performance, but Browning and Leinsdorf keep it from being tawdry.

Lyricism, chromaticism and dynamic subleties are not ignored, but these elements are not allowed to interfere with the rhythmic propulsion which is so important to these works. Browning's playing is very musical: especially noteworthy in the Scherzo of No. 2 where virtuosity takes over in the toccata-like solo. Leinsdorf keeps the orchestra under firm control, but at the same time allows a free exchange of interest between the orchestra and soloist. A fine performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Register (e)
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 102,118

NOV 22 1966

PIANO CONCERTOS NOS. 1 and 2: Prokofieff. John Browning, pianist; the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, conductor. (RCA)

Although Prokofieff's Third Concerto in C is his first real masterpiece in the form, the first two concertos are not without musical interest. The collaboration between pianist John Browning and Conductor Leinsdorf produces a performance of beautiful proportions. The toccata-like drive that was to become one of Prokofieff's compositional trademarks is evident in much of the music, and is performed with extreme clarity and intensity by Mr. Browning. He is already one of the truly great pianists now concertizing, and his local appearance with the New Haven Symphony are always eagerly awaited. His performance of the Prokofieff Third Concerto in New Haven was a high point of the season, and he demonstrates again here a real affinity for Prokofieff's music.

RCA's stereo treatment is effective, and the spectrum of sound is beautifully reproduced.

Gordon Emerson

The Dallas Morning News
DALLAS, TEXAS
D. 237,192 SUN. 262,441

NOV 7 1966

Two by Prokofiev

From RCA Victor comes a new disk devoted to the first two piano concertos of Prokofiev (LSC 2897) as played by pianist John Browning with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under conductor Erich Leinsdorf. Though neither work has attained the popularity of the composer's Third Piano Concerto, the first is one of his most infectuous works.

Written when Prokofiev was barely out of his teens, the First Concerto (only some 15 minutes long) is brimming with life and vitality. The Second Concerto is a sort of musical white elephant with its outsized first movement, really an extended piano solo with incidental orchestral accompaniment.

Browning plays both with great incision and clarity and with marvelous, sure fingers. Leinsdorf's contributions, however, seemed terribly rigid and tight. It might be argued that this is the nature of the music, but a somewhat broader base for both pieces still seems in order.

The Oregonian
PORTLAND, OREGON
D. 240,562 SUN. 384,694

NOV 13 1966

IN THE GROOVE

hilmar grondahl | william hilliard

Prokofieff Concertos: If you enjoyed the playing of Nelson Freire and the Portland Symphony Orchestra in the Prokofieff Second Piano Concerto, you may now hear how that music sounds as played by John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. On the new RCA-Victor disc there is also the First Piano Concerto played by the same forces. The Second is a big step up, musically, both are exciting.

GREEN BAY, WIS.
PRESS-GAZETTE
D. 42,000 S. 48,500

NOV 13 1966

PROKOFIEV

Piano Concertos Nos. 1 and 2. John Browning, pianist, with Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. RCA-Victor LSC 2897 (Mono LM 2897).

Here is a pair of virtuoso pieces played to the hilt by one of America's top pianists. Browning takes all the fireworks full tilt but is too fine an artist to hog it all. Both are thoughtful, strong and spacious, played with sure touch, crystalline tone and warm sound. The orchestra backs the soloist completely, and presence is outstanding. A splendid recording.

* * *

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

OCT 22 1966

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

PROKOFIEFF: PIANO CONCERTOS Nos. 1 & 2

John Browning/Boston Symphony Orch. (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 2897 (M); LSC 2897 (S)

Browning shows rhythmic drive, a relentless concentration especially in the No. 2's first movement. Leinsdorf batons the Boston through a superb accompaniment.

ARTURO TOSCANINI

The Knickerbocker News Photos by Arnold LeFevre

Manuscript by Toscanini

The title page of a previously unknown cello concerto composed by the late conductor Arturo Toscanini. The note at the bottom is by the late Prof. Giovalli Trombini, to whom Toscanini gave the manuscript. The notation says that the work was writte by Toscanini when he was a student at the Conservatory of Parma in Italy.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ONEIDA DISPATCH
Saturday, January 7, 1967

* TELEVISION IN REVIEW * *

By Rick Du Brow

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) —Notes to watch television by:

The maestro: five distinguished symphony conductors whose careers were influenced by the late Arturo Toscanini will reminisce about him on NBC-TV's "Telephone Hour" of March 12, which salutes the centennial year of his birth . . . The conductors are George Szell (Cleveland), Eugene Ormandy (Philadelphia), Erick Leinsdorf (Boston), William Steinberg (Pittsburgh) and Milton Katins (Seattle) . . . They will be interviewed by New York Times music critic Harold C. Schonberg, who is preparing the program's script . . . It is also understood that, at the present, Gen. David Sarnoff, RCA-NBC pioneer, is expected to appear in a brief tribute to the maestro . . . Toscanini was the longtime conductor of the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Saturday, April 22, 1967

TOSCANINI MANUSCRIPT IN LATHAM—One of the few known compositions by the late Arturo Toscanini, shown here in a file photograph, has come to light in Latham. The manuscript is owned by a salesman, Joseph Ruscetta, who received it from an uncle who had studied with Toscanini.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Friday, April 21, 1967

Rare Concerto—by the Maestro

Yellowed Toscanini Manuscript Unveiled by Latham Salesman

By R. E. KRIEGER

A rare and unknown cello concerto, composed by Arturo Toscanini, has come to light in Latham.

The concerto was written in the 1880s while Toscanini was a student at the Parma, Italy, Conservatory. The pianoforte part was written by Prof. Umberto Condiole of the conservatory.

Titled "Romanza per Violocello by Arturo Toscanni," the manuscript, now aged and yellowing slightly but in good condition, is owned by Joseph Ruscetta of Latham, a National Biscuit Co. salesman.

Mr. Ruscetta received the manuscript from Prof. Giovanni Trombini, his uncle, who studied with Toscanini, when both were students in Parma, and then went on to perform with the Cleveland Symphony.

PROFESSOR TROMBINI, who died five years ago, was well known in Albany, playing first cello with Albany Symphony and with the Rice Quartet.

"My uncle said to me . . . I have something very important for you . . . and that was 25 years ago when Toscanini was at his best.

"Guard it," he said to me," it will be worth much some day. And now I think it's time to bring it out."

He has been in contact with Walter Toscanini, son of the maestro, who has evidenced some interest in the manuscript.

"He didn't even know of its existence," Mr. Ruscetta said, "Although he did say his father wrote no music after 1889."

THIS WAS just three years after Toscanini, at Rio de Janeiro in 1886 to play cello with a touring Italian opera company, made an unscheduled and triumphant debut as conductor of "Aida" when the original conductor resigned.

From that point he never played cello professionally again, conducted at La Scala, debuted at the Metropolitan in 1909, and then proceeded to serve as principal conductor of the New York Philharmonic. Then he was conductor of the NBC Symphony for 15 years. He suffered a stroke on New Year's Day, 1957, from which he never recovered. He was buried in Milan on Feb. 18, 1957.

HOW MANY other works are there of Toscanini's?

"Very few," believes Mr. Ruscetta. "A short while ago his daughter appeared on the "Today" television show with several pieces . . . but that's all I've ever heard of."

The cello concerto has been guarded closely by Mr.Ruscetta for the past 25 years . . . "when we mover it was the thing we were most careful of," he said.

But now that its existence has been announced it will repose in a bank deposit vault.

"It's too valuable to leave lying around," Mr. Fruscetta says.

AS A WORK of Toscanini it is culturally invaluable and Mr. Ruscetta has set no money value on it.

Obviously authentic, the manuscript has been brought to the attention of Erich Leinsdorf of the Boston Symphony, Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Euegen Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

As for Mr. Ruscetta, will he sell it?

"We'll see," he says turning over the yellowed pages with an almost reverent touch.

His Manuscript Now

Joseph Ruscetta of Latham studies the aged and yellowing Toscanini manuscript given him by his uncle, Prof. Giovalli Trombini, 25 years ago.

A Rare Toscanini Manuscript Owned by Latham Salesman

The existence of one of the few musical works ever composed by world reknowned conductor Arturo Toscanini was revealed Friday.

The rare concerto manuscript, composed in the 1880s while Toscanini was a student at the Conservatory, Parma, Italy, is in the possession of Joseph Ruscetta of Latham, a salesman for the National Biscuit Co. Toscanini died in 1957.

Ruscetta said his uncle, Giovanni Trombini, who studied with Toscanini at Parma, gave him the manuscript 25 years ago for safekeeping.

Ruscetta said his uncle, an accomplished cellist who died five years ago, gave him the composition "when Toscanini was at his best." Trombini told him, Ruscetta said, "I have something very important for you. Guard it and it will be worth much some day."

Ruscetta said he has contacted Walter Toscanini, son of the conductor, who said he was unaware of the concerto's existence.

Ruscetta said he has brought it to the attention of Erich Leinsdorf of the Boston Symphony, Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

He said he is putting the document in a bank vault and hasn't decided whether he will sell it.

131

WILLIAM SYDEMAN

BMI
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 16,000

MAR 1967

William Sydeman

BY PAUL TUROK

The furor over William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" (premiered November 4, 1966, by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra) is the latest evidence of the mark this 38-year-old composer is making on the serious music world. Coincident with a performance of his Second Study for Orchestra by the Czech Philharmonic, Sydeman recently represented the United States State Department as an exchange lecturer in Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Bulgaria. In 1964, he received the Boston Symphony Merit Award for his orchestral compositions, and he has been cited by the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Beyond these impressive credentials rests a soft-spoken, self-assured man, one who is—above all—a musician. Born and educated in New York City, Sydeman spent two years at Duke University (1944-45) before the great attraction of music ("I played the piano and wrote for my own amusement.") led him to enroll at the Mannes School of Music, from which he received a diploma in 1950. His next few years were spent in the United States Army, but upon discharge he returned to Mannes (which by then had become a college) and earned a bachelor's degree (1955), having studied with Felix Salzer, Roy Travis and (privately) Roger Sessions. He now teaches there. ("I am interested in all music—I like to look at my students' music.") After a year devoted exclusively to composition, Sydeman enrolled at the Hartt College of Music (1957). Here, in two years, he obtained a master's degree, taught and entered into the first of the mutually advantageous relationships with performers that have characterized his burgeoning career. Bertram Turetzky had just organized the Hartt Chamber Players and was appalled at the lack of compositions available for his small instrumental ensemble. Sydeman filled the void, creating many chamber works ("I contributed a basic repertoire for this group.") which he had the advantage of hearing in performance soon after their completion. ("My compositional maturity coincided with the Turetzky experience.") A reading of one of these works led violinist Max Pollikoff to request a new work for his Music in Our Time series. Sydeman responded with "Concerto da Camera" for violin and chamber orchestra, and since has written several more concertos for Pollikoff. In 1960, an earlier chamber concerto, for viola and seven instruments, won the Pacifica Foundation Award. ("Since then, I have composed some thirty chamber works, all requested or commissioned by performers.")

The most impressive of Sydeman's composer-performer relationships has been with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 1962, a copy of his Second Study for Orchestra was sent to Leinsdorf, who was so impressed with the work that he performed it the following year. (When Leinsdorf guest-conducted the Czech Philharmonic, he selected the Second Study as the American work on the program.) His request for another work was met by the Third Study for Orchestra—composed and performed in 1965. After Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann donated funds to the Boston Symphony for the commissioning of a work in memory of John F. Kennedy, William Sydeman was the composer selected.

But what Sydeman regards as his most important composition to date, the orchestral concerto "Oecumenicus" (1964), has not yet been performed. Couched in the form of a theme and variations, with a concluding fantasia, this 55-minute work brilliantly explores every aspect of instrumental combinations within the orchestra, reflecting what the composer calls his "obsession with technique."

But "Oecumenicus" is the only major Sydeman work to go unperformed. Last summer, he conducted the first performance of his Viola Concerto, with Ralph Hirsch as soloist. He holds a 1966 Koussevitzky Award commission for a new orchestral work, and is also working on a concerto (piano, four hands), commissioned by the Wentworths, which reflects some of the technical innovations that fascinated him in the works of eastern European composers. Sydeman's work was cited in 1962 (N.I.A.L.) as "the honest and straightforward music of an outstanding young talent." A talent that is brilliantly fulfilling itself.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 900,000

NOV 15 1966

Honor JFK In Music

By WILLIAM BENDER

John F. Kennedy has been dead three years this month, and among the tributes planned is a musical one by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tomorrow night in Philharmonic Hall they will give the first New York performance of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by the young American composer William Sydeman. It is a half-hour work for narrator and full orchestra.

"MIGHT HAVE BEEN"

Sydeman, who writes in a contemporary style and who ranks as one of the leading composers of his generation, has drawn his text from Kennedy's speeches, books by Arthur Schlesinger Jr. and Theodore Sorensen, the introduction by Allan Nevins to Volume II of Kennedy's speeches, a poem by Stephen Spender, and "Ecclesiastes." The narration will be by actor E. G. Marshall.

The first portion of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" —opening with Nevins' "To tens of millions the skies seemed suddenly darkened at midday"—attempts to depict the reaction to the loss of a young president who set new forces in motion. The second segment aims at what the man himself stood for, what he said, what he thought.

Sydeman, a native New Yorker who now lives in Hastings-on-Hudson with his wife and three children, was 32 when Kennedy was elected to the presidency in 1960.

The first thing Leinsdorf asked in the summer of 1965 when he talked to Sydeman about the commission was whether he had voted for Kennedy. Fortunately, Sydeman was able to reply that he had. Politics normally doesn't enter into this realm, but it was obviously good sense to establish some sort of identification between composer and subject.

The actual commission came from a woman in New York City, Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann, who fled Germany in 1938 and who does not, by her own admission, have the money to be a steady patron of the arts.

"TO SHOW GRATITUDE"

"But this one time I wanted to show my gratitude for the opportunities I have found here, and it seemed to me that this tragedy that concerned the world was the best possible occasion," she said.

She left it to Leinsdorf to select the composer. Leinsdorf, in turn, left it to Sydeman, whose work he has performed repeatedly in the last few seasons, to choose the actual text.

Sydeman's is not a devotee of any single school of composition, but uses the tonal and harmonic resources opened up by Schoenberg, Bartok, Stravinsky, and his teacher, Roger Sessions, with freedom and individuality.

His new work incorporates elements of the "Marche Funebre" from Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and, because he felt the need of a patriotic touch, the "Rockets Red Glare" phrase from the National Anthem. But it all comes out sounding like Sydeman, as tomorrow night's listeners will find out.

World Journal Tribune photo by O'Brien

WILLIAM SYDEMAN
A musical tribute to JFK

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100

FEB 1967

Boston Symphony Orchestra: Leinsdorf

William Sydeman's In Memoriam John F. Kennedy, which received its New York premiere in the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Philharmonic Hall on November 16, fails to provide any special justification for yet another indulgence in that most intractable of forms, a narration with orchestra. When singing is not used to unite words with music, it is only an imaginative power of exceptional vividness that can prevent our being distracted from the music by the spoken text and from the spoken text by the music. Such power Sydeman's setting does not have, and he has further handicapped himself by selecting passages of prose —including one from the introduction to Volume II of Kennedy's speeches— that seem peculiarly unsuitable for musical expression. The orchestral backing to Stephen Spender's fine poem, I think continually of those who were truly great, has no more relation to the text than any other part of the work; but it does make sounds attractive enough to suggest, though I am not acquainted with Sydeman's other works, that a real composer is buried under this impossible apparatus.

E. G. Marshall's narration was slick and superficial, but Leinsdorf drew a fair degree of conviction from the orchestral part. The program began with a totally unbaroque reading of Bach's Third Suite for orchestra—a harpsichord was used in four movements, but not, incomprehensibly, in the Air, where it is least dispensable—and after the intermission Schumann's exuberant First Symphony plodded along with leaden solemnity.

131

WILLIAM SYDEMAN

BMI
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 16,000

MAR 1967

William Sydeman

BY PAUL TUROK

The furor over William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" (premiered November 4, 1966, by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra) is the latest evidence of the mark this 38-year-old composer is making on the serious music world. Coincident with a performance of his Second Study for Orchestra by the Czech Philharmonic, Sydeman recently represented the United States State Department as an exchange lecturer in Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Bulgaria. In 1964, he received the Boston Symphony Merit Award for his orchestral compositions, and he has been cited by the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Beyond these impressive credentials rests a soft-spoken, self-assured man, one who is—above all—a musician. Born and educated in New York City, Sydeman spent two years at Duke University (1944-45) before the great attraction of music ("I played the piano and wrote for my own amusement.") led him to enroll at the Mannes School of Music, from which he received a diploma in 1950. His next few years were spent in the United States Army, but upon discharge he returned to Mannes (which by then had become a college) and earned a bachelor's degree (1955), having studied with Felix Salzer, Roy Travis and (privately) Roger Sessions. He now teaches there. ("I am interested in all music—I like to look at my students' music.") After a year devoted exclusively to composition, Sydeman enrolled at the Hartt College of Music (1957). Here, in two years, he obtained a master's degree, taught and entered into the first of the mutually advantageous relationships with performers that have characterized his burgeoning career. Bertram Turetzky had just organized the Hartt Chamber Players and was appalled at the lack of compositions available for his small instrumental ensemble. Sydeman filled the void, creating many chamber works ("I contributed a basic repertoire for this group.") which he had the advantage of hearing in performance soon after their completion. ("My compositional maturity coincided with the Turetzky experience.") A reading of one of these works led violinist Max Pollikoff to request a new work for his Music in Our Time series. Sydeman responded with "Concerto da Camera" for violin and chamber orchestra, and since has written several more concertos for Pollikoff. In 1960, an earlier chamber concerto, for viola and seven instruments, won the Pacifica Foundation Award. ("Since then, I have composed some thirty chamber works, all requested or commissioned by performers.")

The most impressive of Sydeman's composer-performer relationships has been with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In 1962, a copy of his Second Study for Orchestra was sent to Leinsdorf, who was so impressed with the work that he performed it the following year. (When Leinsdorf guest-conducted the Czech Philharmonic, he selected the Second Study as the American work on the program.) His request for another work was met by the Third Study for Orchestra—composed and performed in 1965. After Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann donated funds to the Boston Symphony for the commissioning of a work in memory of John F. Kennedy, William Sydeman was the composer selected.

But what Sydeman regards as his most important composition to date, the orchestral concerto "Oecumenicus" (1964), has not yet been performed. Couched in the form of a theme and variations, with a concluding fantasia, this 55-minute work brilliantly explores every aspect of instrumental combinations within the orchestra, reflecting what the composer calls his "obsession with technique."

But "Oecumenicus" is the only major Sydeman work to go unperformed. Last summer, he conducted the first performance of his Viola Concerto, with Ralph Hirsch as soloist. He holds a 1966 Koussevitzky Award commission for a new orchestral work, and is also working on a concerto (piano, four hands), commissioned by the Wentworths, which reflects some of the technical innovations that fascinated him in the works of eastern European composers. Sydeman's work was cited in 1962 (N.I.A.L.) as "the honest and straightforward music of an outstanding young talent." A talent that is brilliantly fulfilling itself.

World Journal Tribune
NEW YORK, NEW YORK
D. 900,000

NOV 15 1966

Honor JFK In Music

By WILLIAM BENDER

John F. Kennedy has been dead three years this month, and among the tributes planned is a musical one by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Tomorrow night in Philharmonic Hall they will give the first New York performance of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by the young American composer William Sydeman. It is a half-hour work for narrator and full orchestra.

"MIGHT HAVE BEEN"

Sydeman, who writes in a contemporary style and who ranks as one of the leading composers of his generation, has drawn his text from Kennedy's speeches, books by Arthur Schlesinger Jr. and Theodore Sorensen, the introduction by Allan Nevins to Volume II of Kennedy's speeches, a poem by Stephen Spender, and "Ecclesiastes." The narration will be by actor E. G. Marshall.

The first portion of "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy"—opening with Nevins' "To tens of millions the skies seemed suddenly darkened at midday"—attempts to depict the reaction to the loss of a young president who set new forces in motion. The second segment aims at what the man himself stood for, what he said, what he thought.

Sydeman, a native New Yorker who now lives in Hastings-on-Hudson with his wife and three children, was 32 when Kennedy was elected to the presidency in 1960.

The first thing Leinsdorf asked in the summer of 1965 when he talked to Sydeman about the commission was whether he had voted for Kennedy. Fortunately, Sydeman was able to reply that he had. Politics normally doesn't enter into this realm, but it was obviously good sense to establish some sort of identification between composer and subject.

The actual commission came from a woman in New York City, Mrs. Ruth Kaufmann, who fled Germany in 1938 and who does not, by her own admission, have the money to be a steady patron of the arts.

"TO SHOW GRATITUDE"

"But this one time I wanted to show my gratitude for the opportunities I have found here, and it seemed to me that this tragedy that concerned the world was the best possible occasion," she said.

She left it to Leinsdorf to select the composer. Leinsdorf, in turn, left it to Sydeman, whose work he has performed repeatedly in the last few seasons, to choose the actual text.

World Journal Tribune photo by O'Brien

WILLIAM SYDEMAN

A musical tribute to JFK

Sydeman's is not a devotee of any single school of composition, but uses the tonal and harmonic resources opened up by Schoenberg, Bartok, Stravinsky, and his teacher, Roger Sessions, with freedom and individuality.

His new work incorporates elements of the "Marche Funebre" from Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony and, because he felt the need of a patriotic touch, the "Rockets Red Glare" phrase from the National Anthem. But it all comes out sounding like Sydeman, as tomorrow night's listeners will find out.

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100

FEB 1967

Boston Symphony Orchestra: Leinsdorf

William Sydeman's In Memoriam John F. Kennedy, which received its New York premiere in the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at Philharmonic Hall on November 16, fails to provide any special justification for yet another indulgence in that most intractable of forms, a narration with orchestra. When singing is not used to unite words with music, it is only an imaginative power of exceptional vividness that can prevent our being distracted from the music by the spoken text and from the spoken text by the music. Such power Sydeman's setting does not have, and he has further handicapped himself by selecting passages of prose—including one from the introduction to Volume II of Kennedy's speeches—that seem peculiarly unsuitable for musical expression. The orchestral backing to Stephen Spender's fine poem, I think continually of those who were truly great, has no more relation to the text than any other part of the work; but it does make sounds attractive enough to suggest, though I am not acquainted with Sydeman's other works, that a real composer is buried under this impossible apparatus.

E. G. Marshall's narration was slick and superficial, but Leinsdorf drew a fair degree of conviction from the orchestral part. The program began with a totally unbaroque reading of Bach's Third Suite for orchestra—a harpsichord was used in four movements, but not, incomprehensibly, in the Air, where it is least dispensable—and after the intermission Schumann's exuberant First Symphony plodded along with leaden solemnity.

RAFAEL KUBELIK

SUNDAY REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
CIRC. 115,200

JAN 22 1967

New England Newsclip

Rafael Kubelik: A Conductor At Odds With Himself

By DANIEL WEBSTER
Music Critic of The Philadelphia Inquirer

Rafael Kubelik brushed back wiry graying hair and pronounced himself a happy man.

On the face of it, his statement seems contradictory. The 53-year-old conductor, here to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday, has weathered enough travail to embitter most men. Son of violinist Jan Kubelik, he saw his father's fortunes shatter and his art turn into a race against creditors. When his own star began to rise as a conductor, his native Czechoslovakia capitulated first to the Nazis and then to the Russians; and let no man mistake his devotion to his homeland. His escape from Europe was to Chicago in 1949 to start three years with the Chicago Symphony, a relationship that ended loudly and abruptly in 1953. His wife, a companion through all this, died in 1961. Yet, in 1967, Kubelik finds himself a happy man.

The reasons are highly personal and complex.

He is getting back in the swing of his life as a conductor after taking a year off, and he told a visitor of that sabbatical.

"I told my own orchestra (the Bavarian State Radio Orchestra) that I would plan their season but not conduct a concert," he said.

He didn't pick up the baton again until last August when he appeared in the Salzburg and Edinburgh festivals.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Rafael Kubelik on the podium, comes to Woolsey Hall Tuesday evening to give the fourth concert of the current Woolsey Hall Series. The distinguished guest conductor, who since 1961 has been Music Director of Munich's principal orchestra, the Bavarian Radio Orchestra, has arranged an intriguing program for this symphonic occasion, which will begin with Haydn's Symphony in B-flat major, No. 102, continue with Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Tympani, and conclude with Franck's Symphony in D minor. Charles Wilson, Assistant Conductor of the Bostonians, will be the piano soloist in the Martinu work.

"I am composing. You know, for years, I have been writing for the cupboard. I conduct here and there and I have on my desk a manuscript that I look at for a little and then leave it. During my vacation, I have written a piece for strings on commission from the Lucerne Festival, I have written a violin concerto and I have another opera sketched. It's wonderful. In these few months, all this has flowed out."

Home for Kubelik is Lucerne. "I never gave up my flat there, and now I think I will build a little house and become a Swiss citizen. I could have become an American—you were very good to me when I came in 1949—or I could have become an English subject. But I wanted to be a Czech conductor and so I had not taken any steps. I left my country, but I stayed with my nation, if you see what I mean.

"Now my son is past 21 and needs papers, and I think my friends and the people who understand me know that I am a Czech even if I take Swiss citizenship," the conductor said.

The year away from the podium has freed what Kubelik calls his other self. "A conductor is an extrovert, but the composer is an introvert. The composer hides from publicity, but the conductor must seek it. As a musician I am always at odds with myself.

RAFAEL KUBELIK

"But I am not tense—oh, in rehearsal I am nervous—but deep down I am not tense. I have come to realize that I am alone. We are all alone. When you die, you are alone. Okay, then why try to be a big success, to make a lot of money? I have finally come to realize that if you do things without fear or corruption, you are honest with yourself. Is there anything else in life?

"You must have convictions and do what you think is right. Chicago? I enjoyed myself there, but the ladies did not like me and the Cassidy (Claudia Cassidy, former critic for the Chicago Tribune) hated me, and at the end of three years I said goodbye.

"It was not too much Czech music, it was too much contemporary music. I looked back through my records the other day. In three years, I played 60 contemporary work, but only 8 Czech things among them, besides those from the Romantic era, four symphonies of Dvorak and 'The Bartered Bride.'

"It wasn't too much Czech music; the audience wasn't ready for contemporary works. But I had to do what I felt—and I did," he shrugged.

"It was wonderful to sit in my room with nothing to do but write," he said of his free year. "No airplanes, no rehearsals, no commitments. I will begin to conduct some of my own things now. I have played so many other composers, I think I owe it to myself to try some of my own music—not here but in Europe. To see how they go," he said.

Meanwhile, Kubelik has remarried and he credits his new wife with smoothing the way for him, helping him back to the plateau of happiness he professes. And the Chicago Symphony came to him again to ask him to lead three weeks of performances, a stint he completed just before Christmas.

"I had to go back. I had to complete the arch," he said of Chicago. "I was very happy to go back. It was a most warm welcome, a family-like approach to the orchestra, the critics, the public. To find people who are faithful—that is the biggest value a human being should strive for," he said.

133

MISCHA DICHTER

HIGH FIDELITY
TRADE NEWS
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 6,400

JAN 1967

RCA VICTOR'S ROUNDUP—

Young Americans with Russian Medals

NEW YORK

Before anyone could say nye po-póostim, RCA Victor snapped up three American winners from last year's Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow and promptly hustled them into recording studios to tape their prize-winning performances. The results are partially at hand already, for a cello recital by Stephen Kates has just been released. To follow shortly will be a collection of operatic arias by soprano Jane Marsh and two discs from young Mischa Dichter: one devoted to Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto (with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra) and a solo album comprising Schubert's posthumous A major Sonata and Stravinsky's Scenes from Pétrouchka.

Enter Mischa Dichter. It was the Schubert Sonata that commanded Mr. Dichter's attention one unseasonably humid afternoon last November. The lights in RCA's downtown recording "studio," Webster Hall, were being kept low, not because Mr. Dichter felt the faint glow would help him capture the music's autumnal colors, but primarily to keep the garish glare of the ballroom's 1920-decor (Brooklyn Byzantine) from actually interfering with his concentration —"It just isn't Schubert," he said. With the lighting subdued and the tape machines in place, the pianist settled down to four hours of uninterrupted hard work on the Scherzo and Rondo movements.

Producer Richard Mohr guided the sessions with a sure and understanding hand; young Dichter was allowed as much practice time as he could use while getting the feel of working before a microphone. These little pre-take rehearsal sessions would sometimes last over ten minutes as phrases were continually repolished. One of the pianist's rather novel practice techniques was to take Schubert's rondo theme and transpose it up a half tone, then down a tone, and finally back into A major. "It gives me a fresh perspective on the problem," he said later.

Although born in Shanghai of Polish parents, Mischa Dichter has spent nineteen of his twenty-one years in this country—principally in Los Angeles, where he studied with Aube Tserko, a Schnabel pupil. For the past four years he has been with Rosina Lhévinne at Juilliard and has still another year to go before graduation. Winning the Silver Medal in the Tchaikovsky Competition has naturally opened up many doors and tempting offers for a busy concert career. But save for occasional solo appearances, Mr. Dichter plans to move slowly—in fact a New York recital, he says quite flatly, is still far in the future.

As for recording—he grinned a bit ruefully and pushed back an unruly bundle of hair (which somehow accented an uncanny resemblance to Lil Abner): "It's pretty sobering to hear yourself as others do. Sometimes I think that I should be at least twenty years older before recording the Schubert Sonata; it may sound easier than the Stravinsky but when it comes to putting across just the effect you're aiming for . . ." and he gestured towards the recalcitrant rondo lying propped up on a music stand near the control panels. "This will actually be the second record I've ever made. The first was done in Russia just after the competition when I taped the same two pieces—the Schubert and the Stravinsky —for Melodiya. They only gave me five hours to do both of them," he added, "so I think the new disc is going to be a whole lot better."

The Chattanooga Post
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
D. CIRC. N. AVAIL.

MAR 20 1967

Words and Music

An Exciting New Pianist

By BILL BRUNING
Post Amusements Editor

Back in April of 1958 a young man by the name of Van Cliburn startled the musical world and commanded its amazed attention by winning the first International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. He returned triumphantly home to record the Tchaikovsky score with which he won his laurels and recorded it—Concerto No. 1 in B-Flat Minor, Opus 23—on RCA Victor album no. LSC-2252. Since he has gone on to many more triumphs until now his name rests firmly among the great pianists of our time.

History repeated last year when youthful Misha Dichter did exactly as Cliburn did, winning the plaudits of the universe as he, too, annexed the coveted prize. And now, like Cliburn again, Dichter has recorded the great work for RCA Victor on album No. LSC-2954. When Cliburn waxed his version of the Concerto, he had Kiril Kondrashin conducting orchestra. Ditcher is accompanied by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

I pulled out the Cliburn record to compare it with Dichter's and, for the life of me, I could find little to choose between the two. Perhaps this is because Dichter is today at the same point of his career Cliburn was in 1958. Whether or not he goes on to win further plaudits as Cliburn did remains to be seen. But certainly his effort on this record indicates he most certainly will.

MISHA DICHTER (LEFT) PICTURED ON ALBUM COVER WITH MAESTRO ERIC LIENSDORF

Despite his youth, Dichter executes his task well and the Concerto, for my money, has never performed better—not even by Cliburn, or Rubenstein or any of the many others who have essayed the piano masterpiece.

His sure, sensitive touch comes through beautifully on each and every passage as his well-disciplined fingers confidently move over the keyboard. Leinsdorf's support, undoubtedly, was a big help to the young artist here and, this record a classical effort of sheer joy and consummate perfection.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

DEC 31 1966

MISCHA DICHTER, left, 21-year-old California pianist who earned a silver medal in the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow, goes over a score with Richard Mohr, RCA Victor Red Seal a&r producer. Dichter, who signed an exclusive pact with Victor, will make his disk debut with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony in Tchaikovsky's "Piano Concerto No. 1."

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W.—CIRC. N. AVAIL.

DEC 31 1966

RECORD WORLD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W.-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

DEC 31 1966

Dichter Signs With RCA

Mischa Dichter, 21-year-old American pianist who won a silver medal in this year's International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, has been signed to an exclusive recording contract by RCA Victor.

Mischa Dichter

Announcement was made by Roger Hall, manager, Red Seal Artists and Repertoire, who said Dichter's initial recording will be with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 directed by Erich Leinsdorf.

"We are proud to have Dichter as a Red Seal artist and look forward to many distinguished recordings from him," Hall said.

His debut concerto is the same that launched Van Cliburn as a Red Seal Artist for RCA Victor when he became the first American to win the Moscow competition in 1958.

Dichter was born in Shanghai and moved to Los Angeles with his parents at the age of two. He took his first piano lessons in Los Angeles at the age of six. His first success came in 1961 at the age of 15 when he won first prize in a competition sponsored by the Western Division of the Music Educators National Conference. He studied with Aube Tzerko and later came to the attention of the noted piano teacher, Rosina Lhevinne, who invited him to study at the Juilliard School. It was following his studies at Juilliard that he entered the Moscow competition.

133

MISCHA DICHTER

HIGH FIDELITY
TRADE NEWS
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 6,400

JAN 1967

RCA VICTOR'S ROUNDUP—

Young Americans with Russian Medals

NEW YORK

Before anyone could say nye po-póostim, RCA Victor snapped up three American winners from last year's Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow and promptly hustled them into recording studios to tape their prize-winning performances. The results are partially at hand already, for a cello recital by Stephen Kates has just been released. To follow shortly will be a collection of operatic arias by soprano Jane Marsh and two discs from young Mischa Dichter: one devoted to Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto (with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra) and a solo album comprising Schubert's posthumous A major Sonata and Stravinsky's Scenes from Pétrouchka.

Enter Mischa Dichter. It was the Schubert Sonata that commanded Mr. Dichter's attention one unseasonably humid afternoon last November. The lights in RCA's downtown recording "studio," Webster Hall, were being kept low, not because Mr. Dichter felt the faint glow would help him capture the music's autumnal colors, but primarily to keep the garish glare of the ballroom's 1920-decor (Brooklyn Byzantine) from actually interfering with his concentration —"It just isn't Schubert," he said. With the lighting subdued and the tape machines in place, the pianist settled down to four hours of uninterrupted hard work on the Scherzo and Rondo movements.

Producer Richard Mohr guided the sessions with a sure and understanding hand; young Dichter was allowed as much practice time as he could use while getting the feel of working before a microphone. These little pre-take rehearsal sessions would sometimes last over ten minutes as phrases were continually repolished. One of the pianist's rather novel practice techniques was to take Schubert's rondo theme and transpose it up a half tone, then down a tone, and finally back into A major. "It gives me a fresh perspective on the problem," he said later.

Although born in Shanghai of Polish parents, Mischa Dichter has spent nineteen of his twenty-one years in this country—principally in Los Angeles, where he studied with Aube Tserko, a Schnabel pupil. For the past four years he has been with Rosina Lhévinne at Juilliard and has still another year to go before graduation. Winning the Silver Medal in the Tchaikovsky Competition has naturally opened up many doors and tempting offers for a busy concert career. But save for occasional solo appearances, Mr. Dichter plans to move slowly—in fact a New York recital, he says quite flatly, is still far in the future.

As for recording—he grinned a bit ruefully and pushed back an unruly bundle of hair (which somehow accented an uncanny resemblance to Lil Abner): "It's pretty sobering to hear yourself as others do. Sometimes I think that I should be at least twenty years older before recording the Schubert Sonata; it may sound easier than the Stravinsky but when it comes to putting across just the effect you're aiming for . . ." and he gestured towards the recalcitrant rondo lying propped up on a music stand near the control panels. "This will actually be the second record I've ever made. The first was done in Russia just after the competition when I taped the same two pieces—the Schubert and the Stravinsky —for Melodiya. They only gave me five hours to do both of them," he added, "so I think the new disc is going to be a whole lot better."

The Chattanooga Post
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
D. CIRC. N. AVAIL.

MAR 20 1967

Words and Music

An Exciting New Pianist

By BILL BRUNING
Post Amusements Editor

Back in April of 1958 a young man by the name of Van Cliburn startled the musical world and commanded its amazed attention by winning the first International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. He returned triumphantly home to record the Tchaikovsky score with which he won his laurels and recorded it—Concerto No. 1 in B-Flat Minor, Opus 23— on RCA Victor album no. LSC-2252. Since he has gone on to many more triumphs until now his name rests firmly among the great pianists of our time.

History repeated last year when youthful Misha Dichter did exactly as Cliburn did, winning the plaudits of the universe as he, too, annexed the coveted prize. And now, like Cliburn again, Dichter has recorded the great work for RCA Victor on album No. LSC-2954. When Cliburn waxed his version of the Concerto, he had Kiril Kondrashin conducting orchestra. Ditcher is accompanied by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

I pulled out the Cliburn record to compare it with Dichter's and, for the life of me, I could find little to choose between the two. Perhaps this is because Dichter is today at the same point of his career Cliburn was in 1958. Whether or not he goes on to win further plaudits as Cliburn did remains to be seen. But certainly his effort on this record indicates he most certainly will.

ISHA DICHTER (LEFT) PICTURED ON ALBUM COVER WITH MAESTRO ERIC LIENSDORF

Despite his youth, Dichter executes his task well and the Concerto, for my money, has never performed better—not even by Cliburn, or Rubenstein or any of the many others who have essayed the piano masterpiece.

His sure, sensitive touch comes through beautifully on each and every passage as his well-disciplined fingers confidently move over the keyboard. Leinsdorf's support, undoubtedly, was a big help to the young artist here and, this record a classical effort of sheer joy and consummate perfection.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

DEC 31 1966

MISCHA DICHTER, left, 21-year-old California pianist who earned a silver medal in the Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow, goes over a score with Richard Mohr, RCA Victor Red Seal a&r producer. Dichter, who signed an exclusive pact with Victor, will make his disk debut with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony in Tchaikovsky's "Piano Concerto No. 1."

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W.—CIRC. N. AVAIL.

DEC 31 1966

RECORD WORLD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W.-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

DEC 31 1966

Dichter Signs With RCA

Mischa Dichter, 21-year-old American pianist who won a silver medal in this year's International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, has been signed to an exclusive recording contract by RCA Victor.

Mischa Dichter

Announcement was made by Roger Hall, manager, Red Seal Artists and Repertoire, who said Dichter's initial recording will be with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a performance of the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 directed by Erich Leinsdorf.

"We are proud to have Dichter as a Red Seal artist and look forward to many distinguished recordings from him," Hall said.

His debut concerto is the same that launched Van Cliburn as a Red Seal Artist for RCA Victor when he became the first American to win the Moscow competition in 1958.

Dichter was born in Shanghai and moved to Los Angeles with his parents at the age of two. He took his first piano lessons in Los Angeles at the age of six. His first success came in 1961 at the age of 15 when he won first prize in a competition sponsored by the Western Division of the Music Educators National Conference. He studied with Aube Tzerko and later came to the attention of the noted piano teacher, Rosina Lhevinne, who invited him to study at the Juilliard School. It was following his studies at Juilliard that he entered the Moscow competition.

RADIO + TV

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Journal & Press
SOMERVILLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,594
SEP 15 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
SEP 18 1966

First Live Broadcast Of Symphony Season Scheduled Sept. 23

WGBH-FM Starts Stereo Friday With BSO Concert

WGBH-FM inaugurates stereo-multiplex broadcasting Friday, Sept. 23 at 2 p.m. when the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert of the season will be broadcast live from Symphony Hall.

It was just 15 years ago that WGBH-FM first went on the air, with another Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert, and ever since that date (Oct. 6, 1951) the station has carried all Friday-Saturday Symphony programs live, more than 500 in all.

Always the objective has been to give listeners the closest possible approximation to attending the concert in person. Now the new stereophonic Friday afternoon broadcasts will offer FM-multiplex listeners an even more faithful sense of the actual sound of the orchestra, while those without this equipment will still get excellent reception.

To begin the Boston Symphony's 86th season Erich Leinsdorf hes chosen a single work: Mahler's Symphony No. 3, with the young American mezzo-soprano Shirley Verret as soloist.

The first of many stereo broadcasts planned by WGBH-FM in coming weeks, this live Boston Symphony program will be followed Friday (Sept. 23) at 10 p.m. by a concert recorded in stereo from the 1965 Holland Festival featuring the Utrecht Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Bruno Maderna.

The new stereo transmission facilities were made possible by a gift from Mrs. Melvin Young.

WCRB also carries the Boston Symphony concerts and will broadcast them in stereo, a system in use at the station for some time. The Saturday broadcasts will be heard on WCRB at 8:30 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Record-American (m) (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 411,789
SEP 29 1966

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette
Sun-Telegraph
D. 252,291 SAT. 241,399
SEP 22 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Saturday, October 15, 1966

Radio Concert Highlights

WEDNESDAY—Boston Symphony Orchestra: Stanislaw Skrowaczewski conducting with Leslie Parnas, cello; Prokofiev: Suite No. 2, from "Romeo and Juliet;" Saint-Saens: Cello Concerto No. 1 in A; Schumann: Symphony No. 4 in D (9-10:55 p.m.—WCMF). Concert: Tchaikovsky: Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat Minor; Bach: Prelude and Fugue in A Minor, "The Great;" Haydn: Symphony No. 101 in D Major, "Clock;" Damase: Sonata for Flute and Harp; Dvorak: Romance for Violin and Orchestra; Beethoven: Symphony No. 7 in A Major; Yardumian: Symphony No. 1; Falla: "El Retablo de Maese Pedro;" Mozart: Flute Concerto No. 2 in D Major (8:05 p.m.—WBBF-FM).

Also WYDD to Move in Town

* * *

THE STATION has exclusive contracts for the broadcasts by the New York Philharmonic and the Boston Symphony Orchestras. It is also planning a "Complete Shakespeare Festival" in the coming season.

"We want the audience to LISTEN rather than just HEAR," Goldberg said. He promises "programming without annoying gimmicks, too numerous time checks, constant news headlines and weather reports . . . and over-commercialization." The latter, of course, is not too rash a promise as FM advertising goes today. But there is always the future.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
SEP 8 1966

ton and new releases.

MAGIC FLUTE

A concert version of Mozart's opera "The Magic Flute" will be presented in its entirety on Channel 2, Sunday, Sept. 11 at 8:30 p.m., with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Tanglewood Choir and a distinguished group of soloists.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,785
OCT 29 1966

Best On Channel 2 Next Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,817
OCT 29 1966

Frank Soloist With Symphony

The distinguished pianist Claude Frank will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Channel 2 presents the second live telecast concert of the season, Tuesday, Nov. 1 at 7:30 p.m.

Broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-FM, direct from Symphony Hall, the program will begin one hour earlier than usual so that the entire family may enjoy the concert.

To open his program, conductor Erich Leinsdorf has chosen one of Mozart's most popular symphonies — the Symphony No. 40. This will be followed by the suite from "Lulu" by Alban Berg with the young American soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson as soloist. And finally, Leinsdorf will be joined on the Symphony Hall stage by Claude Frank, for a performance of Beethoven's First Piano Concerto.

No stranger to Boston, Frank first appeared with the orchestra in 1959 at the invitation of Charles Munch and has since given numerous concerts in the city. In the past ten years he has made numerous concert tours and has performed on the major concert stages of Europe and the United States.

This full-length Boston Symphony Orchestra concert is produced for television by Jordan M. Whitelaw and directed by William Cosel.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 11 1966

Music On The Air

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new season will be well-covered on the Boston airwaves. All Saturday evening concerts will be broadcast by WCRB-AM and FM. Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts will be aired over WGBH-FM. Nine Tuesday evening concerts will be televised and broadcast by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and WGBH-FM.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355
OCT 1 1966

PHYLLIS CURTIN—The famed American soprano sings songs by Rossini, Schubert, Berlioz and Strauss Sunday at 8 PM on WGBH-TV, Channel 2, in a full-length recital recorded this summer at the Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass.

GAZETTE-TELEGRAPH
COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.
D. 36,133 SUN. 36,696
OCT 20 1966

Boston Symphony Season to Be Broadcast Here

By JOHN FETLER
ARTS CRITIC

The broadcasting of entire concerts of symphony music is gaining popularity throughout the nation, and the latest addition to this type of cultura entertainment is station KCMS, AM and FM, of Manitou Springs which will be welcome news to music lovers.

Bud Edmonds, station owner, announced that an entire 26-week series of complete concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by the wo renowned Erich Leinsdorf, will be broadcast by KCMS-AM-FM, starting at 8:15 p.m. today.

The length of each concert will vary in length. The opening program tonight will run about two hours and 46 minutes, and, as has been the policy of KCMS for nearly 15 years, there will be no interruptions during the concert.

The second program, to be heard Oct. 27, will run at just under 90 minutes. The other programs will be similar in length, taking the regional listeners through the entire Boston winter series.

Although there will be no commerical interruptions during the concerts, Edmonds said that a short intermission feature will bring to the attention of the listeners programs of a local nature in the immediate future by community groups.

Tonight, for instance, the intermission will feature the Colorado Springs Opera Association production of Madame Butterfly, which is staged Friday. Other local organizations to be featured will include the Symphony, Chorale, Colorado College and Music Clubs, and other orgaizations. The intermission features will usually be for five minutes.

The opening Boston Symphony program to be broadcast locally will be from the 1966 Berkshire Festival, featuring Act One and Act Two of the Magic Flute by Mozart, conducted by Leinsdorf, featuring various soloists.

The second concert in the series will include Barber's Medea's Meditation and Dance of Vengeance; Piano Concerto No. 4 by Sain-Saens, played by Gran Johannesen, and the second portion of Beethoven Symphony No. 3.

Edmonds said that Sinton Dairy and Out West Printing make the programs possible, and that KCMS-AM and FM provides the time at cost of operation.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Foster's Democrat (e)
DOVER, N. H.
Circ. 11,700
OCT 1 1966

Channel 11 Program Notes

Tanglewood Recital

Channel 11 presents the Phyllis Curtin Recital at Tanglewood on October 4 at 9 pm.

The well known Soprano includes in her concert "La Regata Veneziana" (Tre Conzonette), Rossini's songs about a young Venetian woman watching a gondola race in which her lover is competing. "Adieux a la vie," (farewell to life—Elegy on One Note) is also by Rossini.

A group of six Schubert songs are followed by Drei Lieder der Ophelia" (Three songs of Ophelia) by Strauss, Le Mort d'Ophelia" (Ballade) and "Zaide" by Berlioz. The program concludes with "Cantigas de Amigo" (Poems by Francisco Javier) by Valdo Sciammarella.

Miss Curtin is accompanied by Ryan Edwards, and Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
Albany Knickerbocker News
Wednesday, September 21, 1966

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,615
SEP 20 1966

WAMC to Air Concerts by Symphony

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
SEP 22 1966

Symphony Concert Fri. On WAMC

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard in a concert starting its 86th season over radio station WAMC-FM, 90.3 mc., at 2 p.m. on Friday.

Erich Leinsdorf will conduct a single work for this first concert: Symphony No. 3 by Gustave Mahler. Shirley Verret, the young American mezzo-soprano, will be the featured soloist.

"Tomorrow's Symphony," featuring a discussion of works to be performed at the Friday concerts, will again be heard on WAMC Thursday nights. James Haar, assistant professor of music at Harvard University, will begin his regular hosting duties for this show at 10 p.m. tonight.

Throughout the season, Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will be heard live, directly from Boston's Symphony Hall, each Friday at 2 p.m. over WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College.

Savannah Morning News
SAVANNAH, GA.
D. 55,516 SUN. 62,472
SEP 22 1966

Televised Concert Wins Rave

Editor, Morning News:

With little advance publicity a rare privilege was offered to Savannah on Sunday afternoon. TV football, baseball, and golf are certainly enjoyed by many of us while relaxing on the weekend. But, for a change, a delightful surprise was presented by WSAV-TV on Sunday,—a concert from the Berkshire (Mass.) Music Festival, by the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, and featuring two young people from California and Japan, winners of this year's International Tchaikowsky Competition in Moscow.

Georgia has talent, too! May we have more programs like this to inspire our young people, —to show them that those hours of practice do "pay off." Perhaps eventually Georgia, too, can have a Fine Arts School like North Carolina, a Music Festival like the Berkshires, an International Tchaikowsky winner, too! Here is an opportunity to make culture attractive to these young people,—yes, fascinating.

MRS. GEORGE W. RAY
Savannah

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,785
OCT 15 1966

Best On Channel 2 Next Week

CHANNEL 2 NOTES

The 11th season of live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecasts gets under way at 8:30 Tuesday night, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting from Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 15 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098
OCT 26 1966

Radio Today

"The Koussevitzky Legacy". The late Dr. Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in recordings of Mozart's Symphony No. 25 and the Symphony No. 1 "1933" by American composer Roy Harris. A recorded interview with Harris is an intermission feature. WBCN, 8 p.m.

Tonight's New England Conservatory Concert will be broadcast live from Jordan Hall. WGBH, 8:30 p.m.

Radio Highlights

Today

Pro-Basketball — Boston Celtics vs. San Francisco Warriors at Boston. WHDH, 8:10 p.m.

Boston Symphony Orchestra. Thomas Schippers conducts a taped concert from the 1966 Berkshire Festival. The program comprises Rossini's Overture to "La Gazza Ladra", Schumann's Piano Concerto in A minor and Moussorgsky-Ravels "Pictures at an Exhibition". Claude Frank is soloist in the Concerto. WCRB, 8:25 p.m.

Boston Symphony Orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf leads the orchestra in a recorded concert from the 1966 Berkshire Festival. The program includes Prokofiev's Symphony No. 1 ("Classical"), Sessions' Psalm 140 (with Anne Elgar, soloist), Strauss' "Til Eulenspiegel" and Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 2 (with Abbey Simon, soloist). WGBH, 8:30 p.m.

BesTView in Town

Berle Show May Get Ax

By ANTHONY LA CAMERA

NBC-TV statisticians have figured out that the 2½-hour telecast of "An Afternoon at Tanglewood" last August attracted a total audience of seven million, far more than have attended the Berkshire Festival in its 30-year history. On Oct. 23, incidentally, Bell Telephone Hour will furnish a behind-the-scenes look at the famed festival. The descriptive program title: "Tanglewood: Music Under the Trees" . . . On the ABC-TV front, meanwhile, statisticians estimate that 60 million viewers watched "The Bridge on the River Kwai." The same network, hot on movie spectacles, reportedly sent out an unsuccessful $3-million feeler for "West Side Story," but it will go ahead with a 2½-hour showing of Danny Kaye's "Hans Chirstian Andersen" on Nov. 4 and a three-hour presentation of "Guy and Dolls," starring Marlon Brando, on Feb. 8.

135

COLUMBIA, S. C.
STATE RECORD
SUN. 105,500

NOV 13 1966

Educational Television

SUNDAY

8:30 p. m. — THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in another of their special Sunday night performances over the South Carolina Educational Television Network. Tonight's selections include "Symphony in C" by Schubert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 200,259
OCT 16 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
OCT 10 1966

On TV and Radio

★ ★

Overlooked in all the hubbub over the new season on the nation's commercial networks is the fact that educational televison is beginning another new season, too. Here's a look at some upcoming offerings on WGBH, Channel 2.

The station will begin its 11th season of live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecasts Tuesday, Oct. 18 at 8:30 p.m. Direct from Symphony Hall, Erich Leinsdorf has chosen a single work for the first presentation—Mahler's Third Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 200,259
NOV 20 1966

FM Music for This Week

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra will perform a program of three works, including Sydeman's In Memorium John F. Kennedy, Tuesday evening at 8:30 on WGBH-TV, Channel 2. The Kennedy Memoriam will be narrated by E. G. Marshall.

Other works are Bach's Suite No. 3 in D Major and Schumann's Symphony No. 1. Erich Leinsdorf will direct.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Morning Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 45,730
NOV 1 1966

SYMPHONY ON TV

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be telecast in concert live from Symphony Hall in Boston, tonight at 7:30 on Channel 11.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
OCT 27 1966

BSO on TV

Pianist Claude Frank will be soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Channel 2 presents the second live telecast concert of the season, Tuesday, Nov. 1 at 7:30 p.m. Program includes Mozart's Symphony No. 40, the suite from "Lulu" by Berg, with soprano Phyllis Bryn-Julson as soloist and Beethoven's First Piano Concerto.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Foster's Democrat (e)
DOVER, N. H.
Circ. 11,700
NOV 2 1966

Channel 11 Program Notes

BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will be telecast in concert live from Symphony Hall in Boston, today at 7:30 P.M. on Channel 11.

Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Mozart's Symphony No. 40 and Berg's Suite from Lulu with soloist Phyllis Bryn-Julsin. The concert also includes Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 with soloist Claude Frank.

ROME, N. Y.
SENTINEL
D. 19,000
NOV 8 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Post
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 11,125
NOV 20 1966

TV NOTES

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,172
NOV 19 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Press
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,686
NOV 17 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Observer
BRAINTREE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 3,301
NOV 22 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
NOV 20 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 145,838
NOV 17 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355
NOV 19 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Dorchester Argus-Citizen
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,319
NOV 22 1966

Musical Tribute To Late JFK Slated Tuesday

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NO. TONAWANDA NEWS
Thursday, November 10, 1966

Radio Highlights

WBEN - FM, 102.5, presents Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program which includes Shostakovitch's Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, beginning at 8 tonight.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
HAMILTON WEEKLY
Thursday, November 17, 1966

FM Music for This Week

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
OCT 13 1965

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355
OCT 15 1966

ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.
53,100
OCT 17 1966

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Saturday, August 27, 1966

Symphony Concerts on Channel 2

Channel 2 begins its 11th season of live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecasts Tuesday, at 8:30 PM.

Broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-FM, the concert will be telecast direct from Symphony Hall with Erich Leinsdorf conducting.

Last season Channel 2 added two extra telecasts; this year the total has been increased to nine.

For his opening program Mr. Leinsdorf has chosen a single work: Mahler's Third Symphony. As soloist he selected Shirley Verrett, the young American mezzo-soprano who has made a name for herself singing "Carmen" in opera houses from New York to Italy and California to Russia. And for his chorus he invited the New England Conservatory Chorus, conducted by Lorna Cooke de Varon and the Boston Boychoir directed by John Oliver.

This season Leinsdorf is opening all seven Boston Symphony concert series with Mahler's Third Symphony, following a practice he began last year; when the Beethoven Ninth was heard at each opening concert.

Featured FM Music

Operas Scheduled

✦ ✦

Also Symphonies

At least two operas are programed on FM during the next few days. From 8 to 11 PM Sunday, CHUM-FM will present Gounod's Faust. At 8 PM Tuesday, WBFO at its regular Opera Night will present Beethoven's Fidelio.

Elsewhere on the FM dial a great variety of music is presented, including two Boston Pops concerts on WBEN-FM, at 8:10 Sunday and 8 PM Friday. Boston Symphony concerts are scheduled from 3-5 PM Sunday on CHUM-FM, and at 8 PM Wednesday on WBEN-FM.

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.
NEWS
D. 17,000
OCT 22 1966

Highlights On Radio

WBEN, 930, features students from Holland Central High School who discuss "The High Cost of Driving," on High School Forum tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. Harry Ellis Dickson conducts the Boston Pops Orchestra in a program which includes the Procession of Bacchus from Delibes "Sylvia," and selections from "West Side Story," among others, at 8:10 tomorrow night.

WEBR, 970, broadcasts the Buffalo vs. Cleveland hockey game starting at 7:45 p.m. tomorrow.

The Voice of the Advertiser

This department is a reader's forum. Letters are welcome.

Cites TV Show Void of Loudness, Interruption

To the Editor: Anent your editorial of Oct. 3, "TV Loudness and Interruptions," and in particular your next to last paragraph—"We wonder if it wouldn't make good sense to group commercials in these long shows, thus offering fewer interruptions but no cutbacks in the total amount of commercial time. This idea is hardly new, but to our knowledge no network or station has yet given such a plan a serious trial."

You will be interested to know that our agency has just launched a landmark program format on behalf of two cooperating (very!) sponsors with Channel 20, Station WDCA-TV.

Each Wednesday night from 9 to 11 p.m., "Play of the Week" is to be presented without commercial interruption other than the silent (sic) showing of the sponsor's logo for 20 seconds every half hour. The opening and closing commercials are two minutes in length.

The sponsors are the P. J. Nee Furniture Co. of Rockville, Md., and Furs by Gartenhaus of Washington, D. C. They alternate weekly as of Oct. 12.

The latter organization also sponsors a two-hour Boston Symphony concert without commercial interruption of any kind, every Sunday afternoon from 2 to 4 on Radio Station WGMS—and has done so for about eight years!

You may be assured that your concluding surmise about "large amounts of good will toward the sponsors" has been amply proved for our clients as well as for the station involved.

Stanley G. House,
President, Stanley G. House & Associates, Washington, D. C.

• • •

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Chronicle Sun
CAMBRIDGE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,845
OCT 20 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304
OCT 20 1966

BSO on Radio

There will be three full-length live Boston Symphony Orchestra broadcasts on WGBH-FM during the week of Oct. 23.

The first concert takes place Tuesday, Oct. 25 at 8:30 p.m. when Richard Burgin conducts Bach's A Minor Violin Concerto, Hindemith's Sinfonia Serena and Symphony No. 5 by Shostakovitch. Burgin himself will be soloist in the Bach concerto.

The second and third concerts, also broadcast direct from Symphony Hall, are scheduled Friday, Oct. 28 at 2 p.m. and Saturday, Oct. 29 at 8:30 p.m. For these concerts conductor Erich Leinsdorf has chosen Symphony No. 40 by Mozart, Suite from "Lulu" by Berg (Phyllis Bryn-Julson, soprano soloist) and Beethoven's Concerto No. 1 in C, with pianist Claude Frank.

Pioneer FM Station Goes Stereophonic

UTICA — "The most powerful FM radio station in Central New York is now the most powerful FM-stereo station," according to WRUN—FM Station Manager Lloyd P. Walsh.

WRUN—FM began broadcasting its programs in stereophonic sound shortly after final approval of equipment installation was received from the Federal Communications Commission in Washington, D.C.

WRUN—FM went on the air in 1946 as one of the pioneer FM stations in this part of the country.

The station operates on a frequency of 104.3 megacycles with a power output of 101,000 watts. It's transmitter and towers are located on College Hill in Clinton.

A wide variety of "easy-listening" popular music is heard in stereo throughout the day, and feature broadcasts of live concerts of several well-known orchestras are heard at night, specifically the Boston Symphony, Boston Pops, and the Cleveland Orchestra, in addition to several leading European orchestras.

A special folder has been prepared, listing WRUN—FM—STEREO programs, and urged those unfamiliar with the station to write requesting it.

BOURNE today

■ MUSIC
■ DRAMA
■ ART

by MANUEL BOURNE

MUSIC

A special musical tribute to President Kennedy performed on the third anniversary of his assassination will highlight the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert Tuesday, November 22, at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 2 and WGBH-FM.

Narrated by noted actor E. G. Marshall, "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy" by William Sydeman is receiving its world premiere in Boston this week. WGBH radio will broadcast the entire concert in FM-stereo multiplex.

The Sydeman work is the result of a commission awarded by Erich Leinsdorf, who will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at this performance. Containing excerpts from several of President Kennedy's most famous speeches, the tribute is a personal expression of the composer's deep sense of shock at the President's death.

ART

On November 22, 1963 Sydeman was in Symphony Hall attending the premiere of his "Study No. 2 for Orchestra" when he - along with the rest of the audience - heard Erich Leinsdorf make the shocking announcement. Leinsdorf then conducted the orchestra in a performance of the Funeral March from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony. Sydeman was so moved that he has incorporated the Beethoven march into his "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy".

Also on the program will be Bach's Suite No. 3 in D Major and Schumann's Symphony No. 1.

The concert is directed for television by William Cosel and produced by Jordan M. Whitelaw.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, January 29, 1967

WAMC—Programming With An Ear To Quality

By JOAN SIMMONS

"There has never been a concerted effort to sell FM," according to Bob Wallace, program director for WAMC-FM.

He is speaking of a promising long but largely unexploited area of broadcasting.

Station manager Al Fredette paraphrased his favorite line from station publicty saying: "Northeastern New York and western New England are like unto a cultural desert. WAMC is like unto an oasis."

Fredette explained that the quote applied to the situation when the station affiliated with Albany Medical College, was founded in 1958. At that time there was no other FM station providing quality programming in this area. Since then WFLY in Troy has changed its format to classical and semi-classical music but that station sticks strictly to recordings.

STATION MANAGER AL FREDETTE — In northeastern New York and western New England, "WAMC is like unto an oasis . . ."

"We are delighted to see the new ruling," said Fredette, referring to an F.C.C. regulation which took effect this month requiring jointly owned and operated AM and FM stations to produce different programming for at least 50 per cent of air time.

The tendency till now has been toward duplicate programming. In some cases, as WQXR in New York, this was beneficial, resulting in quality music on both stations. But in most cases, the popular taste in radio broadcasting being the lowest common denominator, FM stations were suffering.

The net result, Fredette believes, was that people were not interested in investing in FM equipment to hear the same programs they were already listening to on their standard AM receivers.

For the listener the difference between AM and FM is in the fidelity to natural sound. AM cuts across the middle frequencies, omitting the higher and lower sounds which can be encompassed in FM. Naturally the difference is most vital in music, particularly classical, where the full range of sound is necessary for real appreciation and enjoyment.

Following from this, the audience for FM has traditionally been more specialized, a smaller portion of the listening audience which refers the classical format. Advertisers, etc., are geared for this particular audience.

The expectation is that the new ruling will result in better quality programming on FM in general, spurring the development of a larger potential audience which would benefit everybody in the field.

WAMC also hopes to profit from this new growth. As a non-commercial station affiliated with the National Educational network the station's means of support are limited. WAMC is the only FM station owned by a medical school. As such, its primary reason for being is instructional and it is budgeted for this. But in addition to the educational programming a total of 65 hours a week are non-medical and must be financed by various means.

Grants and aids provide a good deal of the additional financing. Fund drives are limited to listeners only. Appeals are sent only to those receiving the program guide which is available on request. With these limited means the station must fill 65 hours weekly with the best programming possible at a minimal cost.

Through the network much programming is available from the parent station in Boston, but of necessity this has a definite "Boston imprint," Wallace explained.

"Even the news is Boston oriented," Wallace said, "and we do get complaints about that."

"To get away from this," Wallace continued, "we try to originate as much as possible locally." Current examples in the news are the live broadcast of the Governor's State of the State address and weekly programs by Congressmen Daniel Button and Samuel Stratton.

In music, the station tapes some local concerts of value. The Albany Symphony series is being taped for broadcast in the spring. Also concerts at the State University are taped for later broadcast.

For the first time last summer the station carried the entire Boston Symphony at Tanglewood ~~season~~ live. The popular response was overwhelming and the concerts will be carried again this year.

During the winter, a regular part of the Boston broadcasts is the Boston Symphony winter series which is also carried live by WAMC.

PROGRAM DIRECTOR BOB WALLACE—"There has never been a concerted effort to sell FM . . ." (Times-Union Photos by Wilder)

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Saturday, February 11, 1967

WEDNESDAY—Boston Symphony: Charles Munch conducting. Faure: Suite from "Pelleas and Melisande"; Honegger: Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra; Schubert: Symphony No. 2 in B Flat Major; Ravel: "La Valse" (8—WCMF). Concert: Purcell: Chaconne for Strings; Handel: Harp Concerto in B Flat Major; Rodrigo: Concerto-Serenade for Harp and Orchestra; Berlioz: "Harold in Italy"; Bruckner: Symphony No. 9 in D Minor; Beethoven: String Quartet No. 9 in C Major; MacDowell: Suite No. 1 (8:05—WBBF-FM). Tell It to Rochester: "Desegregation and You," School Superintendent Herman R. Goldberg and a panel discuss questions submitted by the public (8:30 p.m. — WHEC). Music from Oberlin: Schumann: "Kreisleriana"; Brahms: Horn Trio in E Flat (10—WCMF).

FRIDAY — Boston Pops: Arthur Fiedler conducting with soloist Samuel Lipman, piano. Strauss: "Radetzky March"; "Wine, Women and Song"; Sibelius: "Swan of Tuonela"; Puccini: Selection from "Madame Butterfly"; Prokofiev: Piano Concerto No. 4; Loewe: Selections from "Brigadoon"; Lane: Selection from "On a Clear Day You Can See Forever", Steiner: "Summer Place"; Ortolani and Oliviera: "More" from "Mondo Cane"; Hefti: "Batman"; Sadler-Moore: Green Berets (7—WCMF). Tell It to Rochester: "Operation Deep Freeze", a CBS news special with commentary by Times-Union reporter Desmond Stone (8:30 — WHEC). Jazz Scene: recordings from the be-bop era (9—WCMF).

Rochester Times-Union
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 138,754
APR 22 1967

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, is guest on "Eastman Reflections" tomorrow (5 p.m., WHAM).

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 41,720
JAN 27 1967

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TROY TIMES RECORD
Tuesday, February 21, 1967

AGELESS—Artur Rubinstein, pianist plays Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 on WFLY at 10:30 p.m. today with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf on a new record release by RCA Victor.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
JAN 29 1967
New England Newsclip

Colin Davis To Be Guest At Symphony

The Tuesday evening concert will be televised and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and WGBH-FM. Mr. Kubelik will begin his program with Haydn's Symphony No. 102 and continue with Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Timpani, with assistant conductor Charles Wilson at the piano. After an intermission the program will conclude with the Franck Symphony in D minor.

THE PILOT
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 149,900
FEB 11 1967
New England Newsclip

Senator Kennedy Will Narrate Lincoln Tribute

Massachusetts Senator Edward Kennedy narrates a special Lincoln's Birthday performance of Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait" with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday, Feb. 12 at 8 p.m. on WGBH-TV, Ch. 2.

Conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, the program also includes Piano Concerto No. 1 by Tchaikovsky, performed by pianist Misha Dichter, second prize winner at the 1966 Tchaikovsky International Competition in Moscow.

The concert was recorded last December at Symphony Hall.

FOSTER'S DEMOCRAT (e)
DOVER, N. H.
CIRC. 11,700
MAR 9 1967
New England Newsclip

Channel 11

BOSTON SYMPHONY

The Boston Symphony Orchestra in concert will be telecast by Channel 11 on Tuesday, March 14 at 7:30 pm.

From Symphony Hall in Boston, under the direction of Thomas Schippers, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform Bizet's Symphony in C Major and Menotti's "Apocalypse." Mussorgsky-Ravel's "Pictures at an Exhibition" will conclude the concert.

On Tuesday, March 21 at 9:00 pm, Channel 11 will present Donizetti's comic opera Don Pasquale with Roger Havranek and Joan Volak.

CONDUCTS — On WFLY-FM Radio, Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on a new recording of Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 in E Flat (Romantic) by RCA Victor at 10:05 p.m. today.

137

THE CATHOLIC NEWS
NEW YORK'S WEEKLY
CATHOLIC NEWSPAPER
W. 82,500

MAR 16 1967

'In Praise of the Lord' to Be Telecast on Palm Sunday

"In Praise of the Lord," a special one-hour concert of religious music, will be televised over Channel 2 on Sunday, March 19 at 10:00 A.M.

Performers will include noted composer-conductor C. Alexander Peloquin; the Peloquin Chorale; Boston Symphony organist, Berj Zamboanian; Columbia recording artist, Mother Marie Laetitia, R.J.M. (soprano); Dennis Striny (baritone); and a chamber-orchestra, drawn largely from the Boston Symphony. Host for the prorgam will be Rt. Rev. Walter Flaherty, Director of the radio-TV office of the Archdiocese of Boston.

The music will retell the story of Christ's life in terms of the last five centuries of sacred music by Catholic, Protestant and Jewish composers.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Saturday, February 18, 1967

WEDNESDAY—Boston Symphony: Erich Leinsdorf conducting with violinist Itzhak [illegible] Beethoven: "Leonore Overture No. 3"; Symphony No. [illegible] in B Flat Major; Prokofiev: Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor; Weber-Berlioz: "Invitation to the Dance" (8—WCMF). Concert: Dvorak: Romance for Violin and Orchestra; Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 in B Flat Major; Berlioz: "Requiem"; Ravel: Minuet Antique"; Mendelssohn: Piano Concerto No. 1 in G Minor; Ives: Variations on "America"; Britten-Rossini: "Matinees Musicales"; Handel: "Water Music"; Herold: "Zampa Overture" (8:05

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000

MAR 9 1967

New England Newsclip

SUNDAY STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 56,800

MAR 12 1967

New England Newsclip

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

Leinsdorf to Appear Tonight on Toscanini Program

At 9:30 tonight on the NBC-TV Telephone Hour, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear in a portion of the program devoted to the late maestro, Arturo Toscanini.

The one-hour program, "Toscanini: The Maestro Revisited," profiles the conductor as man and artist. Mr. Leinsdorf, who was a youthful protege of Toscanini in Salzburg more than 30 years ago, will discuss his personal reminiscences of Toscanini with the program's host, Harold Schonberg, music critic of the New York Times.

About a year ago, Mr. Leinsdorf announced his intention of dedicating the orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25 to the memory of Toscanini. Bach's "St. John Passion" will be performed at these concerts marking the 100th anniversary of Toscanini's birth—March 24, 1867.

On Tuesday night, incidentally, Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony in a program that includes Bizet's "Symphony in C Major," the "Apocalypse" by Gian-Carlo Menotti, and Moussorgsky's piano pieces, "Pictures at an Exhibition," arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

SUN (e)
LOWELL, MASS.
CIRC. 44,600

MAR 11 1967

New England Newsclip

Toscanini: The Maestro Revisited, will be the title of tomorrow evening's Bell Telephone hour. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be a participant. He will discuss his personal reminiscences of Toscanini with the program's host the noted critic, Harold Schonberg.

ABOUT A YEAR AGO Dr. Leinsdorf announced his intention of dedicating the Orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25 to the Maestro's memory. Bach's St. John Passion will be performed at these concerts marking the 100th observance of Toscanini's birth.

Arturo Toscanini at age of 26 was called from his place in the string section of an opera orchestra to assume the duties of the original conductor who was indisposed. The Maestro on that occasion performed with an artistry so perfect that critics expressed the opinion that "this performance of Verdi's 'Aida' was such that possibly never again in our time will the music from the pen of Italy's greatest composer so completely overwhelm an audience."

Toscanini never went back to the chair in the pit that he had vacated on such short notice. Instead he went on to become possibly the greatest musician in the 20th century. His gift defied description, and his sincerity of purpose enabled him to inspire musicians in every phase of the musical life to a degree never even closely approached by the giants of the past.

With the immortal Arturo, the smallest detail in performance was graced with his attention, and unlike all too many ill-advised so-called experts in our time, he concerned himself with every note and mark in whatever score he was performing.

BSO on TV

Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a special concert telecast direct from Symphony Hall Tuesday, Mar. 14, at 7:30 p.m. on Channel 2.

Broadcast simultaneously in stereo by WGBH-FM, the program will include Bizet's Symphony in C Major, "Apocalypse" by Menotti and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

FREE PRESS
SOMERSWORTH, N. H.
WEEKLY CIRC. 2,950

MAR 2 1967

New England Newsclip

WENH - TV Program

Tuesday, March 14 at 7:30 Boston Symphony Orchestra—Bizet's Symphony in C Major, Menotti's "Apocalypse" and Mussorgsky-Ravel's "Pictures at an Exhibition" with Conductor Thomas Schippers.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, March 6, 1967

On Your Radio Set

11:05—Symphonic Highlights: The Paris Conservatory performs the Symphony No. 3 of Roussel, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players present Beethoven's Serenade in D, and A. Brailowsky on piano performs Chopin's My Joys. WFLY

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Tuesday, February 14, 1967

★ ★ ★

THE FIRST of two full length live concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra can be heard tonight at 7:30 p.m. on WAMC—FM . . . 90.3 mc. when Richard Burgin guest conducts on performances of Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony and Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concert with Gina Bachauer. The second concert will be at 2 p.m. Friday with Erich Leinsdorf conducting Beethoven's Symphony No. 2.

Violinist Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the symphony will also play Brahms Violin Concerto.

SPONSOR
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WEEKLY RADIO T.V.
CIRC. 9,400

APR 3 1967

New Englan Newscl

TFE '67

OVERSEAS OPINION
A weekly international news service series, in color
COUNTRY MUSIC HALL
26 half-hours, Country and Western series, in color
GYPSY ROSE LEE SHOW
Half-hour daily across-the-board interview series, in color
MARINE BOY
52 half-hours, animated adventure series, in color
JOHNNY CYPHER IN DIMENSION-ZERO
130 6-minute science-fiction color cartoons
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA/INTERNATIONALLY FAMOUS SOLOISTS
6 complete performance concert hall TV Specials
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
26 1-hour TV Concert Specials

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Saturday, April 15, 1967

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TROY MORNING RECORD
Saturday, April 15, 1967

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N.Y.
D. 7,764

APR 10 1967

ON THE PODIUM — The Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts from Symphony Hall Boston will be featured every Monday at 8:05 p.m. starting this evening on Radio Station W F L Y-FM. Tonight's broadcast will be in stereo and is an all Beethoven program. The Coriolon Overture and Symphonies Nos 4 and 7 will be heard. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of The Symphony will be on the Podium.

BROADCASTING
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. 24,500

APR 3 1967

Media reports . . .

Move ▪ WBIS Bristol, Conn., has moved to new studios at 1021 Farmington Avenue. Since its founding in 1948, the station has been located at 183 Main Street. WBIS is a 500 w daytimer on 1440 kc.

Nonprofit gift ▪ KTTV(TV) Los Angeles, a Metromedia-owned station, has made a gift of 26 hours of taped performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to KCET(TV) Los Angeles, a noncommercial station. The programs were produced by Seven Arts Associated Corp.

Names agency ▪ WCFL Chicago names Stern, Walters & Simmons Inc. there to handle its advertising.

The Dallas Morning News
DALLAS, TEXAS
D. 237,192 SUN. 262,441

APR 12 1967

Velucci to Comment on WRR-FM Met Radio Series

Paul Vellucci, professor of piano at the SMU School of the Arts and former assistant conductor of the Paris Opera, will be commentator for the annual series of radio broadcasts on WRR-FM spotlighting the forthcoming Metropolitan Opera season in Dallas.

The initial program at 8 p.m. Wednesday will feature Richard Wagner's "Lohengrin," to be seen in Dallas May 11. In addition to Vellucci's discussion of the opera, the broadcast will include a complete recorded performance of "Lohengrin." Singing the title role will be Sandor Konya, who will be heard in the part in Dallas. Others in the recorded cast are Lucine Amara as Elsa, William Dooley as Frederick, Rita Gorr as Ortrud, Jerome Hines as King Henry and Calvin Marsh as the Herald. Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Chorus Pro Musica.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, April 24, 1967

On Your Radio

7—Reading Aloud with Bill Ayness. (WAMC)

7:30—Four College Lecture Hall: The Beatles will be discussed by Michael Irwin, visiting lecturer in the English department of Smith College (WAMC)

8:05—Boston Symphony Orchestra: The orchestra will perform Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, Colgrass' "As Quiet As," and the Violin Concerto in D Major of Brahms. (WFLY)

8:30—The Art of Serge Koussevitsky: Prokofiev's Symphonies No. 1 and 5 will be performed.

NEWS (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
CIRC. 5,200

APR 18 1967

New England Newsclip

The final Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the season takes place tonight at 8:30 p. m. on Channel 2.

Broadcast direct from Symphony Hall by both WGBH-TV and WGBH-FM (radio in stereo), the full-length concert will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. For his program Leinsdorf has chosen three works: Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, "As Quiet As" by Colgrass and Brahms' Violin Concerto with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

WILKES-BARRE, PA.
INDEPENDENT
SUN. 52,500

APR 16 1967

Boston Symphony On Ch. 28 Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is featured in another television presentation by the Miners National Bank of Wilkes-Barre tonight at 6:30 on WBRE-TV, Channel 28.

The orchestra will present Suite from "The Water Music" by George Frederick Handel and Symphony No. 2 by Johannes Brahms.

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINES, INC.

From ROY HEMMING

Your attention is called to attached tearsheet of our record review column as it apppears in the current issue of

Senior Scholastic	Scholastic Teacher
World Week	Co-ed
Practical English	Junior Scholastic
Senior Science	SummerTime

50 WEST 44TH STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y. 10036

Newark Sunday News
NEWARK, N. J.
SUN. 427,240

APR 2 1967

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its concert-broadcast with Bizet's Symphony in C on Station WQXR at 8:07 tonight. This will be followed by Apocalypse by Menotti. The two-hour program will conclude with Pictures at an Exhibition by Moussorgsky-Ravel. Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor.

Prokofieff: Piano Concertos No. 1 & 2 —John Browning with Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf [RCA Victor LSC-2897]. The Boston Symphony's Prokofieff series may well turn out to be one of the finest recording ventures of the 1960's. So far each release has been outstanding—as is this newest one, coupling the first two of Prokofieff's five superb piano concertos. Young Browning has technique to spare but, more important, he knows how to underplay and make a piece "sing" with subtlety as well as driving energy. He and Leinsdorf obviously agree that Prokofieff can be cool, mellow, and basically lyrical. That's the way they approach both the 1st and 2nd, just as it was the way they approached the 3rd several years ago [on Capitol SP8545]. Excellent as this new LP is, however, the 2nd is not quite so sparklingly played as the now-deleted 1960 version by Malcolm Frager [RCA Victor LSC-2465], which this LP is apparently meant to displace in RCA's scheme of things. But there's no competition for Browning's version of the 1st (a superbly played Richter version on several import labels is burdened with poor sonics). (R. H.)

137

THE CATHOLIC NEWS
NEW YORK'S WEEKLY
CATHOLIC NEWSPAPER
W. 82,500

MAR 16 1967

'In Praise of the Lord' to Be Telecast on Palm Sunday

"In Praise of the Lord," a special one-hour concert of religious music, will be televised over Channel 2 on Sunday, March 19 at 10:00 A.M.

Performers will include noted composer-conductor C. Alexander Peloquin; the Peloquin Chorale; Boston Symphony organist, Berj Zambochian; Columbia recording artist, Mother Marie Laetitia, R.J.M. (soprano); Dennis Striny (baritone); and a chamber orchestra, drawn largely from the Boston Symphony. Host for the prorgam will be Rt. Rev. Walter Flaherty, Director of the radio-TV office of the Archdiocese of Boston.

The music will retell the story of Christ's life in terms of the last five centuries of sacred music by Catholic, Protestant and Jewish composers.

SUNDAY STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
CIRC. 56,800

MAR 12 1967

New England Newsclip

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

Leinsdorf to Appear Tonight on Toscanini Program

At 6:30 tonight on the NBC-TV Telephone Hour, Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will appear in a portion of the program devoted to the late maestro, Arturo Toscanini.

The one-hour program, "Toscanini: The Maestro Revisited," profiles the conductor as man and artist. Mr. Leinsdorf, who was a youthful protege of Toscanini in Salzburg more than 30 years ago, will discuss his personal reminiscences of Toscanini with the program's host, Harold Schonberg, music critic of the New York Times.

About a year ago, Mr. Leinsdorf announced his intention of dedicating the orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25 to the memory of Toscanini. Bach's "St. John Passion" will be performed at these concerts marking the 100th anniversary of Toscanini's birth—March 24, 1867.

On Tuesday night, incidentally, Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor of the Boston Symphony in a program that includes Bizet's "Symphony in C Major," the "Apocalypse" by Gian-Carlo Menotti, and Moussorgsky's piano pieces, "Pictures at an Exhibition," arranged for orchestra by Maurice Ravel.

SUN (e)
LOWELL, MASS.
CIRC. 44,600

MAR 11 1967

New England Newsclip

Toscanini: The Maestro Revisited, will be the title of tomorrow evening's Bell Telephone hour. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be a participant. He will discuss his personal reminiscences of Toscanini with the program's host the noted critic, Harold Schonberg.

ABOUT A YEAR AGO Dr. Leinsdorf announced his intention of dedicating the Orchestra's concerts on March 24 and 25 to the Maestro's memory. Bach's St. John Passion will be performed at these concerts marking the 100th observance of Toscanini's birth.

Arturo Toscanini at age of 26 was called from his place in the string section of an opera orchestra to assume the duties of the original conductor who was indisposed. The Maestro on that occasion performed with an artistry so perfect that critics expressed the opinion that "this performance of Verdi's 'Aida' was such that possibly never again in our time will the music from the pen of Italy's greatest composer so completely overwhelm an audience."

Toscanini never went back to the chair in the pit that he had vacated on such short notice. Instead he went on to become possibly the greatest musician in the 20th century. His gift defied description, and his sincerity of purpose enabled him to inspire musicians in every phase of the musical life to a degree never even closely approached by the giants of the past.

With the immortal Arturo, the smallest detail in performance was graced with his attention, and unlike all too many ill-advised so-called experts in our time, he concerned himself with every note and mark in whatever score he was performing.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Saturday, February 18, 1967

WEDNESDAY—Boston Symphony: Erich Leinsdorf conducting with violinist Itzhak Perlman: Beethoven: "Leonore Overture No. 2; Symphony No. 4 in B Flat Major; Prokofiev: Violin Concerto No. 2 in G Minor; Weber-Berlioz: "Invitation to the Dance" (8—WCMF). Concert: Dvorak: Romance for Violin and Orchestra; Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 in B Flat Major; Berlioz: "Requiem"; Ravel: Minuet Antique"; Mendelssohn: Piano Concerto No. 1 in G Minor; Ives: Variations on "America"; Britten - Rossini: "Matinees Musicales"; Handel: "Water Music"; Herold: "Zampa Overture" (8:05

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000

MAR 9 1967

New England Newsclip

BSO on TV

Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a special concert telecast direct from Symphony Hall Tuesday, Mar. 14, at 7:30 p.m. on Channel 2.

Broadcast simultaneously in stereo by WGBH-FM, the program will include Bizet's Symphony in C Major, "Apocalypse" by Menotti and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

FREE PRESS
SOMERSWORTH, N. H.
WEEKLY CIRC. 2,950

MAR 2 1967

New England Newsclip

WENH - TV Program

Tuesday, March 14 at 7:30 Boston Symphony Orchestra—Bizet's Symphony in C Major, Menotti's "Apocalypse" and Mussorgsky-Ravel's "Pictures at an Exhibition" with Conductor Thomas Schippers.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, March 6, 1967

On Your Radio Set

11:05—Symphonic Highlights: The Paris Conservatory performs the Symphony No. 3 of Roussel, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players present Beethoven's Serenade in D, and A. Brailowsky on piano performs Chopin's My Joys. WFLY

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Tuesday, February 14, 1967

★ ★ ★

THE FIRST of two full length live concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra can be heard tonight at 7:30 p.m. on WAMC—FM . . . 90.3 mc. when Richard Burgin guest conducts on performances of Shostakovitch's Fifth Symphony and Rachmaninoff's Second Piano Concert with Gina Bachauer. The second concert will be at 2 p.m. Friday with Erich Leinsdorf conducting Beethoven's Symphony No. 2.

Violinist Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the symphony will also play Brahms Violin Concerto.

SPONSOR
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WEEKLY RADIO T.V.
CIRC. 9,400

APR 3 1967

New Englan Newscl

TFE '67

OVERSEAS OPINION
A weekly international news service series, in color
COUNTRY MUSIC HALL
26 half-hours, Country and Western series, in color
GYPSY ROSE LEE SHOW
Half-hour daily across-the-board interview series, in color
MARINE BOY
52 half-hours, animated adventure series, in color
JOHNNY CYPHER IN DIMENSION-ZERO
130 6-minute science-fiction color cartoons
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA/ INTERNATIONALLY FAMOUS SOLOISTS
6 complete performance concert hall TV Specials
BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
26 1-hour TV Concert Specials

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER TIMES UNION
Saturday, April 15, 1967

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

TROY MORNING RECORD
Saturday, April 15, 1967

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 7,764

APR 10 1967

ON THE PODIUM — The Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts from Symphony Hall Boston will be featured every Monday at 8:05 p.m. starting this evening on Radio Station W F L Y-FM. Tonight's broadcast will be in stereo and is an all Beethoven program. The Coriolon Overture and Symphonies Nos 4 and 7 will be heard. Erich Leinsdorf, music director of The Symphony will be on the Podium.

BROADCASTING
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. 24,500

APR 3 1967

Media reports . . .

Move ▪ WBIS Bristol, Conn., has moved to new studios at 1021 Farmington Avenue. Since its founding in 1948, the station has been located at 183 Main Street. WBIS is a 500 w daytimer on 1440 kc.

Nonprofit gift ▪ KTTV(TV) Los Angeles, a Metromedia-owned station, has made a gift of 26 hours of taped performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to KCET(TV) Los Angeles, a noncommercial station. The programs were produced by Seven Arts Associated Corp.

Names agency ▪ WCFL Chicago names Stern, Walters & Simmons Inc. there to handle its advertising.

The Dallas Morning News
DALLAS, TEXAS
D. 237,192 SUN. 262,441

APR 12 1967

Velucci to Comment on WRR-FM Met Radio Series

Paul Vellucci, professor of piano at the SMU School of the Arts and former assistant conductor of the Paris Opera, will be commentator for the annual series of radio broadcasts on WRR-FM spotlighting the forthcoming Metropolitan Opera season in Dallas.

The initial program at 8 p.m. Wednesday will feature Richard Wagner's "Lohengrin," to be seen in Dallas May 11. In addition to Vellucci's discussion of the opera, the broadcast will include a complete recorded performance of "Lohengrin." Singing the title role will be Sandor Konya, who will be heard in the part in Dallas. Others in the recorded cast are Lucine Amara as Elsa, William Dooley as Frederick, Rita Gorr as Ortrud, Jerome Hines as King Henry and Calvin Marsh as the Herald. Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Chorus Pro Musica.

NEWS (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, MASS.
CIRC. 5,200

APR 18 1967

New England Newsclip

The final Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast of the season takes place tonight at 8:30 p. m. on Channel 2.

Broadcast direct from Symphony Hall by both WGBH-TV and WGBH-FM (radio in stereo), the full-length concert will be conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. For his program Leinsdorf has chosen three works: Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, "As Quiet As" by Colgrass and Brahms' Violin Concerto with Joseph Silverstein as soloist.

* * *

WILKES-BARRE, PA.
INDEPENDENT
SUN. 52,500

APR 16 1967

Boston Symphony On Ch. 28 Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is featured in another television presentation by the Miners National Bank of Wilkes-Barre tonight at 6:30 on WBRE-TV, Channel 28.

The orchestra will present Suite from "The Water Music" by George Frederick Handel and Symphony No. 2 by Johannes Brahms.

Newark Sunday News
NEWARK, N. J.
SUN. 427,240

APR 2 1967

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its concert-broadcast with Bizet's Symphony in C on Station WQXR at 8:07 tonight. This will be followed by Apocalypse by Menotti. The two-hour program will conclude with Pictures at an Exhibition by Moussorgsky-Ravel. Thomas Schippers will be guest conductor.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

Albany Knickerbocker News
Monday, April 24, 1967

On Your Radio

7—Reading Aloud with Bill Gavness. (WAMC)

7:30—Four College Lecture Hall: The Beatles will be discussed by Michael Irwin, visiting lecturer in the English department of Smith College (WAMC)

8:05—Boston Symphony Orchestra: The orchestra will perform Beethoven's Symphony No. 2, Colgrass' "As Quiet As," and the Violin Concerto in D Major of Brahms. (WFLY)

8:30—The Art of Serge Koussevitsky: Prokofiev's Symphonies No. 1 and 5 will be performed.

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINES, INC.

From ROY HEMMING

Your attention is called to attached tearsheet of our record review column as it apppears in the current issue of

Senior Scholastic	Scholastic Teacher
World Week	Co-ed
Practical English	Junior Scholastic
Senior Science	SummerTime

50 WEST 44TH STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y. 10036

Prokofieff: Piano Concertos No. 1 & 2—John Browning with Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf [RCA Victor LSC-2897]. The Boston Symphony's Prokofieff series may well turn out to be one of the finest recording ventures of the 1960's. So far each release has been outstanding—as is this newest one, coupling the first two of Prokofieff's five superb piano concertos. Young Browning has technique to spare but, more important, he knows how to underplay and make a piece "sing" with subtlety as well as driving energy. He and Leinsdorf obviously agree that Prokofieff can be cool, mellow, and basically lyrical. That's the way they approach both the 1st and 2nd, just as it was the way they approached the 3rd several years ago [on Capitol SP8545]. Excellent as this new LP is, however, the 2nd is not quite so sparklingly played as the now-deleted 1960 version by Malcolm Frager [RCA Victor LSC-2465], which this LP is apparently meant to displace in RCA's scheme of things. But there's no competition for Browning's version of the 1st (a superbly played Richter version on several import labels is burdened with poor sonics). (R. H.)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Springfield Herald
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 111,573

NOV 3 1966

CONCERT BROADCASTS ON NEW RADIO STATION

Area residents will be able to hear live stereophonic broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Springfield's newest radio station goes on the air.

WCRX General Manager Robert W. Potter has announced that arrangements have been completed to broadcast the Saturday night concerts direct from Symphony hall in Boston, and from Tanglewood in season. The Boston Symphony, recognized as one of the world's finest orchestras, is directed by Erich Leinsdorf, and the radio broadcasts will include authoritative commentary as well as intermission interviews with Mr. Leinsdorf and other guests.

WCRX, with 50,000 watts coverage, will be on the air later this month, offering mostly stereophonic concert music. Through its affiliation with the CRB network, a wide variety of special programming will be available, as well as transcribed music selected from a library of nearly 20,000 albums and tapes. Studios are located in the Sheraton Motor Inn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,415

NOV 17 1966

— The Arts

Three years ago next Tuesday November 22, the announcement of the assassination of President Kennedy was made to a Friday symphony audience by Erich Leinsdorf. At 8:30 Tuesday Channel 2 will telecast the BSO in its musical tribute, the new narrated work by William Sydeman "In Memoriam" presented with the Funeral March from Beethoven's "Eroica," Bach's Suite No. 3 and Schumann's Symphony No. 1.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Foster's Democrat (e)
DOVER, N. H.
Circ. 11,700

NOV 22 1966

Channel 11 Program Notes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra — live from Symphony Hall in Boston — ispresented in concert November 22 at 8:30 pm on Channel 11.

Erich Leinsdorf conducts the Boston Symphony in "Handel's Double Concerto Number Three" which is followed by Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy." Beethoven's "Symphony Number Seven" is the concluding selection.

Maureen Forrester, the celebrated Canadian contralto, will perform a studio recital, Tuesday, November 29, at 9:00 pm on Channel 11.

COLORADO SPRINGS
GAZETTE-TELEGRAPH
COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.
D. 36,133 SUN. 36,696

NOV 19 1966

Boston Symphony Concert Set

Mahler's Symphony No. 3 will be featured Thursday in the Boston Symphony program scheduled for 8:10 p.m. on KCMS radio, 102.7 mg-fm, and 1490 kc - am.

Erich Leinsdorf will direct. The first movements of Mahler's work will take up the first of the concert.

The second half will feature second and sixth movements. Shirley Verrett is soloist.

FREE PRESS
COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.
D. 17,445 SUN. 17,813

NOV 10 1966

'Butterfly' To Be Heard

The Colorado Springs Opera presentation of Madame Butterfly will be heard in FM stereo, Friday evening at 8:15 p.m. on KCMS.

The program will be heard with only brief commentary between the three acts.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, will present a program of concert favorites featuring outstanding soloists at 8:15 p.m. on the station Thursday.

The short Prelude to Act 3 of Lohengrin by Wagner will open the program. The first major work is the Symphony No. 1 composed by Brahms and is followed by the Violin Concerto No. 2 by Prokofiev with Masuko Ushioda soloist.

The Studies on Themes of Paul Klee were composed in 1959 by the American Gunther Schuller. Concluding the program is the great Piano Concerto No. 1 by Tchaikovsky with the outstanding pianist, Misha Dichter, the second prize winner of the 1966 Tchaikovsky competition in Moscow.

A variety of outstanding concert favorites presented by one of the outstanding orchestras will be presented in stereophonic sound on KCMS-FM and in high fidelity on KCMS-AM daily.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
D. 29,500

DEC 17 1966

8:30 p. m. — THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. — The performance this evening includes Tchaikovsky's "Suite No. 3" and "Adagietto, Symphony No. 5" by Mahler. ETV

9 p. m. — BONANZA. "Tommy." Sentiment runs high in this episode about the plight of an adorable youngster named Tommy who is a deaf mute. The ladies will especially enjoy the tear-jerking story in which Tommy's mother sends him to the Ponderosa to protect him from the cruelty of her outlaw husband. (Color). WIS—NBC

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098

NOV 21 1966

Today

"The Art of Serge Koussevitsky". Koussevitsky conducts on recordings of Piston's Symphony No. 3 and Wagner's Preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger". WGBH, 8:30 p.m.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra [redacted] recorded performance on "Late Concert". Erich Leindsdorf conducts Verdi's Te Deum and Beethoven's Symphony No. 9. Soloists in the Symphony's final movement are Phyllis Curtin, Eunice Alberts, Richard Cassilly and Thomas Paul. WBUR, 10 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098

NOV 12 1966

Radio Highlights

Today

Tonight's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast live from Symphony Hall. Erich Leindsdorf conducts Haydn's Symphony No. 93, Bartok's Concerto for Two Pianos and Percussion and Borodin's Symphony No. 2. Beracha Eden and Alexander Tamir are soloists in the Bartok work. WCRB, 8:25 p.m.; WGBH, 8:30 p.m.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD JOURNAL
Friday, November 25, 1966

Radio highlights

CONCERT HALL: Tonight's presentation is Prokofiev's Symphony No. 5, Opus 100 with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony and Haydn's Concerto in C with Maurice Gendron, cellist. Raymond Lepard conducts the London Symphony. 8:05 over WSYR.

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.
NEWS
D. 17,000

DEC 7 1966

Radio Highlights

WBEN, 930, broadcasts the Purple Eagles of Niagara vs. Villa Madonna College basketball game starting at 8:30 tonight.

WBEN - FM, 102.5, presents Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program including Janacek's Suite from the Cunning Little Vixen beginning at 8 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098

NOV 14 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 51,098

NOV 7 1966

Today

"The Art of Serge Koussevitsky." Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in recordings of Rachmaninoff's "Symphony No. 3 and Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Haydn. WGBH, 8:30 p.m.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is presented in a recorded concert on "Late Concert." Erich Leinsdorf leads the orchestra in the Leonore Overture No. 3 of Beethoven; Concerto for Cello and Orchestra of Shostakovitch; Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis and "Depuis le Jour" from Charpentier's "Louise". Stephen Kates is soloist in the Concerto. WBUR, 10 p.m.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Tuesday, December 6, 1966

WAMC to Air Munch Return

Charles Munch, who retired as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra several years ago, is returning to conduct two concerts this week at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Both concerts are being broadcast live by WAMC-FM, the Albany Medical College radio station.

The first program is Tuesday, Dec. 6 at 8:30 p.m. and will include Faure's "Suite from Pelleas et Melisande" and Schubert's Symphony No. 2.

The second concert, at 2 p.m. Friday, Dec. 9, will present the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society along with the orchestra in a performance of Berlioz' oratorio, "L'Enfance du Christ."

CHICAGO, ILL.
ROGERS PARK-EDGEWATER NEWS
W. 16,369

DEC 7 1966

Tanglewood To Texas

The Bell Hour

By Raymond Henagow

Illinois Bell, with which most of us have had contact at one time or another, has for several years sponsored a notable musical hour on television, but now, in this new season, the program has burst the old partitioned format that was designed to be all things to all people.

Already, in a series of three Sunday hours we have been transported to Gian-Carlo Menotti's Festival of Two Worlds in Spoleto, Italy; to the world of Texan Van Cliburn, and to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood.

The sound and color were not all they should be, but these excursions into special phases of the realm of music were invaluable for the insight and enjoyment they offered.

The students, the artists, the aura of Tanglewood were right there in the living room (if that's where you were watching).

The Berkshire Festival, a summer home of the Boston Symphony, launched by the late Serge Koussevitzky, has been a star in the musical crown of this country since the mid-Thirties. Now, Erich Leinsdorf, present conductor of the Boston Symphony, has charge of the proceedings. If anyone doubts this, Leinsdorf sounded most convincing when he was interviewed on the program.

Probably the most striking thing about the whole hour was the wonderful spirit of the students, teachers (symphony players), and performers. There is perhaps nothing that quite equals the outlook of a dedicated artist. The fervor, the upward view were there in abundance.

Van Cliburn, his life and times, came to life in the Deep South, where everybody seems sincere and hospitable. In any case, his parents sounded quite genuine and his mother, his first teacher, very musical. After Van won the Tschaikovsky competition in Moscow for his piano playing, he was discovered. Now there is an award named for him.

This eager, talented boy does not always win me over with his playing, and I have a feeling that I am not alone. The performance of a work in a manner that differs from the more usual conceptions does not of itself mean it is better or worse than the "norm," if there is such a thing.

There may be more than one valid projection of a musical composition, but I have heard Mr. Cliburn do harm to major works. On a recent Chicago Symphony delayed stereocast on WFMT, he assailed with considerable abandon the Tchaikovsky Piano Concerto No. 1 in B-flat minor, a warhorse everybody should get off of for a couple of years. I didn't feel that the young Texan aided the cause of a weary old steed.

Would you American celebrity lovers believe that Van Cliburn is a good pianist, but not yet a great one? Please.

GAINESVILLE, FLA.
SUN
D. 16,500 S. 17,500

DEC 3 1966

Boston Symphony Air Concerts Set

A series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be heard twice - weekly beginning Sunday on WRUF and WRUF-FM.

The concerts will be presented in stereo on WRUF-FM, 103.7 megacycles, each Sunday through February 26 at 2 p.m. The same concert will be repeated on WRUF-AM each Tuesday at 8 p.m.

Sunday's opening performance will feature Erich Leinsdorf conducting Mahler's Third Symphony. Shirley Verrett, Mezzo - Soprano, will be the featured soloist in the performance with additional vocal music by the New England Conservatory Chorus.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Derry News
DERRY, N. H.
Weekly Circ. 3,125

DEC 8 1966

Boston Symphony On WENH TV

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Morning Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Comb. Circ. 45,730

DEC 7 1966

Hub Symphony On TV Dec. 13

DURHAM — Live from Symphony Hall in Boston, Channel 11 telecasts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in concert, Tuesday, Dec. 13 at 8:30 p. m.

Charles Munch conducts the Symphony in Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ" with soloists Florence Kopleff, Donald Grimm, Theodor Uppman and John McCallum.

The Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society are featured.

Times-Picayune
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
D. 190,637 SUN. 306,325

DEC 11 1966

TODAY'S HIGHLIGHTS: Boston Symphony, 2-4 p. m., WWMT-FM . . . New York Philharmonic, conductor: Leonard Bernstein, 3-5 p. m., WDSU-FM . . . Opera, Wagner's "Lohengrin," 7-10 p. m., WDSU-FM . . . Stereo Concert Hall, Mozart's "Piano Concerto No. 22 in E K482," 11 p. m.-midnight, WWMT-FM.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,785

DEC 10 1966

Best Next Week On Channel 2

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355

DEC 10 1966

Munch Back At Podium On Chan. 2

Charles Munch returns to the Symphony Hall podium to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in "L'Enfance du Christ" by Hector Berlioz, Tuesday, at 8:30 PM on Channel 2 and WGBH-FM.

Broadcast by radio in FM-multiplex stereo, this live concert is the first Munch has conducted for broadcast on Channel 2 since he retired as conductor in 1962.

Although "L'Enfance du Christ" was composed more than a century ago, it was not performed in Boston until 1953, when Charles Munch introduced it at a Friday-Saturday Boston Symphony Orchestra concert; the response was so enthusiastic he repeated it three years later and now Erich Leinsdorf has invited him to conduct it again, this time before an audience far larger than could ever be present in Symphony Hall.

With the Harvard Glee Club, Radcliffe Choral Society and soloists Florence Kopleff, contralto, John McCollum, tenor, Theodor Uppman, baritone and Donald Gramm, bass, "L'Enfance du Christ" begins with Herod's dream and the birth of the Christ Child, then follows the family on the Flight into Egypt and finally records their successful arrival at Sais.

Performed in the original French and based on the Gospel According to Matthew, "L'Enfance du Christ" is being produced for television by Jordan Whitelaw and directed by William Cosel.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 35,304

DEC. 15 1966

Itzhak Perlman BSO Soloist in Sibelius Work

WGBH-FM will broadcast a special concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra direct from Symphony Hall in FM multiplex stereo, Tuesday, Dec. 20 at 7:30 p.m.

ITZHAK PERLMAN

Conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, the concert will open with Beethoven's Overture to Coriolanus, followed by a performance of his Symphony No. 4.

After intermission, Mr. Leinsdorf has invited the young Israeli violinist Itzhak Perlman to be soloist in Sibelius' Violin Concerto in D Minor, Op. 47.

A native of Tel Aviv, Perlman is just 21 years old and has already appeared with many of the major symphony orchestras of the United States. A graduate of the Juilliard School of Music, Perlman suffered an attack of polio as a youngster and so cannot stand while performing.

Boston music lovers will have a chance to hear him in two works. Three days before he performs the Sibelius, Mr. Leinsdorf has invited him to play Prokofiev's Second Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

STILLWATER, OKLA.
NEWS-PRESS
D. 7,000

DEC 25 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600

DEC 11 1966

TUESDAY—Boston Symphony, Charles Munch conducting Berlioz' "L'Enfance du Christ," with contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum, baritone Donald Gramm and basso Theodor Uppman, and the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. Broadcast on Ch. 2 and WGBH-FM. Symphony Hall at 8:30. Concert repeated Thursday at 8:30.

Finally the weekly New York Philharmonic radio broadcast, which KSPI carries on FM from 8 to 9:45 Sunday will present pianist Daniel Barenboim in Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor, with William Steinberg of the Pittsburgh Symphony as guest conductor. In addition to the Israel-born young pianist's appearance, the first part of the program will consist of Aaron Copland's "Short Symphony," written when Copland was only 32 but not premiered in America until 1944, and the late Arthur Honegger's "Symphony No. 5."

The latter work, Honegger's last, was commissioned by the Koussevitzky Music Foundation in 1949 and premiered by the Boston Symphony in 1951.

139

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sun (e) 047
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,785
DEC 24 1966

Best Next Week On Channel 2

There will be music and drama on Channel 2 Christmas Day.

Starting at 2 p.m. with a full-length performance of Mozart's opera "The Magic Flute," the festivities include a special concert of Christmas music at 6 o'clock, a performance of the colorful music drama "The Play of Daniel" at 7, and at 8:15, Dylan Thomas reading his own "A Child's Christmas in Wales."

"The Magic Flute" was recorded last summer at the Berkshire Festival and features Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra with soloists Ezio Flagello, Judith Raskin, Beverly Sills and George Shirley. The Yale University Glee Club joins forces with the Howard University Choir for the concert of Christmas music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Press
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,686
DEC 28 1966

Channel 2 Highlights

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,415
DEC 29 1966

There Is Something For Everyone On Channel 2

The week on Channel 2 has something for everyone.

There'll be three top-notch dramas, a sharp debate on Massachusetts auto insurance rates in which the public will take part, a new class for creative knitters (beginners and experts) who want to learn principals as well as techniques, the hot jazz trumpet of Al Hirt, a live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast, the return of Colette Shulman with her perceptive comment on the Soviet press, the New England premiere of one of the most popular series ever produced for children, and much, much more.

It all begins the week of January 1.

Tuesday, January 3

8:30—Boston Symphony Orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf conducts this live concert, broadcast direct from Symphony Hall (radio in stereo). Program: "Der Schwanendreher" by Hindemith (Burton Fine, viola soloist); and Haffner Serenade by Mozart (Joseph Silverstein, violin soloist).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
DEC 11 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795
DEC 11 1966

BSO Programs Listed

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra is entering upon a week of considerable diversity. Tonight Erich Leinsdorf and the Orchestra will present a special Pension Fund Concert with Senator Edward M. Kennedy as narrator, Misha Dichter as piano soloist and Stephen Kates as cello soloist.

All the participants will contribute their services for the benefit of the Pension Fund which helps support over 95 retired orchestra members or their widows each year.

Charles Munch will conclude his present visit as guest conductor this week at the Tuesday and Thursday evening concerts, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the 21-year-old Israeli violinist, Itzhak Perlman, will make his first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Leinsdorf conducting.

Tonight's Pension Fund Concert will begin with the Dvorak "Cello Concerto in B minor, Op. 104," with soloist Stephen Kates who was a top prize-winner last summer at the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow.

Then Senator Kennedy will join Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra as narrator in "A Lincoln Portrait" by Aaron Copland, the same work in which he appeared with much success last summer at Tanglewood for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

After intermission Misha Dichter, another American artist who was a prize winner in the Moscow competition, will perform the Tchaikovsky "Piano Concerto No. 1." Some tickets for the Pension Fund Concert are still available at the Symphony Hall box office.

Tuesday night, the third of the "Cambridge" series, and Thursday night, the third of the Thursday "A" series, Dr. Munch will devote his program to a complete performance of "L'Enfance du Christ" by Berlioz, assisted by John McCollum, tenor; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Theodor Uppman, baritone; Donald Gramm, bass, and the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Elliot Forbes, conductor.

The Tuesday "Cambridge" concert will be telecast and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Channel 2, and WGBH-FM.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will return to the podium for the weekend concerts and introduce the young violinist, Itzhak Perlman, who will play the Prokofiev "Violin Concerto No. 2." The program will begin with two works of Leonard Bernstein, "The Lonely Hunter" and the "Symphonic Suite" from "On the Waterfront." Mr. Perlman will appear after intermission and the program will conclude with Berlioz' "Invitation to the Dance," Op. 65, as orchestrated by Berlioz.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
D. 29,500
DEC 26 1966

DUE TO SUCH a favorable reaction to the Sunday night Boston Symphony Orchestra presentations, ETV will continue to present concerts by major philharmonic orchestras during this time spot. The Boston Symphony presents its final program Christmas night. Included in the January concerts will be the Pittsburg Symphony, Buffalo Philharmonic, American Symphony, Los Angeles Philharmonic, and Royal Philharmonic Orchestras.

Exact broadcasts times for these and other ETV programs may be obtained from the ETV Guide or listings in The Columbia Record.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
DEC 5 1966

Munch, Boston Symphony On Air Tomorrow, Friday

Charles Munch returns to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two concerts to be broadcast live from Boston's Symphony Hall this week by WAMC-FM, 90.3 mc. Munch retired as the orchestra's music director several years ago.

Tomorrow at 8:30 p.m., he will lead the famous orchestra in a program consisting of Faure's "Suite from Pelleas et Melisande," Op. 80; Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra by Honegger; Schubert's Symphony No. 2 in B flat, D. 125; and Ravel's "La Valse."

The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will join Munch and the orchestra in a concert at 2 p.m. Friday. This concert will be devoted to a performance of Berlioz' famous oratorio "L'Enfance du Christ," Op. 25, and will feature guest soloist Florence Kopleff, Donald Gramm, Theodor Uppman and John McCollum.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is heard live in concert throughout the year over WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College.

TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 2,737,900
DEC 16 1966

SHOW BUSINESS

TELEVISION

Bell Ringer

For 26 years on radio and TV, the Bell Telephone Hour played duenna to the world's best music and most of its best contemporary performers, from Pons and Pinza to Toscanini and Tebaldi. The show had all the virtues of the duenna—care, good taste, restraint and fondness for her charges—but also the one vice: it was often pretty dull. Producer Henry Jaffe recalls: "We'd put a performer on a bleak stage in front of a dirty curtain and say, 'Perform!'"

CLIBURN'S HANDS

Perform they did, often superbly, but Bell began to feel its image had become ossified. This season, the program has shucked its shawl and gone off in search of adventure, and in the process become one of the best series on TV. Using hand-held cameras and available light, spotting some technicians in the middle of a performing orchestra, spending time and money horrendously, the Bell Telephone Hour has put together a new format of [illegible] documentary [illegible] honest music [illegible] and [illegible] commentary.

▶ Pianist Van Cliburn played at Michigan's Interlochen National Music Camp, recorded two Chopin sonatas in a New York studio, packed the Hollywood Bowl for Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2, and ate a folksy dinner with his parents and friends at their home in Shreveport, La. In between times, he mused about himself, his fame and his music: "The role of a concert artist in a concert hall will never be eclipsed. [illegible]"

▶ At the Tanglewood Music Festival in Massachusetts, the cameras cut away from performances of Debussy, Hindemith and Stravinsky for an interview with Composer Aaron Copland and a long glimpse of soprano Phyllis Curtin in a replica of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "little red house," teaching young hopefuls.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 10,176
JAN 3 1967

Top Spots on TV

Boston Symphony — 8.30 p. m., ch. 2. Erich Leinsdorf conducting the program. (live) See Best.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JAN 5 1967

Boston Symphony To Record Carter Piano Concerto

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received confirmation from three foundations that by separate grants they will support efforts to have the premiere performance of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto recorded by RCA Victor Records. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct the world premiere of the concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist on Friday afternoon.

The three participating foundations are the Martha Baird Rockefeller Fund for Music, Inc., the Steinway Foundation, Inc., and the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities. A fourth, the Ford Foundation, made a grant to Lateiner for the commissioning of the concerto.

The recording of the Carter Concerto at Friday's concert marks the first occasion in recent years the Boston Symphony Orchestra has made a commercial recording at a concert and with foundation support.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
World Journal Tribune (e)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JAN 1 1967

Today's Radio

8:05-10 — WQXR [illegible] Symphony Orchestra Concert: [illegible] cellist; Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, narrator; Misha Dichter, pianist. Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B Minor; Copland's A Lincoln Portrait, and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor.

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 200,250
JAN 15 1967
New England Newsclip

FM Music for This Week

LOHENGRIN, Wagner's three-act opera about love and chivalry in medieval times, will be broadcast by the Metropolitan Opera on Saturday afternoon at 2 on WEAN and WPJB-FM.

In the cast will be tenor Sandor Konya as Lohengrin, soprano Ingrid Bjoner as Elsa of Brabant, mezzo-soprano Christa Ludwig as Ortrud, baritone Walter Berry singing the role of Telramund, bass John Macurdy as King Henry, and baritone Sherrill Milnes as the Herald. Karl Boehm will conduct.

A concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast by WCRO-FM on Thursday at 9 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra in works by Webber, Schumann and Dvorak.

Leonard Bernstein will be back on the podium at Philharmonic Hall to conduct the New York Philharmonic broadcast today at 5 p.m. on WPJB-FM and 7 p.m. on WEAN.

Soloist with the orchestra will be violinist Zvi Zeitlin who will be heard in a performance of Arnold Schoenberg's Violin Concerto. Other works on the program will be Beethoven's overture to his opera Fidelio and his Symphony No. 3 in E Flat Major.

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.
NEWS
D. 17,000
JAN 11 1967

Highlights On Radio

WBEN-FM, 102.5, features the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Erich Leinsdorf conducting a program including Beethoven and Mozart beginning at 3 p.m.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
NO. TONAWANDA NEWS
Saturday, January 28, 1967

Highlights On Radio

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 444,396 SUN. 553,012
JAN 8 1967

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
JAN 9 1967

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355
JAN 7 1967

Hub Symphony On Channel 2

Gunther Schuller will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday at [illegible] on Channel 2.

Broadcast simultaneously by WBGH-FM in stereo, the concert will be telecast direct from Symphony Hall. For his program Schuller has chosen three works: Overture, Othello by Dvorak; Symphony No. 8 by Schubert (the Unfinished) and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Assisting artists in the Ives work will be the New England Conservatory Chorus, John Oliver, Acting Director.

Times-Picayune
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
D. 190,637 SUN. 306,325
JAN 15 1967

TODAY'S HIGHLIGHTS. Boston Symphony, Berg's "Lulu Suite" and Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 1 in C, Op. 15," 2-4 p. m.; WWMT-FM . . . Super Bowl, Green Bay Packers vs. Kansas City Chiefs, 2:30 p. m., WDSU; 3 p. m., WWL . . . New York Philharmonic, conductor: Leonard Bernstein; soloist. Zvi Zeitlin, violinist, 3-5 p. m., WDSU-FM . . . Opera, Strauss' "Salome," 7-10 p. m., WDSU-FM . . . Stage 3, "Girls, Girls, Girls," 8-9 p. m., WWMT-FM.

ITEM (e)
LYNN, MASS.
CIRC. 34,350
JAN 28 1967
New England Newsclip

PRESS
WATERTOWN, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 4,700
JAN 26 1967
New England Newsclip

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000
JAN 26 1967
New England Newsclip

BSO on TV

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tuesday, Jan. 31 at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 2.

Broadcast simultaneously in stereo by WGBH radio, the concert will be broadcast live from Symphony Hall. For his program Kubelik has chosen Symphony No. 102 by Haydn, Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Tympani and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

139

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sun (e) 047
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 11,785
DEC 24 1966

Best Next Week On Channel 2

There will be music and drama on Channel 2 Christmas Day.

Starting at 2 p.m. with a full-length performance of Mozart's opera "The Magic Flute," the festivities include a special concert of Christmas music at 6 o'clock, a performance of the colorful music drama "The Play of Daniel" at 7, and at 8:35, Dylan Thomas reading his own "A Child's Christmas in Wales."

"The Magic Flute" was recorded last summer at the Berkshire Festival and features Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra with soloists Ezio Flagello, Judith Raskin, Beverly Sills and George Shirley. The Yale University Glee Club joins forces with the Howard University Choir for the concert of Christmas music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Press
WATERTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,686
DEC 29 1966

Channel 2 Highlights

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Star
WINCHESTER, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 5,415
DEC 29 1966

There Is Something For Everyone On Channel 2

The week on Channel 2 has something for everyone.

There'll be three top-notch dramas, a sharp debate on Massachusetts auto insurance rates in which the public will take part, a new class for creative knitters (beginners and experts) who want to learn principals as well as techniques, the hot jazz trumpet of Al Hirt, a live Boston Symphony Orchestra telecast, the return of Colette Shulman with her perceptive comment on the Soviet press, the New England premiere of one of the most popular series ever produced for children, and much, much more.

It all begins the week of January 1.

Tuesday, January 3

8:30—Boston Symphony Orchestra. Erich Leinsdorf conducts this live concert, broadcast direct from Symphony Hall (radio in stereo). Program: "Der Schwanendreher" by Hindemith (Burton Fine, viola soloist); and Haffner Serenade by Mozart (Joseph Silverstein, violin soloist).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 532,600
DEC 11 1966

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 56,795
DEC 11 1966

BSO Programs Listed

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra is entering upon a week of considerable diversity. Tonight Erich Leinsdorf and the Orchestra will present a special Pension Fund Concert with Senator Edward M. Kennedy as narrator, Misha Dichter as piano soloist and Stephen Kates as cello soloist.

All the participants will contribute their services for the benefit of the Pension Fund which helps support over 95 retired orchestra members or their widows each year.

Charles Munch will conclude his present visit as guest conductor this week at the Tuesday and Thursday evening concerts. Friday afternoon and Saturday evening the 21-year-old Israeli violinist, Itzhak Perlman, will make his first appearances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Leinsdorf conducting.

Tonight's Pension Fund Concert will begin with the Dvorak "Cello Concerto in B minor, Op. 104," with soloist Stephen Kates who was a top prize-winner last summer at the Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow.

Then Senator Kennedy will join Mr. Leinsdorf and the orchestra as narrator in "A Lincoln Portrait" by Aaron Copland, the same work in which he appeared with much success last summer at Tanglewood for the benefit of the Berkshire Music Center.

After intermission Misha Dichter, another American artist who was a prize winner in the Moscow competition, will perform the Tchaikovsky "Piano Concerto No. 1." Some tickets for the Pension Fund Concert are still available at the Symphony Hall box office.

Tuesday night, the third of the "Cambridge" series, and Thursday night, the third of the Thursday "A" series, Dr. Munch will devote his program to a complete performance of "L'Enfance du Christ" by Berlioz, assisted by John McCollum, tenor; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Theodor Uppman, baritone; Donald Gramm, bass, and the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Elliot Forbes, conductor.

The Tuesday "Cambridge" concert will be telecast and broadcast simultaneously by WGBH-TV, Channel 2 and WGBH-FM.

Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will return to the podium for the weekend concerts and introduce the young violinist Itzhak Perlman, who will play the Prokofiev "Violin Concerto No. 2." The program will begin with two works of Beethoven, "The Leonore Overture No. 2" and the "Symphony No. 4." Mr. Perlman will appear after intermission and the program will conclude with Weber's "Invitation to the Dance," Op. 65, as orchestrated by Berlioz.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
D. 29,509
DEC 26 1966

* * *

DUE TO SUCH a favorable reaction to the Sunday night Boston Symphony Orchestra presentations, ETV will continue to present concerts by major philharmonic orchestras during this time spot. The Boston Symphony presents its final program Christmas night. Included in the January concerts will be the Pittsburg Symphony, Buffalo Philharmonic, American Symphony, Los Angeles Philharmonic, and Royal Philharmonic Orchestras.

Exact broadcasts times for these and other ETV programs may be obtained from the ETV Guide or listings in The Columbia Record.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 50,766
DEC 5 1966

Munch, Boston Symphony On Air Tomorrow, Friday

Charles Munch returns to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two concerts to be broadcast live from Boston's Symphony Hall this week by WAMC-FM, 90.3 mc. Munch retired as the orchestra's music director several years ago.

Tomorrow at 8:30 p.m., he will lead the famous orchestra in a program consisting of Faure's "Suite from Pelleas et Melisande," Op. 80; Symphony No. 2 for String Orchestra by Honegger; Schubert's Symphony No. 2 in B flat, D. 125; and Ravel's "La Valse."

The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society will join Munch and the orchestra in a concert at 2 p.m. Friday. This concert will be devoted to a performance of Berlioz' famous oratorio "L'Enfance du Christ," Op. 25, and will feature guest soloist Florence Kopleff, Donald Gramm, Theodor Uppman and John McCollum.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is heard live in concert throughout the year over WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College.

TIME
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 2,737,900
DEC 16 1966

SHOW BUSINESS

TELEVISION

Bell Ringer

For 26 years on radio and TV, the Bell Telephone Hour played duenna to the world's best music and most of its best contemporary performers, from Pons and Pinza to Toscanini and Tebaldi. The show had all the virtues of the duenna—care, good taste, restraint and fondness for her charges—but also the one vice: it was often pretty dull. Producer Henry Jaffe recalls: "We'd put a performer on a bleak stage in front of a dirty curtain and say, 'Perform!'"

CLIBURN'S HANDS

Perform they did, often superbly, but Bell began to feel its image had become ossified. This season, the program has shucked its shawl and gone off in search of adventure—and in the process become one of the best series on TV. Using hand-held cameras and available light, spotting sound technicians in the middle of a performing orchestra, spending time and money horrendously, the Telephone Hour has put together a unique format of musical documentary that does honor both to the music and to the documentary.

▶ Pianist Van Cliburn played at Michigan's Interlochen National Music Camp, recorded two Chopin sonatas in a New York studio, packed the Hollywood Bowl for Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 2, and ate a folksy dinner with his parents and friends at their home in Shreveport, La. In between times, he mused about himself, his fame and his music. "The role of a concert artist in a concert hall will never be eclipsed."

▶ At the Tanglewood Music Festival, in Massachusetts, the cameras cut away from performances of Debussy, Hindemith and Stravinsky for an interview with Composer Aaron Copland and a long glimpse of Soprano Phyllis Curtin in a replica of Nathaniel Hawthorne's "little red house," teaching young hopefuls.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 10,176
JAN 3 1967

Top Spots on TV

Boston Symphony — 8.30 p. m., Ch. 2. Erich Leinsdorf conducting the program. (live) See Best.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 159,508
JAN 5 1967

Boston Symphony To Record Carter Piano Concerto

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has received confirmation from three foundations that by separate grants they will support efforts to have the premiere performance of Elliott Carter's Piano Concerto recorded by RCA Victor Records. Erich Leinsdorf, music director, will conduct the world premiere of the concerto with Jacob Lateiner as soloist on Friday afternoon.

The three participating foundations are the Martha Baird Rockefeller Fund for Music, Inc., the Steinway Foundation, Inc., and the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities. A fourth, the Ford Foundation, made a grant to Lateiner for the commissioning of the concerto.

The recording of the Carter Concerto at Friday's concert marks the first occasion in recent years the Boston Symphony Orchestra has made a commercial recording at a concert and with foundation support.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
World Journal Tribune (e)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JAN 1 1967

Today's Radio

8:05-10 — WQXR — Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert: Stephen Kates, cellist; Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, narrator; Mischa Dichter, pianist. Dvorak's Cello Concerto in B Minor; Copland's A Lincoln Portrait, and Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor.

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 200,250
JAN 15 1967
New England Newsclip

FM Music for This Week

LOHENGRIN, Wagner's three-act opera about love and chivalry in medieval times, will be broadcast by the Metropolitan Opera on Saturday afternoon at 2 on WEAN and WPJB-FM.

In the cast will be tenor Sandor Konya as Lohengrin, soprano Ingrid Bjoner as Elsa of Brabant, mezzo-soprano Christa Ludwig as Ortrud, baritone Walter Berry singing the role of Telramund, bass John Macurdy as King Henry, and baritone Sherrill Milnes as the Herald. Karl Boehm will conduct.

A concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be broadcast by WCRQ-FM on Thursday at 9 p.m. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct the orchestra in works by Webber, Schumann and Dvorak.

Leonard Bernstein will be back on the podium at Philharmonic Hall to conduct the New York Philharmonic broadcast today at 5 p.m. on WPJB-FM and 7 p.m. on WEAN.

Soloist with the orchestra will be violinist Zvi Zeitlin who will be heard in a performance of Arnold Schoenberg's Violin Concerto. Other works on the program will be Beethoven's overture to his opera Fidelio and his Symphony No. 3 in E Flat Major.

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.
NEWS
D. 17,000
JAN 11 1967

Highlights On Radio

WBEN-FM, 102.5, features the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Erich Leinsdorf conducting a program including Beethoven and Mozart beginning at 8 p.m.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

NO. TONAWANDA NEWS
Saturday, January 28, 1967

Highlights On Radio

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 444,396 SUN. 553,012
JAN 8 1967

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
JAN 9 1967

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Item (e)
LYNN, Mass.
Circ. 34,355
JAN 7 1967

Hub Symphony On Channel 2

Gunther Schuller will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday at 7:30 P.M. on Channel 2.

Broadcast simultaneously by WBGH-FM in stereo, the concert will be telecast direct from Symphony Hall. For his program Schuller has chosen three works: Overture, Othello by Dvorak; Symphony No. 8 by Schubert (the Unfinished) and Ives' Symphony No. 4. Assisting artists in the Ives work will be the New England Conservatory Chorus, John Oliver, Acting Director.

Times-Picayune
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
D. 190,637 SUN. 306,325
JAN 15 1967

TODAY'S HIGHLIGHTS. Boston Symphony, Berg's "Lulu Suite" and Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 1 in C, Op. 15," 2-4 p. m., WWMT-FM . . . Super Bowl, Green Bay Packers vs. Kansas City Chiefs, 2:30 p. m., WDSU; 3 p. m., WWL . . . New York Philharmonic, conductor: Leonard Bernstein; soloist. Zvi Zeitlin, violinist, 3-5 p. m., WDSU-FM . . . Opera, Strauss' "Salome," 7-10 p. m., WDSU-FM . . . Stage 3, "Girls, Girls, Girls," 8-9 p. m., WWMT-FM.

ITEM (e)
LYNN, MASS.
CIRC. 34,350
JAN 28 1967
New England Newsclip

PRESS
WATERTOWN, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 4,700
JAN 26 1967
New England Newsclip

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 26,000
JAN 26 1967
New England Newsclip

BSO on TV

Rafael Kubelik will be guest conductor with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Tuesday, Jan. 31 at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 2.

Broadcast simultaneously in stereo by WGBH radio, the concert will be broadcast live from Symphony Hall. For his program Kubelik has chosen Symphony No. 102 by Haydn, Martinu's Double Concerto for Two String Orchestras, Piano and Tympani and the Symphony in D minor by Cesar Franck.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

MAY 7 1967

New England Newsclip

Pops Filmed For NBC-TV

A portion of the Boston Pops' Friday concert will be televised in color for broadcast later on N.B.C.'s Children's Theater. Arthur Fiedler will conduct. Hugh Downs will be narrator of "A Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra," by Benjamin Britten.

Other highlights of Pops this week will include the local premiere of a piece called "Naughty Limericks." Written by the Russian composer Schedrin, it is a musical spoof. It will be heard on the Monday and Wednesday programs.

In a special Sunday evening concert, May 14, the Pops will play an all-Gershwin program. Proceeds will benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

ITHACA, N. Y.
JOURNAL
D. 16,500

MAY 13 1967

Boston Pops Performance Set

A Boston Pops Orchestra performance in Boston's Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, will be presented as an "NBC Children's Theater" color special Sunday (6:30-7:30 p.m.).

Hugh Downs will be program host as well as narrator of the concert's two principal works: Saint-Seans' "Carnival of Animals," with verses by Ogden Nash, and Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra."

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

RECORD-AMERICAN (m) (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 411,800

MAY 11 1967

New England Newsclip

BesTView in Town

Will Host Boston Pops Concert

DESPITE HIS WEEKLY 12½-hour program schedule, Downs managed to find time to spend an afternoon and evening rehearsing in Symphony Hall for an NBC Children's Theater special hour which Channel 4 will televise next Sunday at 6:30 p. m. He will be narrator-host of a Boston Pops Orchestra concert conducted by Arthur Fiedler for young people, and it will be taped Friday night at a regular Symphony Hall performance.

The taping will take place during the second half of the performance, when Hugh will narrate the TV concert's two principal works: Saint-Saens' "Carnival of Animals," with verses by Ogden Nash, and Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra." He and Fiedler recorded the latter for RCA Victor three years ago.

Although Downs will not be in New York for Friday morning's Today Show, he will still appear on the program—via a taped interview with Fiedler. He also will be guest Friday morning on Bob Kennedy's Channel 4 Contact session. (Even when he's not sitting in one of his own shows, he winds up on somebody else's.) He'll also turn up that morning on Concentration, which he tapes in advance.

GAZETTE (e)
TAUNTON, MASS.
CIRC. 12,800

MAY 13 1967

New England Newsclip

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Saturday, May 13, 1967

Poetry and Pops for Children

Camille St. Saens was racked with pains
When people addressed him as
"Saint Sains."
He held the human race to blame
Because it could not pronounce his name.
So he turned with metronome and fife
To glorify other forms of life.
Be quiet, please, for here begins
His salute to feathers, furs and fins.

Thus Ogden Nash's verse introduces a series of musical portraits by Camille Saint Saens, entitled "Carnival of the Animals." Nash's poems, which accompany the music, wil be narrated by Hugh Downs in "A Boston Pops Concert for Youngsters" on the "NBC Children's Theatre" Sunday, from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., originating in Boston's Symphony Hall. Downs, best known as host for NBC-TV's "Today" and "Concentration,' will also narrate the television concert's other principal work, Benjamin Britten's "Young Persons Guide to the Orchestra."

Here are some of the other Nash verses which Downs will read to the music on the program:

ELEPHANTS

Elephants are useful friends
Equipped with handles at both ends.
They have a wrinkled, moth-
proof hide;
Their teeth are upside down,
outside . . .

KANGAROOS

The kangaroo can jump incredible.
He has to jump because he's edible.
I could not eat a kangaroo,
But many fine Australians do.

THE CUCKOO IN THE WOODS

Cuckoos lead Bohemian lives,
They fail as husbands and as wives,
Therefore they cynically disparage everyone else's marriage.
Some claim that pianists are human,
And quote the case of Mr. Truman.
St. Saens, upon the other hand,
Considered them a scurvy band.
Ape-like they are and simian,
Instead of normal men and wimian.

GRAND FINALE

Now we reach the grand finale,
Animale, carnivale.
Noises new to sea and land
Issue from the skillful band.
All the strings contort their features
Imitating crawly creatures . . .,
In out-doing Barnum and Bailey and Ringling
St. Saens has done a miraculous thingling.

During the performance of "Carnival of Animals," Lisl Weil, well-known illustrator of children's books, will illustrate the music with huge animal figures which she will draw on paper panels, just behind the orchestra.

CHRONICLE SUN
CAMBRIDGE, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 12,850

MAY 18 1967

New England Newsclip

Pops on Two

The Boston Pops goes international when Arthur Fiedler conducts a full-length live concert on Channel 2, Tuesday, May 23 at 8:30 p.m. The program will feature Japanese violist Konosuke Ono and cellist Soichi Katsuta. Both are members of the Japan Philharmonic.

SUNDAY GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 532,600

MAY 14 1967

New England

Lisl Weil drew animal figures behind the orchestra to the rhythm of the music. See page TV 7 for results.

Youngsters Watched During TV Filming Of Boston Pops

By Elizabeth Sullivan
Globe TV-Radio Editor

Students from Roxbury Latin, children of the Boston Symphony players, and others from all around, not only had a delightful time last Friday night listening to a Boston Pops Concert for youngsters but they had the pleasure of watching NBC film a portion of the concert for telecast today (Sunday) over Ch. 4 from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m.

After intermission, Saint-Saens' "Carnival of the Animals" was played by the orchestra under Arthur Fiedler, and Hugh Downs (of NBC's Today Show) was on stage as narrator for this work as well as Benjamin Britten's "Young Persons Guide to the Orchestra," the concert's other principal work.

As Downs read some Ogden Nash verses during "Carnival of Animals," Lisl Weil, illustrator of children's books, drew huge animal figures on paper panels just behind the orchestra. She did her drawings to the rhythm of the music.

A high point of the "Carnival" work is the cuckoo section, with two clarinets representing two cuckoos communicating. One clarinet-cuckoo is visible on stage; the other is hidden.

This puzzles the pianists, who spend most of their time trying to locate it, particularly in the depths of the grand pianos. The young audience squealed with delight at this.

The Britten piece, subtitled "Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Purcell," is designed to help young people understand the scope of orchestral instruments.

NBC arranged for this Pops for Children concert telecast as the eighth production in the award-winning "NBC Children's Theater" series. A happy selection.

Continued on Page TV 7

Lisl Weil completes sketch, done as Boston Pops Orchestra plays "Carnival of the Animals."

Arthur Fiedler, Hugh Downs and Lisl Weil take part in NBC special tonight, featuring the Boston Pops Orchestra.

TRAVELER (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 146,300

MAY 15 1967

New England Newsclip

"A BOSTON POPS CONCERT FOR YOUNGSTERS" with Hugh Downs on Channel 4 last night, was an hour of musical magic for children and parents alike.

Lisl Weil's illustrations of animals — drawn on huge posters as she worked to the rhythm of Saint-Saens' Carnival of Animal" — were enchanting. We watched her work, in rehearsal, with Arthur Fiedler and the orchestra last week, and when she finished the musician rose as one and gave her a standing ovation.

Viewers must have shared their enthusiasm. Her drawings were the highlight of the program. Ogden Nash's whimsical verse was delightful and Hugh Downs — in black tie — was excellent as the narrator for both the Saint Saens work and Benjamin Britten's "the Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra."

SUNDAY COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
CIRC. 182,650

MAY 14 1967

New England Newsclip

Art, Doggerel Liven Concert For Children

Artist Lisl Weil displays an unusual talent in "A Boston Pops Concert for Youngsters," a program in the "NBC Children's Theater" series, to be colorcast today (6:30-7:30 p.m.) on NBC.

Miss Weil, who also illustrates children's books, has devised a technique for illustrating program music for children by drawing life-size pictures in color on large poster-size panels during a concert performance.

On "The Boston Pops Concert for Youngsters" she will be on stage, illustrating Ogden Nash's whimsical verses to Camille Saint-Saens' "Carnival of Animals," while Arthur Fiedler conducts the Pops Orchestra and NBC's Hugh Downs reads the poetry.

Ogden Nash's verse introduces a series of musical portraits by Camille Saint Saens, entitled "Carnival of the Animals." Nash's poems, which accompany the music, will be narrated by NBC's Hugh Downs who will also narrate the television concert's other principal work, Benjamin Britten's "Young Persons Guide to the Orchestra."

141

BERKSHIRE EAGLE (e)
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 29,200

MAY 13 1967 New England Newsclip

Arthur Fiedler offers a children's tour of an orchestra tonight on NBC at 6:30.

TOWN CRIER
WESTPORT, CONN.
BI-WEEKLY CIRC. 6,750

MAY 11 1967 New England Newsclip

GAZETTE (e)
WORCESTER, MASS.
CIRC. 94,350

MAY 13 1967 New England Newsclip

On the Dial

FIEDLER

"NBC Children's Theater" presents a Boston Pops Concert for Children at 6:30 p.m. tomorrow via Channels 4 and 10. Somewhat remarkable when Boston's staid old Symphony Hall becomes part zoo part classroom. The "NBC Children's Theater" Pops Concert for youngsters will be complete with Arthur Fiedler conducting and Hugh Downs narrating Camille Saint Saens' "Carnival of the Animals" with verses by Ogden Nash. Visual storyteller Lisl Weil will draw in time to the music.

RCA VICTOR

Fiedler and the Boston Pops recorded both "Animale Carnivale" and Benjamin Britten's Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra with Downs for RCA Victor. This gave rise to "Children's Theater" producer George Heinemann's fertiel imagination that here was something for his program. For it, the Boston Pops will produce melodies played on kettledrums, an event as rare as the bull fiddles being fed peanuts. It's all part of the music and fun to take place in Symphony Hall, and to be seen on your screens tomorrow night.

"OLD ANIMALS"

Perhaps the best expression of what to expect is provided by Fiedler's daughter, Johanna, in her notes for the RCA recording: "It seems inevitable that this music will appeal to everyone, young people and old animals included."

NEWS (e)
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
CIRC. 98,600

MAY 15 1967 New England Newsclip

GAZETTE (e)
TAUNTON, MASS.
CIRC. 12,800

MAY 15 1967 New England Newsclip

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 885,000 SUN. 1,500,000

MAY 15 1967

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC.N.AVAIL.

MAY 17 1967

A BOSTON POPS CONCERT FOR YOUNGSTERS
(NBC Children's Theatre)
With Hugh Downs, narrator; Arthur Fiedler & Boston Pops Orch., Lisl Weil
Producer: George A. Heinemann
Director: Walter Miller
60 Mins., Sun. 6:30 p.m. 5454
NBC-TV (tape, color)

A pleasant but unremarkable hour of concert music for the young was offered in the familiar serious-music-can-be-fun spirit last Sunday (14) as an installment in NBC's occasional "Children's Theatre" series. It's probable that parents enjoyed it more than the kiddies.

The program attempted nothing that hadn't been done before on television, but presented it all skillfully and with just the right balance of business and playfulness. Hugh Downs, who isn't exactly a kiddie performer, was most acceptable as host and annotator, and Boston Pops maestro Arthur Fiedler amiable and grandfatherly. But the show stealer, at least for grown up folk, was illustrator Lisl Weil who, in time with the music (and usually uptempo), sketched visuals for Saint Saens' "Carnival of the Animals" and was more delightful in her body english than in her handiwork.

The Saint Saens opus was one of two major orchestral pieces offered, and as presented it attempted to expose the kids to three art forms at once—music, graphics and verse, the latter whimsical rhymes by Ogden Nash read by Downs to introduce each musical sequence. The Nash verses and the balletic prancing of Miss Weil got far the best of it, with the orchestra seeming merely a background effect. A pity that kiddie viewers weren't given to see that the flutes enacted the birds, the double basses the elephant, the xylophone the dinosaur skeleton and the cello the swan. That would seem to contribute more to their genuine appreciation of music than the composition's use as an accompainment to drawings.

The second long piece, Benjamin Britten's "Young Person's Guide To the Orchestra," served the purpose of introducing the instruments, but must have been anticlimactic for the juves, coming as it did after the Saint Saens work with all its non-musical distractions. A sampling from "Swan Lake" was the opening selection, and Meredith Willson's "76 Trombones," arranged in the manner of "Stars and Stripes Forever," was the encore.

The concert was taped at Symphony Hall in Boston. Les.

NEWS (e)
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
CIRC. 15,900

MAY 10 1967 New England Newsclip

THE NEWS
Entertainment

12 The News, Framingham - Natick, Wed., May 10, 1967

Downs and Fiedler Discuss Boston Pops for Children

By VIRGINIA LUCIER

BOSTON — An astute group of individuals in the entertainment medium, each well known in his or her respective field, gathered in a room backstage of Symphony Hall on Tuesday in between rehearsals to discuss "A Boston Pops Concert for Children," which will be viewed on the NBC television network Sunday evening, May. 14 from 6:30 to 7:30 o'clock. The same program was presented live at Symphony Hall last evening with 72 year old Arthur Fiedler, currently enjoying his 38th year with the Pops, conducting the Pops Orchestra.

Hugh Downs, host of the popular daily "Today" Show and "Concentration," flew to Boston earlier in the day, returned to New York after the live concert in order to fill his television commitments today and comes back to Boston on Friday for the taping that night of the Sunday show which will be carried by 200 stations including Channel 4 in Boston.

George Heinemann, producer of NBC's Children's Theatre, which in 1966 was awarded the Prixjeunnes (youth prize) in Munich, Germany for having been selected the "best children's program in the world," and only two weeks ago received the "Peabody Award," stated that the concept of Children's Theatre is for entertainment and education with child and parent sharing the experience. "In the eight shows we have done, we have tried to visit various art forms and bring it to television, not television to it. Since the RCA Victor recording of 'A Young Person's Guide To An Orchestra' and 'Carnival of Animals' should have created interest between teacher and child, the youngster is already familiar with the story. This is where it becomes an educational experience.

"At the same time, children become a more astute, critical audience of the future. When a child is raised with this kind of experience and is also given a taste of opera, ballet and the other arts, it will come by him naturally as he develops into a mature adult."

HUGH DOWNS, host of the "Today" Show and "Concentration", is host and narrator of "A Boston Pops Concert for Children," which is being taped live at Symphony Hall, Friday evening for NBC television network viewing, including Channel 4, Boston, Sunday evening, May 14 from 6:30 to 7:30 o'clock. Downs flew to Boston yesterday to appear at last night's Pops Concert, which is the same one scheduled for Sunday's TV showing.

TRAVELER (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 146,300

MAY 10 1967 New England Newsclip

HERALD (m)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 159,500

MAY 10 1967 New England Newsclip

★ ★ ★

SAT DOWN WEDNESDAY with the most televised man in the world: Hugh Downs. "Johnny Carson does 279 hours of television a year. Between the 'Today Show' and 'Concentration' I do 575 hours a year on NBC," he said. The remark was forthcoming after a question: do you plan on keeping up your busy pace?

"I will try to phase out my activity gradually," he added, meanwhile searching for some evening program, although he noted he has no intention of giving up "Today."

Downs was in Boston for a rehearsal for a "Boston Pops Concert for Youngsters" which will be taped Friday night at Symphony Hall for showing on "NBC Children's Theater" Sunday at 6:30 p.m. (WBZ locally.) He will narrate the special, reading, for example, Ogden Nash's verses which will introduce a series of musical portraits by Camille Saint Saens entitled "Carnival of Animals."

During the session several other subjects came up and in his quiet, straight-forward, always-the-gentleman manner he set forth his views.

HE SAID he looked forward to doing a special of this "quality," modestly revealed he has written several orchestral pieces which Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler wants to look at, contends television is improving what with gains made in news and public events programming and, in regular fare, said he likes "Star Trek" for its sound scripts dealing with adult themes.

Chicago Tribune
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER
D. 840-746 SUN. 1,178,515

MAY 14 1967

'Carnival of the Animals'

CAMILLE Saint-Saens' "Carnival of the Animals," called a prime example of having fun with music, is an attractive feature of the eighth production of the NBC Children's Theatre, to be televised as a color special today at 5:30 p. m., on channel 5. This is part of a Boston Pops orchestra performance in Boston Symphony Hall, with Arthur Fiedler conducting.

Another feature of today's concert is to be Benjamin Britten's "The Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra." Hugh Downs, host of the NBC-TV network Today show, will narrate for both works, using verses by Ogden Nash to illustrate "Carnival of the Animals." Miss Lisl Weil, well-known children's book illustrator, will draw huge animal figures in chalk on paper panels directly behind the orchestra, on stage, to the rhythm of the music.

Host Downs will read to music such whimsical bits of Nash verse as:

ELEPHANTS

Elephants are useful friends
Equipped with handles at both ends.
They have a wrinkled, mothproof hide;
Their teeth are upside down, outside. . .

KANGAROOS

The kangaroo can jump incredible.
He has to jump because he's edible.
I could not eat a kangaroo,
But many fine Australians do. . .

The Boston Pops performance of the Saint-Saens work usually delights young hearers with the "cuckoo section," in which two clarinets represent two cuckoos communicating. One clarinet-cuckoo is visible; the other is hidden. Pianists, puzzled as to the whereabouts of the hidden cuckoo, spend most of their time trying to locate it, probing the depths of the grand piano.

Arthur Fiedler (right) conducts the Boston Pops Orchestra in a children's program today for which Hugh Downs (left) is host and narrator.

Individual sections of "Carnival of the Animals" bear such intriguing titles as Royal March of the Lions, Hens and Cocks, Wild Jackass, Turtles, Elephants, Kangaroos, Mules, and so on.

• • •

MISS WEIL has devised a technique for illustrating program music for children—you might call her a concert illustrator. Her drawings are life-size pictures in color. While drawing, she appears to move to the music. She does, in fact, choreograph her movements, keeping time with the orchestra in a kind of picture ballet.

Miss Weil illustrated Prokofieff's "Cinderella" for the 1963 NBC Children's Theatre production, "Of Sights and Sounds." She has also done concert illustrations of "The Firebird" and "Petrouchka," by Stravinsky.

The Britten piece, subtitled "Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Purcell," is intended to give young persons a keener understanding of what the instruments in an orchestra can do. Every instrument, or group, is given a chance to show off, not only in its own variations, but also when all are combined in final statement of Purcell's majestic tune.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

MAY 15 1967 New England Newsclip

The Boston Pops—A Treat

By PERCY SHAIN
Globe Television Critic

Children's Theater, Ch. 4

★★★

The Boston Pops Orchestra, which has been a local tradition for ages, became a national enthusiasm for a night when it served as the catalyst for a diverting children's program Sunday.

NBC's answer to Leonard Bernstein took the form of an all-young people's concert consisting of Saint-Saens' "Carnival of the Animals" and Benjamin Britten's "Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra" — both celebrated in their sphere — and a nice "77 Trombones" windup with variations.

While the musicianship—as always—was first-rate under Arthur Fiedler's practiced baton, the spotlight was on the "special bonus" attractions.

Hugh Downs, the TV personality, came here to narrate the whimsical Ogden Nash verses that light up the "Carnival" piece and read the description and function of the instruments that make Britten's "Guide" such a helpful work for the youthful music lover.

And Lisl Weil, the popular artist, was completely enchanting in her life-size illustrations, drawn to the tempo of the music as she pranced around her huge sheets of drawing paper.

Lions, roosters, jackasses, turtles, elephants, kangaroos, whales, birds, apes, fossils, Mules, and swans flowed from her agile chalk in charming, rumpled array as Downs read the amusing twisted rhymes that Nash favors.

RECORDINGS

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100

AUG 1966

STRAVINSKY: Agon
Schuller: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LM 2879. LP. $4.79.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2879. SD. $5.79.

This is the second recording of the Schuller and the third for the Stravinsky. Both of these works were written in the late Fifties (Stravinsky, 1957; Schuller, 1959); both employ chromatic, twelve-tone devices and ideas in conjunction with other matter; and, taken together, they can be said to stand for the entry of such notions into the mainstream of musical life.

Agon actually shows the process of assimilation as part of its form. A "ballet for twelve dancers" written for Balanchine, the work begins with a lean but perfectly scannable diatonic, neoclassic pas de quatre which immediately afterwards splinters off into two sort-of-serial subsections. There then follow two pas de trois, each of which is divided into sections patterned on old French dances which become increasingly chromatic; these are surrounded by an interlude-refrain of a most simple, attractive diatonic character. Then follows a highly inflected twelve-tone pas de deux and a short series of duos and trios, twelve-tone pure and simple, which somehow perfectly dovetail right back into the opening diatonic music. Don't ask me how it's done; I couldn't tell you. It's an extraordinary sleight of hand by an old master magician. Not that Agon is any trick; it is a superb and thoroughly Stravinskyan creation, a marvelous commentary on our contemporary musical experience—transformed, utterly clarified, and made coherent and meaningful in the best Stravinsky manner.

The Schuller piece was a joint commission of the American Music Center, the Ford Foundation, and the Minneapolis Symphony (it was recorded by that orchestra not so many years ago but the record is now deleted). It is based on seven Klee paintings: Antique Harmonies (pile-up of fifths in ominous chromatic juxtapositions); Abstract Trio (wind trios in changing timbres); Little Blue Devil (you guessed it, colored in jazz "blue"); Twittering Machine (a mechanical, "post-Webern," ultraserial twitch and twitter); Arab Village (the only non-twelve-tone movement; a literal evocation of Arabic music with microtonal intervals, long flute and oboe drones and wails); An Eerie Moment (an unsettling murmur and explosion); and Pastorale or Rhythms (intertwined rhythmic lines with loping chromatic-rustic themes in and around). All of this is managed with great charm and wit as well as extraordinary amounts of ingenuity and skill (for example, Schuller shows the wind players in Arab Village just exactly how to produce the required microtonal effects and they are indeed perfect). The very literalness of the images enables almost any listener to associate perfectly; the Twittering Machine is surely the first piece of post-Webern serialism which invariably brings down the house. As an entity, the work doesn't quite hang together and its carefully managed appeal represents something close to the first popularly priced twelve-tone fare—and what's boiling in the pot is stew. But it's good, healthy, tasty, well-made stew. The food-recipe image is not altogether beside the point—this music is a little cooked-up. Still, if not gourmet, it is effective stuff from one of this country's most gifted younger composers.

The old Minneapolis recording was a little stronger on the exotic side; Leinsdorf tends to be strong and straightforward. Agon seems to me a little rushed in places; I would have liked a little more punctuation—separation of phrases and sections, extension of holds, shaping of the big phrases, and so forth. Also Leinsdorf omits two repeats that I do not feel are really optional; the loss hardly seems worth the minute or so saved in a twenty-minute piece. In other respects, however, this is an excellent job and it is a pleasure to get music as new and important as this in such capable hands. The high quality of the sound does justice to the wide range of timbres in this music. E.S.

The Miami Herald
MIAMI, FLA.
D. 369,982 SUN. 442,677

OCT 2 1966

Music and Records

Stravinsky: Agon; and Gunther Schuller: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony (RCA Victor).

The "Agon" score covers several of Stravinsky's periods, since he worked on it during several years when he was changing his style and working techniques rapidly. It progresses from tonality to serialism. We should think it would be most effective when seen with the choreography for which it was written, but of course it does more or less stand alone.

Igor Stravinsky

Gunther Schuller, who is identified in the public mind with Third Stream Music, though he didn't exactly invent it, uses the instruments as colors in such a score as the "Paul Klee."

He is painting with sound, and he does so in an interesting way. He has chosen the Klee pictures personally, and for some he has translated and for others invented parallels. The result is one of the very modern and sophisticated things being done in the arts today. The score is fragmented, and you must know the pictures to get the most out of the music. Schuller's Third Stream is supposed to stand mid-way between jazz and the classics.

AUDIO
MINEOLA, N. Y.
MONTHLY 26,100

AUG 1966

Stavinsky: Agon
Schuller: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee. Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf.
RCA Victor LSC 2879 stereo

Stravinsky's "Agon" is a nicely balanced work—just teetering on the edge of his "last period," having to do with his own individual brand of serial or twelve-tone technique, yet still clearly and easily related to the great corpus of middle works which are now so comfortable for our ever more modern ears. (Time does move on.)

As for Schuller, he is now the most energetic leader of our younger composer-conductors, a man who confidently, even impetuously, wades into any sort of music going, including "third stream" jazz. His ingeniously mechanized little sketches after Paul Klee's decorative pictures are miracles of instrumentation—small-scale yet intricate, ultra-sharp-edged. For many a listener they'll seem pretty cold and calculated—but that is no more than today's way of "talking," so to speak. The program aspect helps, for there is a direct relation between the Klee designs and the Schuller musical patterns. One of the Klees is beautifully reproduced on the album cover, by the way.

Good to have some solid contemporary like this from RCA and Boston. Columbia has had too much of a monopoly on such things, lately.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163,400

SEPT 1966

STRAVINSKY: Agon
Schuller: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf cond. RCA VICTOR LSC 2879 $5.79 LM 2879* $4.79.

Performance: Professional
Recording: Fully detailed
Stereo Quality: Appropriate

The subtitle of Stravinsky's Agon is "Ballet for Twelve Dancers," and listening to this extraordinary work, which fuses enlarged tonality with serial techniques, one has the feeling that the scoring is only for a dozen musicians. Despite a full array of instruments (woodwinds, four horns, four trumpets, three trombones, harp, mandolin, piano, percussion, and strings), not a single measure is for the full orchestra or anything approaching all instruments available. The scoring is wondrous, daring, spanking new—fifteen pieces with as many varieties of instrumentational design. The vertical, horizontal, and rhythmic aspects are just as fascinating, and a constant state of discovery rewards the attentive listener. It is proof that Stravinsky's twelve-tone approach is entirely his own, not someone else's. And his dodecaphonic music has heart as well as brain.

However, the joys of the score are not fully brought out in this recording. There is an almost impersonal quality in the performance, caused by a neutrality of accentual emphasis which strikes a middle-of-the-road balance. Further, the sudden pianos which dot the score are exceedingly flabby, though the volatile sforzati are not. Incomprehensibly, Leinsdorf eliminates most of the indicated repeats of sections, thereby nullifying the precisely measured formal balances.

Gunther Schuller's musical conceptions of Klee pictures (based on translations of their design, structure, color, or mood) are forceful, direct examples of superb program music. The system Schuller followed is often almost literal (Abstract Trio is practically only for trio combinations, for example), but sometimes involves psychological paraphrasing (Little Blue Devil turns into a jazz personality). The entire suite is marked by an orchestrational imaginativeness of striking originality. The mere cleverness and trickery that mar so many works of this kind have brought programmatic music into disrepute—Schuller makes the medium an honest one.

Arthur Cohn

HARPER'S MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 291,400

RCA
OCT 1966

TWENTIETH-CENTURY MODELS

Stravinsky and Leinsdorf interpret Stravinsky and Schuller . . . Five symphonies in nineteen years, from Henze . . . And "The Unanswered Question," from Ives.

Stravinsky and the dance: the subject is going to occupy considerable space in future musical histories. By now it is conceded that the two greatest composers of ballet music were Russians. But Tchaikovsky composed only three ballet scores (though many hold, with some justification, that all of Tchaikovsky's orchestral music is disguised ballet music; and Balanchine has demonstrated that fact in quite a few cases), whereas Stravinsky started off with ballet music and has been composing it throughout his career. Not only that. Having composed it, he has spent the last few years conducting it—not in the theater, but for phonograph records. By now Stravinsky has recorded virtually his entire oeuvre, and the latest important work to come out under his direction is Pulcinella, with the Columbia Symphony Orchestra, Irene Jordan (soprano), George Shirley (tenor), and Donald Gramm (bass) (Columbia ML 6281, mono; MS 6881, stereo).

About Stravinsky and the podium there can be mixed feelings. Critics and the public, awed by the composer's great fame, are apt to roll over and play dead when discussing his conducting. Almost never does he get a bad notice. Critics are careful to point out that as composer-conductor, Stravinsky presumably knows how he wants his music to go. Critics also delight in Stravinsky's completely nonsentimental approach to his music, to his strong rhythms and clarity of texture. At any rate, that is the consensus.

But professionals take a dimmer view. Very few will take the old man to task in public. The man is, after all, Igor Stravinsky; and he furthermore has a keen tongue and a vitriolic pen. But behind closed doors, this is what they say: Stravinsky as a conductor, especially in recent years. They say his rhythm is so "strong" because he doesn't have the stick technique to vary it; that his textures are so clear, to the point of bleakness, because he does not have the ear to blend the choirs, and so on. Ernest Ansermet is one of the few who have publicly written off Stravinsky the conductor.

Some of the dislike generated by Stravinsky's conducting may be a reflection of the man himself. He is universally admired, of course, but he is not a man who generates love. At the same time, the critics have a point. In many respects Stravinsky really is a one-dimensional conductor who lacks the craft—and, in recent years, the reflexes—to get his ideas across. The ultimate irony is that Stravinsky the conductor may well be responsible for an incorrect tradition in performing his music. Some of his tempos, for instance, are slower than they should be because he lacks the technique to pick them up. Yet future generations will approach the Stravinsky recordings with veneration.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,817
JUN 29 1966

Concert Music

Ansermet conducts the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande." The pieces are the overtures, "Roman Carnival," "Beatrice and Benedict," Le Corsaire," and "Benevenuto Cellini," plus four excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust" (London-6439.)

The originality of the contemporary composer, Gunther Schuller, became readily digestible when he coupled it with the originality of the painter, Paul Klee. A record of his "Seven Studies" of as many Klee pictures, by the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, has consistent impact from first note to last—if you've first read the composer's descriptions of the paintings and his musical intentions for them on the record jacket (RCA Victor-2879.)

The Pulcinella disc (the only available recording of the complete score) shows some of Stravinsky's strengths and weaknesses. The strengths are the bracing forthrightness and (here we go again) clarity of texture. The weakness is a certain clumsiness, in which rhythms lack flexibility and tempos seem overdeliberate. Pulcinella is an early (1920) ballet in which music by Pergolesi is "translated," as it were, by Stravinsky. It remains one of his prettiest, most charming and likable scores.

Much later came Agon, which was choreographed by Balanchine in 1957 and then recorded by the composer. Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have recently supplied a new version (RCA Victor LM 2879, mono; LSC 2879, stereo). Agon is a pivotal work that anticipated Stravinsky's entrance into serial technique. Not an easy score to take, it is not played much in concert (the same is true of all of Stravinsky's serial works). The score starts out simon-pure Stravinsky: neoclassic, with [illegible] come some sections using row technique, and these created a big flap ten years ago. In retrospect it can be seen that those sections are much more Stravinskyian than Schoenberg- or Webern-influenced.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 298,100

JUN 25 1966

RECORDINGS REPORT: Orchestral LPs

[illegible] Orchestra.
RCA Victor LM 2879, $4.79; stereo LSC 2879, $5.79.

[illegible] That is, does he hear it in a special way that deprives the ordinary, receptive listener of something he needs to understand it? In the case of Agon, it strikes me that Leinsdorf has put together a more intelligible sequence of sounds than Stravinsky did in his own recording for Columbia, placed the air spaces at points which define more clearly the dimensions of the surrounding sound. What this adds to, however, is understanding rather than affection. This second recording of Schuller's Klee Studies is an appreciable advance on its predecessor (by Dorati and the Minneapolis Symphony, no longer available), both in formulation and reproduction. Something a little more dynamic would be desirable in the jazz-oriented "Kleiner blauer Teufel," but on the whole Leinsdorf has realized sharply and well the values in Schuller's attractive likenesses of Klee's models. In addition to providing a commentary for his own pieces, Schuller has annotated Agon with some expressions of admiration which are, to borrow one of his own words, "awesome."

RECORDINGS

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100

AUG 1966

STRAVINSKY: Agon
Schuller: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LM 2879. LP. $4.79.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2879. SD. $5.79.

This is the second recording of the Schuller and the third for the Stravinsky. Both of these works were written in the late Fifties (Stravinsky, 1957; Schuller, 1959); both employ chromatic, twelve-tone devices and ideas in conjunction with other matter; and, taken together, they can be said to stand for the entry of such notions into the mainstream of musical life.

Agon actually shows the process of assimilation as part of its form. A "ballet for twelve dancers" written for Balanchine, the work begins with a lean but perfectly scannable diatonic, neoclassic pas de quatre which immediately afterwards splinters off into two sort-of-serial subsections. There then follow two pas de trois, each of which is divided into sections patterned on old French dances which become increasingly chromatic; these are surrounded by an interlude-refrain of a most simple, attractive diatonic character. Then follows a highly inflected twelve-tone pas de deux and a short series of duos and trios, twelve-tone pure and simple, which somehow perfectly dovetail right back into the opening diatonic music. Don't ask me how it's done; I couldn't tell you. It's an extraordinary sleight of hand by an old master magician. Not that Agon is any trick; it is a superb and thoroughly Stravinskyan creation, a marvelous commentary on our contemporary musical experience—transformed, utterly clarified, and made coherent and meaningful in the best Stravinsky manner.

The Schuller piece was a joint commission of the American Music Center, the Ford Foundation, and the Minneapolis Symphony (it was recorded by that orchestra not so many years ago but the record is now deleted). It is based on seven Klee paintings: Antique Harmonies (pile-up of fifths in ominous chromatic juxtapositions); Abstract Trio (wind trios in changing timbres); Little Blue Devil (you guessed it, colored in jazz "blue"); Twittering Machine (a mechanical, "post-Webern," ultraserial twitch and twitter); Arab Village (the only non-twelve-tone movement; a literal evocation of Arabic music with microtonal intervals, long flute and oboe drones and wails); An Eerie Moment (an unsettling murmur and explosion); and Pastorale or Rhythms (intertwined rhythmic lines with loping chromatic-rustic themes in and around). All of this is managed with great charm and wit as well as extraordinary amounts of ingenuity and skill (for example, Schuller shows the wind players in Arab Village just exactly how to produce the required microtonal effects and they are indeed perfect). The very literalness of the images enables almost any listener to associate perfectly; the Twittering Machine is surely the first piece of post-Webern serialism which invariably brings down the house. As an entity, the work doesn't quite hang together and its carefully managed appeal represents something close to the first popularly priced twelve-tone fare—and what's boiling in the pot is stew. But it's good, healthy, tasty, well-made stew. The food-recipe image is not altogether beside the point—this music is a little cooked-up. Still, if not gourmet, it is effective stuff from one of this country's most gifted younger composers.

The old Minneapolis recording was a little stronger on the exotic side; Leinsdorf tends to be strong and straightforward. Agon seems to me a little rushed in places; I would have liked a little more punctuation—separation of phrases and sections, extension of holds, shaping of the big phrases, and so forth. Also Leinsdorf omits two repeats that I do not feel are really optional; the loss hardly seems worth the minute or so saved in a twenty-minute piece. In other respects, however, this is an excellent job and it is a pleasure to get music as new and important as this in such capable hands. The high quality of the sound does justice to the wide range of timbres in this music. E.S.

The Miami Herald
MIAMI, FLA.
D. 369,982 SUN. 442,677

OCT 2 1966

Music and Records

Stravinsky: Agon; and Gunther Schuller: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee, Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony (RCA Victor).

The "Agon" score covers several of Stravinsky's periods, since he worked on it during several years when he was changing his style and working techniques rapidly. It progresses from tonality to serialism. We should think it would be most effective when seen with the choreography for which it was written, but of course it does more or less stand alone.

Igor Stravinsky

Gunther Schuller, who is identified in the public mind with Third Stream Music, though he didn't exactly invent it, uses the instruments as colors in such a score as the "Paul Klee."

He is painting with sound, and he does so in an interesting way. He has chosen the Klee pictures personally, and for some he has translated and for others invented parallels. The result is one of the very modern and sophisticated things being done in the arts today. The score is fragmented, and you must know the pictures to get the most out of the music. Schuller's Third Stream is supposed to stand mid-way between jazz and the classics.

AUDIO
MINEOLA, N. Y.
MONTHLY 26,100

AUG 1966

Stavinsky: Agon
Schuller: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee. Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf.
RCA Victor LSC 2879 stereo

Stravinsky's "Agon" is a nicely balanced work—just teetering on the edge of his "last period," having to do with his own individual brand of serial or twelve-tone technique, yet still clearly and easily related to the great corpus of middle works which are now so comfortable for our ever more modern ears. (Time does move on.)

As for Schuller, he is now the most energetic leader of our younger composer-conductors, a man who confidently, even impetuously, wades into any sort of music going, including "third stream" jazz. His ingeniously mechanized little sketches after Paul Klee's decorative pictures are miracles of instrumentation—small-scale yet intricate, ultra-sharp-edged. For many a listener they'll seem pretty cold and calculated—but that is no more than today's way of "talking", so to speak. The program aspect helps, for there is a direct relation between the Klee designs and the Schuller musical patterns. One of the Klees is beautifully reproduced on the album cover, by the way.

Good to have some solid contemporary like this from RCA and Boston. Columbia has had too much of a monopoly on such things, lately.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163,400

SEPT 1966

STRAVINSKY: [illegible] SCHULLER: Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf cond. RCA VICTOR LSC 2879 $5.79 LM 2879* $4.79.

Performance: Professional
Recording: Fully detailed
Stereo Quality: Appropriate

The subtitle of Stravinsky's Agon is "Ballet for Twelve Dancers," and listening to this extraordinary work, which fuses enlarged tonality with serial techniques, one has the feeling that the scoring is only for a dozen musicians. Despite a full array of instruments (triple woodwinds, four horns, four trumpets, three trombones, harp, mandolin, piano, percussion, and strings), not a single measure is for the full orchestra or anything approaching all instruments available. The scoring is wondrous, daring, spanking new—fifteen pieces with as many varieties of instrumentational design. The vertical, horizontal, and rhythmic aspects are just as fascinating, and a constant state of discovery rewards the attentive listener. It is proof that Stravinsky's twelve-tone approach is entirely his own, not someone else's. And his dodecaphonic music has heart as well as brain.

However, the joys of the score are not fully brought out in this recording. There is an almost impersonal quality in the performance, caused by a neutrality of accentual emphasis which strikes a middle-of-the-road balance. Further, the sudden pianos which dot the score are exceedingly flabby, though the volatile sforzati are not. Incomprehensibly, Leinsdorf eliminates most of the indicated repeats of sections, thereby nullifying the precisely measured formal balances.

Gunther Schuller's musical conceptions of Klee pictures (based on translations of their design, structure, color, or mood) are forceful, direct examples of superb program music. The system Schuller followed is often almost literal (Abstract Trio is practically only for trio combinations, for example), but sometimes involves psychological paraphrasing (Little Blue Devil turns into a jazz personality). The entire suite is marked by an orchestrational imaginativeness of striking originality. The mere cleverness and trickery that mar so many works of this kind have brought programmatic music into disrepute—Schuller makes the medium an honest one.

Arthur Cohn

HARPER'S MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 291,400

OCT 1966

TWENTIETH-CENTURY MODELS

Stravinsky and Leinsdorf interpret Stravinsky and Schuller . . . Five symphonies in nineteen years, from Henze . . . And "The Unanswered Question," from Ives.

Stravinsky and the dance: the subject is going to occupy considerable space in future musical histories. By now it is conceded that the two greatest composers of ballet music were Russians. But Tchaikovsky composed only three ballet scores (though many hold, with some justification, that all of Tchaikovsky's orchestral music is disguised ballet music; and Balanchine has demonstrated that fact in quite a few cases), whereas Stravinsky started off with ballet music and has been composing it throughout his career. Not only that. Having composed it, he has spent the last few years conducting it—not in the theater, but for phonograph records. By now Stravinsky has recorded virtually his entire oeuvre, and the latest important work to come out under his direction is Pulcinella, with the Columbia Symphony Orchestra, Irene Jordan (soprano), George Shirley (tenor), and Donald Gramm (bass) (Columbia ML 6281, mono; MS 6881, stereo).

About Stravinsky and the podium there can be mixed feelings. Critics and the public, awed by the composer's great fame, are apt to roll over and play dead when discussing his conducting. Almost never does he get a bad notice. Critics are careful to point out that as composer-conductor, Stravinsky presumably knows how he wants his music to go. Critics also delight in Stravinsky's completely nonsentimental approach to his music, to his strong rhythms and clarity of texture. At any rate, that is the consensus.

But professionals take a dimmer view. Very few will take the old man to task in public. The man is, after all, Igor Stravinsky; and he furthermore has a keen tongue and a vitriolic [illegible] Stravinsky, as a conductor, especially in recent years. They say his rhythm is so "strong" because he doesn't have the stick technique to vary it; that his textures are so clear, to the point of bleakness, because he does not have the ear to blend the choirs, and so on. Ernest Ansermet is one of the few who have publicly written off Stravinsky the conductor.

Some of the dislike generated by Stravinsky's conducting may be a reflection of the man himself. He is universally admired, of course, but he is not a man who generates love. At the same time, the critics have a point. In many respects Stravinsky really is a one-dimensional conductor who lacks the craft—and, in recent years, the reflexes—to get his ideas across. The ultimate irony is that Stravinsky the conductor may well be responsible for an incorrect tradition in performing his music. Some of his tempos, for instance, are slower than they should be because he lacks the technique to pick them up. Yet future generations will approach the Stravinsky recordings with veneration.

The Pulcinella disc (the only available recording of the complete score) shows some of Stravinsky's strengths and weaknesses. The strengths are the bracing forthrightness and (here we go again) clarity of texture. The weakness is a certain clumsiness, in which rhythms lack flexibility and tempos seem overdeliberate. Pulcinella is an early (1920) ballet in which music by Pergolesi is "translated," as it were, by Stravinsky. It remains one of his prettiest, most charming and likable scores.

Much later came Agon, which was choreographed by Balanchine in 1957 and then recorded by the composer. Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra have recently supplied a new version (RCA Victor LM 2879, mono; LSC 2879, stereo). Agon is a pivotal work that anticipated Stravinsky's entrance into serial technique. Not an easy score to take, it is not played much in concert (the same is true of all of Stravinsky's serial works). The score starts out simon-pure Stravinsky: neoclassic, with [illegible] come some sections using row technique, and these created a big flap ten years ago. In retrospect it can be seen that those sections are much more Stravinskyian than Schoenberg- or Webern-influenced.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,817
JUN 2 9 1966

Concert Music

The record [illegible] by Ernest Ansermet conducting the "L'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande." The pieces are the overtures, "Roman Carnival," "Beatrice and Benedict," Le Corsaire," and "Benevenuto Cellini," plus four excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust" (London-6439.)

The originality of the contemporary composer, Gunther Schuller, became readily digestible when he coupled it with the originality of the painter, Paul Klee. A record of his "Seven Studies" of as many Klee pictures, by the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, has consistent impact from first note to last—if you've first read the composer's descirptions of the paintings and his musical intentions for them on the record jacket (RCA Victor-2879.)

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 298,100

JUN 2 5 1966

RECORDINGS REPORTS: Orchestral LPs

[illegible] Symphony Orchestra
RCA Victor LM 2879, $4.79; stereo LSC 2879, $5.79.

[illegible] Stravinsky's recording really [illegible] has written, especially if it marks a digression from his prior style. That is, does he hear it in a special way that deprives the ordinary, receptive listener of something he needs to understand it? In the case of Agon, it strikes me that Leinsdorf has put together a more intelligible sequence of sounds than Stravinsky did in his own recording for Columbia, placed the air spaces at points which define more clearly the dimensions of the surrounding sound. What this adds to, however, is understanding rather than affection. This second recording of Schuller's Klee Studies is an appreciable advance on its predecessor (by Dorati and the Minneapolis Symphony, no longer available), both in formulation and reproduction. Something a little more dynamic would be desirable in the jazz-oriented "Kleiner blauer Teufel," but on the whole Leinsdorf has realized sharply and well the values in Schuller's attractive likenesses of Klee's models. In addition to providing a commentary for his own pieces, Schuller has annotated Agon with some expressions of admiration which are, to borrow one of his own words, "awesome."

143

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

[redacted]

Igor Stravinsky's "Agon" and Gunther Schuller's "7 Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" make up an interesting album of contemporary music that has some points of special interest to Rochester. Stravinsky's recent visit to Rochester whetted appetite for more of his later works, representing his mature style in using harmonic and rhythmic devices. "Agon," written when he was 75 as a ballet for a small [redacted] is one of his [redacted] its instrumental [redacted] though written for the New York City Ballet, the music stands by itself as typical Stravinsky.

The Schuller work was played in Rochester a number of years ago under the Ford Foundation commissioning project in which the Rochester Philharmonic was involved. The Rochester orchestra was one of 10 that agreed to select a composer to write a work for orchestra, agreeing not only to play the work at a regular concert but to play the works of at least three of the other orchestras.

Schuller, a native of New York, wrote his "7 Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" for the Minneapolis Orchestra. The studies are based on pictures by Klee, a violinist as well as a painter. While the musical language is strictly modern, sometimes jarring to older ears, it offers much of interest to the listener willing to follow it closely. The performances are by the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. (Victor Dynagroove.) NE

INSTRUMENTALIST
EAVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 15,000

OCT 1966

NEW RECORDINGS

Stravinsky, Agon; Schuller, 7 Studies on Themes of Paul Klee; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erch Leinsdorf, conductor; RCA Victor LSC-2879.

Among contemporary compositions Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" has attained the status of appearing with some frequency on synphony programs. The themes, of course, are not musical ones, but visual, and the music, therefore, is a kind of abstract program music, evocative of eerie moods. It is readily accessible, even by people who think they do not like modern music. "Agon," the Stravinsky piece on the flip side of this disc, has also received considerable exposure through its frequent performance by the New York City Ballet. There is only one recording of each in the catalog, however, and this pairing of the two on one disc, in a superb performance by the Boston Symphony, is a gem. Highly recommended on all counts, including the recorded sound.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737
JUN 12 1966

Records Reviewed

Composer Predominates Recording on 'Paul Klee'

[redacted] RUTH TRIPE

GUNTHER SCHULLER predominates on a recent RCA recording (LM-2879). To be sure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays the music and Erich Leinsdorf conducts, but Schuller has written the interesting program notes and it is his own work, "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," which occupies one side of the recording. Stravinsky's "Agon" is on the reverse side.

Schuller, who has played French horn with the Ballet Theater, the Cincinnati Symphony, and the Metropolitan Opera orchestra, is a self-taught composer. He has been associated with the Modern Jazz Quartet, the Third Stream movement and has also been an Associate Professor of Music at Yale University. He is head of the composition and contemporary music at Tanglewood. A year ago, he gave an interesting illustrated lecture in Sayles Hall at Brown University.

The Detroit Free Press
D. 509,410 SUN. 555,779
OCT 16 1966

COLLINS GEORGE ON RECORDS

Paul Klee, Put to Music

BY COLLINS GEORGE
Free Press Music Writer

One of the plus marks about bringing Sixten Ehrling in as conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra was his propensity for balancing the overfamilliar items on the programs with contemporary items, generally not known at all.

(Some of the older contributors who want only the old recognizable repertory must have complained, as there doesn't seem to be half as many contemporary things on this year's programs.)

At any rate, one of his great successes in the contemporary field last year was Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee."

Klee is a bitterly satiric, sometimes abstract painter whose work Schuller found of decisive interest. Schuller, a young composer of today, is best known for his efforts toward a "third stream" of music in which the best elements of jazz and serious music are fused.

His "Klee Studies" are almost too literal attempts to describe the painter's pictures in music.

SIXTEN EHRLING: "One of his great successes last year was Gunther Schuller's 'Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee.'"

Thus his transcription of the abstract "Blue Devil" is into a kind of bluesy jazz, the superbly funny "Twittering Machine" into a scurrying exercise in dodecaphony which is hilarious, and the "Arab Village" becomes plain old hootchy-kootchy music.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf gives the work an outstanding performance as they also do of Stravinsky's 12-tone ballet, "Agon," on the reverse side. (Victor—2879)

NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 28,500
NOV 21 1966

STRAVINSKY: Pulcinella. Irene Jordan, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Donald Gramm, bass; Columbia Symphony Orchestra; Igor Stravinsky, cond. Columbia ML 6281/MS 6881.

Le Baiser de la fée. Columbia Symphony Orchestra; Igor Stravinsky, cond. Columbia ML 6203/MS 6803.

Perséphone. Vera Zorina, speaker; Michele Molese, tenor; Ithaca College Concert Choir; Texas Boys' Choir; Gregg Smith Singers; Igor Stravinsky, cond. Columbia ML 6319/MS 6919.

Agon. (with Gunther Schuller): Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee. Boston Symphony Orchestra; Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor LM/LSC 2879.

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
D. 133,303
AUG 14 1966

[redacted] dies on [redacted] make up a coupling [redacted] might well have been chosen by Serge Koussevitzky for recording purposes had he had the opportunity. In any case, his successor, Erich Leinsdorf has elected to add the two works, both employing twelve-tone devices, to his recorded repertoire with the Boston Symphony. The performances are devoid of any excesses, being straightforward and direct, with the famous orchestra in top form (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2879, also mono)

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
JUN 11 1966

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

STRAVINSKY: AGON SCHULLER: 7 STUDIES OF THEMES OF PAUL KLEE

Boston Symphony Orch. (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 2879 (M); LSC 2879 (S)

RCA puts together interesting, fascinating works on separate sides by two contemporary composers—indeed a rare coupling. "Agon" has enjoyed previous recordings, but Leinsdorf's treatment is rich and delicate. The Schuller work, full of shadings and patterns, represents a Leinsdorf reading at its best.

143

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ROCHESTER DEM. CHRONICLE
Sunday, June 12, 1966

Igor Stravinsky's "Agon" and Gunther Schuller's "7 Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" make up an interesting album of contemporary music that has some points of special interest to Rochester. Stravinsky's recent visit to Rochester whetted appetite for more of his later works, representing his mature style in using harmonic and rhythmic devices. "Agon," written when he was 75 as a ballet for a small group, is one of his more [illegible] tonalities and fascinating [illegible] its instrumental [illegible] though written for the New York City Ballet, the music stands by itself as typical Stravinsky.

The Schuller work was played in Rochester a number of years ago under the Ford Foundation commissioning project in which the Rochester Philharmonic was involved. The Rochester orchestra was one of 10 that agreed to select a composer to write a work for orchestra, agreeing not only to play the work at a regular concert but to play the works of at least three of the other orchestras.

Schuller, a native of New York, wrote his "7 Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" for the Minneapolis Orchestra. The studies are based on pictures by Klee, a violinist as well as a painter. While the musical language is strictly modern, sometimes jarring to older ears, it offers much of interest to the listener willing to follow it closely. The performances are by the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting. (Victor Dynagroove.) NE

INSTRUMENTALIST
EAVANSTON, ILL.
MONTHLY 15,000

OCT 1966

NEW RECORDINGS

Stravinsky, Agon; Schuller, 7 Studies on Themes of Paul Klee; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erch Leinsdorf, conductor; RCA Victor LSC-2879.

Among contemporary compositions Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee" has attained the status of appearing with some frequency on synphony programs. The themes, of course, are not musical ones, but visual, and the music, therefore, is a kind of abstract program music, evocative of eerie moods. It is readily accessible, even by people who think they do not like modern music. "Agon," the Stravinsky piece on the flip side of this disc, has also received considerable exposure through its frequent performance by the New York City Ballet. There is only one recording of each in the catalog, however, and this pairing of the two on one disc, in a superb performance by the Boston Symphony, is a gem. Highly recommended on all counts, including the recorded sound.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 197,737

JUN 12 1966

Records Reviewed

Composer Predominates Recording on 'Paul Klee'

By RUTH TRIPP

GUNTHER SCHULLER predominates on a recent RCA recording (LM-2879). To be sure, the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays the music, and Erich Leinsdorf conducts, but Schuller has written the interesting program notes and it is his own work, "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee," which occupies one side of the recording. Stravinsky's "Agon" is on the reverse side.

Schuller, who has played French horn with the Ballet Theater, the Cincinnati Symphony and the Metropolitan Opera orchestra, is a self-taught composer. He has been associated with the Modern Jazz Quartet, the Third Stream movement and has also been an Associate Professor of Music at Yale University. He is head of the composition and contemporary music at Tanglewood. A year ago, he gave an interesting illustrated lecture in Sayles Hall at Brown University.

The Detroit Free Press
D. 509,410 SUN. 555,779

OCT 16 1966

COLLINS GEORGE ON RECORDS

Paul Klee, Put to Music

BY COLLINS GEORGE
Free Press Music Writer

One of the plus marks about bringing Sixten Ehrling in as conductor of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra was his propensity for balancing the overfamiliar items on the programs with contemporary items, generally not known at all.

(Some of the older contributors who want only the old recognizable repertory must have complained, as there doesn't seem to be half as many contemporary things on this year's programs.)

At any rate, one of his great successes in the contemporary field last year was Gunther Schuller's "Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee."

Klee is a bitterly satiric, sometimes abstract painter whose work Schuller found of decisive interest. Schuller, a young composer of today, is best known for his efforts toward a "third stream" of music in which the best elements of jazz and serious music are fused.

His "Klee Studies" are almost too literal attempts to describe the painter's pictures in music.

SIXTEN EHRLING: "One of his great successes last year was Gunther Schuller's 'Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee.'"

Thus his transcription of the abstract "Blue Devil" is into a kind of bluesy jazz, the superbly funny "Twittering Machine" into a scurrying exercise in dodecaphony which is hilarious, and the "Arab Village" becomes plain old hootchy-kootchy music.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf gives the work an outstanding performance as they also do of Stravinsky's 12-tone ballet, "Agon," on the reverse side. (Victor—2879)

NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 28,500

NOV 21 1966

1 5454

STRAVINSKY: Pulcinella. Irene Jordan, soprano; George Shirley, tenor; Donald Gramm, bass; Columbia Symphony Orchestra; Igor Stravinsky, cond. Columbia ML 6281/MS 6881.

Le Baiser de la fée. Columbia Symphony Orchestra; Igor Stravinsky, cond. Columbia ML 6203/MS 6803.

Perséphone. Vera Zorina, speaker; Michele Molese, tenor; Ithaca College Concert Choir; Texas Boys' Choir; Gregg Smith Singers; Igor Stravinsky, cond. Columbia ML 6319/MS 6919.

Agon. (with Gunther Schuller): Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee. Boston Symphony Orchestra; Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor LM/LSC 2879.

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
D. 133,303
AUG 14 1966

[illegible] and Gunther Schuller's Seven Studies on Themes of Paul Klee make up a coupling which might well have been chosen by Serge Koussevitzky for recording purposes had he had the opportunity. In any case, his successor, Erich Leinsdorf has elected to add the two works, both employing twelve-tone devices, to his recorded repertoire with the Boston Symphony. The performances are devoid of any excesses, being straightforward and direct, with the famous orchestra in top form (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2879, also mono)

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

JUN 11 1966

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

STRAVINSKY: AGON SCHULLER: 7 STUDIES OF THEMES OF PAUL KLEE

Boston Symphony Orch. (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 2879 (M); LSC 2879 (S)

RCA puts together interesting, fascinating works on separate sides by two contemporary composers—indeed a rare coupling. "Agon" has enjoyed previous recordings, but Leinsdorf's treatment is rich and delicate. The Schuller work, full of shadings and patterns, represents a Leinsdorf reading at its best.

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, ILL.
STAR
TW. 19,000
OCT 20 1966

Music In The Groove

[redacted]

"Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra" (VCM-6174) is a memorial album of three 12-inch discs for the price of two to commemorate the great conductorial skill of the man who made the Boston orchestra one of the world's, in my opinion three finest orchestras. He premiered more new music than perhaps any other conductor of our generation and his catholicity of taste led him to give his audiences an unbiased and generous appreciation of every kind of musical idiom.

The album includes his heroic readings of the Brahms Fourth symphony and Tschaikowsky Fifth, the enchanting Rachmaninoff's "Vocalise," the Shostakovich Ninth symphony (recorded in 1945) Rimsky-Korsakoff's "The Battle of Kershenetz," Arthur Foote's lovely Suite for Strings in E, Howard Hanson's "Serenade for Flute, Harp and String Orchestra" (written in 1945 as a gift to Hanson's bride) and never before recorded, and the ebullient "Academic Festival" overture by Brahms.

Rejssued from 78's, this lp album is admirably modern in [illegible] and will give you proof [illegible] even more of a treasu[illegible]

For "pops" fans, Victor has "All The Things You Are" by Arthur Fiedler with the sparkling Boston "Pops" orchestra. The album has such favorites as "Misty," "Sweet and Lovely," "A Pretty Girl Is Like a Melody," "Deep in My Heart, Dear," "The Song Is You," and "Mame" given full symphonic treatment. Here's romantic background music to relax to.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

MOUNT KISCO TRADER
Sunday, January 29, 1967

047

the listening booth

Koussevitsky's Style

By ALICE HUNT SOKOLOFF

Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony. [illegible] e loved them and what memories are brought back by sharing again those warm, wonderful performances.

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY: The Boston Symphony Orchestra: Treasury of Immortal Performances. RCA Victor VCM 6174, mono only.

I don't think anyone ever thought that Koussevitsky was the greatest conductor in the world, far from it, nor did he have the broadest range of musical tastes. What he did have was a personal involvement with everything he did that simply overwhelmed the musicians and the audience alike. There was never anything halfway about Koussevitsky. What he liked, he adored, and what he hated- well better left unsaid. When his interest turned to a new composer he was ready almost literally to force the music down his audineces' throats if that were necessary. But his enthusiasm, his all-encompassing excitement about new work made everyone around him catch fire too so that the rather staid, conservative Boston audience became willy-nilly the proving ground for many a young composer. And they ate it up. Koussevitsky with his warmth, with his charm, had a wonderful way of getting everybody into the game and excited about things. Even about the umptieth performance of a Tchaikovsky symphony.

We hear a great deal today about non-involvement, about playing it cool. Koussevitsky could never have fit into that concept. He was involved, passionately involved and that is what comes through in his conducting. There is something simple, naive, almost childlike in his approach to music, something straight from the heart with no filtering down through analytical processes. His reaction to music was through his feelings and not his intellect. He loved it and he had the gift of communicating this love with extraordinary totality.

The performances of this RCA Victor three-record album were recorded between the years 1938-1947. From the point of view of sound they are obviously, not up to the latest stereo techniques. But as far as I am concerned, that does not matter at all, for what comes through is the real McCoy, the grand old man with all his faults and virtues, wonderfully true and real.

It is a good selection that has been made for this album. When Koussevitsky recorded Brahms' Fourth Symphony he had already performed it during 10 seasons with the Boston Symphony. Yet it took a full year before he gave final approval to the recording. Brahms' Academic Festival Overture was recorded nearly 10 years later, after Koussevitsky had received several honorary degrees and was well up on academic festivals. Tchaikovsky, of course, was a speciality of Russian-born Koussevitsky. Here we have the 5th Symphony in a completely personal performance. The other Russian composers represented are Rachmaninoff in an orchestral transcription of his tender and exquisite Vocalise; Rimsky-Korsakov with his vivid Battle of Kershenetz from the Legend of the Invisible City of Kitezh; and, finally, the witty, sharp, sardonic 9th Symphony of Shostakovich which Koussevitsky does with tremendous flair. It is a brilliant performance. Two American compositions, Howard Hanson's Serenade for Flute, Harp and String Orchetsra and Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings complete the album.

This is an album that brings back one of the rich, glowing, individual conductors to the nostalgia of those of us who heard and knew him and for the edification and interest of those who did not.

The Denver Post
The Voice of the Rocky Mountain Empire
D. 252,084 SUN. 339,533
MAY 14 1967

[redacted]

"Spectaculars" by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, is bright, loud music (much of it from ballet) that can hold up against noise. The number is 18-11-0016. The Arthur Fiedler "Tales From Vienna" set with the Boston Pops, Victor R8S 1076, is much the same, although some quiet passages tend to lose out to road rumble.

Sonic competition is nearly fatal to Erich Leinsdorf's set of excerpts from Richard Strauss' "Salome" and "The Egyptian Helen" in which Leontyne Price is soloist with the Boston Symphony. It's a Victor Cartridge R8S 1042, and it sounds a lot better indoors.

So does the Arthur Fiedler-Carl Weinrich album of Mozart sonatas for pipe organ and orchestra, Victor R8S 5037, but here you can turn up the volume and the texture of the music does not suffer so seriously as a result.

BERNSTEIN directs Smetana's "The Moldau" and a group of other Czech works on a Columbia tape, 18-11-0032 The performances are lively, and the sound is full and bright with even the quieter passages sufficiently robust to be heard against engine noises.

In the area of jazz and pops there are any number of attractive albums.

"More Music From Million Dollar Movies" by Arthur Fielder and the Boston Pops turns out to be fun, just the right sort of music to play while driving through Gary, Indiana. It's Victor R8S 1023, and the repertory includes "Moon River," "Get Me to the Church on Time" and 'Days of Wine and Roses."

"Everything's Cole Porter" is a Victor anthology, P8S 5049, of variable quality with good bands and the best popular material there is. You can sit out the dull bands gracefully.

SIGHT AND SOUND MARKETING
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. N. AVAIL.
OCT 1966

BRITTEN: Matinees Musicales. MENDELSSOHN: Piano Concerto No. 1. COLE PORTER: Selections. Susan Starr, piano (Mendelssohn); Fiedler, Boston Pops Orch. RCA Victor LSC 2882 (S), LM 2882 (M).

Susan Starr's fresh, youthfully ebullient swing through the Mendelssohn is the top item here. And the recording is several years newer than that of Rudolf Serkin, her sole competition, however formidable. Fiedler and his forces toss off the Britten bonbons in the best Pops tradition, likewise the attractive suite of Cole Porter numbers. The sound glows everywhere.

Rocky Mountain News
DENVER, COLO.
D. 191,124 SUN. 202,000
AUG 13 1966

IN A NEW RCA Victor release, THE ARTHUR FIEDLER SINFONIETTA, the once-famous musical ensemble is re-introduced in a beautifully booming 2-disc release of Mozart's Sonatas for Organ and Orchestra and Haydn's Organ Concerto in C.

Conductor Fiedler features the artistry of Organist Carl Weinrich in the 17 sonatas composed by Mozart between 1767 when he was 11, and 1780 when he was 24.

The sonatas were recorded in the Chapel of The General Theological Seminary in the Chelsea section near Times Square. The building is entirely without acoustic treatment and has the reverberation desirable for the fine organ tone presented in the album.

THE MORNING CALL
PATERSON, N. J.
D. 20,932
AUG 20 1966

The Record
HACKENSACK, N. J.
D. 137,868
AUG 20 1966

THE CLASSICS

Some Rare Organ Music

By Mark A. Stuart

"MOZART: Sonatas for Organ and Orchestra" and "Haydn: Concerto in C for Organ and Orchestra" (RCA Victor)—Somehow neither Arthur Fiedler nor Mozart are associated with organ music. Think of Mozart and it's the beautiful, fullblown orchestral works which come to mind. Think of Fiedler and it's the Pops orchestra.

Yet Mozart was so attuned to the organ that at the age of 7, his father relates, he was already exposing his genius on the king of instruments.

A wheel of the carriage in which the elder Mozart and young Wolfgang were riding broke one day outside the city of Wasserburg. In order to amuse themselves while waiting for its repair, the father and son went into the church to look at the organ. The father relates how young Wolfgang, once shown how the pedals worked, immediately began preluding away as if he had practiced for months.

"What had caused others months of practice," marveled the father, "comes to him as a gift of God."

His playing, records one old pupil of Bach, moved many to declare that the old master himself had been restored to life.

As for Fiedler, few realize that the king of Pops organized his own Sinfonietta a year before he first conducted the Boston Pops. His identification with Pops has obscured the fact that this is an accomplished conductor whose work with Mozart in particular and the Sinfonietta in general deserves greater attention from the musical public.

Now we have the joining of these talents with a third, that of Carl Weinrich, one of the nation's foremost organists. Weinrich, born in Paterson, is director of music in the chapel at Princeton. With Fiedler on the podium and Mozart on the music stand, this trio has produced the sound of organ music rarely heard.

Mozart's complete repertoire of organ music is reproduced together with Haydn's concerto in C. The whole thing was recorded at the General Theological Seminary in New York.

Mozart's pieces were the result of his having to provide short organ works to be played by members of the court of the Count of Colloredo as interludes between the Epistle and the Gospel in the mass. Most are brief, unpretentious, and eminently listenable. There are 17 of them and the pity is there were no more.

The Evening Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 672,235
AUG 10 1966

Today's Album

The "Pops" Goes Country, Arthur Fiedler, Chet Atkins (Victor). Arthur Fiedler continuing his series of visits with guest soloists (Peter Nero and Al Hirt among the more recent) takes leave of Boston's austere Beacon St. to visit Nashville. There, virtuoso Chet Atkins sits in for one of the best and rousingest bits of music fun we have heard in a decade. Chet's proficiency on the guitar is such that it obviously earned a sympatico understanding from Maestro Fiedler and his "Pops" Orchestra. The result is electrifying great listening.

Paterson Evening News
NORTHERN JERSEY'S INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER
D. 57,780 SUN. 55,704
AUG 11 1966

A cheerful program comprising Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto No. 1, Britten's "Matinees Musicales" and Cole Porter compositions makes for fine summer listening in "More Highlights From an Evening at the Pops" by the Boston Pops led by Arthur Fiedler (RCA Victor stereo).

The necessary verve and bubbly taste of the sexy, sensuous music which makes up Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne," that delightful light - hearted swirling can-can music is given a properly rousing reading by the New Philharmonia Orchestra under Charles Munch's deft direction in fine Phase 4 (London stereo).

DeFalla's "Ritual Fire Dance" serves as the title for the album of 10 popular classical dance selections in excellent performances of works by Rossini Ponchiellie, Brahms, Smetana, Tchaikovsky and Weinberger by the virtuosic Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy (Columbia stereo).

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL
MILWAUKEE, WISC.
D. 364,362 SUN. 551,968
OCT 30 1966

Classical Records

Koussevitzky Lives Again

By GERALD KLOSS, of The Journal Staff

IN A REMINISCENCE of Serge Koussevitzky included with a three record Victor album of his recordings as conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra (VCM-6174), composer Lukas Foss writes of Koussevitzky's impassioned rehearsal manner, as recalled in the memorable phrases he used to spur the orchestra to new musical heights.

"How can you play so cold when the sun is shining?" he would beseech the players. And, "I make a geste like I want to kill, gentlemen, and you give me something nothing!" And, "Bassi, you hold the most beautiful instrument and all you do is scratch!"

He would cajole, scold and finally threaten. With blood rushing to his face, Koussevitzky would roar, "If you do not give me the sound, I will resign!" Still redder after this threat failed to get results, he would utter the final word: "I will not resign—you will resign!" The "you" was accompanied by a gesture covering all 105 players in the orchestra.

Thus the man, and thus the music he brought forth from the magnificent orchestra—impulsive, emotional, less concerned with crisp precision than in striving for inner meanings and "soul." He rode the old war horses of 19th century symphonic music as if they were untamed mustangs, and the intensity he brought to such familiar fare as the Tchaikovsky fifth and the Brahms fourth symphonies made them sound as if they were fresh from the composer's pen.

The present album contains those two symphonies, as well as the Brahms "Academic Festival Overture," Rachmaninoff's "Vocalise," Rimsky-Korsakov's "The Battle of Kershenetz" and three works from 20th century composers — the Shostakovich ninth symphony, Howard Hanson's serenade for flute, harp and string orchestra and Arthur Foote's suite for strings.

Koussevitzky did not conduct in the high fidelity recording era—he died in 1951, and these performances were given in the late 1930's and the 1940's. Nevertheless, the sound quality is round and ample, and there is no mistaking the Koussevitzky zeal, both in the older, romantic works and those of this century.

Koussevitzky

The San Diego Union
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
D. 118,192 SUN. 219,776
AUG 12 1966

POINT OF VIEW

Bob Crane, substituting for Arthur Godfrey, who is in Viet Nam for a month, is doing a sprightly turn running the store, recalling his old KNX radio days. Mitch Miller was aboard the other morning and after Johnny Parker's band romped through a tune, Mitch surveyed the musicians. "I know why they play so well," Mitch said. "So many of them have beards" . . .

And on KSON, Arthur Fiedler talked about his new Boston Pops orchestra recording with Chet Atkins — his first venture into country and western music — and told Boots Rabell: "I couldn't fight 'em. So I joined 'em" . . .

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, ILL.
STAR
TW. 19,000
OCT 20 1966

Music In The Groove

By PAUL H. LISTER

"Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra" (VCM-6174) is a memorial album of three 12-inch discs for the price of two to commemorate the great conductorial skill of the man who made the Boston orchestra one of the world's, in my opinion three finest orchestras. He premiered more new music than perhaps any other conductor of our generation and his catholicity of taste led him to give his audiences an unbiased and generous appreciation of every kind of musical idiom.

The album includes his heroic readings of the Brahms Fourth symphony and Tschaikowsky Fifth, the enchanting Rachmaninoff's "Vocalise," the Shostakovich Ninth symphony (recorded in 1945) Rimsky-Korsakoff's "The Battle of Kershenetz," Arthur Foote's lovely Suite for Strings in E, Howard Hanson's "Serenade for Flute, Harp and String Orchestra" (written in 1945 as a gift to Hanson's bride) and never before recorded, and the ebullient "Academic Festival" overture by Brahms.

Rejssued from 78's, this lp album is admirably modern in sonics, and will give you proof [illegible] orches-[illegible] critics. [illegible] even more of a treasure.

For "pops" fans, Victor has "All The Things You Are" by Arthur Fiedler with the sparkling Boston "Pops" orchestra. The album has such favorites as "Misty," "Sweet and Lovely," "A Pretty Girl Is Like a Melody," "Deep in My Heart, Dear," "The Song Is You," and "Mame" given full symphonic treatment. Here's romantic background music to relax to.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

MOUNT KISCO TRADER
Sunday, January 29, 1967

the listening booth

Koussevitsky's Style

By ALICE HUNT SOKOLOFF

Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony. [illegible] loved them and what memories are brought back by sharing again those warm, wonderful, performances.

SERGE KOUSSEVITSKY: The Boston Symphony Orchestra: Treasury of Immortal Performances. RCA Victor VCM 6174, mono only.

I don't think anyone ever thought that Koussevitsky was the greatest conductor in the world, far from it, nor did he have the broadest range of musical tastes. What he did have was a personal involvement with everything he did that simply overwhelmed the musicians and the audience alike. There was never anything halfway about Koussevitsky. What he liked, he adored, and what he hated- well better left unsaid. When his interest turned to a new composer he was ready almost literally to force the music down his audineces' throats if that were necessary. But his enthusiasm, his all-encompassing excitement about new work made everyone around him catch fire too so that the rather staid, conservative Boston audience became willy-nilly the proving ground for many a young composer. And they ate it up. Koussevitsky with his warmth, with his charm, had a wonderful way of getting everybody into the game and excited about things. Even about the umptieth performance of a Tchaikovsky symphony.

We hear a great deal today about non-involvement, about playing it cool. Koussevitsky could never have fit into that concept. He was involved, passionately involved and that is what comes through in his conducting. There is something simple, naive, almost childlike in his approach to music, some thing straight from the heart with no filtering down through analytical processes. His reaction to music was through his feelings and not his intellect. He loved it and he had the gift of communicating this love with extraordinary totality.

The performances of this RCA Victor three-record album were recorded between the years 1938-1947. From the point of view of sound they are obviously, not up to the latest stereo techniques. But as far as I am concerned, that does not matter at all, for what comes through is the real McCoy, the grand old man with all his faults and virtues, wonderfully true and real.

It is a good selection that has been made for this album. When Koussevitsky recorded Brahms' Fourth Symphony he had already performed it during 10 seasons with the Boston Symphony. Yet it took a full year before he gave final approval to the recording. Brahms' Academic Festival Overture was recorded nearly 10 years later, after Koussevitsky had received several honorary degrees and was well up on academic festivals. Tchaikovsky, of course, was a speciality of Russian-born Koussevitsky. Here we have the 5th Symphony in a completely personal performance. The other Russian composers represented are Rachmaninoff in an orchestral transcription of his tender and exquisite Vocalise; Rimsky-Korsakov with his vivid Battle of Kershenetz from the Legend of the Invisible City of Kitezh; and, finally, the witty, sharp, sardonic 9th Symphony of Shostakovich which Koussevitsky does with tremendous flair. It is a brilliant performance. Two American compositions, Howard Hanson's Serenade for Flute, Harp and String Orchestra and Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings complete the album.

This is an album that brings back one of the rich, glowing, individual conductors to the nostalgia of those of us who heard and knew him and for the edification and interest of those who did not.

The Denver Post
The Voice of the Rocky Mountain Empire
D. 252,084 SUN. 339,533
MAY 14 1967

ANOTHER Columbia tape "Spectaculars" by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, is bright, loud music (much of it from ballet) that can hold up against noise. The number is 18-11-0016. The Arthur Fiedler "Tales From Vienna" set with the Boston Pops, Victor R8S 1076, is much the same, although some quiet passages tend to lose out to road rumble.

Sonic competition is nearly fatal to Erich Leinsdorf's set of excerpts from Richard Strauss' "Salome" and "The Egyptian Helen" in which Leontyne Price is soloist with the Boston Symphony. It's a Victor Cartridge R8S 1042, and it sounds a lot better indoors.

So does the Arthur Fiedler-Carl Weinrich album of Mozart sonatas for pipe organ and orchestra, Victor R8S 5037, but here you can turn up the volume and the texture of the music does not suffer so seriously as a result.

BERNSTEIN directs Smetana's "The Moldau" and a group of other Czech works on a Columbia tape, 18-11-0032 The performances are lively, and the sound is full and bright with even the quieter passages sufficiently robust to be heard against engine noises.

In the area of jazz and pops there are any number of attractive albums.

"More Music From Million Dollar Movies" by Arthur Fielder and the Boston Pops turns out to be fun, just the right sort of music to play while driving through Gary, Indiana. It's Victor R8S 1023, and the repertory includes "Moon River," "Get Me to the Church on Time" and 'Days of Wine and Roses."

"Everything's Cole Porter" is a Victor anthology, P8S 5049, of variable quality with good bands and the best popular material there is. You can sit out the dull bands gracefully.

SIGHT AND SOUND MARKETING
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. N. AVAIL.
OCT 1966

BRITTEN: Matinees Musicales. MENDELSSOHN: Piano Concerto No. 1. COLE PORTER: Selections. Susan Starr, piano (Mendelssohn); Fiedler, Boston Pops Orch. RCA Victor LSC 2882 (S), LM 2882 (M).

Susan Starr's fresh, youthfully ebullient swing through the Mendelssohn is the top item here. And the recording is several years newer than that of Rudolf Serkin, her sole competition, however formidable. Fiedler and his forces toss off the Britten bonbons in the best Pops tradition, likewise the attractive suite of Cole Porter numbers. The sound glows everywhere.

Rocky Mountain News
DENVER, COLO.
D. 191,124 SUN. 202,000
AUG 13 1966

IN A NEW RCA Victor release, THE ARTHUR FIEDLER SINFONIETTA, the once-famous musical ensemble is re-introduced in a beautifully booming 2-disc release of Mozart's Sonatas for Organ and Orchestra and Haydn's Organ Concerto in C.

Conductor Fiedler features the artistry of Organist Carl Weinrich in the 17 sonatas composed by Mozart between 1767 when he was 11, and 1780 when he was 24.

The sonatas were recorded in the Chapel of The General Theological Seminary in the Chelsea section near Times Square. The building is entirely without acoustic treatment and has the reverberation desirable for the fine organ tone presented in the album.

THE MORNING CALL
PATERSON, N. J.
D. 20,932
AUG 20 1966

The Record
HACKENSACK, N. J.
D. 137,868
AUG 20 1966

THE CLASSICS

Some Rare Organ Music

By Mark A. Stuart

"MOZART: Sonatas for Organ and Orchestra" and "Haydn: Concerto in C for Organ and Orchestra" (RCA Victor)—Somehow neither Arthur Fiedler nor Mozart are associated with organ music. Think of Mozart and it's the beautiful, fullblown orchestral works which come to mind. Think of Fiedler and it's the Pops orchestra.

Yet Mozart was so attuned to the organ that at the age of 7, his father relates, he was already exposing his genius on the king of instruments.

A wheel of the carriage in which the elder Mozart and young Wolfgang were riding broke one day outside the city of Wasserburg. In order to amuse themselves while waiting for its repair, the father and son went into the church to look at the organ. The father relates how young Wolfgang, once shown how the pedals worked, immediately began preluding away as if he had practiced for months.

"What had caused others months of practice," marveled the father, "comes to him as a gift of God."

His playing, records one old pupil of Bach, moved many to declare that the old master himself had been restored to life.

As for Fiedler, few realize that the king of Pops organized his own Sinfonietta a year before he first conducted the Boston Pops. His identification with Pops has obscured the fact that this is an accomplished conductor whose work with Mozart in particular and the Sinfonietta in general deserves greater attention from the musical public.

Now we have the joining of these talents with a third, that of Carl Weinrich, one of the nation's foremost organists. Weinrich, born in Paterson, is director of music in the chapel at Princeton. With Fiedler on the podium and Mozart on the music stand, this trio has produced the sound of organ music rarely heard.

Mozart's complete repertoire of organ music is reproduced together with Haydn's concerto in C. The whole thing was recorded at the General Theological Seminary in New York.

Mozart's pieces were the result of his having to provide short organ works to be played by members of the court of the Count of Colloredo as interludes between the Epistle and the Gospel in the mass. Most are brief, unpretentious, and eminently listenable. There are 17 of them and the pity is there were no more.

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL
MILWAUKEE, WISC.
D. 364,362 SUN. 551,968
OCT 30 1966

Classical Records

Koussevitzky Lives Again

By GERALD KLOSS, of The Journal Staff

IN A REMINISCENCE of Serge Koussevitzky included with a three record Victor album of his recordings as conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra (VCM-6174), composer Lukas Foss writes of Koussevitzky's impassioned rehearsal manner, as recalled in the memorable phrases he used to spur the orchestra to new musical heights.

"How can you play so cold when the sun is shining?" he would beseech the players. And, "I make a geste like I want to kill, gentlemen, and you give me something nothing!" And, "Bassi, you hold the most beautiful instrument and all you do is scratch!"

He would cajole, scold and finally threaten. With blood rushing to his face, Koussevitzky would roar, "If you do not give me the sound, I will resign!" Still redder after this threat failed to get results, he would utter the final word: "I will not resign—you will resign!" The "you" was accompanied by a gesture covering all 105 players in the orchestra.

Thus the man, and thus the music he brought forth from the magnificent orchestra—impulsive, emotional, less concerned with crisp precision than in striving for inner meanings and "soul." He rode the old war horses of 19th century symphonic music as if they were untamed mustangs, and the intensity he brought to such familiar fare as the Tchaikovsky fifth and the Brahms fourth symphonies made them sound as if they were fresh from the composer's pen.

The present album contains those two symphonies, as well as the Brahms "Academic Festival Overture," Rachmaninoff's "Vocalise," Rimsky-Korsakov's "The Battle of Kershenetz" and three works from 20th century composers — the Shostakovich ninth symphony, Howard Hanson's serenade for flute, harp and string orchestra and Arthur Foote's suite for strings.

Koussevitzky did not conduct in the high fidelity recording era—he died in 1951, and these performances were given in the late 1930's and the 1940's. Nevertheless, the sound quality is round and ample, and there is no mistaking the Koussevitzky zeal, both in the older, romantic works and those of this century.

Koussevitzky

The Evening Bulletin
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 672,235
AUG 10 1966

Today's Album

The "Pops" Goes Country, Arthur Fiedler, Chet Atkins (Victor). Arthur Fiedler continuing his series of visits with guest soloists (Peter Nero and Al Hirt among the more recent) takes leave of Boston's austere Beacon St. to visit Nashville. There, virtuoso Chet Atkins sits in for one of the best and rousingest bits of music fun we have heard in a decade. Chet's proficiency on the guitar is such that it obviously earned a sympatico understanding from Maestro Fiedler and his "Pops" Orchestra. The result is electrifying great listening.

Paterson Evening News
NORTHERN JERSEY'S INDEPENDENT NEWSPAPER
D. 57,780 SUN. 55,704
AUG 11 1966

A cheerful program comprising Mendelssohn's Piano Concerto No. 1, Britten's "Matinees Musicales" and Cole Porter compositions makes for fine summer listening in "More Highlights From an Evening at the Pops" by the Boston Pops led by Arthur Fiedler (RCA Victor stereo).

The necessary verve and bubbly taste of the sexy, sensuous music which makes up Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne," that delightful light - hearted swirling can-can music is given a properly rousing reading by the New Philharmonia Orchestra under Charles Munch's deft direction in fine Phase 4 (London stereo).

DeFalla's "Ritual Fire Dance" serves as the title for the album of 10 popular classical dance selections in excellent performances of works by Rossini Ponchiellie, Brahms, Smetana, Tchaikovsky and Weinberger by the virtuosic Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy (Columbia stereo).

The San Diego Union
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
D. 118,192 SUN. 219,776
AUG 12 1966

POINT OF VIEW

Bob Crane, substituting for Arthur Godfrey, who is in Viet Nam for a month, is doing a sprightly turn running the store, recalling his old KNX radio days. Mitch Miller was aboard the other morning and after Johnny Parker's band romped through a tune, Mitch surveyed the musicians. "I know why they play so well," Mitch said. "So many of them have beards"....

And on KSON, Arthur Fiedler talked about his new Boston Pops orchestra recording with Chet Atkins — his first venture into country and western music — and told Boots Rabell: "I couldn't fight 'em. So I joined 'em"....

145

OPERA NEWS
NEW YORK, N.Y.
23 TI. A YR. 70,700

APR 15 1967

RECORDS

New Ballo performers Grist, Leinsdorf, Price; (back) Bergonzi, Merrill, Flagello

VERDI: Un Ballo in Maschera
■ Price, Grist, Verrett; Bergonzi, Merrill, Flagello, Mazzoli; RCA Italiana, Leinsdorf. Victor LM(LSC)-6179 [3].

Here is the most brilliant and effective Ballo in Maschera yet recorded in the stereo era—one which, all things considered, deserves a place beside the 1954 version under Arturo Toscanini (Victor LM-6112, mono only). Erich Leinsdorf offers his most persuasive account of an Italian opera to date on disc, impressive for textural clarity, dynamic range, considerable lyric grace, energy (except in the second-act duet and trio, which lack sufficient tension) and, from time to time, dramatic grandeur. RCA's capable Italian orchestra and chorus have outdone themselves in giving Leinsdorf their best, and the performance is crisply recorded.

Leontyne Price is heard here at the summit of her powers, a peak she has previously scaled on records only in Aida. A few stylistic inaccuracies notwithstanding, this is an Amelia whose tones consistently delight the ear and who quickens her dramatic dilemma with the heat of controlled passion and unshakable conviction. Miss Price's musicality, her care for Verdi's rhythmic and dynamic indications throughout, casts a halo of artistic purity over the total achievement. Both Carlo Bergonzi and Robert Merrill have been heard as Riccardo and Renato in earlier recordings, but each is more telling on this occasion: Bergonzi sings with even more grace and thrust than before, while Merrill shows greater discretion and more shading.

Shirley Verrett's handsome mezzo-soprano is welcome in the role of Ulrica, though she is not so careful about dynamics as some of her colleagues. Exceptional in every way is Reri Grist's Oscar—quite the best on records, with its ease, brilliance and insouciance. Ezio Flagello and Ferruccio Mazzoli as Sammuele and Tommaso are further evidence of the festival casting that Victor has lavished on this album. C.J.L.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163.400

JUN 1966

RECORDING OF SPECIAL MERIT

Ⓢ Ⓜ VERDI: Requiem. Birgit Nilsson (soprano); Lili Chookasian (mezzo-soprano); Carlo Bergonzi (tenor); Ezio Flagello (bass). Boston Chorus-Pro Musica and Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf cond. RCA Victor LSC 7040 two discs $11.58, LM 7040 $9.58.

Performance: First-rate
Recording: Excellent
Stereo Quality: Very good

Here is another fine version of Verdi's Requiem, additional proof that this is an age of recorded affluence, a far cry from the pre-LP era when this breathtakingly beautiful work could be heard in only one recorded edition! (In fairness, however, I must add that that one edition, still available as Angel GRB 4002, is justifiably ranked with the Great Recordings of the Century.)

Leinsdorf's approach is distinguished by his characteristic sense of structure. The pacing is brisk (this is, in fact, the fastest of all modern recorded editions, save perhaps the Markevitch recording, which was not available for comparison), yet unhurried, with an unobscured view of important details in the scoring. Aware of the theatricalism inherent in the work, Leinsdorf gives us an interpretation that is dramatically effective and often moving. At times, however, his disciplinarian sense seems to inhibit the flow of lyric expression: certainly he does not get as much expressive nuance out of his vocal soloists as, say, Giulini does on Angel 3649.

There is no restraint, however, in the performance of Carlo Bergonzi, who gives renewed evidence here of his superlative artistry. At the risk of sounding repetitious, I find that the consistent tonal beauty, elegance of phrasing, and overall musicality Mr. Bergonzi displays in one recording after another place his contributions among the true delights of listening today. Ezio Flagello brings a firm tone and a nice cantabile style to the bass part, and Lili Chookasian handles the mezzo line with commendable authority and musicianship.

By the severe standards of her own achievement, however, Birgit Nilsson is somewhat disappointing. Her voice is supremely right in weight and brilliance for the soprano part, it rides the ensembles with a soaring majesty and with an absolute command of the wide range of her music—all these are pleasures readily acknowledged. But there seems to be a lack of involvement in her singing, insufficient warmth in such passages as the long, sustained E natural in "Sed signifer sanctus Michael" in the Offertorio. As for the final Libera Me, where the supplicating fervor of Schwarzkopf (in the Angel set) would melt a stone in "Tremens factus sum ego," Nilsson sounds comparatively dispassionate. She also seems to be off her best vocal form, as evidenced by several off-center attacks.

The choral and orchestral execution is all one could ask for, except that the Verdian dynamic markings, particularly the gradations from ppp to p, are seldom highlighted. The sound is rich and well detailed, and an excellent essay by Neville Cardus enhances the album presentation. There are no separation bands on the disc to distinguish the different sections. Nothing can justify this puzzling and, in my opinion, damaging procedure, and I hope that subsequent pressings will bring rectification. G. J.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

MAY 7 1966

Another Victor summer pressing will be Verdi's "Ballo in Maschera" starring Miss Price, Miss Verrett, Carlo Bergonzi, Robert Merrill and Flagello. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. A release is planned for February.

Leinsdorf leads the Boston Symphony in Wagner's "Lohengrin," which will be available by September. Soloists in the already-recorded work are Lucine Amara, Rita Gorr, Sandor Konya, Jerome Hines and William Dooley.

DOWN BEAT
CHICAGO, ILL.
E. O. WEEK 43,900

AUG 11 1966

Tenor saxophonist Stan Getz will be a guest soloist with the Boston Pops Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., at concerts scheduled for Aug. 2 and 3. The concerts, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will include the premiere of a new work by Eddie Sauter, whose previous collaborations with Getz include Focus and the score for the film Mickey One. Special material by Antonio Carlos Jobim, Johnny Mandel, and other well-known arranger-composers also will be included in the program. The concert will be recorded by RCA Victor.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100

MAY 1966

VERDI: Messa da Requiem; Birgit Nilsson (soprano), Lili Chookasian (mezzo-soprano), Carlo Bergonzi (tenor) Ezio Flagello (bass), Boston Chorus Pro Musica (Alfred Nash Petterson, director); Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor set LM-7040, four sides, $9.58, or Stereo LSC-7040, $11.58.

Price, Elias, Bjoerling,
Tozzi, Reiner.....RCA Victor LD/LDS-6091
Schwarzkopf, Dominguez,
di Stefano, Siepi; Sabata.....Angel 3520
Schwarzkopf, Ludwig Gedda,
Ghiaurov; Giulini.....Angel Ⓢ3649
Vishnevskaya, Isakova,
Ivanovsky, Petrov; Markevitch.....Parl. Ⓢ154

Ⓢ LET me say right away that, even with the arrival of the eighth Verdi Requiem in the current Schwann Catalog, we have not yet found the long-awaited ideal performance. There are some excellent features in the new RCA Victor release along with some disappointing ones, however.

First, the sound. The balance favors the orchestra and chorus, leaving the four soloists somewhere between and somewhere below them. The effect is as if each soloist were attempting to sing out over a wall of orchestral sound with the chorus forming another, rear, wall. The Dynagroove sound is really full-bodied—perhaps too much so—with the result that mf passages are thick and passages f and above are rather overbearing. We are surrounded by the music, and in this perspective it is difficult to stand away from it, to appreciate its labyrinthine textures of rich color and its exquisitely carved details. This is unfortunate, but problems of balance always seem to plague the engineering of large-scale works such as this. Any solution tends to be a compromise. Giulini's recording on Angel, for example, loses much of its brilliance and luster through an extraordinarily out-of-focus pickup of the magnificent chorus.

Now as to the RCA Victor performance. On the whole it is a good one, well paced and free of exaggerations. It is not so limp as either Sabata's or Reiner's, but it has none of the intense lyricism nor the white-hot drive of Giulini's. Leinsdorf chooses not to wring our withers with the overpowering commitment of Verdi's statements. We are left with an impression of great technical accomplishment, particularly on the part of the orchestra, rather than with the holocaust of the Day

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

APR 8 1967

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

VERDI: UN BALLO IN MASCHERA (3 LP's)
Price/ Bergonzi/ Merrill/ Various Artists/ RCA Italiana Opera Orch. (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 6179 (M); LSC 6179 (S)

Miss Price sings one of her best roles excellently. Bergonzi and Merrill also are in top form under Leinsdorf's expert leadership as are Shirley Verrett and Reri Grist.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 444,396 SUN. 553,012

JULY 17 1966

Classical Records

Verdi: Requiem. Boston Symphony Orchestra under Leinsdorf, with Pro Musica Chorus of Boston, and Nilsson, Chookasain, Bergonzi and Flagello. Verdi. RCA.

In the standard catalog, and in the face of some excellent singing and playing, this performance offers less than those of Reiner (Victor), Giulini (Angel), Toscanini (Victor), or Serafin (Angel). Nilsson sounds marvelous but temperamentally out of her depth. Bergonzi is superb, the nearest thing to the historic Gigli under Serafin, if, however, no more satisfying than Bjoerling under Reiner. Flagello is fine but simply not up to early Pinza or Tozzi, Chookasain stands well with the Barbieri and Stignani. The chief fault in the performance is Leinsdorf's lack of real passion. Everything is so damnably correct.

—Paul Hume

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, August 7, 1966

Munch's ballet performed with Gallic within new album

by FRANK B. STEPHENSON

RECORD REVIEWS

When Charles Munch was guiding the destiny of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Victor assigned him to weightier things than Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne." That work fell to Arthur Fiedler and the orchestra's mischievous little brother, the Pops on at least three different occasions.

What RCA missed is now rectified by London which shows that Munch is indeed an Offenbachian to rank with any and surpassing most. In a new sparkling, gorgeously-recorded Phase 4 Stereo album, we are given a bubbling performance full of Gallic wit and savoir-faire. Whether anyone could dance to Munch's ballet is quite another question. This time it is made for listening, and what listening it makes! (London Stereo SPC 21011.)

145

OPERA NEWS
NEW YORK, N.Y.
23 TI. A YR. 70,700

APR 15 1967

RECORDS

New Ballo performers Grist, Leinsdorf, Price; (back) Bergonzi, Merrill, Flagello

VERDI: Un Ballo in Maschera
■ Price, Grist, Verrett; Bergonzi, Merrill, Flagello, Mazzoli; RCA Italiana, Leinsdorf. Victor LM(LSC)-6179 [3].

Here is the most brilliant and effective Ballo in Maschera yet recorded in the stereo era—one which, all things considered, deserves a place beside the 1954 version under Arturo Toscanini (Victor LM-6112, mono only). Erich Leinsdorf offers his most persuasive account of an Italian opera to date on disc, impressive for textural clarity, dynamic range, considerable lyric grace, energy (except in the second-act duet and trio, which lack sufficient tension) and, from time to time, dramatic grandeur. RCA's capable Italian orchestra and chorus have outdone themselves in giving Leinsdorf their best, and the performance is crisply recorded.

Leontyne Price is heard here at the summit of her powers, a peak she has previously scaled on records only in Aida. A few stylistic inaccuracies notwithstanding, this is an Amelia whose tones consistently delight the ear and who quickens her dramatic dilemma with the heat of controlled passion and unshakable conviction. Miss Price's musicality, her care for Verdi's rhythmic and dynamic indications throughout, casts a halo of artistic purity over the total achievement. Both Carlo Bergonzi and Robert Merrill have been heard as Riccardo and Renato in earlier recordings, but each is more telling on this occasion: Bergonzi sings with even more grace and thrust than before, while Merrill shows greater discretion and more shading.

Shirley Verrett's handsome mezzo-soprano is welcome in the role of Ulrica, though she is not so careful about dynamics as some of her colleagues. Exceptional in every way is Reri Grist's Oscar—quite the best on records, with its ease, brilliance and insouciance. Ezio Flagello and Ferruccio Mazzoli as Sammuele and Tommaso are further evidence of the festival casting that Victor has lavished on this album. C.J.L.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100

MAY 1966

VERDI: Messa da Requiem; Birgit Nilsson (soprano), Lili Chookasian (mezzo-soprano), Carlo Bergonzi (tenor) Ezio Flagello (bass), Boston Chorus Pro Musica (Alfred Nash Petterson, director); Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor set LM-7040, four sides, $9.58, or Stereo LSC-7040, $11.58.

Price, Elias, Bjoerling, Tozzi, Reiner.....RCA Victor LD/LDS-6091
Schwarzkopf, Dominguez, di Stefano, Siepi; Sabata.....Angel 3520
Schwarzkopf, Ludwig Gedda, Ghiaurov; Giulini.....Angel Ⓢ3649
Vishnevskaya, Isakova, Ivanovsky, Petrov; Markevitch.....Parl. Ⓢ154

ⓈLET me say right away that, even with the arrival of the eighth Verdi Requiem in the current Schwann Catalog, we have not yet found the long-awaited ideal performance. There are some excellent features in the new RCA Victor release along with some disappointing ones, however.

First, the sound. The balance favors the orchestra and chorus, leaving the four soloists somewhere between and somewhere below them. The effect is as if each soloist were attempting to sing out over a wall of orchestral sound with the chorus forming another, rear, wall. The Dynagroove sound is really full-bodied—perhaps too much so—with the result that mf passages are thick and passages f and above are rather overbearing. We are surrounded by the music, and in this perspective it is difficult to stand away from it, to appreciate its labyrinthine textures of rich color and its exquisitely carved details. This is unfortunate, but problems of balance always seem to plague the engineering of large-scale works such as this. Any solution tends to be a compromise. Giulini's recording on Angel, for example, loses much of its brilliance and luster through an extraordinarily out-of-focus pickup of the magnificent chorus.

Now as to the RCA Victor performance. On the whole it is a good one, well paced and free of exaggerations. It is not so limp as either Sabata's or Reiner's, but it has none of the intense lyricism nor the white-hot drive of Giulini's. Leinsdorf chooses not to wring our withers with the overpowering commitment of Verdi's statements. We are left with an impression of great technical accomplishment, particularly on the part of the orchestra, rather than with the holocaust of the Day

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163,400

JUN 1966

RECORDING OF SPECIAL MERIT

Ⓢ Ⓜ VERDI: Requiem. Birgit Nilsson (soprano); Lili Chookasian (mezzo-soprano); Carlo Bergonzi (tenor); Ezio Flagello (bass). Boston Chorus Pro Musica and Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf cond. RCA Victor LSC 7040 two discs $11.58, LM 7040 $9.58.

Performance: First-rate
Recording: Excellent
Stereo Quality: Very good

Here is another fine version of Verdi's Requiem, additional proof that this is an age of recorded affluence, a far cry from the pre-LP era when this breathtakingly beautiful work could be heard in only one recorded edition! (In fairness, however, I must add that that one edition, still available as Angel GRB 4002, is justifiably ranked with the Great Recordings of the Century.)

Leinsdorf's approach is distinguished by his characteristic sense of structure. The pacing is brisk (this is, in fact, the fastest of all modern recorded editions, save perhaps the Markevitch recording, which was not available for comparison), yet unhurried, with an unobscured view of important details in the scoring. Aware of the theatricalism inherent in the work, Leinsdorf gives us an interpretation that is dramatically effective and often moving. At times, however, his disciplinarian sense seems to inhibit the flow of lyric expression: certainly he does not get as much expressive nuance out of his vocal soloists as, say, Giulini does on Angel 3649.

There is no restraint, however, in the performance of Carlo Bergonzi, who gives renewed evidence here of his superlative artistry. At the risk of sounding repetitious, I find that the consistent tonal beauty, elegance of phrasing, and overall musicality Mr. Bergonzi displays in one recording after another place his contributions among the true delights of listening today. Ezio Flagello brings a firm tone and a nice cantabile style to the bass part, and Lili Chookasian handles the mezzo line with commendable authority and musicianship.

By the severe standards of her own achievement, however, Birgit Nilsson is somewhat disappointing. Her voice is supremely right in weight and brilliance for the soprano part, it rides the ensembles with a soaring majesty and with an absolute command of the wide range of her music—all these are pleasures readily acknowledged. But there seems to be a lack of involvement in her singing, insufficient warmth in such passages as the long, sustained E natural in "Sed signifer sanctus Michael" in the Offertorio. As for the final Libera Me, where the supplicating fervor of Schwarzkopf (in the Angel set) would melt a stone in "Tremens factus sum ego," Nilsson sounds comparatively dispassionate. She also seems to be off her best vocal form, as evidenced by several off-center attacks.

The choral and orchestral execution is all one could ask for, except that the Verdian dynamic markings, particularly the gradations from ppp to p, are seldom highlighted. The sound is rich and well detailed, and an excellent essay by Neville Cardus enhances the album presentation. There are no separation bands on the disc to distinguish the different sections. Nothing can justify this puzzling and, in my opinion, damaging procedure, and I hope that subsequent pressings will bring rectification. G. J.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

MAY 7 1966

Another Victor summer pressing will be Verdi's "Ballo in Maschera" starring Miss Price, Miss Verrett, Carlo Bergonzi, Robert Merrill and Flagello. Erich Leinsdorf will conduct. A release is planned for February.

Leinsdorf leads the Boston Symphony in Wagner's "Lohengrin," which will be available by September. Soloists in the already-recorded work are Lucine Amara, Rita Gorr, Sandor Konya, Jerome Hines and William Dooley.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

APR 8 1967

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

VERDI: UN BALLO IN MASCHERA (3 LP's)
Price/ Bergonzi/ Merrill/ Various Artists/ RCA Italiana Opera Orch. (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 6179 (M); LSC 6179 (S)

Miss Price sings one of her best roles excellently. Bergonzi and Merrill also are in top form under Leinsdorf's expert leadership as are Shirley Verrett and Reri Grist.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 444,396 SUN. 553,012

JULY 17 1966

Classical Records

Verdi: Ballo in Maschera. Boston Symphony Orchestra under Leinsdorf, with Pro Musica Chorus of Boston, and Nilsson, Chookasain, Bergonzi and Flagello. Victor 7040.

In the final analysis, and in the face of some excellent singing and playing, this performance offers less than those of Reiner (Victor), Giulini (Angel), Toscanini (Victor), or Serafin (Angel). Nilsson sounds marvelous but temperamentally out of her depth. Bergonzi is superb, the nearest thing to the historic Gigli under Serafin, if, however, no more satisfying than Bjoerling under Reiner. Flagello is fine but simply not up to early Pinza or Tozzi, Chookasain stands well with the Barbieri and Stignani. The chief fault in the performance is Leinsdorf's lack of real passion. Everything is so damnably correct.

—Paul Hume

DOWN BEAT
CHICAGO, ILL.
E. O. WEEK 43,900

AUG 11 1966

Tenor saxophonist Stan Getz will be a guest soloist with the Boston Pops Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass., at concerts scheduled for Aug. 2 and 3. The concerts, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will include the premiere of a new work by Eddie Sauter, whose previous collaborations with Getz include Focus and the score for the film Mickey One. Special material by Antonio Carlos Jobim, Johnny Mandel, and other well-known arranger-composers also will be included in the program. The concert will be recorded by RCA Victor.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, August 7, 1966

Munch's ballet performed with Gallic within new album

by FRANK B. STEPHENSON

RECORD REVIEWS

When Charles Munch was guiding the destiny of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Victor assigned him to weightier things than Offenbach's "Gaite Parisienne." That work fell to Arthur Fiedler and the orchestra's mischievous little brother, the Pops on at least three different occasions.

What RCA missed is now rectified by London which shows that Munch is indeed an Offenbachian to rank with any and surpassing most. In a new sparkling, gorgeously-recorded Phase 4 Stereo album, we are given a bubbling performance full of Gallic wit and savoir-faire. Whether anyone could dance to Munch's ballet is quite another question. This time it is made for listening, and what listening it makes! (London Stereo SPC 21011.)

Deseret News
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
D. 89,141
JULY 27 1966

'Hary' Is A Really Universal Fellow

By HAROLD LUNDSTROM
Deseret News Music Editor

One service to a living composer that everyone will appreciate was performed by Erich Leinsdorf in recording Zoltan Kodaly, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The pieces chosen are the orchestral suite he made from his stage work, "Hary Janos," and his variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock."

The humorous, folksy character-portraying music of "Hary Janos" had its American day late in the 1920s and has slumped into a now-and-then item for the symphony program. This may have been because we are not all Hungarians and it was felt you had to be to appreciate the hero properly.

Now time, aided by Leinsdorf's splendid performance, makes it clear that Hary is a universal character and his musical biographer was not creating only for Hungarians. "The Peacock" also has that appeal. The record album has a brief and charming commentary by the composer himself (RCA Victor-2859).

It is convenient that Sergei Prokofiev wrote only two concertos for the violin, and revealing that they came from him some 20 years apart. Being only two, they go neatly onto the two sides of one record. Having come from the composer when he was a youth and when he was mature, they tell you much about one of the great composers of this century when they're heard one behind the other.

As Nathan Milstein plays them, that is. He is an add-nothing, subtract-nothing sort of interpreter, following compository values and directions precisely. But he enriches exactitude with enormous technique, particularly in tone production, and with complete sympathy with what he is playing. He shows you the composer's uniqueness as a creator — and how the uniqueness matured.

Here is 20th Century music which is already established. Interpreters like Milstein fit it into the musical main stream. His orchestra was the Philharmonia, but the recordings were made at different times since Carlo Maria Giulini was the conductor for one and Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos for the other (Angel-36009).

OUR MUSICAL WHIRL

MOUNT KISCO, N. Y.
PATENT TRADER
YORKTOWN EDITION
THURS. 16,000 S. 16.000
AUG 14 1966

All 'Big Five' Recorded

By DOROTHY JOHNSON

ARMONK — This weekend Howard Scott of Sniffin Road is recording an album of Eric Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony and their guest star, Jane Marsh, who has just won the Tschaikovsky award in Moscow.

"I'm really excited about it," Mr. Scott said earlier this week. The orchestra is among the so-called "big five."

Mr. Scott is an RCA producer and director who has been taping top singers and orchestras for 20 years.

Asked about the "big five," Mr. Scott said he has recorded the New York Philharmonic many times, under Bruno Walter, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Leonard Bernstein and Andre Kostelanetz; the Cleveland Orchestra under George Szell. Szell's assistant is Michael Charry formerly of Armonk.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
SEPT 21 1966

Artist-Disk Deals

RCA Victor: Itzhak Perlman

Itzhak Perlman, 21-year-old Israeli violinist who has been scoring on the U.S. concert trail, has been signed by RCA Victor. His debut performance on disks will be made with the Boston Symphony under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

PLAINVIEW, N. Y.
LONG ISLAND
COMMERCIAL REVIEW
D. 9.000
SEPT 30 1966

Disc-Course

COPLAND: The Tender Land (Opera-Abridged). Clements, Turner, Cassily, Triegle, etc. The New York Philharmonic Orch. Aaron Copland (cond) Columbia ML-6214/MS-6184. For all his genius, Copland seems unable to compose a viable opera. Like his Second Hurricane, this is purely opera workshop stuff, worth a curious, single listening, no more. Music-lovers are advised to turn to Copland's orchestral arrangement of Tender Land, available on RCA Victor LSC-2401 where C. has the aid of the Boston Symphony in Appalachian Spring, as well.

San Francisco Examiner
D. 275,000
SEP 26 1966

Boston Musicians Don't Relax --Even Without Leinsdorf

By ARTHUR BLOOMFIELD

Victor's new package featuring the Boston Symphony's first chair men—you could call them Erich Leinsdorf's All Stars—is three records worth of mixed blessing.

The album's news, and artistic contribution, is concentrated on the last two sides, whereon some gems of contemporary American chamber music are played. And very nicely, too.

As for the classics included, they tend to be treated in less than the most ingratiating fashion, and you'd do best to jump to sides 5 and 6 for your major rewards.

FANTASIA

The most important discovery is the late Irving Fine's Fantasia for string trio, a poignant and absorbing work that deserves to be in the regular repertoire. It's in three movements, adroitly linked, and this is what Fine gives you:

A tragic, impassioned opener with a rich, warm sonority and big phrases that really move along, then a possessed scherzo with melodic slashes over a tremulous bass — it's a jerky movement, but the Fine sense of line is always there — this followed by a return to slow tempo, and a plaintive, assertive mood, capped by resignation.

WIND QUINTET

On the lighter side there's Elliott Carter's wind quintet from 1948, a bucolic and genuinely attractive piece, considerably more listenable than some of his chaotic larger efforts, and Walter Piston's Divertimento for strings and winds, another winner thanks to happily dancing syncopated chords in the first movement, lovely interlacing of the instruments in the second, and fugal exhilaration in the finale.

Copland's Vitebsk Variations are included, too, and their healthy lack of complication is no less appealing.

Now one of the reasons symphony musicians like to play chamber music is to get away from the orchestral grind, but the curious thing about the Mozart and Brahms performances in this album is that they sound Leinsdorf-inspired. It's almost as if the Boston Symphony's maestro was right up there in front of the musicians, but of course he wasn't.

MUSCULARITY

We are by no means as anti-Leinsdorf as some of his militant detractors, but there is a tightly buttoned quality about a lot of his musicmaking, a certain inflexible muscularity, and that's just the quality which makes the Brahms C minor piano quartet (with guest artist Claude Frank) a less than ideal performance.

If the Brahms is at least forthright, and entirely passable as a listening experience, the Mozart oboe quartet comes out minus the grace, lilt and blending of voices which the music so obviously suggests.

Poor Wolfgang is in a straitjacket, and one can only wonder, why don't these Bostonians just relax.

Classical Records

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 132,266
SEP 24 1966

The Record Scene

Boston Chamber Players Offer New Recording

By ROBERT F. DUGUAY

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players (RCA Victor LM & 6167).

As the title indicates, this handsomely-designed three pocket album introduces to discs a virtuoso ensemble drawn from the "Aristocrat of Orchestras." These superlative musicians are herein heard in a representative selection of classical, romantic and modern repertoire. There's not a dull moment in this set, not in the cooly elegant pair of Mozart flute and oboe quartets they have chosen, nor in the Beethoven "Serenade in D" and the Brahms C Minor Piano Quartet (with guest artist and pianist, Claude Frank, contributing a corruscating performance).

Three of the four contemporary American composers in this set have long-established musical roots in Boston. The late Irving Fine is represented by a fascinating, dodecaphonically oriented "Fantasia for String Trio," Walter Piston by a breezily extroverted "Divertimento for Nine Instruments," and Aaron Copland by his early "Vitebsk." The one "outsider," the formidable Elliott Carter (our foremost living composer,) is present with a brief and relatively uncomplicated "Quintet for Woodwinds."

This set also has an attractive set of program notes by the actor-writer, Peter Ustinov, plus a supplementary 10" disc containing an abbreviated discussion of the album's contents by Mr. Ustinov, Erich Leinsdorf, and the BSO's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein (leader of this new chamber group).

The latter disc strikes me as more of a publicity gimmick than anything else. It certainly neither adds to, nor detracts from one's continual pleasure in listening to this important new release. Superb sound, too.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.
JUL 20 1966

Victor Inks Jane Marsh, Moscow Contest Winner, & Hopes for a Van Cliburn

RCA Victor, which struck gold in signing Van Cliburn, first American winner of the Tchaikowsky International Music Contest in Moscow several years ago, has tapped the same vein in wrapping up Jane Marsh, 24-year-old California-born soprano who won first prize in the recent voice competition held in Moscow.

Miss Marsh had been in the Victor orbit since 1965 when she was engaged by the Boston Symphony for vocal assignments. The Boston Symphony also records for Victor.

Miss Marsh's initial recording for Victor will consist of two live performances at the Berkshire Tanglewood Festival in Lenox, Mass., July 24 and Aug. 13. She will be doing the numbers she sang in the Moscow competition, including selections by Tchaikowsky and Verdi.

Cliburn is the only other American to win in the Moscow competition. He received worldwide publicity at the time and his first Victor recording, the First Tchaikowsky Concerto, became the only classical album in history ever to sell more than 1,000,000 copies.

Nashville Banner
NASHVILLE, TENN.
D. 99,525
SEP 25 1966

THE VIRTUOSITY of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf's versatility and encompassing musicianship are handsomely displayed in their brilliant recording (RCA Victor LSC-2879, also Mono) of Stravinsky's "Agon."—is perhaps the most admired of his compositions of the past decade—and of Gunther Schuller's cleverly and vividly imaginative vignettes "Seven Studies on Themes of Roul Klee." These latter are eocative and successful attempts to represent in music the ideas represented visually in seven of Klee's abstract paintings.

The Providence Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 66,826 SUN. 200,259
SEP 25 1966

[illegible], the young pianist-conductor, plays with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, on an RCA record (LM-2897). Their efforts combine beautifully in Concertos No. 1 and No. 2, by Prokofieff. A different pianistic style is required here and what is more, it is delivered. Strength, rhythmic verve and musical collaboration never waver. These works, which both date from 1912, are full of the technical idioms that one learns to identify after hearing the music of this composer. There is a freshness and vitality about this performance that carries it along and with the sensitive Leinsdorf baton in charge, the listener is always aware of beauty and joy, both in the writing and in the performing.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163.400
AUG 1966

RECORDING OF SPECIAL MERIT

Ⓢ Ⓜ RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloë (complete ballet). Orchestre de la Suisse Romande and Radio Lausanne Choir, Ernest Ansermet cond. LONDON CS 6456 $5.79, CM 9456* $4.79.

Performance: Richly poetic
Recording: Full and spacious
Stereo Quality: Excellent

Ernest Ansermet's new recording of the complete Daphnis and Chloë not only represents an enormous improvement over his 1953 effort from the standpoint of sound, but it gives us an extraordinary synthesis of the poetry and drama inherent in the music and the story.

When it comes to drama and excitement, there can be no doubt that the Charles Munch-Boston Symphony recording still tops them all, and the late Pierre Monteux brought to his 1959 London recording a special poetic touch, if not very much dramatic tension. Ansermet here has managed to combine the best features of both approaches, and he has the benefit of London's finest recorded sound. The off-stage effects at the beginning and end of the pirates' scene come off particularly well.

I supervised the first complete recording of Daphnis and Chloë with Antal Dorati and the Minneapolis Symphony for Mercury, and am understandably fond of it. I also own the 1961 Munch-Boston Symphony recording. But I'm going to listen to this new Ansermet version many times, too. D. H.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 122,607
JUL 31 1966

"Hary Janos" by Kodaly, which will be played on the August 13 Russian-Hungarian Program, is represented by several major orchestras in Schwann's. The most recent recording (this spring) is by Leinsdorf and The Boston Symphony Orchestra (RCA Victor, m or s) it is brilliantly executed with dazzling sound.

[illegible] execution is breathtaking.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
OCT 22 1966

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

MOZART/BEETHOVEN/BRAHMS/COPLAND/FINE/CARTER/PISTON

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players. RCA Victor LM 6167 (M); LSC 6167 (S)

The Chamber players back up their educational and impressive musical credits by distinguished performances. Tight, feeling and tasty is their playing throughout. Notes by Peter Ustinov are on the disk in [illegible] from [illegible] copy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Sunday Telegram
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 105,712
JUN 19 1966

Recordings

By STELLA MILLS

AS PART of its 50th anniversary observance the Boston Symphony Orchestra invited the French composer Albert Roussel over in the autumn of 1930.

Roussel responded not only with his presence, but with a G Minor Symphony which he had completed in Paris a few months before. Serge Koussevitzky led the world premiere in Symphony Hall, Boston on Oct. 23.

Something of a standard bearer of the reaction against Debussyism, Roussel was regarded both as anti-romantic and anti-impressionist in his outlook.

He revered Cesar Frankck and D'indy as masters, and he conformed to the principles expounded by them, but his personal style is his own.

We hear far too little of Roussel's music, and it is a real pleasure to find his G Minor Symphony (No. 3) and A Minor Symphony (No. 4) coupled on a new Epic release.

Charles Munch conducts the Lamoureux Orchestra in both works, and incidentally, this album won the 1965 Grand Prix du Disque.

These two symphonies, neo-classic in all respects, are lovely things. The slow movements are filled with a lyrical delicacy, but his Allegros, especially the lat movements, are brimming over with excitement.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
OCT 8 1966

CLASSICAL SPECIAL MERIT

ERICH LEINSDORF PLAYS THE GOOD-TIME CLASSICS

Concert Arts Orch. (Leinsdorf). Capitol P 8637 (M); SP 8637 (S)

These seven familiar works get a bouncy, lively treatment from Leinsdorf and the Concert Arts Orchestra which should appeal to a broad audience. Included here are "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," "Dance of the Hours" and "The Moldau." It's a good time for all—performers and listeners.

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W.—CIRC. N. AVAIL.
AUG 6 1966

'Carmen' And Leinsdorf On Good Time Release

HOLLYWOOD—Two new "Good-Time Classics" albums are slated to be added to the series of light classical music by Capitol on July 25. The scheduled releases are "I Love Carmen," featuring the Sadler's Wells Opera conducted by Colin Davis, and "Erich Leinsdorf Plays The Good Time Classics" with the Concert Arts Orchestra. Leinsdorf is also the conductor of the Boston Symphony.

LYNCHBURG, VA.
ADVANCE
D. 19,000
AUG 3 1966

There have been some excellent classical releases lately. "Stravinsky Conducts Pulcinello" (Columbia) is the complete score of his ballet with arias. Ormandy leads the Philadelphia Orchestra in Russian favorites in "March Slav" (Columbia). Erich Leinsdorf leads the Boston Symphony and Berg's La Vin with Phyllis Curtin the soloist in the latter work (RCA Victor). "Artur Rubinstein-Chopin" (RCA Victor) features two old masters combining beautifully. Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau, who may be the world's best lieder singer, sings Schubert's "The Trout and Other Songs" (Angel).

Deseret News
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
D. 89,141

JULY 27 1966

'Hary' Is A Really Universal Fellow

By HAROLD LUNDSTROM
Deseret News Music Editor

One service to a living composer that everyone will appreciate was performed by Erich Leinsdorf in recording Zoltan Kodaly, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The pieces chosen are the orchestral suite he made from his stage work, "Hary Janos," and his variations on a Hungarian Folk Song, "The Peacock."

The humorous, folksy character-portraying music of "Hary Janos" had its American day late in the 1920s and has slumped into a now-and-then item for the symphony program. This may have been because we are not all Hungarians and it was felt you had to be to appreciate the hero properly.

Now time, aided by Leinsdorf's splendid performance, makes it clear that Hary is a universal character and his musical biographer was not creating only for Hungarians. "The Peacock" also has that appeal. The record album has a brief and charming commentary by the composer himself (RCA Victor-2859).

It is convenient that Sergei Prokofiev wrote only two concertos for the violin, and revealing that they came from him some 20 years apart. Being only two, they go neatly onto the two sides of one record. Having come from the composer when he was a youth and when he was mature, they tell you much about one of the great composers of this century when they're heard one behind the other.

As Nathan Milstein plays them, that is. He is an add-nothing, subtract-nothing sort of interpreter, following compository values and directions precisely. But he enriches exactitude with enormous technique, particularly in tone production, and with complete sympathy with what he is playing. He shows you the composer's uniqueness as a creator — and how the uniqueness matured.

Here is 20th Century music which is already established. Interpreters like Milstein fit it into the musical main stream. His orchestra was the Philharmonia, but the recordings were made at different times since Carlo Maria Giulini was the conductor for one and Rafael Fruhbeck de Burgos for the other (Angel-36009).

OUR MUSICAL WHIRL

MOUNT KISCO, N. Y.
PATENT TRADER
YORKTOWN EDITION
THURS. 16,000 S. 16.000

AUG 14 1966

All 'Big Five' Recorded

By DOROTHY JOHNSON

ARMONK — This weekend Howard Scott of Sniffin Road is recording an album of Eric Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony and their guest star, Jane Marsh, who has just won the Tschaikovsky award in Moscow.

"I'm really excited about it," Mr. Scott said earlier this week. The orchestra is among the so-called "big five."

Mr. Scott is an RCA producer and director who has been taping top singers and orchestras for 20 years.

Asked about the "big five," Mr. Scott said he has recorded the New York Philharmonic many times, under Bruno Walter, Dimitri Mitropoulos, Leonard Bernstein and Andre Kostelanetz; the Cleveland Orchestra under George Szell. Szell's assistant is Michael Charry formerly of Armonk.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.

SEPT 21 1966

Artist-Disk Deals

RCA Victor: Itzhak Perlman

Itzhak Perlman, 21-year-old Israeli violinist who has been scoring on the U.S. concert trail, has been signed by RCA Victor. His debut performance on disks will be made with the Boston Symphony under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf.

PLAINVIEW, N. Y.
LONG ISLAND
COMMERCIAL REVIEW
D. 9.000

SEPT 30 1966

Disc-Course

COPLAND: The Tender Land (Opera-Abridged), Clements, Turner, Cassily, Triegle, etc. The New York Philharmonic Orch. Aaron Copland (cond) Columbia ML-6214/MS-6184. For all his genius, Copland seems unable to compose a viable opera. Like his Second Hurricane, this is purely opera workshop stuff, worth a curious, single listening, no more. Music-lovers are advised to turn to Copland's orchestral arrangement of Tender Land, available on RCA Victor LSC-2401 where C. has the aid of the Boston Symphony in Appalachian Spring, as well.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 132,266

SEP 24 1966

The Record Scene

Boston Chamber Players Offer New Recording

By ROBERT F. DUGUAY

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players (RCA Victor LM & 6167).

As the title indicates, this handsomely-designed three pocket album introduces to discs a virtuoso ensemble drawn from the "Aristocrat of Orchestras." These superlative musicians are herein heard in a representative selection of classical, romantic and modern repertoire. There's not a dull moment in this set, not in the cooly elegant pair of Mozart flute and oboe quartets they have chosen, nor in the Beethoven "Serenade in D" and the Brahms C Minor Piano Quartet (with guest artist and pianist, Claude Frank, contributing a corruscating performance).

Three of the four contemporary American composers in this set have long-established musical roots in Boston. The late Irving Fine is represented by a fascinating, dodecaphonically oriented "Fantasia for String Trio," Walter Piston by a breezily extroverted "Divertimento for Nine Instruments," and Aaron Copland by his early "Vitebsk." The one "outsider," the formidable Elliott Carter (our foremost living composer,) is present with a brief and relatively uncomplicated "Quintet for Woodwinds."

This set also has an attractive set of program notes by the actor-writer, Peter Ustinov, plus a supplementary 10" disc containing an abbreviated discussion of the album's contents by Mr. Ustinov, Erich Leinsdorf, and the BSO's concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein (leader of this new chamber group).

The latter disc strikes me as more of a publicity gimmick than anything else. It certainly neither adds to, nor detracts from one's continual pleasure in listening to this important new release. Superb sound, too.

San Francisco Examiner
D. 275,000

SEP 26 1966

Boston Musicians Don't Relax --Even Without Leinsdorf

By ARTHUR BLOOMFIELD

Classical Records

Victor's new package featuring the Boston Symphony's first chair men—you could call them Erich Leinsdorf's All Stars — is three records worth of mixed blessing.

The album's real news, and artistic contribution, is concentrated on the last two sides, whereon some gems of contemporary American chamber music are played. And very nicely, too.

As for the classics included, they tend to be treated in less than the most ingratiating fashion, and you'd do best to jump to sides 5 and 6 for your major rewards.

FANTASIA

The most important discovery is the late Irving Fine's Fantasia for string trio, a poignant and absorbing work that deserves to be in the regular repertoire. It's in three movements, adroitly linked, and this is what Fine gives you:

A tragic, impassioned opener with a rich, warm sonority and big phrases that really move along, then a possessed scherzo with melodic slashes over a tremulous bass — it's a jerky movement, but the Fine sense of line is always there — this followed by a return to slow tempo, and a plaintive, assertive mood, capped by resignation.

WIND QUINTET

On the lighter side there's Elliott Carter's wind quintet from 1948, a bucolic and genuinely attractive piece, considerably more listenable than some of his chaotic larger efforts, and Walter Piston's Divertimento for strings and winds, another winner thanks to happily dancing syncopated chords in the first movement, lovely interlacing of the instruments in the second, and fugal exhilaration in the finale.

Copland's Vitebsk Variations are included, too, and their healthy lack of complication is no less appealing.

Now one of the reasons symphony musicians like to play chamber music is to get away from the orchestral grind, but the curious thing about the Mozart and Brahms performances in this album is that they sound Leinsdorf-inspired. It's almost as if the Boston Symphony's maestro was right up there in front of the musicians, but of course he wasn't.

MUSCULARITY

We are by no means as anti-Leinsdorf as some of his militant detractors, but there is a tightly buttoned quality about a lot of his musicmaking, a certain inflexible muscularity, and that's just the quality which makes the Brahms C minor piano quartet (with guest artist Claude Frank) a less than ideal performance.

If the Brahms is at least forthright, and entirely passable as a listening experience, the Mozart oboe quartet comes out minus the grace, lilt and blending of voices which the music so obviously suggests.

Poor Wolfgang is in a straitjacket, and one can only wonder, why don't these Bostonians just relax.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

OCT 22 1966

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

MOZART/BEETHOVEN/BRAHMS/COPLAND/FINE/CARTER/PISTON

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players. RCA Victor LM 6167 (M); LSC 6167 (S)

The Chamber players back up their educational and impressive musical credits by distinguished performances. Tight, feeling and tasty is their playing throughout. Notes by Peter Ustinov are on a bonus disk in this three-record set of works ranging from Mozart to Copland.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,635 SUN. 100,257

JUL 31 1966

The delightful "Orchestral Suite from the comic opera "Hary Janos" by Kodaly, which will be played on the August 13 Russian-Hungarian Program, is represented by several major orchestras in Schwann's. The most recent recording (this spring) is by Leinsdorf and The Boston Symphony Orchestra (RCA Victor, m or s) it is brilliantly executed with dazzling sound.

The fascinating "Variations on A Hungarian Folk Song "The Peacock," occupies side two. The immaculate execution is breathtaking.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200

Sunday Telegram
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 105,712

JUN 19 1966

Recordings

By STELLA MILLS

AS PART of its 50th anniversary observance the Boston Symphony Orchestra invited the French composer Albert Roussel over in the autumn of 1930.

Roussel responded not only with his presence, but with a G Minor Symphony which he had completed in Paris a few months before. Serge Koussevitzky led the world premiere in Symphony Hall, Boston on Oct. 23.

Something of a standard bearer of the reaction against Debussyism, Roussel was regarded both as anti-romantic and anti-impressionist in his outlook.

He revered Cesar Frankck and D'indy as masters, and he conformed to the principles expounded by them, but his personal style is his own.

We hear far too little of Roussel's music, and it is a real pleasure to find his G Minor Symphony (No. 3) and A Minor Symphony (No. 4) coupled on a new Epic release.

Charles Munch conducts the Lamoureux Orchestra in both works, and incidentally, this album won the 1965 Grand Prix du Disque.

These two symphonies, neo-classic in all respects, are lovely things. The slow movements are filled with a lyrical delicacy, but his Allegros, especially the lat movements, are brimming over with excitement.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY-CIRC.N.AVAIL.

JUL 20 1966

Nashville Banner
NASHVILLE, TENN.
D. 99,525

SEP 25 1966

THE VIRTUOSITY of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Erich Leinsdorf's versatility and encompassing musicianship are handsomely displayed in their brilliant recording (RCA Victor LSC-2879, also Mono) of Stravinsky's "Agon."—is perhaps the most admired of his compositions of the past decade—and of Gunther Schuller's cleverly and vividly imaginative vignettes "Seven Studies on Themes of Roul Klee." These latter are eocative and successful attempts to represent in music the ideas represented visually in seven of Klee's abstract paintings.

Victor Inks Jane Marsh, Moscow Contest Winner, & Hopes for a Van Cliburn

RCA Victor, which struck gold in signing Van Cliburn, first American winner of the Tchaikowsky International Music Contest in Moscow several years ago, has tapped the same vein in wrapping up Jane Marsh, 24-year-old California-born soprano who won first prize in the recent voice competition held in Moscow.

Miss Marsh had been in the Victor orbit since 1965 when she was engaged by the Boston Symphony for vocal assignments. The Boston Symphony also records for Victor.

Miss Marsh's initial recording for Victor will consist of two live performances at the Berkshire Tanglewood Festival in Lenox, Mass., July 24 and Aug. 13. She will be doing the numbers she sang in the Moscow competition, including selections by Tchaikowsky and Verdi.

Cliburn is the only other American to win in the Moscow competition. He received worldwide publicity at the time and his first Victor recording, the First Tchaikowsky Concerto, became the only classical album in history ever to sell more than 1,000,000 copies.

The Providence Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 66,826 SUN. 200,259

SEP 25 1966

John Browning, the young prize-winning American pianist, plays with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting, on an RCA record (LM-2897). Their efforts combine beautifully in Concertos No. 1 and No. 2, by Prokofieff. A different pianistic style is required here and what is more, it is delivered. Strength, rhythmic verve and musical collaboration never waver. These works, which both date from 1912, are full of the technical idioms that one learns to identify after hearing the music of this composer. There is a freshness and vitality about this performance that carries it along and with the sensitive Leinsdorf baton in charge, the listener is always aware of beauty and joy, both in the writing and in the performing.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163.400

AUG 1966

RECORDING OF SPECIAL MERIT

Ⓢ Ⓜ RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloë (complete ballet). Orchestre de la Suisse Romande and Radio Lausanne Choir, Ernest Ansermet cond. LONDON CS 6456 $5.79, CM 9456* $4.79.

Performance: Richly poetic
Recording: Full and spacious
Stereo Quality: Excellent

Ernest Ansermet's new recording of the complete Daphnis and Chloë not only represents an enormous improvement over his 1953 effort from the standpoint of sound, but it gives us an extraordinary synthesis of the poetry and drama inherent in the music and the story.

When it comes to drama and excitement, there can be no doubt that the Charles Munch-Boston Symphony recording still tops them all, and the late Pierre Monteux brought to his 1959 London recording a special poetic touch, if not very much dramatic tension. Ansermet here has managed to combine the best features of both approaches, and he has the benefit of London's finest recorded sound. The off-stage effects at the beginning and end of the pirates' scene come off particularly well.

I supervised the first complete recording of Daphnis and Chloë with Antal Dorati and the Minneapolis Symphony for Mercury, and am understandably fond of it. I also own the 1961 Munch-Boston Symphony recording. But I'm going to listen to this new Ansermet version many times, too. D. H.

LYNCHBURG, VA.
ADVANCE
D. 19,000

AUG 3 1966

There have been some excellent classical releases lately. "Stravinsky Conducts Pulcinello" (Columbia) is the complete score of his ballet with arias. Ormandy leads the Philadelphia Orchestra in Russian favorites in "March Slav" (Columbia), Erich Leinsdorf leads the Boston Symphony and Berg's La Vin with Phyllis Curtin the soloist in the latter work (RCA Victor). "Arthur Rubinstein-Chopin" (RCA Victor) features two old masters combining beautifully. Dietrich Fischer-Dieskau, who may be the world's best lieder singer, sings Schubert's "The Trout and Other Songs" (Angel).

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

OCT 8 1966

CLASSICAL SPECIAL MERIT

ERICH LEINSDORF PLAYS THE GOOD-TIME CLASSICS

Concert Arts Orch. (Leinsdorf). Capitol P 8637 (M); SP 8637 (S)

These seven familiar works get a bouncy, lively treatment from Leinsdorf and the Concert Arts Orchestra which should appeal to a broad audience. Included here are "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," "Dance of the Hours" and "The Moldau." It's a good time for all—performers and listeners.

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W.—CIRC. N. AVAIL.

AUG 6 1966

'Carmen' And Leinsdorf On Good Time Release

HOLLYWOOD—Two new "Good-Time Classics" albums are slated to be added to the series of light classical music by Capitol on July 25. The scheduled releases are "I Love Carmen," featuring the Sadler's Wells Opera conducted by Colin Davis, and "Erich Leinsdorf Plays The Good Time Classics" with the Concert Arts Orchestra. Leinsdorf is also the conductor of the Boston Symphony.

147

The Sunday Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
SUN. 351,015

OCT 2 1966

RECORDS: Chamber Music by Bostonians

By HERMAN SCHADEN
Record Critic of The Star

Making chamber music for fun and relaxation is a favorite diversion of many symphony orchestra players. Making chamber music for recordings and money probably is even more fun, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players would tell you.

Chamber music also is the favorite hobby of Peter Ustinov, he says in a 10-inch disc and written notes accompanying the three-record album (RCA Victor LSC-6167).

"A full appreciation of its possibilities and qualities of evocation usually comes relatively late in the life of the layman, when the mind has explored more accessible forms of music and is on the prowl for rarer, more personal experiences," Ustinov writes.

"And, curiously enough, chamber music possesses the most lasting of sound's satisfactions. Once he has discovered it, the real music lover never tires of it."

The Boston players aurally back Ustinov to the hilt with their eight pieces which are worthwhile because of the variety of the music and the infrequency with which it is heard.

For instance, it is wonderful to hear the airy, floating tones of the Boston Symphony's first woman member, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, in the Mozart Quartet for Flute and Strings. And equally ingratiating to hear Ralph Gomberg in Mozart's Quartet for Oboe and Strings.

There is Beethoven's sunny Serenade for Flute, Violin and Viola and Brahms' C Minor Quartet for Piano and Strings, the latter coming off less favorably than other pieces.

Happily, there is an excellent selection of modern works by top-rated American composers—Irving Fine's Fantasia for String Trio, Aaron Copland's Vitebsk, Elliott Carter's Woodwind Quintet and Walter Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments. In all, a feast to set any chamber music lover's mouth watering, prepared by those much-admired Boston first-desk players.

LAFAYETTE, IND.
JOURNAL AND COURIER
D. 43,500

OCT 1 1966

Listening On Records

By FRANK ARGANBRIGHT
Journal and Courier Staff Writer

THE NEW season has been started with a vengence by RCA Victor Records with the issuance of a beautifully done complete recording of Wagner's "Lohengrin."

Recorded in Symphony Hall, Boston, the new version sports a highly capable cost and a topnotch music director Erich Leinsdorf. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is elegant in its musical passages, and the Boston Chorus Pro Musica adds its full share under the direction of Alfred Nash Patterson.

Sandor Konya, tenor, a native of Hungary, turns in the most noteworthy performance of all in the title part. It is Konya's work which helps make this the outstanding venture it is. His singing is forceful, sensitive and convincing.

Rita Gorr, mezzo-soprano, also stands out for her forceful performance as Ortrud. Bass Jerome Hines as Henry the Fowler comes through strong, but he lacks the luster of old. Lucine Amara, soprano, seems a bit cold and unconvincing as Elsa of Brabant. William Dooley, baritone, as Frederick of Telramund, makes the most of his role. Calvin Marsh, baritone, as the king's herald, rings lukewarm.

I think it is mostly because of Leinsdorf and Konya that this monumental accomplishment is so above the average. Leinsdorf seems to have full understanding of the Wagnerian styles, and Konya has equal understanding of the role of Lohengrin. Choral demands are extreme, but the chorus rings forth with brilliance.

It's noted too that the additional lines of the hero's "In Fernem Land" have been restored to Act III. This portion has been performed only in Bayreuth presentations during the 1930s, according to the notes.

The total running time is three hours and thirty-five minutes. So, you need to set aside an entire evening to thoroughly enjoy the production. Or, you can sit through a half at a time.

The five-disc set is accompanied by an illustrated brochure with notes on the opera and an German-English libretto. The sound is beautiful in monophonic sound — it must be really spectacular in stereo!

CHICAGO HEIGHTS, ILL.
STAR
TW. 19,000

OCT 3 0 1966

Music In The Groove

To get back in the groove, from RCA-Victor, comes a memorable recording by the distinguished master of the piano, Artur Rubinstein, who performs the youthful Brahms D Minor Concerto with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony.

It's hard to believe that Rubinstein is 80, hearing the demoniac fury of the opening movement, the tender lyrical adagio, and the sparkling finale. Cherish this album as the zenith of a great musician's interpretive powers; we shall not again have an artist of Rubinstein's calibre to entrance us, but the lp will give many years of delight well after his career ends.

COURIER-POST
CAMDEN, N. J.
D. 99,700 SUN. 99,295

OCT 22 1966

Joseph S. Wells—

Records

* * *

GREAT STRIDES in popularity among classical music buffs have been made by a chamber group since its debut in New York in 1964. Now, in a new RCA-Victor three-disc set, "THE BOSTON SYMPHONY CHAMBER PLAYERS" — (LM-6167), the musicians show why.

Led by Erich Leinsdorf, who also is music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the nine-member chamber orchestra plays selections by Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Copland, Fine, Carter and Piston with equal adeptness.

The Dynagroove recordings, all excellent in quality of reproduction as well as quality of performance, are supplemented by a 10-inch disc containing a discussion of the album and chamber music in general. Participants on the "bonus" record are actor-writer-director-chamber music buff Peter Ustinov, who also wrote the notes for the album; Leinsdorf and concertmaster Joseph Silverstein.

Among the best of the "all-good" selections are the lyrical "Quartet for Flute and Strings" by Mozart, and Aaron Copland's "Vitebsk."

* * *

THE GROUP consists of the "first desk" men of the Boston Symphony; Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Wlat, bassoon, and James Stagliano, horn. Also on the album are Alfred Krips, heard as associate violin, and Claude Frank, pianist.

The boxed set is as good an introduction to this form of music (a form too long shelved into a "back seat" in musical circles) as any on the market today.

St. Louis
Globe-Democrat
D. 305,904 SUN. 343,016

OCT 29 1966

Record Reviews

By CLARK MITZE

RCA VICTOR LM/LSC 2917

BRAHMS CONCERTO NO. 1 in D Major
Artur Rubinstein
Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf conducting

Rubinstein has been a favorite of audiences for several decades. His success is a combination of magnificent showmanship, superb press agentry and excellent piano playing. Unfortunately his showmanship loses its visual effectiveness on recordings but his warm romantic style comes through beautifully with Leinsdorf's sympathetic accompaniment. The combination is at its best in presenting Brahms so that certain technical deficiencies of the pianist can be overlooked. This is the second recordng of the Brahms First by the Rubinstein-Leinsdorf combination.

It is difficult to compare recordings but this has a slight edge on warmth of style. Much is made of the fact that Rubinstein played the concerto under Joachim who also conducted the first performance with the composer at the piano. It is impossible to guarantee authenticity with such a vague relationship but it does provide interesting historical background. There is one strange intonation problem in the first movement which may be the result of an unfortunate tradition. The solo horn is quite sharp—to the point that it can be assumed the player used the natural horn harmonics. Brahms may have admired the non-valve horn but he certainly would have preferred the passage being in tune. With this one exception the orchestra is excellent and the total effect of the recording is top notch.

Oregon Journal
PORTLAND, ORE.
D. 146,403 SAT. 134,613

OCT 15 1966

These We Like

By ANTHONY CRESSWELL
Journal Staff Writer

Concert

There is more than masterful technique, more than strength and sensitivity in the new recording by Artur Rubinstein — his second — of Brahms' first piano concerto. The concerto, a youthful work by a composer who was a towering figure at the culmination of the romantic age, might seem an unlikely vehicle for a pianist of Rubinstein's "maturity" (to use a euphemism) but age and youth combine in as sparkling a performance of this exhuberant music as we have heard on records. The orchestral collaboration of the Boston Symphony, under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf, is a felicitous one. All in all, the recording is superb. RCA Victor, LM-LSC 2917.

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
NEWS-PRESS
D. 35,000 S. 36,500
OCT 22 1966

DISC COURSE ON CLASSICS

Boston Group Provides Best in Chamber Music

By Bert Willard
News-Press Staff Writer

One of the gratifications a record reviewer has, aside from the obvious pleasure of listening to finely-recorded music, is the occasional salute or acknowledgment from a reader of the column.

This acknowledgment came last week, in the form of a telephone call from one who had read a recent column. And this reader thanked me for bringing to his attention the music of the late Danish composer, Carl Nielsen (1865-1931) whose works are just now coming into vogue.

This is heartwarming and makes the chore of turning out weekly record reviews a little less tedious. Actually, it is enjoyable work, and the reviewer can be choosy—he does not have to listen, if the music is boring.

Which is a rather roundabout introduction to another musical treasure—an album by a group of fine musicians heard at Ojai last May—"The Boston Symphony Chamber Players" (RCA-Victor Stereo 6167) in a three-record set which includes works by Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Copland, Fine, Carter and Piston.

This is chamber music at its best, and as Peter Ustinov describes it in a bonus 10-inch record accompanying the album: "A full appreciation of its possibilities and qualities of evocation usually comes relatively late in the life of the layman, when the mind has explored more accessible forms of music and is on the prowl for rarer, more personal experiences. And, curiously enough, chamber music possesses the most lasting of sound's satisfactions. Once he has discovered it, the real music lover never tires of it."

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players consist of first-desk men of the Boston Symphony Orchestra: Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola; Jules Eskin, cello; Georges Moleux, bass; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon, and John Stagliano, horn. Alfred Krips also augments the group as an associate violinist, and Claude Frank is a guest artist on piano.

These players are all virtuosos, and they also are "team players" in the ensemble, with a give and take which has few equals anywhere (at this writing, I can think of only the Melos Ensemble that is in their class).

NEVER PALL

Moreover, they make the transition from music of the 18th and 19th centuries to contemporary works without a hitch. The exquisite flute playing of Doriot Anthony Dwyer in Mozart's Quartet in D Major is balanced by the modern sound of Elliott Carter's Woodwind Quintet. There are contrasts in this music, and there is a definite relationship—a continuity—for even though contemporary, Carter and Piston are in the classic tradition.

Peter Ustinov, the celebrated actor and writer, shows his love for and keen delight in the music of this group. Ustinov discusses the music with Silverstein and Erich Leinsdorf, director and conductor of the Boston Symphony. And in the album notes, Ustinov writes of the Mozart works:

"They never pall. They have the resilience of mirrors, reflecting all that which is most agreeable in human possibility. . . ."

Of the Beethoven Serenade for Flute, Violin and Viola, Op. 25, which takes up one side of one record in the set, Ustinov says:

"If Mozart is air and water, Beethoven is earth and fire. If Beethoven is Prospero, Mozart is Ariel. The one is grace deepened into thought; the other, thought lightened into grace. This Serenade is an invasion into Mozart's territory. One is amazed to see the Professor on the dance floor, even more to see him dance so well."

He is equally perceptive in discussing the Mozart Quartet in F Major for Oboe and Strings, K. 370; the long but rewarding Brahms Quartet in C Minor for Piano and Strings, Op. 60; Irving Fine's Fantasia for String Trio (a lovely, singing rhapsody); Copland's mordant Vitebsk, Carter's Woodwind Quintet and Piston's sparkling Divertimento for Nine Instruments.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750
MAY 10 1967
New England Newsclip

Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor; Artur Rubinstein and the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting; less successful, because with less energy, than the recordings by the same people of the 4th and 5th concertos (RCA Victor LM/LSC 2947).

Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 4 in G; Ivan Moravec and the Vienna Musikverein Orchestra, Martin Turnovsky conducting; some eccentricities like an excessively slow Andante, but mostly straightforward and effective; conductor starts with flabby rhythm, but gets better and is attentive, though woodwind insufficiently audible in the finale. Don't play it at 45 r.p.m. as the sleeve instructs you: You'll have it in D flat (Connoisseur Society 162).

Beethoven: Sonatas in C minor ("Pathetique") and C sharp minor ("Moonlight"), with pianist Ivan Meravec; some fussy bits in a context of playing that is generally straightforward and vigorous; the slow movements seem too slow; the photograph on the sleeve is startling. (Connoisseur Society 1566.)

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, March 5, 1967

RECORDINGS

Rubinstein-Leinsdorf

The "Aristocrat of Orchestras," as the Boston Symphony is wont to call itself, and the "Aristocrat of Pianists," as the indefatiguable Artur Rubinstein might be billed, have collaborated in a brilliant recorded version of Beethoven's Concerto No. 3, also from RCA and as welcome in its own genre as the Shaw "Messiah."

It is difficult for some to regard a piano concerto—and particularly a Beethoven—as having been definitively recorded until Rubinstein has had a try at it. And while this may speak well for the artist's standing with his public, it is more a statement of personal feeling than a yardstick of artistic accomplishment. However, there is an unmistakeable Rubinstein "magic" which can and does come through even a recording of his work, and it does on this disc. Rubinstein's is a dramatic, intensely personal approach to this concerto, and he interprets freely what he obviously feels the composer intended.

Missing is the flash of a Van Cliburn, the interpretive power of a Richter, but pervading is the Rubinstein touch, the sureness that comes only with long mastery of an art form.

Conductor is the BSO's Erich Leinsdorf, as always the perfectionist and as always alert to the demands of his soloist. (Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 3, Artur Rubinstein, Boston Symphony Orchestra, LSC 2947, stereo, LM 2947 mono).

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, March 19, 1967

Rubinstein records mazurkas of Chopin

By FRANK B. STEPHENSON

RECORD REVIEWS

Like the great Toscanini, Artur Rubinstein is making some of his most telling contributions to the phonograph late in his career.

Fortunately for posterity, the pianist's skills remain virtually untouched by the ravages of time, and his interpretive insight continues to grow.

All of this is brought about by the arrival of two new albums, the first of which is devoted to the complete mazurkas of Chopin. Rubinstein has recorded this cycle at least twice before, first in a series of separately issued 78 rpm records, followed in the mid-Fifties by a new microgroove edition. Now, he has taken another view of this superb music in stereo and in Dynagroove (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 6177, also Mono, three discs).

All forty-nine of the mazurkas, including those without opus numbers are performed in the master pianist's cultivated style which turn each of these little dances into miniature masterpieces of drama and poetic beauty. His tone is well served by the engineers as if to emphasize the Rubinstein position as this era's distinguished Chopin interpreter. Irving Kolodin's notes are valuable enough to cherish in themselves, and, as a bonus, the pianist's current discography is detailed.

With the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf, Rubinstein provides his latest reading of the mighty Beethoven Third Piano Concerto. Having already committed to disc the Fourth and Fifth by the same participants, it appears that RCA intends to complete the cycle which will be the second time Rubinstein has offered these before the stereo microphones (the first was with the Symphony of the Air under Josef Krips issued in 1958).

Those who are familiar with the Polish pianist's particular brand of Beethoven will take for granted the grand manner approach. Excitement abounds on this occasion as it did back in the forties when Victor issued the Rubinstein-Toscanini radio performance, inferior sonics and all. The new venture certainly has no such lack, and the Leinsdorf conception obviously has roots in the Toscanini (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2947, also mono).

Another endeavor comes from the Bostonians and Leinsdorf in the form of Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 in E Flat (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2918, also mono). If nothing else, Leinsdorf is expanding the recorded repertoire of the orchestra, and that in itself is a positive boon for the listener. Power, sweep, and wide dynamic contrast make this a persuasive accomplishment, aided no little by the RCA engineers.

While in Boston, two discs by the Pops under Fiedler are deserving of our attentions. First, a collection of Strauss waltzes, marches, and polkas entitled (surprise!) "Tales of the Vienna Woods" (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2928) which offers about the most rousing and delectable realizations of this kind of thing one is likely to find anywhere on records. The Bostonians beat the Viennese at their own game.

What with St. Patrick's Day just past, Fiedler takes his men to Ireland with an engaging romp through Leroy Anderson's Irish Suite and a rousing survey of some of George M. Cohan's best songs. Somehow, the inclusion of Lehar's "Count of Luxembourg Waltzes" and the "Look Sharp March" are somewhat incongruous in an album entitled "Irish Night at the Pops" (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2946, also mono).

Andre Previn continues to rise as a conductor with a superb recording of William Walton's First Symphony (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2927, also mono). The work itself assumes greater importance with each new hearing, especially here with the London Symphony playing so brilliantly under Previn's vigorous baton.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Saturday, March 4, 1967

PIANIST Artur Rubinstein and his good friend Erich Leinsdorf with the Boston Symphony Orchestra collaborate in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 and this is the third of the Beethoven Concertos by this team, following earlier releases of the No. 4 and 5.

Through the decades one marvels at the ever-growing technique of this beloved pianist, heavy with years yet lighthearted as a boy.

It is a fine collaboration, and the high-spirited and dramatic key changes are beautifully set forth. Stereo/mono LSC/LM-2947. RCA Victor in Dynagrove sound.

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
D. 133,303
JAN 1 1967

Pianists' recordings get new year off to good start

By FRANK B. STEPHENSON

RECORD REVIEWS

Sounding the first notes of the New Year are a group of pianists and in total, it is a good sound they make, too.

First, there is that titan of the pianoforte, Artur Rubinstein, again giving us a performance of the Brahms First Piano Concerto, this time with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf and in the most penetrating of Dynagroove sonics (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2917, also mono.) Were it not for the fact that Rubinstein himself has spoiled us for all time with his matchless recording of the same work (with Reiner and the Chicago) in th pre-stereo era, the current enterprise would emerge as a brilliant success. As it is, memories cannot be erased, and one can only look back longingly at that previous and unforgettable landmark.

Leonard Bernstein describes his composition, "The Age of Anxiety," as a symphony for piano and orchestra, and on re-hearing this tightened-up revised version, one is impressed with its worth (Columbia Stereo MS 6885, also mono.) With Phillippe Entremont as piano soloist and the New York Philharmonic, the composer-conductor makes a compelling case for his own score. The soloist, admirable as he is, does not quite have the style that Lukas Foss displayed in an earlier recording.

Van Cliburn, like all those who reach fame quickly and spectacularly, has more than his share of detractors. However, no matter his minor shortcomings, he is probably the most exciting of the new generation of pianists, and certainly one of the most prodigiously endowed. That he is a master of things other than Rachmaninoff and Tchaikovsky is shown in his latest recording, his first in far too long a time. His approach to Beethoven's Sonata No. 26 in E Flat (Les Adieux) and Mozart's Sonata for Piano, No. 10, is fresh and stunningly played while at the same time completely detailed (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2931, also Mono.)

Lorin Hollander, of course, has not yet reached the international celebrity of Cliburn, but he is well on his way, and, if anything, he has triumphed over an even greater obstacle, that of having been a child prodigy. He demonstrates in his latest endeavor that he is far more than a showy, shallow virtuoso. His ambitious program consisting of Bach's "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring," Beethoven's Sonata in D Minor Tempest), Brahms' Intermezzo in B-Flat Minor, and Schumann's Arabeske reveal him as the sensitive, maturing (and he is yet only 22) musician which he is (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2912 also mono).

John Browning is another of the younger pianists who has come in for his share of acclaim. His career has been a steady one, and his progress has been impressive. He is not at his present best, however, in his most recent recording, a coupling of Prokofieff's first two piano concertos (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2897, also mono) in which he collaborates with the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf. There is no shortage of pianistic fireworks, however, but the whole thing emerges as somewhat hard and brittle which is certainly one view of the Russian composer's style.

A two-disc album, New Music for the Piano (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 7042, also mono) provides a panorama of contemporary American piano music, sympathetically and stylishly played by Robert Helps. Underwritten by the Abbey Whiteside Foundation, the four sides include some 24 compositions including Ernst Bacon's "Pig Town Fling," a bit of homespun Americana which evokes more than the expected amount of nostalgia. Other composers represented Adler, Alexander, Babbitt, Berger, Berkowitz, Brunswick, Cazden, Dahl, Fine, Glanville-Hicks, Gould, Helps himself, Hovhaness, Kennan, Kraft, Overton, Perle, Pisk, Powell, and Prostakoff.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BUFFALO COURIER EXPRESS
Sunday, March 5, 1967

Reviewing the Records

Rubinstein's Performance With Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Knockout

MORE BEETHOVEN comes from Artur Rubinstein and Erich Leinsdorf, who leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Piano Concerto No. 3 in C Minor (Victor LSC 2947). The dialogues between soloist and orchestra reveal the poetic nature of Rubinstein's playing. For example, his more lenient phrasing of the clarinet's theme in the last movement is a welcome change from the straightforward approach of many pianists. And for its sparkling sweeps of notes, Rubinstein's performance is a knockout.

Two other pianists offer entertainments in the jazz medium. Both have a big, dynamic style, and both work with trios.

DAYTON DAILY NEWS
DAYTON, OHIO
D. 155,541 SUN. 203,904
DEC 18 1966

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN
Sheer Grandeur From the Piano

For a few months, there is the new recording (RCA Victor LSC 2911) by Artur Rubinstein with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf's baton. They chose to collaborate on Brahms' First Concerto and the result is a spine-tingling performance with the sturdy Rubinstein playing inspiringly.

What to listen for is often the big question for those who have only recently unlocked the door to the world of music. So a new album, "How to Listen to Bach," by two Jesuit priests, Thomas Culley and C. J. McNapsy, may fill a real need.

Recorded by the American Record society and distributed through Olympia Records, the two sides feature Father Culley at the keyboard while Father McNapsy discusses the fugue as a musical form.

Musicologists with an impressive background, the two have produced a sound and informative lesson. The piano hasn't the sound of Rubinstein's, but then that is not the purpose.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
MAR 11 1967

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

BEETHOVEN: PIANO CONCERTO NO. 3
Artur Rubinstein/Boston Symphony (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 2947 (M); LSC 2947 (S)

This is an excellent, highly moving addition to two previous recordings of Beethoven works, by this magnificent grouping. Rubinstein's reading is powerful and imaginative as is Leinsdorf's conducting. Lyrical passages by Rubinstein are tenderly performed. Should go high on classical chart.

MORNING GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 234,750

MAY 10 1967

New England Newsclip

Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 3 in C minor; Artur Rubinstein and the Boston Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting; less successful, because with less energy, than the recordings by the same people of the 4th and 5th concertos (RCA Victor LM/LSC 2947).

Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 4 in G; Ivan Moravec and the Vienna Musikverein Orchestra, Martin Turnovsky conducting; some eccentricities like an excessively slow Andante, but mostly straightforward and effective; conductor starts with flabby rhythm, but gets better and is attentive, though woodwind insufficiently audible in the finale. Don't play it at 45 r.p.m. as the sleeve instructs you: You'll have it in D flat (Connoisseur Society 163).

Beethoven: Sonatas in C minor ("Pathetique") and C sharp minor ("Moonlight"), with pianist Ivan Meravec; some fussy bits in a context of playing that is generally straightforward and vigorous; the slow movements seem too slow; the photograph on the sleeve is startling. (Connoisseur Society 1566.)

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

ALBANY TIMES UNION
Sunday, March 5, 1967

RECORDINGS

Rubinstein-Leinsdorf

The "Aristocrat of Orchestras," as the Boston Symphony is wont to call itself, and the "Aristocrat of Pianists," as the indefatiguable Artur Rubinstein might be billed, have collaborated in a brilliant recorded version of Beethoven's Concerto No. 3, also from RCA and as welcome in its own genre as the Shaw "Messiah."

It is difficult for some to regard a piano concerto—and particularly a Beethoven—as having been definitively recorded until Rubinstein has had a try at it. And while this may speak well for the artist's standing with his public, it is more a statement of personal feeling than a yardstick of artistic accomplishment. However, there is an unmistakeable Rubinstein "magic" which can and does come through even a recording of his work, and it does on this disc. Rubinstein's is a dramatic, intensely personal approach to this concerto, and he interprets freely what he obviously feels the composer intended.

Missing is the flash of a Van Cliburn, the interpretive power of a Richter, but pervading is the Rubinstein touch, the sureness that comes only with long mastery of an art form.

Conductor is the BSO's Erich Leinsdorf, as always the perfectionist and as always alert to the demands of his soloist. (Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 3, Artur Rubinstein, Boston Symphony Orchestra, LSC 2947, stereo, LM 2947 mono).

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

SYRACUSE HERALD AMERICAN
Sunday, March 19, 1967

Rubinstein records mazurkas of Chopin

By FRANK B. STEPHENSON

RECORD REVIEWS

Like the great Toscanini, Artur Rubinstein is making some of his most telling contributions to the phonograph late in his career.

Fortunately for posterity, the pianist's skills remain virtually untouched by the ravages of time, and his interpretive insight continues to grow.

All of this is brought about by the arrival of two new albums, the first of which is devoted to the complete mazurkas of Chopin. Rubinstein has recorded this cycle at least twice before, first in a series of separately issued 78 rpm records, followed in the mid-Fifties by a new microgroove edition. Now, he has taken another view of this superb music in stereo and in Dynagroove (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 6177, also Mono, three discs).

All forty-nine of the mazurkas, including those without opus numbers are performed in the master pianist's cultivated style which turn each of these little dances into miniature masterpieces of drama and poetic beauty. His tone is well served by the engineers as if to emphasize the Rubinstein position as this era's distinguished Chopin interpreter. Irving Kolodin's notes are valuable enough to cherish in themselves, and, as a bonus, the pianist's current discography is detailed.

With the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf, Rubinstein provides his latest reading of the mighty Beethoven Third Piano Concerto. Having already committed to disc the Fourth and Fifth by the same participants, it appears that RCA intends to complete the cycle which will be the second time Rubinstein has offered these before the stereo microphones (the first was with the Symphony of the Air under Josef Krips issued in 1958).

Those who are familiar with the Polish pianist's particular brand of Beethoven will take for granted the grand manner approach. Excitement abounds on this occasion as it did back in the forties when Victor issued the Rubinstein-Toscanini radio performance, inferior sonics and all. The new venture certainly has no such lack, and the Leinsdorf conception obviously has roots in the Toscanini (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2947, also mono).

Another endeavor comes from the Bostonians and Leinsdorf in the form of Bruckner's Symphony No. 4 in E Flat (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2915, also mono). If nothing else, Leinsdorf is expanding the recorded repertoire of the orchestra, and that in itself is a positive boon for the listener. Power, sweep, and wide dynamic contrast make this a persuasive accomplishment, aided no little by the RCA engineers.

While in Boston, two discs by the Pops under Fiedler are deserving of our attentions. First, a collection of Strauss waltzes, marches, and polkas entitled (surprise!) "Tales of the Vienna Woods" (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2928) which offers about the most rousing and delectable realizations of this kind of thing one is likely to find anywhere on records. The Bostonians beat the Viennese at their own game.

What with St. Patrick's Day just past, Fiedler takes his men to Ireland with an engaging romp through Leroy Anderson's Irish Suite and a rousing survey of some of George M. Cohan's best songs. Somehow, the inclusion of Lehar's "Count of Luxembourg Waltzes" and the "Look Sharp March" are somewhat incongruous in an album entitled "Irish Night at the Pops" (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2946, also mono).

Andre Previn continues to rise as a conductor with a superb recording of William Walton's First Symphony (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2927, also mono). The work itself assumes greater importance with each new hearing, especially here with the London Symphony playing so brilliantly under Previn's vigorous baton.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO EVENING NEWS
Saturday, March 4, 1967

PIANIST Artur Rubinstein and his good friend Erich Leinsdorf with the Boston Symphony Orchestra collaborate in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 3 and this is the third of the Beethoven Concertos by this team, following earlier releases of the No. 4 and 5.

Through the decades one marvels at the ever-growing technique of this beloved pianist, heavy with years yet lighthearted as a boy.

It is a fine collaboration, and the high-spirited and dramatic key changes are beautifully set forth. Stereo/mono LSC/LM-2947. RCA Victor in Dynagrove sound.

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
D. 133,303

JAN 1 1967

Pianists' recordings get new year off to good start

By FRANK B. STEPHENSON

RECORD REVIEWS

Sounding the first notes of the New Year are a group of pianists and in total, it is a good sound they make, too.

First, there is that titan of the pianoforte, Artur Rubinstein, again giving us a performance of the Brahms First Piano Concerto, this time with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf and in the most penetrating of Dynagroove sonics (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2917, also mono.) Were it not for the fact that Rubinstein himself has spoiled us for all time with his matchless recording of the same work (with Reiner and the Chicago) in th pre-stereo era, the current enterprise would emerge as a brilliant success. As it is, memories cannot be erased, and one can only look back longingly at that previous and unforgettable landmark.

Leonard Bernstein describes his composition, "The Age of Anxiety," as a symphony for piano and orchestra, and on re-hearing this tightened-up revised version, one is impressed with its worth (Columbia Stereo MS 6885, also mono.) With Phillippe Entremont as piano soloist and the New York Philharmonic, the composer-conductor makes a compelling case for his own score. The soloist, admirable as he is, does not quite have the style that Lukas Foss displayed in an earlier recording.

Van Cliburn, like all those who reach fame quickly and spectacularly, has more than his share of detractors. However, no matter his minor shortcomings, he is probably the most exciting of the new generation of pianists, and certainly one of the most prodigiously endowed. That he is a master of things other than Rachmaninoff and Tchaikovsky is shown in his latest recording, his first in far too long a time. His approach to Beethoven's Sonata No. 26 in E Flat (Les Adieux) and Mozart's Sonata for Piano, No. 10, is fresh and stunningly played while at the same time completely detailed (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2931, also Mono.)

Lorin Hollander, of course, has not yet reached the international celebrity of Cliburn, but he is well on his way, and, if anything, he has triumphed over an even greater obstacle, that of having been a child prodigy. He demonstrates in his latest endeavor that he is far more than a showy, shallow virtuoso. His ambitious program consisting of Bach's "Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring," Beethoven's Sonata in D Minor Tempest), Brahms' Intermezzo in B-Flat Minor, and Schumann's Arabeske reveal him as the sensitive, maturing (and he is yet only 22) musician which he is (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2912 also mono).

John Browning is another of the younger pianists who has come in for his share of acclaim. His career has been a steady one, and his progress has been impressive. He is not at his present best, however, in his most recent recording, a coupling of Prokofieff's first two piano concertos (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 2897, also mono) in which he collaborates with the Boston Symphony under Leinsdorf. There is no shortage of pianistic fireworks, however, but the whole thing emerges as somewhat hard and brittle which is certainly one view of the Russian composer's style.

A two-disc album, New Music for the Piano (RCA Victor Stereo LSC 7042, also mono) provides a panorama of contemporary American piano music, sympathetically and stylishly played by Robert Helps. Underwritten by the Abbey Whiteside Foundation, the four sides include some 24 compositions including Ernst Bacon's "Pig Town Fling," a bit of homespun Americana which evokes more than the expected amount of nostalgia. Other composers represented Adler, Alexander, Babbitt, Berger, Berkowitz, Brunswick, Cazden, Dahl, Fine, Glanville-Hicks, Gould, Helps himself, Hovhaness, Kennan, Kraft, Overton, Perle, Pisk, Powell, and Prostakoff.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO COURIER EXPRESS
Sunday, March 5, 1967

Reviewing the Records

Rubinstein's Performance With Boston Symphony Orchestra Is Knockout

MORE BEETHOVEN comes from Artur Rubinstein and Erich Leinsdorf, who leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Piano Concerto No. 3 in C Minor (Victor LSC 2947). The dialogues between soloist and orchestra reveal the poetic nature of Rubinstein's playing. For example, his more lenient phrasing of the clarinet's theme in the last movement is a welcome change from the straightforward approach of many younger pianists. And for its staggering sweeps of notes, Rubinstein's performance is a knockout.

Two other pianists offer entertainments in the jazz medium. Both have a big, dynamic style, and both work with trios.

DAYTON DAILY NEWS
DAYTON, OHIO
D. 155,541 SUN. 203,904
DEC 18 1966

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN
Sheer Grandeur From the Piano

For sheer grandeur, there is the new recording (RCA Victor LSC-2917) by Artur Rubinstein with the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf's baton. They chose to collaborate on Brahms' First Concerto and the result is a spine-tingling performance with the sturdy Rubinstein playing inspiringly.

What to listen for is often the big question for those who have only recently unlocked the door to the world of music. So a new album, "How to Listen to Bach," by two Jesuit priests, Thomas Culley and C. J. McNapsy, may fill a real need.

Recorded by the American Record society and distributed through Olympia Records, the two sides feature Father Culley at the keyboard while Father McNapsy discusses the fugue as a musical form.

Musicologists with an impressive background, the two have produced a sound and informative lesson. The piano hasn't the sound of Rubinstein's, but then that is not the purpose.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000

MAR 11 1967

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

BEETHOVEN: PIANO CONCERTO NO. 3
Artur Rubinstein/Boston Symphony (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 2947 (M); LSC 2947 (S)

This is an excellent, highly moving addition to two previous recordings of Beethoven works, by this magnificent grouping. Rubinstein's reading is powerful and imaginative as is Leinsdorf's conducting. Lyrical passages by Rubinstein are tenderly performed. Should go high on classical chart.

THE NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN
D. 137,900 SUN. 222,693
FEB 26 1967

Artur Rubinstein
Unsurpassed

Records

Artur Is Still A Wonder!

[redacted]

[redacted] Beethoven Piano Concerti, with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony. His performance of No. 3 in C minor is a model of classical control and balance, with the most exquisitely clear, pearly tone, and every phrase beautifully shaped within an overarching sense of design that keeps every element in perfect relationship to everything else.

The slow movement has a romantic warmth that never loses sight of the piece's classic orientation. The finale has an inescapably infectious elan. Leinsdorf and the orchestra [redacted] perfection

[redacted] also recorded Brahms Concerto No. 1 in D minor with Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (RCA Victor LSC-2917, also Mono), and this, too, is a rare and satisfying performance and recording from every point of view.

This is a craggy piece which has, it has been aptly said, "a massive grandeur alternately tempestuous and serene." Rubinstein encompasses all its technical difficulties with ample strength and security and its tender portions with repose and a wondrous sense of proportion that keeps one engrossed and enraptured throughout.

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
SENIOR SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,293,800
MAR 17 1967

Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 3—Artur Rubinstein, Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf [RCA Victor LSC2947]. Rubinstein is certainly one of the phenomena of our time. At an age (in his 70's) when most pianists are physically unable to continue, he is playing better than ever! Whether or not he plays this powerful, dramatic concerto better than the superb 1962 Richter recording [DGG 138-848] is really hard to decide. I have compared them over and over—favoring in some spots the Rubinstein, in others the Richter. In hedging a decision I can only note that Leinsdorf's accompaniment is rather pallid compared to DGG's Sanderling, and that DGG offers a short "bonus" work (Rondo in B-flat) on its LP. (R.H.)

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE
BUFFALO COURIER EXPRESS
Sunday
47

Classical

[redacted] No. 1 in D [redacted] STEIN with ERICH LEINSDORF [redacted] the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — RCA VICTOR LSC-2917 (Also in mono).

This fine disc, representing a continuing scholarly collaboration between an eminent pianist and conductor, pays tribute to Brahms, whose first large-scale work is presented with the same sort of lofty integrity with which the score abounds.

The concerto is full of contrast. It is by turns loaded with dramatic fire and yearningly melancholic lyricism, reflecting the composer's intense feeling for Clara Schumann. The emotion of the concerto is fully revealed by Rubinstein and Leinsdorf without resort to bombast or sentimentality.

Contrasts between the reflective middle movement and the tempestuous grandeur of the first and the sometimes rollicking concluding rondo are shown to fullest advantage and the listener is rewarded by feelings of complete satisfaction. Reproduction is excellent and stereo colorations are highly effective.

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100
FEB 1967

PROKOFIEV: Concertos for Piano [illegible] Orchestra: No. 1, in D flat, [illegible] No. 2, in G minor, Op. 16 [illegible] Browning, piano; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RCA VICTOR ® LM 2897, $4.79; LSC 2897, $5.79.

PROKOFIEV: Concertos for Piano and Orchestra: No. 1, in D flat, Op. 10; No. 3, in C, Op. 26; Sonata for Piano, No. 3, in A minor, Op. 28 [redacted] Eugene Jochum and the Berlin Philharmonic.

Leinsdorf captures much of the strength of the composer and the Boston Symphony strings reproduce the magical sensuality which Bruckner obviously wanted.

The Detroit Free Press
D. 509,410 SUN. 555,779
MAY 7 1967

LIKE SPIRITUALS OF OLD

Those Jazz Masses: They're Gaining Some Recognition

Leonard Bernstein

Erich Leinsdorf

Anton Bruckner, most major recording companies have sought to place on the market the complete roster of his symphonies.

The most widely known of these works is Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, subtitled "Romantic." Two examples of this work have recently been released, one with Erich Leinsdorf leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the other with Eugene Jochum and the Berlin Philharmonic.

But the entire performance is overshadowed by Jochum's version.

Jochum has become an authority on Bruckner and is engaged in recording all of his nine symphonies. His performance of a Bruckner symphony this past season with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra was a memorable musical experience. It is no wonder that his performance of the Bruckner Fourth outshines that of Leinsdorf, good as the latter is. (Jochum, Deutsche Grammaphon, 139134/5; Leinsdorf, Victor, LSC 2915.)

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 200,250
APR 9 1967
New England Newsclip

LATE BRAHMS music was inestimably enriched by his two Sonatas in Opus 120, which he wrote for clarinet and piano, three years before his death. Brahms had always favored the low toned instruments in orchestral writing and many times has given important statements to the viola.

He made a version of these two Sonatas, Opus 120, for viola and piano and on an RCA recording, LSC-2933, we may hear Walter Trampler, violist and Meczyslaw Horszowski, pianist, playing the richly expressive music, with extraordinary musicianship.

There is little choice between the first in F minor and the second in E flat. The sweep of the phrases, the grace of the thematic material and the apparent pleasure of the performers, add up to a rare listening experience. The viola voice is beautifully complemented by the piano in a chamber work of great beauty played by two experts in the field.

THE "Aristocrat of Orchestras," the Boston Symphony, so well known here, is so labeled on all the RCA recordings they make. A recent one, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, LSC-2936, features the Symphony No. 3 by Brahms as well as his Tragic Overture. The interpretation is metic[illegible] sicall[illegible]

In [illegible] heard the [illegible] Vienna critic, Eduard Hanslick, called it a new "Eroica." It has long since earned its own place in the repertoire and performances like this one under Leinsdorf's conducting will keep it there.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100
JUL 1966

MOZART: The Early Symphonies (Nos. 1-15); Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of London conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. Westminster set WM-1001, six sides, or Stereo WMS-1001, $9.57.

®WESTMINSTER has given its old Leinsdorf-Mozart integral series a new lease on life by involving it in the new low-priced "Multiples" format. The only question is: how extensively will Westminster carry this reissue program through? This album presents no problems, for it is a straight combination of three individual discs from the original group (XWN-18861/3, respectively, or ®WST-14092/7), now deleted as singles. Only a few more of these records were released in stereo, however, so that one must assume, unless Westminster has been hiding the stereo versions in its vaults all this time, that any further reissue combinations will have to totter between stereo and mono-only. I do hope that this will not deter Westminster from republishing its full sequence as "Multiples" which, of course, is not to say that Leinsdorf's series is without defects which may become the more evident as other companies, especially Vox with its projected Vox Box coverage of these works, mount some competition. Leinsdorf belongs to the crisp-objectivity school of Mozart interpretation, so that his performances are full of vigor and quite briskly paced for the most part. This brings out the ebullience and color of these interesting early scores (two of which are not by Mozart at all), but it does some violence to their simple charm by sometimes driving them too hard. Also, while Leinsdorf is wise enough to use an orchestra reduced to nearly chamber proportions for the sake of clarity, his players, though plainly excellent musicians, sound as if they have been a bit rushed, or ill-rehearsed, for especially the strings are a bit ragged at times. Also, the stereo sonics are not outstanding, with rather lopsided channel balance favoring the left side. (I might add that my "factory-sealed" stereo review copy was afflicted with some terribly noisy and frequently otherwise defective surfaces; the charitable assumption is that this does not apply to the whole production run.) The triple-sleeve album includes excellent annotations.

—J.W.B.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
APR 29 1967

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

PROKOFIEV: SYMPHONY NO. 3/SCYTHIAN SUITE

Boston Symphony (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM-2934 (M); LSC-2934 (S)

Victor continues its commendable Prokofiev series with another fine pressing by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony. The stark, dark, dissonant Symphony is powerfully performed. The "Ala and Lolly" Suite wraps up the album well.

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 20,600
JAN 15 1967

PR[illegible] [illegible]6, op. 111. Boston Sym. O. Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor (S) LSC-2834, $5.79; (M) LM-2834, $4.79

Intense, introspective, melodically dis-ting[illegible] sym[illegible] of [illegible] Wo[illegible] denser orchestral sound, the heroic sweep of the Ormandy recording of this work, but the characteristics of the Leinsdorf reading—clarity of line and architecture, leanness, and the projection of a certain weary determination—seem particularly suitable. Leinsdorf underlines the great melancholy of the score without overplaying it; the happier moments, never without bitterness, are treated tenderly but without sentimentality. An unusually fine performance.

Anthony Salvatore, the recording engineer, covers himself in splendor, momentarily banishing memories of his Los Angeles Philharmonic job reviewed above.

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
FEB 12 1967
New England Newsclip

Music

JOHN [redacted]

[redacted] [illegible]ofieff S[illegible] John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf play the Prokofieff Piano Concertos Nos. 1 and 2 (LM-LSC 2897). Browning's steel-edged precision is matched by Leinsdorf and the BSO. But a detracting feature is Browning's abruptly chiseled phrasing, especially in the Second Concerto.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
APR 1 1967

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

BRAHMS: SYMPHONY NO. 3/TRAGIC OVERTURE

Boston Symphony Orch. RCA Victor LM 2936 (M); LSC 2936 (S)

Brahms' "Symphony No. 3" has been recorded many times, but seldom with as high a quality of musicianship as is given by Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony. It's a warhorse work by a warhorse orchestra. And it should be a warhorse on the dealers' shelves.

149

THE NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN
D. 137,900 SUN. 222,693
FEB 26 1967

Artur Rubinstein
Unsurpassed

Records

Artur Is Still A Wonder!

By LOUIS NICHOLAS

HE IS also engaged in the recording all the Beethoven Piano Concerti, with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony. His performance of No. 3 in C minor is a model of classical control and balance, with the most exquisitely clear, pearly tone, and every phrase beautifully shaped within an overarching sense of design that keeps every element in perfect relationship to everything else.

The slow movement has a romantic warmth that never loses sight of the piece's classic orientation. The finale has an inescapably infectious elan. Leinsdorf and the orchestra match Rubinstein's perfection at every point (RCA Victor LSC 2947, also Mono).

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN has also recorded Brahms' Concerto No. 1 in D minor with Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (RCA Victor LSC-2917, also Mono), and this, too, is a rare and satisfying performance and recording from every point of view.

This is a craggy piece which has, it has been aptly said, "a massive grandeur alternately tempestuous and serene." Rubinstein encompasses all its technical difficulties with ample strength and security and its tender portions with repose and a wondrous sense of proportion that keeps one engrossed and enraptured throughout.

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
SENIOR SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,293,800
MAR 17 1967

Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 3—Artur Rubinstein, Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf [RCA Victor LSC2947]: Rubinstein is certainly one of the phenomena of our time. At an age (in his 70's) when most pianists are physically unable to continue, he is playing better than ever! Whether or not he plays this powerful, dramatic concerto better than the superb 1962 Richter recording [DGG 138-848] is really hard to decide. I have compared them over and over—favoring in some spots the Rubinstein, in others the Richter. In hedging a decision I can only note that Leinsdorf's accompaniment is rather pallid compared to DGG's Sanderling, and that DGG offers a short "bonus" work (Rondo in B-flat) on its LP. (R.H.)

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

BUFFALO COURIER EXPRESS
Sunday, January 8, 1967

Classical

BRAHMS: PIANO CONCERTO No. 1 in D MINOR — ARTUR RUBINSTEIN with ERICH LEINSDORF conducting the BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — RCA VICTOR LSC-2917 (Also in mono).

This fine disc, representing a continuing scholarly collaboration between an eminent pianist and conductor, pays tribute to Brahms, whose first large-scale work is presented with the same sort of lofty integrity with which the score abounds.

The concerto is full of contrast. It is by turns loaded with dramatic fire and yearningly melancholic lyricism, reflecting the composer's intense feeling for Clara Schumann. The emotion of the concerto is fully revealed by Rubinstein and Leinsdorf without resort to bombast or sentimentality

Contrasts between the reflective middle movement and the tempestuous grandeur of the first and the sometimes rollicking concluding rondo are shown to fullest advantage and the listener is rewarded by feelings of complete satisfaction. Reproduction is excellent and stereo colorations are highly effective.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
APR 29 1967

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

PROKOFIEV: SYMPHONY NO. 3/SCYTHIAN SUITE

Boston Symphony (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM-2934 (M); LSC-2934 (S)

Victor continues its commendable Prokofiev series with another fine pressing by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony. The stark, dark, dissonant symphony is powerfully performed. The "Ala and Lolly" Suite wraps up the album well.

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 20,600
JAN 15 1967

PROKOFIEV: Symphony No. 6, op. 111. Boston Sym. O. Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor (S) LSC-2834, $5.79; (M) LM-2834, $4.79

Intense, introspective, melodically distinctive [illegible] symphony [illegible] of [illegible] World War II. Some may prefer the denser orchestral sound, the heroic sweep of the Ormandy recording of this work, but the characteristics of the Leinsdorf reading—clarity of line and architecture, leanness, and the projection of a certain weary determination—seem particularly suitable. Leinsdorf underlines the great melancholy of the score without overplaying it; the happier moments, never without bitterness, are treated tenderly but without sentimentality. An unusually fine performance.

Anthony Salvatore, the recording engineer, covers himself in splendor, momentarily banishing memories of his Los Angeles Philharmonic job reviewed above.

The Detroit Free Press
D. 509,410 SUN. 555,779
MAY 7 1967

LIKE SPIRITUALS OF OLD

Those Jazz Masses: They're Gaining Some Recognition

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 114,100
FEB 1967

PROKOFIEV: Concertos for Piano and Orchestra: No. 1, in D flat, Op. 10; No. 2, in G minor, Op. 16

John Browning, piano; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor ⓑ LM 2897, $4.79; LSC 2897, $5.79.

PROKOFIEV: Concertos for Piano and Orchestra: No. 1, in D flat, Op. 10; No. 3, in C, Op. 26; Sonata for Piano, No. 3, in A minor, Op. 28

Leonard Bernstein Erich Leinsdorf

Anton Bruckner, most major recording companies have sought to place on the market the complete roster of his symphonies.

The most widely known of these works is Bruckner's Symphony No. 4, subtitled "Romantic." Two examples of this work have recently been released, one with Erich Leinsdorf leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the other with Eugene Jochum and the Berlin Philharmonic.

Leinsdorf captures much of the strength of the composer and the Boston Symphony strings reproduce the magical sensuality which Bruckner obviously wanted.

But the entire performance is overshadowed by Jochum's version.

Jochum has become an authority on Bruckner and is engaged in recording all of his nine symphonies. His performance of a Bruckner symphony this past season with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra was a memorable musical experience. It is no wonder that his performance of the Bruckner Fourth outshines that of Leinsdorf, good as the latter is. (Jochum, Deutsche Grammaphon, 139134/5; Leinsdorf, Victor, LSC 2915.)

SUNDAY HERALD
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 280,100
FEB 12 1967
New England Newsclip

Music

JOHN BROWNING

[illegible] Prokofieff Sonata, pianist John Browning and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf play the Prokofieff Piano Concertos Nos. 1 and 2(LM-LSC 2897). Browning's steel-edged precision is matched by Leinsdorf and the BSO. But a detracting feature is Browning's abruptly chiseled phrasing, especially in the Second Concerto.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100
JUL 1966

MOZART: The Early Symphonies (Nos. 1-13); Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of London conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. Westminster set WM-1001, six sides, or Stereo WMS-1001, $9.57.

ⓢWESTMINSTER has given its old Leinsdorf-Mozart integral series a new lease on life by involving it in the new low-priced "Multiples" format. The only question is: how extensively will Westminster carry this reissue program through? This album presents no problems, for it is a straight combination of three individual discs from the original group (XWN-18861/3, respectively, or ⓢWST-14092/7), now deleted as singles. Only a few more of these records were released in stereo, however, so that one must assume, unless Westminster has been hiding the stereo versions in its vaults all this time, that any further reissue combinations will have to totter between stereo and mono-only. I do hope that this will not deter Westminster from republishing its full sequence as "Multiples" which, of course, is not to say that Leinsdorf's series is without defects which may become the more evident as other companies, especially Vox with its projected Vox Box coverage of these works, mount some competition. Leinsdorf belongs to the crisp-objectivity school of Mozart interpretation, so that his performances are full of vigor and quite briskly paced for the most part. This brings out the ebullience and color of these interesting early scores (two of which are not by Mozart at all), but it does some violence to their simple charm by sometimes driving them too hard. Also, while Leinsdorf is wise enough to use an orchestra reduced to nearly chamber proportions for the sake of clarity, his players, though plainly excellent musicians, sound as if they have been a bit rushed, or ill-rehearsed, for especially the strings are a bit ragged at times. Also, the stereo sonics are not outstanding, with rather lopsided channel balance favoring the left side. (I might add that my "factory-sealed" stereo review copy was afflicted with some terribly noisy and frequently otherwise defective surfaces; the charitable assumption is that this does not apply to the whole production run.) The triple-sleeve album includes excellent annotations. —J.W.B.

SUNDAY JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
CIRC. 200,250
APR 9 1967
New England Newsclip

LATE BRAHMS music was inestimably enriched by his two Sonatas in Opus 120, which he wrote for clarinet and piano, three years before his death. Brahms had always favored the low toned instruments in orchestral writing and many times has given important statements to the viola.

He made a version of these two Sonatas, Opus 120, for viola and piano and on an RCA recording, LSC-2933, we may hear Walter Trampler, violist and Meczyslaw Horszowski, pianist, playing the richly expressive music, with extraordinary musicianship.

There is little choice between the first in F minor and the second in E flat. The sweep of the phrases, the grace of the thematic material and the apparent pleasure of the performers, add up to a rare listening experience. The viola voice is beautifully complemented by the piano in a chamber work of great beauty played by two experts in the field.

THE "Aristocrat of Orchestras," the Boston Symphony, so well known here, is so labeled on all the RCA recordings they make. A recent one, conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, LSC-2936, features the Symphony No. 3 by Brahms as well as his Tragic Overture. The interpretation is meticulously accurate and musically exciting.

In the days when it was first heard the eminent Viennese critic, Eduard Hanslick, called it a new "Eroica." It has long since earned its own place in the repertoire and performances like this one under Leinsdorf's conducting will keep it there.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
APR 1 1967

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

BRAHMS: SYMPHONY NO. 3/TRAGIC OVERTURE

Boston Symphony Orch. RCA Victor LM 2936 (M); LSC 2936 (S)

Brahms' "Symphony No. 3" has been recorded many times, but seldom with as high a quality of musicianship as is given by Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony. It's a warhorse work by a warhorse orchestra. And it should be a warhorse on the dealers' shelves.

The Courier-Journal
LOUISVILLE, KY.
D. 229,925 SUN. 338,841
OCT 30 1966

The Record Shelf

By WILLIAM MOOTZ, Courier-Journal Music Critic

RCA VICTOR, never a company to give undue recorded attention to the realm of chamber music, plunges into this repertory with a vengeance in an album called "The Boston Symphony Chamber Players." Everything that can be done in the way of high-style salesmanship seems to have been done to make the release attractive.

First, it is packaged in a three-record album, automatically these days a sign of luxury in the record business. Then, Peter Ustinov is present to turn out the essays for the album notes. Playwright-actor Ustinov is the ultimate in glossy glamour for this kind of release. And, finally, Victor throws in an extra 10-inch record in which Ustinov, Erich Leinsdorf, and Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony and leader of its Chamber Players, pretend to sit around discussing the joys of listening to chamber music.

A Cute Word for Brahms

I say pretend, because the disc is carelessly edited, and there are times when the discussion doesn't make much sense—as if the three may have spoken at different times in different places, and then were brought together through the magic of tape techniques.

Ustinov is the most voluble of the three. He takes his duties as promoter of chamber music seriously, too. He uses the word "extraordinary" a lot, has a cute word to say about Brahms and comes up with a jazzy description of chamber music as a whole. It's like a strip show, he says, with a few instruments playing in a situation where they are stripped of all the orchestral color behind which they are accustomed to hide in symphonic programs.

Well, Ustinov is an entertaining man, with a charming English accent, and he's written some unhackneyed things for Victor's album. We can forgive him, then, the silliness of this promotion record, especially since the intentions are so good.

Records First-Rate

The actual performances, it turns out, need no special pleading. The Boston players are absolutely topnotch, and the playing is first-rate. The repertory in this three-record album, too, is refreshingly unhackneyed.

The works presented are Mozart's Quartet in D for Flute and Strings and Quartet in F for Oboe and Strings; Brahms' Quartet in C minor for Piano and Strings; Beethoven's Serenade in D for Flute, Violin and Viola, Opus 25; Irving Fine's Fantasia for String Trio; Aaron Copland's "Vitebsk," Study on a Jewish Theme; Elliot Carter's Woodwind Quintet, and Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments.

The idea of pitting four contemporary works against four classical works was felicitous. Of the older music, Beethoven's Serenade is a real charmer that is too little known. Of the new, Fine's Fantasia is a piece of haunting lyricism, and Piston's Divertimento emerges as one of those very professional jobs that Piston often turns out. It is jolly, fast, and lightweight.

Associated Press

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, joins two others in an unusual recorded discussion of the recently released three-record album "The Boston Symphony Chamber Players."

THE NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN
D. 137,900 SUN. 222,693
OCT 30 1966

Sampling Records

Boston Chamber Players Disc Notably Good

By LOUIS NICHOLAS

HAVE YOU begun to think about a Christmas present for that friend who loves chamber music? You could hardly find a better one than the introductory RCA Victor album (LSC 6167, also Mono) of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

One would expect that any performance by this group, composed of first chair players of the Boston Symphony, would be superior in quality. It is also notably good as a recording, and three of the works included are not available elsewhere. Two of these are, appropriately, by Boston composers — the late Irving Fine (Fantasia for String Trio-1957) and Walter Piston (Divertimento for Nine Instruments — 1946); and the other is by a Yale professor, Elliott Carter (Woodwind Quintet-1948).

Aaron Copland was a particular protege of Koussevitzky, and was connected with Tanglewood as dean of the faculty from its inception until his retirement last year, so it is appropriate, too, that his early piano trio "Vitebsk-Study on a Jewish Theme" (1929) is included.

The other works are: Mozart's Quartet in D for Flute and Strings (K. 285), an utterly pellucid work, delectably played, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer's aristocratic phrasing of the flute part as its particular distinction; Mozart's Quartet in F for Oboe and Strings (K. 370) — almost equally heavenly music; Beethoven's Serenade in D for Flute, Violin and Viola, Op. 25, unusually light-hearted entertainment music, rather in the vein of Haydn or Mozart than of its usually serious composer; Quartet in C Minor for Piano and Strings, Op. 60-not one of Brahms' more ingratiating works, but with an orchestral breadth of utterance, and a great richness and depth of feeling in the slow movement.

The Fine Fantasia is a brief, compact work that is the deeply felt expression of a sensitive musician—especially the last movement.

The Piston uses string and winds quite effectively in light-hearted mood, and has a slow movement of distinguished and winsome lyricism.

The Carter is the least attractive at first hearing, though its second movement clucks along gaily and contentedly.

The Copland begins in harsh and unyielding mood, with the Russian qualities of the theme and treatment being almost as prominent as the Jewish ones. But it has a most affecting ending, after lots of ostinati, and some Parisian smartness.

Peter Ustinov's program notes have interest, but the 10-inch bonus record really adds nothing to the booklet and the records except the voices of Ustinov (mostly), Erich Leinsdorf, and Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster.

Claude Frank is the superb pianist for the Brahms and Copland.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 298,100
NOV 26 1966

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
NOV 12 1966

Debut of Carter's World Is Delayed

BOSTON — The world premiere of Elliott Carter's "Piano Concerto," with Jacob Lefner as soloist with the Boston Symphony has been postponed until Jan. 6 and 7. Leitner requested the postponement because he needed more time to prepare the work. E. G. Marshall was the narrator for the orchestra's world premiere of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," on Friday and Saturday (4-5).

St. Louis
Globe-Democrat
D. 305,904 SUN. 343,016
NOV 26 1966

Record Reviews

By CLARK MITZE

Irving Fine
Symphony

Serious Song For String Orchestra
Toccata Concertante
Boston Symphony Orchestra
RCA Victor LM/LSC 2829

The story of Irving Fine is one of continuing concern in music. He was considered by fellow musicians as an expert composer-craftsman with important things to say. However, he did not make an impression on the national scale, some musicians feel because he did not "belong" to the New York clique that determines what is good. Since his death in 1962 at 48, we have had scattered performances—and now this excellent recording.

Fine conducts his symphony (an actual performance in Tanglewood) and Leinsdorf conducts the other two works. Each is in a different style. "The Serious Song" was written in 1955 and projects a tender and serene view of music. "Toccata" begun in 1946, is vigorous in its rhythmic drive and holds the listener's attention by its strength.

The Symphony was completed in 1962 and creates tremendous tension with its rhythmic and harmonic devices. It is serial music mixed with tonality and is highly intellectual music that generates listening appeal through its great vigor.

The Providence Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 66,826 SUN. 200,259
NOV 6 1966

Records Reviewed

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN is coming here in January but there is no need to wait for his solo recital. You may have him, plus the [illegible] Symphony Orchestra, [illegible] Erich Leinsdorf, on RCA Victor, LM-2917. The music is the rich fare of the Brahms Concerto No. 1 in D minor, an amazing work. German romanticism abounds. Its fervor has lasted from 1859 when Brahms himself first played it in Hamburg. Hear Rubinstein and Leinsdorf reach the heights in this beautiful music and then read in the jacket notes that Brahms wrote to Clara Schumann, to whom he was devoted, "I am painting a lovely portrait of you."

Pictures of Clara and Brahms are reproduced on the cover of the release. They are models for some of our young aspiring artists of today.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
NOV 12 1966

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

BRAHMS: PIANO CONCERTO NO. 1 IN D MINOR
Artur Rubinstein/Boston Symphony (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 2917 (M); LSC 2917 (S)

Two virtuosos show their brilliance here in an elegant, positively beautiful reading of this warhorse. Rubinstein's playing is delicate, persuasive and always dynamic. Leinsdorf's baton ranges deep in color. There's a grandeur throughout that will not be easily matched.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 132,266
DEC 17 1966

BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 1, with Artur Rubinstein and the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf (Victor LM or LSC-2917). While I was disappointed in Rubinstein's stolid performance of the first movement, he more than rectifies the situation with a solidly dynamic statement of the finale. If you prefer a more impetuous treatment, I would recommend the Serkin-Philadelphia Orchestra recording for Columbia. Victor's sound is excellent.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
DEC 17 1966

CLASSICAL SPECIAL MERIT

MUSIC OF IRVING FINE

Boston Symphony (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM-2829 (M); LSC-2829 (S)

Here are three moving works composed by a most underrated writer. Of course, the Symphony 1962 is the standout. Neoclassic in style and imaginative in craftsmanship, it is strongly developed by Leinsdorf and the orchestra. The late composer would have appreciated it, too.

The News American
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 211,932 SUN. 310,264
NOV 6 1966

Another new RCA Victor disc offers pianist Artur Rubinstein as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf in the "Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minor, Op. 15" of Brahms (RCA stereo LSC 2917, $5.79).

This concerto is one of the most demanding of all concertos, for both the performers and audiences. It is a tribute to Rubenstein that he can negotiate its wrist-breaking difficulties with such ease, and he is given a strong accompaniment by the Boston Symphony.

RCA's sound here is excellent, in direct contrast to the inferior reproduction accorded the same artists when they collaborated on the Tchaikovsky "Concerto No. 1" and Beethoven "Emperor" concerto.

COURIER-POST
CAMDEN, N. J.
D. 99,700 SUN. 99,295
NOV 26 1966

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN has no equal as a pianist. And Brahms has few as a composer. Put the two together, add Erich Leinsdorf leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra (as RCA Victor has done on a new Dynagroove recording — LM-2917) — and what more can you ask.

The title piece is BRAHMS' PIANO CONCERTO NO. 1 IN D MINOR. If you like Rubinstein, get it. If you're unfamiliar with his brilliance, get it anyway. You'll be ever grateful for the [illegible].

[illegible] Rubinstein [illegible] D Major, [illegible], which he first performed as a very young man in Germany, with Joachim as conductor. The latter died in 1907.

Over the years he has performed it many times, in many countries, with many conductors. But until recently, he had made only one recording of this favorite work. This is his second recording.

Critics and reviewers have exhausted their supplies of superlatives in describing Rubenstein's playing, so it would only be presumptuous on our part to try to further extoll it. It simply is among the greatest. S.W.

* * *

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 298,100
NOV 26 1966

[redacted]
Orch. (Columbia), Artur Rubinstein with Leinsdorf & Boston Symphony (RCA Victor).

RECORDINGS REPORTS I: Orchestral LPs

WORK, PERFORMER, DATA	REPORT
Brahms: Concerto No. 1 in D minor. Artur Rubinstein, piano, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor LM 2917, $4.79; stereo, LSC 2917, $5.79.	Self-improvement is one of anybody's most admirable traits, but when it brings with it a challenge to improve on the irreplaceable, it may be more bold than wise. That, it strikes me, is the hazard with which Rubinstein was confronted in undertaking to improve on the version of this work he made in the Fifties with Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Orchestra. That was one of those occasions when, in the sporting term, both men "came to play" and brought off a collaboration of immense brio and verve as well as a pooling of their long years of experience. To be sure, it wasn't stereo; but it was Brahms, which cannot always be said of this venture. It is, in its own way, a solid [illegible] performance; but it doesn't, as its predecessor did, dare the unattainable, and come very close to it. It may even be more accurate, but that doesn't make it better Brahms.

The Courier-Journal
LOUISVILLE, KY.
D. 229,925 SUN. 338,841
OCT 30 1966

The Record Shelf

By WILLIAM MOOTZ, Courier-Journal Music Critic

RCA VICTOR, never a company to give undue recorded attention to the realm of chamber music, plunges into this repertory with a vengeance in an album called "The Boston Symphony Chamber Players." Everything that can be done in the way of high-style salesmanship seems to have been done to make the release attractive.

First, it is packaged in a three-record album, automatically these days a sign of luxury in the record business. Then, Peter Ustinov is present to turn out the essays for the album notes. Playwright-actor Ustinov is the ultimate in glossy glamour for this kind of release. And, finally, Victor throws in an extra 10-inch record in which Ustinov, Erich Leinsdorf, and Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony and leader of its Chamber Players, pretend to sit around discussing the joys of listening to chamber music.

A Cute Word for Brahms

I say pretend, because the disc is carelessly edited, and there are times when the discussion doesn't make much sense—as if the three may have spoken at different times in different places, and then were brought together through the magic of tape techniques.

Ustinov is the most voluble of the three. He takes his duties as promoter of chamber music seriously, too. He uses the word "extraordinary" a lot, has a cute word to say about Brahms and comes up with a jazzy description of chamber music as a whole. It's like a strip show, he says, with a few instruments playing in a situation where they are stripped of all the orchestral color behind which they are accustomed to hide in symphonic programs.

Well, Ustinov is an entertaining man, with a charming English accent, and he's written some unhackneyed things for Victor's album. We can forgive him, then, the silliness of this promotion record, especially since the intentions are so good.

Records First-Rate

The actual performances, it turns out, need no special pleading. The Boston players are absolutely topnotch, and the playing is first-rate. The repertory in this three-record album, too, is refreshingly unhackneyed.

The works presented are Mozart's Quartet in D for Flute and Strings and Quartet in F for Oboe and Strings; Brahms' Quartet in C minor for Piano and Strings; Beethoven's Serenade in D for Flute, Violin and Viola, Opus 25; Irving Fine's Fantasia for String Trio; Aaron Copland's "Vitebsk," Study on a Jewish Theme; Elliot Carter's Woodwind Quintet, and Piston's Divertimento for Nine Instruments.

The idea of pitting four contemporary works against four classical works was felicitous. Of the older music, Beethoven's Serenade is a real charmer that is too little known. Of the new, Fine's Fantasia is a piece of haunting lyricism, and Piston's Divertimento emerges as one of those very professional jobs that Piston often turns out. It is jolly, fast, and lightweight.

Associated Press

Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Boston Symphony, joins two others in an unusual recorded discussion of the recently released three-record album "The Boston Symphony Chamber Players."

THE NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN
D. 137,900 SUN. 222,693
OCT 30 1966

Sampling Records

Boston Chamber Players Disc Notably Good

By LOUIS NICHOLAS

HAVE YOU begun to think about a Christmas present for that friend who loves chamber music? You could hardly find a better one than the introductory RCA Victor album (LSC 6167, also Mono) of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

One would expect that any performance by this group, composed of first chair players of the Boston Symphony, would be superior in quality. It is also notably good as a recording, and three of the works included are not available elsewhere. Two of these are, appropriately, by Boston composers — the late Irving Fine (Fantasia for String Trio-1957) and Walter Piston (Divertimento for Nine Instruments — 1946); and the other is by a Yale professor, Elliott Carter (Woodwind Quintet-1948).

Aaron Copland was a particular protege of Koussevitzky, and was connected with Tanglewood as dean of the faculty from its inception until his retirement last year, so it is appropriate, too, that his early piano trio "Vitebsk-Study on a Jewish Theme" (1929) is included.

The other works are: Mozart's Quartet in D for Flute and Strings (K. 285), an utterly pellucid work, delectably played, with Doriot Anthony Dwyer's aristocratic phrasing of the flute part as its particular distinction; Mozart's Quartet in F for Oboe and Strings (K. 370) — almost equally heavenly music; Beethoven's Serenade in D for Flute, Violin and Viola, Op. 25, unusually light-hearted entertainment music, rather in the vein of Haydn or Mozart than of its usually serious composer; Quartet in C Minor for Piano and Strings, Op. 60-not one of Brahms' more ingratiating works, but with an orchestral breadth of utterance, and a great richness and depth of feeling in the slow movement.

The Fine Fantasia is a brief, compact work that is the deeply felt expression of a sensitive musician—especially the last movement.

The Piston uses string and winds quite effectively in light-hearted mood, and has a slow movement of distinguished and winsome lyricism.

The Carter is the least attractive at first hearing, though its second movement clucks along gaily and contentedly.

The Copland begins in harsh and unyielding mood, with the Russian qualities of the theme and treatment being almost as prominent as the Jewish ones. But it has a most affecting ending, after lots of ostinati, and some Parisian smartness.

Peter Ustinov's program notes have interest, but the 10-inch bonus record really adds nothing to the booklet and the records except the voices of Ustinov (mostly), Erich Leinsdorf, and Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster.

Claude Frank is the superb pianist for the Brahms and Copland.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 298,100
NOV 26 1966

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
NOV 12 1966

Debut of Carter's World Is Delayed

BOSTON — The world premiere of Elliott Carter's "Piano Concerto," with Jacob Leitner as soloist with the Boston Symphony has been postponed until Jan. 6 and 7. Leitner requested the postponement because he needed more time to prepare the work. E. G. Marshall was the narrator for the orchestra's world premiere of William Sydeman's "In Memoriam John F. Kennedy," on Friday and Saturday (4-5).

St. Louis
Globe-Democrat
D. 305,904 SUN. 343,016
NOV 26 1966

Record Reviews

By CLARK MITZE

Irving Fine
Symphony
Serious Song For String Orchestra — RCA Victor
Toccata Concertante — LM/LSC 2829
Boston Symphony Orchestra

The story of Irving Fine is one of continuing concern in music. He was considered by fellow musicians as an expert composer-craftsman with important things to say. However, he did not make an impression on the national scale, some musicians feel because he did not "belong" to the New York clique that determines what is good. Since his death in 1962 at 48, we have had scattered performances—and now this excellent recording.

Fine conducts his symphony (an actual performance in Tanglewood) and Leinsdorf conducts the other two works. Each is in a different style. "The Serious Song" was written in 1955 and projects a tender and serene view of music. "Toccata," begun in 1946, is vigorous in its rhythmic drive and holds the listener's attention by its strength.

The Symphony was completed in 1962 and creates tremendous tension with its rhythmic and harmonic devices. It is serial music mixed with tonality and is highly intellectual music that generates listening appeal through its great vigor.

* * *

The Providence Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 66,826 SUN. 200,259
NOV 6 1966

Records Reviewed

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN is coming here in January but there is no need to wait for his solo recital. You may have him, plus the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra, plus Erich Leinsdorf on an RCA record, LM-2917. The music is the rich fare of the Brahms Concerto No. 1 in D minor, an amazing work. German romanticism abounds. Its fervor has lasted from 1859 when Brahms himself, first played it in Hamburg. Hear Rubinstein and Leinsdorf reach the heights in this beautiful music and then read in the jacket notes that Brahms wrote to Clara Schumann, to whom he was devoted, "I am painting a lovely portrait of you."

Pictures of Clara and Brahms are reproduced on the cover of the release. They are models for some of our young aspiring artists of today.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
NOV 12 1966

CLASSICAL SPOTLIGHT

BRAHMS: PIANO CONCERTO NO. 1 IN D MINOR
Artur Rubinstein/Boston Symphony (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM 2917 (M); LSC 2917 (S)

Two virtuosos show their brilliance here in an elegant, positively beautiful reading of this warhorse. Rubinstein's playing is delicate, persuasive and always dynamic. Leinsdorf's baton ranges deep in color. There's a grandeur throughout that will not be easily matched.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 132,266
DEC 17 1966

BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 1, with Artur Rubinstein and the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf (Victor LM or LSC-2917). While I was disappointed in Rubinstein's stolid performance of the first movement, he more than rectifies the situation with a solidly dynamic statement of the finale. If you prefer a more impetuous treatment, I would recommend the Serkin-Philadelphia Orchestra recording for Columbia. Victor's sound is excellent.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 50,000
DEC 17 1966

CLASSICAL SPECIAL MERIT

MUSIC OF IRVING FINE

Boston Symphony (Leinsdorf). RCA Victor LM-2829 (M); LSC-2829 (S)

Here are three moving works composed by a most underrated writer. Of course, the Symphony 1962 is the standout. Neoclassic in style and imaginative in craftsmanship, it is strongly developed by Leinsdorf and the orchestra. The late composer would have appreciated it, too.

The News American
BALTIMORE, MD.
D. 211,932 SUN. 310,264
NOV 6 1966

Another new RCA Victor disc offers pianist Artur Rubinstein as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf in the "Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minorl Op. 15" of Brahms (RCA stereo LSC 2917, $5.79).

This concerto is one of the most demanding of all concertos, for both the performers and audiences. It is a tribute to Rubenstein that he can negotiate its wrist-breaking difficulties with such ease, and he is given a strong accompaniment by the Boston Symphony.

RCA's sound here is excellent, in direct contrast to the inferior reproduction accorded the same artists when they collaborated on the Tchaikovsky "Concerto No. 1" and Beethoven "Emperor" concerto.

COURIER-POST
CAMDEN, N. J.
D. 99,700 SUN. 99,295
NOV 26 1966

* * *

ARTUR RUBINSTEIN has no equal as a pianist. And Brahms had few as a composer. Put the two together, add Erich Leinsdorf leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra (as RCA-Victor has done on a new Dynagroove recording — LM-2917) — and what more can you ask.

The title piece is BRAHMS' PIANO CONCERTO NO. 1 IN D MINOR. If you like Rubinstein, get it. Ir you're unfamiliar with his brilliance, get it anyway. You'll be ever grateful for the tip.

"My beloved Brahms concerto" is the way Artur Rubinstein describes the D Minor Concerto, which he first performed as a very young man in Germany, with Joachim as conductor. The latter died in 1907.

Over the years he has performed it many times, in many countries, with many conductors. But until recently, he had made only one recording of this favorite work. This is his second recording.

Critics and reviewers have exhausted their supplies of superlatives in describing Rubenstein's playing, so it would only be presumptuous on our part to try to further extoll it. It simply is among the greatest. S.W.

* * *

RECORDINGS REPORTS I: Orchestral LPs

WORK, PERFORMER, DATA	REPORT
Brahms: Concerto No. 1 in D minor. Artur Rubinstein, piano, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor LM 2917, $4.79; stereo, LSC 2917, $5.79.	Self-improvement is one of anybody's most admirable traits, but when it brings with it a challenge to improve on the unexcellable, it may be more bold than wise. That, it strikes me, is the hazard with which Rubinstein was confronted in undertaking to improve on the version of this work he made in the Fifties with Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Orchestra. That was one of those occasions when, in the sporting term, both men "came to play" and brought off a collaboration of immense brio and verve as well as a pooling of their long years of experience. To be sure, it wasn't stereo; but it was first-class Brahms, which cannot always be said of this venture. It is, in its own way, a solid and representative performance: but it doesn't, as its predecessor did, dare the unattainable, and come very close to it. It may even be more accurate, but that doesn't make it better Brahms.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 298,100
NOV 26 1966

Be[illegible] No. [illegible] Serkin, with Ormandy [illegible] Orch. (Columbia); Artur Rubinstein, with Leinsdorf & Boston Symphony (RCA Victor).

151

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 158,172 SUN. 299,377
DEC 4 1966

On The Records

Excerpts From Among Disc

RECORDS BRAHMS CONCERTO—Artur Rubinstein, seemingly indefatigable master of the keyboard, has completed a new recording of the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minor with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The disc has been catalogued by RCA Victor as LSC-2917 in stereo and LM-2917 in mono.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
DEC 17 1966

* * *

BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 1, with Artur Rubinstein and the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf (Victor LM or LSC-2917). While I was disappointed in Rubinstein's stolid performance of the first movement, he more than rectifies the situation with a solidly dynamic statement of the finale. If you prefer a more impetuous treatment, I would recommend the Serkin-Philadelphia Orchestra recording for Columbia. Victor's sound is ex-

NEW ORLEANS STATES-ITEM
LARGEST AFTERNOON CIRC. IN LOUISIANA
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
D. 140,684 SUN. 124,326
DEC 3 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
DEC 18 1966

Alla Breve

BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor, Artur Rubinstein, pianist, Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra (RCA Victor, LM-2917; stereo LSC-2917). Rubinstein's new recording of this Brahms powerhouse is more refined than his old mono version with Reiner and the Chicago Symphony. But the tightness and drive of that performance are traded for smooth, mellow reflection that bring deep insights to the familiar concerto. Rudolf Serkin's Columbia recording has more dash; Leon Fleisher's performance with George Szell is more complete in many ways, but the new Rubinstein performance is grander than the other current stereo versions.

Brahms Works Recorded By Bernstein, Stokowski

By THE RECORD SPINNER

Two Brahms works win top billing among current record releases.

RCA Victor drew upon the talents of its great stars — Pianist Artur Rubinstein and the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf—for a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 (LCS-2917).

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
DEC 18 1966

their colleagues, [illegible] mere nostalgia or respect for the honored dead. Irving Fine (1914-62) was such a person. And as a professor at Brandeis University, he was close to the Boston scene, and so it is appropriate that the Boston Symphony is heard on a complete disk of Fine's music (RCA Victor LM 2828; stereo LSC 2828). Erich Leinsdorf conducts two earlier works, the Toccata Concertante, written in 1946-47, and the Serious Song of 1955. The late composer conducts the Bostonians in his largest, late work, the Symphony (1962) recorded live at Tanglewood on Aug. 12, 1962, hitherto unreleased on disks.

The Toccata is openly neo-classical in style and has plenty of motor drive. The "Serious Song," subtitled "Lament for String Orchestra," has been described as "contemporary romantic," which in this case means lyrical, [illegible] and dramatic, and has serial elements but is basically tonal. Even when most rigorous, though, it is underlaid with softness and warmth—which perhaps reflects what there was about him that gathered in the affection of his colleagues.

The first movement is noble in scope, the second a running scherzo. The third is thoughtful and the final one ends with heroic splashes of brass in the midst of an orchestral tutti.

For the Symphony, the live recorded sound is not satisfactory. It is weak in the bass and the high strings seem far in the background. It would have been strengthened by an indoor recording in which all forces had equal presence.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 132,266
DEC 10 1966

This Week's Scene in Recordings

Leinsdorf Conducts 'Symphony 1962'

By ROBERT F. DUGUAY

FINE: "Symphony 1962," "Serious Song: a Lament for String Orchestra," and "Toccata Concertante, performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by the composer and Erich Leinsdorf (RCA Victor LM-LSC 2829).

The late Boston-based composer, Irving Fine, is represented on this provocative new BSO LP by works which are representative of three important stages of his abortively short career as a composer. His "Toccata Concertante" (1948) was written near the end of Igor Stravinsky's neo-classic period, and sounds like it; as music it is shrewdly and attractively put together, though.

The same side of this LP also contains the "Serious Song," composed in 1955 on commission from the Louisville Orchestra, and subsequently recorded by them in their mail-order record series. Restrainedly passionate, highly chromatic music and here superbly performed, it deserves the widest possible circulation.

Side One preserves a "live Tanglewood performance of Mr. Fine's last score, given under his own direction just a short time before his untimely death at the age of 48. Beginning with his 1952 "String Quartet" he had begun incorporating serial devices into his music, though ultimately without ever quite abandoning a tonal anchor.

Like the latter piece, his "Symphony 1962" is a stylistic hybrid. Filtered through the quasi-Schoenbergian esthetic, however, I hear persistent echoes of the pre-dodecaphonic Stravinsky, particularly in the last movement.

As captured on this LP, the sound of the Tanglewood Music Shed emerges as clear, but on the dryish side. The Leinsdorf performances in Boston's Symphony Hall are understandably suaver in sound.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 298,100
DEC 31 1966

A Memento of Fine

FINE: Symphony 1962. The Boston Symphony conducted by the composer. Serious Song; Toccata Concertante. The Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor stereo, LSC 2829, $5.79; mono, LM 2829, $4.79.

ACCORDING to everything that has accumulated about the late Irving Fine since his death in 1962, he was a musician of sympathetic spirit and generally admirable traits who enjoyed the esteem of some of the most distinguished colleagues of the day (Aaron Copland, for example, contributes a warming word of tribute to this issue). A native of Boston, Fine lived most of his life in that community, working at Harvard with Piston (one of his contemporaries was Leonard Bernstein), returning to teach there, and later at Brandeis.

The three works herein reproduced span a period from 1948 (Toccata Concertante) to 1962 (Symphony), with the Serious Song at the midway point of 1955. They share a large sense of assurance in writing for the orchestra (in the case of the Serious Song, for strings alone), an attractive economy of style, and a disposition to treat the listener as an adult participant in the composer's thinking—by which I mean that there is no discernible padding; he says what he wants to say directly and succinctly.

These are all valuable traits, but Fine lacks, to my way of hearing, the most valuable of all—anything like originality. That, to be sure, is the province of but a few in any historical period; but most composers who reach the age that Fine did when the Symphony was introduced (forty-eight) have found a way of assimilating their inheritance to the point where, if it does not sound like anyone special, it does not sound like everyone in general. The Serious Song comes close to establishing a mood and vocabulary suggestive of an individual voice, but in the Symphony there is such a clamor of others—ranging across such S's as Shostakovich, Stravinsky, and Schuman—that isolation of Fine's own voice is difficult. Leinsdorf's direction of the two shorter works is of his peak proficiency, and the orchestra also plays beautifully in the Symphony. Lest this venture seem indicative of a new policy at RCA toward contemporary works, it may be noted that the jacket carries the words: "Recorded under the auspices of Brandeis University."

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719
JAN 1967

IRVING FINE: Symphony (1962); Serious Song; Lament for String Orchestra; Toccata Concertante. Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf and Fine, conds. RCA Victor LM-2829 (M); LSC-2829 (S).

This record reveals not only what American music lost by the unfortunate death of Irving Fine but what was gained by his relatively short life. Taken as a whole, the works (spread throughout the last 18 years of his life) show him to have made fascinating advances toward a strong, personal means of musical expression—seeking not for innovation in the nature of his materials but rather striving for complete mastery of the materials with which he chose to work. Taken singly, each is an attractive work, worthy of a permanent place in the orchestral repertory. The performances and recordings are excellent.—Turok

SIGHT AND SOUND MARKETING
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. N. AVAIL.
DEC 1966

BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 1. Rubinstein; Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony Orch. RCA Victor LSC 2917 (S), LM 2917 (M).

This strong, stern, often highly expressive reading by one of the world's few great pianists lacks one thing: the sheer beauty and heart-wrenching loveliness others have revealed in their performances. Rubinstein fans will bite hard. But those who have already invested in such perusals as that of Curzon (London) or Cliburn (RCA Victor, and also with Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony) may well shy off.

THE ARIZONA REPUBLIC
PHOENIX, ARIZ.
D. 146,624 SUN. 215,445
DEC 18 1966

Schnabel's '4th' Still Best

Recording by Casadesus No Longer Listed

Robert Casadesus, who performs the Beethoven Fourth Piano Concerto with the Phoenix Symphony this week, has recorded the work, but his version is no longer listed.

The one great recording of the Beethoven Fourth, for this reviewer, is the old Schnabel/Sargent, which was once available in an RCA set. Schnabel's last recording of the Fourth, with Issay Dobrowen, is on an Angel album with the other four concertos.

Schnabel was a master with Beethoven and his reading of the Fourth stands above all the others, for my taste. He was not a great technician but he knew how to span phrases, create tension, and give life to every note in the score. The recording is 1947-mono, but still is acceptable.

For those seeking a good modern stereo version, I suggest Rudolf Serkin, with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra (Columbia) or Leon Fleisher and George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra (Epic). Fleisher is more poetic, Serkin more outgoing and virtuistic. I prefer Szell's handling of the orchestra to Ormandy's. Sound in either case is excellent. RCA's recording for Rubinstein and Leinsdorf is even better, and this is his finest performance of the Fourth (he previously recorded the concerto with Beecham and Krips) but I would just as soon listen to Serkin or Fleischer.

Rubinstein is just a shade cold for me in this music. Even colder is Van Cliburn, also RCA, with Reiner and the Chicago Symphony. He completely misses the mark, though he probably plays more notes than anyone else. Backhaus (Richmond, mono) is a fine economy version.

The definitive performance of Stravinsky's score for the ballet "Petrouchka" is Stravinsky himself (Columbia). This is a spine-tingling performance with lots of zip and zing, brilliantly recorded and played. RCA offers Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony, also a very good version.

Monteux conducted the world premiere of "Petrouchka" in Paris, so he should know what to do with the music better than just about anyone else, except the composer. His version is just a shade less vital than Stravinsky's though the Boston Symphony plays marvelously for him.

A fine economy version is on Richmond with Ansermet and the Swiss Romande Orchestra. This was the best performance of the work for many years, and still sounds good. Ansermet's later stereo version is good, though not up to Stravinsky or Monteux.

W. J. N.

151

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 158,172 SUN. 299,377
DEC 4 1966

On The Records

Excerpts From Among Disc

RECORDS BRAHMS CONCERTO—Artur Rubinstein, seemingly indefatigable master of the keyboard, has completed a new recording of the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minor with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The disc has been catalogued by RCA Victor as LSC-2917 in stereo and LM-2917 in mono.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 02106 • 742-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 132,266
DEC 17 1966

* * *

BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 1, with Artur Rubinstein and the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf (Victor LM or LSC-2917). While I was disappointed in Rubinstein's stolid performance of the first movement, he more than rectifies the situation with a solidly dynamic statement of the finale. If you prefer a more impetuous treatment, I would recommend the Serkin-Philadelphia Orchestra recording for Columbia. Victor's sound is ex-

NEW ORLEANS STATES-ITEM
LARGEST AFTERNOON CIRC. IN LOUISIANA
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
D. 140,684 SUN. 124,326
DEC 3 1966

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
DEC 18 1966

Alla Breve

BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor, Artur Rubinstein, pianist, Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra (RCA Victor, LM-2917; stereo LSC-2917). Rubinstein's new recording of this Brahms powerhouse is more refined than his old mono version with Reiner and the Chicago Symphony. But the tightness and drive of that performance are traded for smooth, mellow reflection that bring deep insights to the familiar concerto. Rudolf Serkin's Columbia recording has more dash; Leon Fleisher's performance with George Szell is more complete in many ways, but the new Rubinstein performance is grander than the other current stereo versions.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 635,619 SUN. 1,337,277
DEC 18 1966

their colleagues, greater than mere nostalgia or respect for the honored dead. Irving Fine (1914-62) was such a person. And as a professor at Brandeis University, he was close to the Boston scene, and so it is appropriate that the Boston Symphony is heard on a complete disk of Fine's music (RCA Victor LM 2828; stereo LSC 2828). Erich Leinsdorf conducts two earlier works, the Toccata Concertante, written in 1946-47, and the Serious Song of 1955. The late composer conducts the Bostonians in his largest, late work, the Symphony (1962) recorded live at Tanglewood on Aug. 12, 1962, hitherto unreleased on disks.

The Toccata is openly neo-classical in style and has plenty of motor drive. The "Serious Song," subtitled "Lament for String Orchestra," has been described as "contemporary romantic," which in this case means lyrical, and has serial elements but is basically tonal. Even when most rigorous, though, it is underlaid with softness and warmth—which perhaps reflects what there was about him that gathered in the affection of his colleagues.

[redacted]

The first movement is noble in scope, the second a running scherzo. The third is thoughtful and the final one ends with heroic splashes of brass in the midst of an orchestral tutti.

For the Symphony, the live recorded sound is not satisfactory. It is weak in the bass and the high strings seem far in the background. It would have been strengthened by an indoor recording in which all forces had equal presence.

The Hartford Times
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 132,266
DEC 10 1966

This Week's Scene in Recordings

Leinsdorf Conducts 'Symphony 1962'

By ROBERT F. DUGUAY

FINE: "Symphony 1962," "Serious Song: a Lament for String Orchestra," and "Toccata Concertante, performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by the composer and Erich Leinsdorf (RCA Victor LM-LSC 2829).

The late Boston-based composer, Irving Fine, is represented on this provocative new BSO LP by works which are representative of three important stages of his abortively short career as a composer. His "Toccata Concertante" (1948) was written near the end of Igor Stravinsky's neo-classic period, and sounds like it; as music it is shrewdly and attractively put together, though.

The same side of this LP also contains the "Serious Song," composed in 1955 on commission from the Louisville Orchestra, and subsequently recorded by them in their mail-order record series. Restrainedly passionate, highly chromatic music and here superbly performed, it deserves the widest possible circulation.

Side One preserves a "live Tanglewood performance of Mr. Fine's last score, given under his own direction just a short time before his untimely death at the age of 48. Beginning with his 1952 "String Quartet" he had begun incorporating serial devices into his music, though ultimately without ever quite abandoning a tonal anchor.

Like the latter piece, his "Symphony 1962" is a stylistic hybrid. Filtered through the quasi-Schoenbergian esthetic, however, I hear persistent echoes of the pre-dodecaphonic Stravinsky, particularly in the last movement.

As captured on this LP, the sound of the Tanglewood Music Shed emerges as clear, but on the dryish side. The Leinsdorf performances in Boston's Symphony Hall are understandably suaver in sound.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 298,100
DEC 31 1966

A Memento of Fine

FINE: Symphony 1962. The Boston Symphony conducted by the composer. Serious Song; Toccata Concertante. The Boston Symphony conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. RCA Victor stereo, LSC 2829, $5.79; mono, LM 2829, $4.79.

ACCORDING to everything that has accumulated about the late Irving Fine since his death in 1962, he was a musician of sympathetic spirit and generally admirable traits who enjoyed the esteem of some of the most distinguished colleagues of the day (Aaron Copland, for example, contributes a warming word of tribute to this issue). A native of Boston, Fine lived most of his life in that community, working at Harvard with Piston (one of his contemporaries was Leonard Bernstein), returning to teach there, and later at Brandeis.

The three works herein reproduced span a period from 1948 (Toccata Concertante) to 1962 (Symphony), with the Serious Song at the midway point of 1955. They share a large sense of assurance in writing for the orchestra (in the case of the Serious Song, for strings alone), an attractive economy of style, and a disposition to treat the listener as an adult participant in the composer's thinking—by which I mean that there is no discernible padding; he says what he wants to say directly and succinctly.

These are all valuable traits, but Fine lacks, to my way of hearing, the most valuable of all—anything like originality. That, to be sure, is the province of but a few in any historical period; but most composers who reach the age that Fine did when the Symphony was introduced (forty-eight) have found a way of assimilating their inheritance to the point where, if it does not sound like anyone special, it does not sound like everyone in general. The Serious Song comes close to establishing a mood and vocabulary suggestive of an individual voice, but in the Symphony there is such a clamor of others—ranging across such S's as Shostakovich, Stravinsky, and Schuman—that isolation of Fine's own voice is difficult. Leinsdorf's direction of the two shorter works is of his peak proficiency, and the orchestra also plays beautifully in the Symphony. Lest this venture seem indicative of a new policy at RCA toward contemporary works, it may be noted that the jacket carries the words: "Recorded under the auspices of Brandeis University."

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719
JAN 1967

IRVING FINE: Symphony (1962); Serious Song; Lament for String Orchestra; Toccata Concertante. Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf and Fine, conds. RCA Victor LM-2829 (M); LSC-2829 (S).

This record reveals not only what American music lost by the unfortunate death of Irving Fine but what was gained by his relatively short life. Taken as a whole, the works (spread throughout the last 18 years of his life) show him to have made fascinating advances toward a strong, personal means of musical expression—seeking not for innovation in the nature of his materials but rather striving for complete mastery of the materials with which he chose to work. Taken singly, each is an attractive work, worthy of a permanent place in the orchestral repertory. The performances and recordings are excellent.—Turok

SIGHT AND SOUND MARKETING
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. N. AVAIL.
DEC 1966

BRAHMS: Piano Concerto No. 1. Rubinstein; Leinsdorf, Boston Symphony Orch. RCA Victor LSC 2917 (S), LM 2917 (M).

This strong, stern, often highly expressive reading by one of the world's few great pianists lacks one thing: the sheer beauty and heart-wrenching loveliness others have revealed in their performances. Rubinstein fans will bite hard. But those who have already invested in such perusals as that of Curzon (London) or Cliburn (RCA Victor, and also with Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony) may well shy off.

THE ARIZONA REPUBLIC
PHOENIX, ARIZ.
D. 146,624 SUN. 215,445
DEC 18 1966

Schnabel's '4th' Still Best

Recording by Casadesus No Longer Listed

Robert Casadesus, who performs the Beethoven Fourth Piano Concerto with the Phoenix Symphony this week, has recorded the work, but his version is no longer listed.

The one great recording of the Beethoven Fourth, for this reviewer, is the old Schnabel/Sargent, which was once available in an RCA set. Schnabel's last recording of the Fourth, with Issay Dobrowen, is on an Angel album with the other four concertos.

Schnabel was a master with Beethoven and his reading of the Fourth stands above all the others, for my taste. He was not a great technician but he knew how to span phrases, create tension, and give life to every note in the score. The recording is 1947-mono, but still is acceptable.

For those seeking a good modern stereo version, I suggest Rudolf Serkin, with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra (Columbia) or Leon Fleisher and George Szell and the Cleveland Orchestra (Epic). Fleisher is more poetic, Serkin more outgoing and virtuistic. I prefer Szell's handling of the orchestra to Ormandy's. Sound in either case is excellent. RCA's recording for Rubinstein and Leinsdorf is even better, and this is his finest performance of the Fourth (he previously recorded the concerto with Beecham and Krips) but I would just as soon listen to Serkin or Fleischer.

Rubinstein is just a shade cold for me in this music. Even colder is Van Cliburn, also RCA, with Reiner and the Chicago Symphony. He completely misses the mark, though he probably plays more notes than anyone else. Backhaus (Richmond, mono) is a fine economy version.

The definitive performance of Stravinsky's score for the ballet "Petrouchka" is Stravinsky himself (Columbia). This is a spine-tingling performance with lots of zip and zing, brilliantly recorded and played. RCA offers Pierre Monteux and the Boston Symphony, also a very good version.

Monteux conducted the world premiere of "Petrouchka" in Paris, so he should know what to do with the music better than just about anyone else, except the composer. His version is just a shade less vital than Stravinsky's though the Boston Symphony plays marvelously for him.

A fine economy version is on Richmond with Ansermet and the Swiss Romande Orchestra. This was the best performance of the work for many years, and still sounds good. Ansermet's later stereo version is good, though not up to Stravinsky or Monteux.

W. J. N.

Brahms Works Recorded By Bernstein, Stokowski

By THE RECORD SPINNER

Two Brahms works win top billing among current record releases.

RCA Victor drew upon the talents of its great stars — Pianist Artur Rubinstein and the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf—for a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 1 (LCS-2917).

THE TAMPA TRIBUNE
TAMPA, FLA.
D. 162,630 SUN. 180,375
JAN 1 1967

Rubenstein Plays A Stirring Brahms

) Rubenstein, "the world's greatest pianist" (Time Magazine) has studied and played Brahms Concerto No. 1 in D Minor for more than half a century.

His most recent interpretation is an album to treasure. The stereo recording for RCA (LSC-2917) is with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This concerto is a massive grandeur, alternately tempestuous and serene. A mirthful rondo follows the gloomy maestoso first movement and the meditative, solemn adagio. Its first audiences did not expect such a profound composition from a man 25 years old.

Sir Donald Francis Tovey, the great British music critic, said "the first theme of the opening tutti is one of the mightiest utterances since Beethoven's Ninth Symphony."

Brahms himself introduced the Concerto in 1859 at Hanover, Germany, with Joachim, his closest friend, conducting. The audience listened respectfully but without enthusiasm. Five days later, a second performance in Leipzig awakened a far more hostile reaction.

Brahms described the Leipzigers' brutality thusly: "At the end, three pairs of hands were brought together very slowly, upon which a perfectly distinct hissing from all sides forbade any such demonstration . . .

This failure has not impressed me at all. After all, I am only experimenting and feeling my way. But the hissing was too much."

(Reviewed by RayMatthiesen)

HIGH FIDELITY
TRADE NEWS
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 6,400
JAN 1967

BRAHMS: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 1, in D minor, Op. 15

Artur Rubinstein, piano; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RCA VICTOR ® LM 2917, $4.79; LSC 2917, $5.79.

Rubinstein's earlier recording of the D minor Brahms (with Fritz Reiner conducting) had a little difficulty in making up its mind whether to be primarily lyrical or dramatic. Though Rubinstein's conception has changed little since 1954, the emphasis has shifted decisively towards introspection. Here he gives a worldlywise, romantically mellow reading of this turbulent outpouring from Brahms's youthful years. He prefers to stress the golden autumnal majesty and glowing tonal colors of the writing, leaving it to the younger artists who have recorded the work—such as Leon Fleisher—to storm the heavens. Though such episodes as the double octaves in the first movement which marshall in the development section might sound a trifle cautious and constrained here when heard alongside the explosive freneticism of some other performances, the impression left by Rubinstein's interpretation is one of sustained beauty rather than any lack of power. According to informed sources, this performance comes from a memorable recording session in April of 1964 and was virtually unrehearsed. It stands, then, as a lasting tribute to the miracles sometimes wrought by sheer inspiration: Leinsdorf's accompaniment, effusive and impulsive, is most atypical of this ordinarily objective and punctilious maestro and is all to the benefit of Brahms.

The recorded sound in both formats is absolutely magnificent. In sum, this is a disc to treasure alongside the Fleisher/Szell (Epic), the Curzon/Szell (London), and the Arrau/Giulini (Angel). In its gracious plasticity, it resembles the last-named most closely.

H.G.

AUDIO
MINEOLA, N. Y.
MONTHLY 26,100
FEB 1967

Rubinstein, Brahms: Piano Concerto No. 1 in D Minor. Boston Symphony, Leinsdorf.

RCA Victor LSC 2917 stereo

Ah—up with high priced records and down with all cheap labels! That's the inevitable and healthy reaction to this superb, but necessarily high-priced item, with RCA's ever-improving mainstay pianist, Arthur Rubinstein. You can't have Rubinstein for peanuts. Not even for $2.50. He's worth double.

There's a long, passionate orchestral introduction to this concerto. When, at last Rubinstein's piano enters, you know instantly that he has been following every second of the music, that he's with it—a part of the whole. So many of the brilliant young prize winners sit there, figuratively, saying just wait until they hear ME. That's how they sound.

There's a famous long solo melody here, too, one of those massive Brahms piano themes that knock you for a loop when you first hear them. Rubinstein plays it with all his persuasiveness—but how wonderfully it fades down, suddenly, at the end, to meet the incoming orchestra at exactly the right piano volume. He's with it again.

Rubinstein does better than the Boston here, and better than Leinsdorf himself; but it doesn't matter. The concerto is far and away ahead of a hundred lesser versions with men of less profound experience than Rubinstein in his supervital old age.

E.T.C.

THE ARIZONA REPUBLIC
PHOENIX, ARIZ.
D. 146,624 SUN. 215,445
FEB 19 1967

From RCA comes the Brahms First Piano Concerto with Arturo Rubinstein, accompanied by Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony. This is a magnificent performance, full-blown, outgoing, brimming with life and vitality. RCA's sound is bright and [illegible] the competition is very high, including Rubinstein's own mono recording with Reiner and the Chicago Symphony. Reiner has a little more personality to offer than does Leinsdorf, but those insisting on stereo will find the new recording perfectly satisfactory. Serkin/Ormandy (Columbia) is also in the same league, and Curzon/Szell (London) is close.

The Houston Post
D. 267,620 SUN. 289,009
FEB 5 1967

Records

Leinsdorf, Previn Albums Out

By CARL CUNNINGHAM

If its recent releases are any indication, RCA Victor is much concerned these days with something called "The Symphony in Retrospect." They've come up with three recordings focusing on this subject — Bruckner's "Romantic" Symphony with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony (stereo LSC-2915), Strauss's "Alpine" Symphony with Rudolf Kempe and the Royal Philharmonic (stereo LSC-2923) and Rachmaninoff's Second Symphony with Andre Previn and the London Symphony (stereo LSC-2866). All three are available in monaural as well.

THERE ARE different values in operation here, both technical and musical. The Boston Symphony is always a joy to listen to, as much for its collective excellence as for the quality of its soloists. This is nowhere more apparent than the magnificent sound of James Stagliano's horn at the opening. Also, there is that sense of ensemble that can make a whole violin section perform as one man on a thrilled passage.

However, the symphony as a whole does not acquire meaningful momentum under Leinsdorf's baton, and thus Neville Cardus prophesies correctly on the jacket: "One has to be patient with Bruckner." Excellent in detail, but less so in its larger design.

The Providence Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 66,826 SUN. 200,259
JAN 15 1967

RUBINSTEIN, Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra combine on RCA album LSC-2917 to do honor to Johannes Brahms and his Concerto for piano and orchestra, No. 1 in D minor, Op. 15. It is superb music. In this interpretation we hear maturity of musicianship, perfection of technique and a joy of performance which would be hard to match. The lovely slow movement is supposed to be a dedication by the composer to his dear friend, Clara Schumann. These musicians make it a dedication to a masterpiece of the Romantic School of writing.

GAZETTE (e)
TAUNTON, MASS.
CIRC. 12,800
FEB 24 1967
New England Newsclip

TAUNTON, MASS.
GAZETTE
D. 12,500
FEB 24 1967

NEW YORK (UPI) —A record of "Music of Irving Fine" performed by the Boston Symphony faithfully traces the creative struggles of that talented and highly competent composer who died in 1962 before he was 48 years old.

The record has three of his mature pieces. The earliest is the "Toccata Concertante" which dates from 1947 and which is a mixture of the influences of Stravinsky and of the classical masters on the composer's own substance.

It is followed by "Serious Song For String Orchestra," a song serious to the point of gravity in which the composer was influencing originally the tonality of the old-line composers. It belongs to 1955. Then comes his full-scale symphony which he completed in the year of his death.

In that he is reconciling the traditional tonality with the seril atonal techniques of the revolutionist, Arnold Schoenberg. The three pieces together show what a conscientous composer he was. Forces were loose in his creative world and he did not avoid them.

You probably are impressed most of all by the energy which Fine generates from the orchestra. Even at his quietest, there is driving relentlessness as though the music had life quite its own. The technical excellencies are unvaried with anything less —he was called "a composer's composer" —but they're the least part of the total effect.

HI FI STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163,400
FEB 1967

Ⓢ Ⓜ PROKOFIEV: Piano Concertos No. 1 and No. 2. John Browning (piano); Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf cond. RCA VICTOR LSC 2897 $5.79, LM 2897 $4.79.

Performance: Slick
Recording: Big sound
Stereo Quality: Rich

The first two Prokofiev concertos are essentially student works: big, clattering, brilliant, iconoclastic pieces dating from 1911 and 1913 (the latter rewritten in the Twenties after the loss of the original score), and intended to show the composer's pianistic and compositional wit, virtuosity, and modernity. They are a pair of awfully empty-headed pieces; adolescent brashness may have a certain freshness and vitality in a talented young artist, but it is hardly enough by itself to have an appeal for all time. I find the two pieces back to back a bit much.

In all fairness, it must be admitted that there will be those who will disagree (the first time around, at least, these pieces do have an impact). In any case, the Browning brilliance does make its mark here, and Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony—the recording is part of their continuing Prokofiev series—have the right amounts of restraint, articulation, and polished thrust to get a dazzling surface onto the music. There's almost too much glamour to the performance and the sound, but there's no doubt that, for what is intended, it works. The second side of my disc has an odd crackle-swish cycle all the way through, something like a heavy surface noise ingrained in a lateral band across the disc. Probably a pressing defect and very annoying too; check it before buying!

E. S.

MONITOR (e)
BOSTON, MASS.
CIRC. 177,750
JAN 3 1967
New England Newsclip

New BSO recording

Fine's arboretum

By Richard J. Cattani

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

Irving Fine (1914-1962) tended his compositions with the utmost in patience. He was a superb musical gardener. Gently he questioned each new shoot. With integrity he weeded out any aberrant phrase.

Yet he did not tamper with what was musically true. He had learned what the Spanish poet Juan Ramón Jiménez said about a poem's arriving of itself to completion: "Do not touch it any more, for that is how a rose is."

Aaron Copland, in a warm tribute to Fine, said: "To my mind his outstanding quality was his musical sensitivity—he had an ear that one could trust. His students and his fellow composers depended on him to tell the truth about their music, and in the sureness and rightness of his judgment we recognized ourselves."

Though appreciated as a composer's composer, Fine will probably continue to be thought of as 'minor" — like most other American composers so far. He was highly eclectic. He did not stake out and tame vast wilderness areas like a Bach or a Beethoven. He will not give his name to a forest of followers as has Stravinsky — himself a strong influence on Fine.

Fine's music will be thought of perhaps in terms of an arboretum. Modest in scope yet well tended.

Fine, Toccata Concertante, Serious Song for String Orchestra, Symphony 1962: Boston Symphony; Erich Leinsdorf, Irving Fine, conductors (RCA, stereo LSC-2829).

Fine's chamber music and songs have received more attention lately than his symphonic works. This album evens the balance with an excellent sampling from each of Fine's productive decades.

The Toccata was composed in 1947 when he was 32. Stravinskyesque, it shows the neoclassicism of this phase of Fine's work. It courses off athletically, elbows akimbo. It has drive, and humor tempered by style. Serge Koussevitzky first conducted it in October, 1948, with the Boston Symphony. Since then the orchestra has [illegible] associated with Fine's work. For nine seasons, between 1946 and 1957, he was a member of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., the symphony's summer home. He also taught at Harvard and Brandeis universities near Boston.

The Serious Song is a totally tonal work, written in 1955 during a period when Fine was immersed in 12-tone and serial composition. Fine felt pulled by both the tonal and atonal methods of writing. This tension gave birth to his most important work, the Symphony 1962. The Serious Song, vocal in texture, portrays the tonal direction. It is at once urgent and elegiac. Commissioned and given its first performance by the Louisville Philharmonic, it is here clearly defined by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf.

In many ways Fine's last work, the Symphony, completed in 1962, was his most impressive and most puzzling. Here conducted by the composer at Tanglewood in August of that summer, it suggests the opening of new roads.

Copland rightly notes the symphony's strongly dramatic, almost operatic gestures, its restlessness. It is emotionally outreaching. It shows that Fine was more than a craftsman, perhaps on the brink of works with unique musical substance.

SCHOLASTIC TEACHER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD WEEK EDITION
W. 2,683,800
FEB 10 1967

[redacted] Symphony, [redacted] LSC 2829). Many musicians and critics consider Fine one of the most gifted U.S. composers of the past 20 years—even though, outside of Boston, Fine's music rarely got a hearing before his untimely death in 1962 at age 48. Now, thanks to Brandeis University (under whose auspices the funds for this recording became available), the general public can hear three of his most representative works: the Toccata Concertante (1947), Serious Song—A Lament for Orchestra (1955), and [redacted] interesting way. The composer himself conducts the symphony (from a 1962 Tanglewood performance); Leinsdorf leads the other works.

(R.H.)

THE TAMPA TRIBUNE
TAMPA, FLA.
D. 162,630 SUN. 180,375

JAN 1 1967

Rubenstein Plays A Stirring Brahms

Rubenstein, "the world's greatest pianist" (Time Magazine) has studied and played Brahms Concerto No. 1 in D Minor for more than half a century.

His most recent interpretation is an album to treasure. The stereo recording for RCA (LSC-2917) is with Erich Leinsdorf and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This concerto is a massive grandeur, alternately tempestuous and serene. A mirthful rondo follows the gloomy maestoso first movement and the meditative, solemn adagio. Its first audiences did not expect such a profound composition from a man 25 years old.

Sir Donald Francis Tovey, the great British music critic, said "the first theme of the opening tutti is one of the mightiest utterances since Beethoven's Ninth Symphony."

Brahms himself introduced the Concerto in 1859 at Hanover, Germany, with Joachim, his closest friend, conducting. The audience listened respectfully but without enthusiasm. Five days later, a second performance in Leipzig awakened a far more hostile reaction.

Brahms described the Leipzigers' brutality thusly: "At the end, three pairs of hands were brought together very slowly, upon which a perfectly distinct hissing from all sides forbade any such demonstration . . . This failure has not impressed me at all. After all, I am only experimenting and feeling my way. But the hissing was too much."

(Reviewed by RayMatthiesen)

HIGH FIDELITY
TRADE NEWS
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 6,400

JAN 1967

BRAHMS: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 1, in D minor, Op. 15

Artur Rubinstein, piano; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RCA VICTOR ⓢ LM 2917, $4.79; LSC 2917, $5.79.

